Recall Mr. Gilbert's Indian pieces, played two winters ago at these concerts and well deserving repetition—and what studio-and-parlor savages do MacDowell's become? How superfluously he subdues their motivs to the gentiles of the Victorian concert-room; how he passes the legend and feast, love-song and war-song through the softening alembic of his musicianship! It is as though his Indians never spoke out; as though his hand turned the leaves of treatises while his imagination never overheard, peering into bottom or canyon. And in these days, trite seem his harmonies, and pale and narrow his instrumental palette. Free of passing time and changing fashion, a classic keeps life and place by the vitality of the musical thought, the enkindling passion behind, the beauty and the power of the encompassing tonal imagery, the fertility and the felicity of the musical expression. Fervor informs it; fervently—sometimes in spite of themselves—hearers answer to it. In 1923, it is hard to find in such heats in this "Indian Suite"; harder still to become excited over the presence or the absence of them. The devotees to the contrary notwithstanding, the inexorable years are stripping MacDowell naked to the scorners. And to make him a fetich was to make them many.

H. T. P.

TRANS-JAN. 29.

CHEMET SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

French Violinist Pleases at Boston Debut

Renee Chemet, the noted French violinist, played for the first time in Boston at last night's Boston Symphony concert, the second of the extra series. Mme Chemet wisely substituted Lalo's "Spanish Symphony" for the Bruch concerto originally announced. This is one of the most enjoyable of the stock pieces by which solo violinists display their skill at orchestral concerts. The music is vividly imaginative, full of rhythmic energy and of melody.

Mme Chemet plays with a remarkable technical skill which is subordinate as it should be to musicianly interpretation of the composer's intentions. Her delicate variations of dynamic energy, her subtle phrasing, her beautiful tone, her accurate intonation all commend her.

Mr Monteux gave a romantic, a brilliant performance of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, the first movement of which is, perhaps, that composer's best work. To Mendelssohn's shallow and tawdry "Ruy Blas" overture, written to order for a play which seemed to him trivial. Mr Monteux and the orchestra lent a facile brilliance. Sibelius' "Finlandia," on the other hand, was played with rather more sound and fury than one expected, and rather less precision. A very large audience applauded orchestra and soloist with great cordiality.

GLOBE-JAN. 30.

SYMPHONY DISPLAYS LAZINESS

Not Up to Standard—Miss Chemet Saves Concert

BY OLIN DOWNES

The feature of the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, last night, in Symphony Hall, was the [illegible] of Renee Chemet, violinist. She played four movements of the Lalo Symphonie Espagnole, and so doing proved a notable addition to the list of virtuosi who visit this city for the first time this winter.

AN ARTIST OF MENTALITY

There was individuality and authority in the first stroke of her bow, and the immediate effect of her performance was to remind the hearer of how relatively few players who get up to play have ideas of their own about a composition and have the equipment properly to express them.

The interpretation was wholly appropriate to the character of the music—full of sensuous feeling and caprice. There was constant elasticity of tempo, but the rubato of Miss Chemet was not exaggerated. It was logical and it suited well the nature of the composer's idea. It carried conviction with it. It duly alternated on occasion with a splendid breadth of phrase and a noble sonority in a tone always vibrant and full of life. Once or twice there was a tendency to sharpness of intonation, perhaps due to momentary conditions. On the whole this was a performance to remember, distinguished by its virile individuality as by its sensitiveness of feeling, and this is in the face of an understanding by no means always of the best with the orchestra.

Orchestra Off Form

The orchestral performances were on the whole of an exceptionally sluggish and indifferent quality. When they were not sluggish they were noisy. Tschaikowsky's symphony was played in a hack manner, with a lack in the two middle movements of technical crispness and in a lockadaisical spirit which suggested that either the orchestra was indifferent to the music and not particularly disposed to conceal its indifference or that the conductor was not particularly in sympathy with the conception of the composer.

The finale, of course, goes anyhow, granted an orchestra technically capable of dashing it off, as the Boston Symphony is. The more inexcusable the general character of the performance.

A Poor Choice

Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" overture was slung off in good routine style, but why this overture? Certainly it is one of the poorest Mendelssohn ever wrote, and it has been a long time since we heard either the "Melusina" of "Fingal's Cave" music, which, incidentally, have gone too long without a hearing on the Boston Symphony programmes.

The "Finlandia" of Sibelius completed the concert. It is a piece of patriotic music—not Sibelius at his greatest, and yet how superb is the strength of its form, the breadth of the introduction, the simplicity but admirable sonority of the orchestration. Sibelius is a master even when he is not attempting a great symphony.

POST-JAN. 30.

GIVES SECOND EXTRA CONCERT

Interesting Contrasts Mark Symphony Orchestra Program

MISS CHEMET IS VIOLIN SOLOIST

For the second Symphony concert of the supplementary series, Mr. Monteux arranged this program:

Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4 in F minor; Mendelssohn, Overture, "Ruy Blas"; Lalo, Spanish Symphony for violin and orchestra (soloist, Renee Chemet); Sibelius, symphonic poem, "Finlandia."

If orchestras, as we conceive orchestras, still exist 100 years from now, and if in 2023 the conductor of one of them should take a fancy to perform Tchaikovsky's F minor symphony, only what beauty it might still retain could please that audience of the future; all its emotion would long be dead. Mr. Monteux last night read the symphony something as though he had a 2023 audience behind him—with a nice regard for light and shade and sound which would have delighted the Tchaikovsky who wrote frankly to "Dame" Ethel Smyth of his superior powers of making an orchestra sound well, but with an absence of emotion not so pleasing to the Tchaikovsky who analyzed the symphony in letters to Frau von Meck. If Mr. Monteux not so very long ago, had not played this symphony far more tellingly than he did last night, one might collect that he feels scant sympathy for music of a man in mood to sit on the ground and tell sad stories of the death of kings, with sudden bursts of hopeless despair, wailing and gnashing of teeth. To interpret music of desperation, one cannot always be in the vein.

Better suited to Mr. Monteux's humor last night were the placid measures of Mendelssohn's overture, with it touch of dramatic fervor at the close. It sounded exceedingly well. So did the orchestral part of Lalo's Spanish Symphony, so well indeed that a listener could only wonder at the confidence violinists must feel in their abilities who venture it with piano accompaniment. Miss Chemet played the solo part with the composure that proceeds from competence. She has a small tone, sweet enough in the lower register, but sounding to the ear of a person not expert in violin technique, in the upper reaches pinched. Playing with a clear understanding of how it should be done, Miss Chemet, nevertheless, [illegible] to [illegible] this delightful [illegible]

[illegible] is filled. [illegible]ce was very large. The [illegible] [illegible]phony concert of the extra series [illegible] take place Monday evening, Feb. 19. The soloist will be Magdeleine Brard, pianist.

R. R. G.

HERALD. JAN. 30

SECOND EXTRA SYMPHONY

In spite of a week crowded with other musical events of importance, including the Chicago Civic Opera Company at the Opera House, Symphony Hall contained a large and appreciative audience last evening on the occasion of the second extra Symphony concert.

The program was as carefully chosen and as interesting as any of the regular concerts. If it included more that was familiar and nothing with the "first time in Boston" label, it was not the less enjoyable. Mr. Monteux had chosen Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony for his opening number, and the audience approved. Especially delightful was the scherzo movement with the sprightly beauty of plucked strings.

The chief event was the appearance of Renee Chemet as soloist in Lalo's Spanish Symphony for violin and orchestra. Mme. Chemet's violin speaks to the heart, one feels the message rather than admires the mastery of technique. The four movements were beautifully rendered with full sonorous tone, yet with a femininity of charm. The audience and orchestra both were delighted with Mme. Chemet's playing. The concert ended with Sibelius's symphonic poem, "Finlandia."

TRAV-JAN. 30.

Extra Symphony Concert

For the second concert of the Monday evening series the Boston Symphony Orcehstra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, played last evening Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony in F minor; Mendelssohn's Overture "Ruy Blas"; and Sibelius' "Finlandia." Renée Chemet played Lalo's Spanish Symphony for violin and orchestra.

Ernest Newman, in a recent article in the London Times, most aptly says: "I have a theory that some day melancholy, and indeed every sort of mental malaise, will cease to be subjects for art, because of the egoism they imply. We instinctively avoid already certain composers whom we feel to be unhealthy." And after citing Tschaikowsky as a particular example he goes on to say: "But after a time we grow weary of Tschaikowsky's absorption in his own troubles; we feel that it isn't decent of him to inflict them on us so persistently, and at such length." The truth of this statement was more than ever apparent last evening on listening to this fourth symphony, particularly coming as it did after a week of operas dealing with a catalogue of crimes, which might well fill a page of the Newgate Calendar. To be sure, the average opera as it is staged and acted is so artificial that the listener often fails to realize (and fortunately so) the horrible import of much of its subject matter, but in the case of a large part of Tschaikowsky's music, and in this fourth symphony in particular, there is so much morbidity that it is almost a relief to turn from it to the facile and often trite Mendelssohn or the robust Sibelius of the melodramatic "Finlandia." Yet to many, this symphony gives pleasure by reason of its brilliant orchestration, its insistent rhythms and its glowing melodies. Mlle. Chemet played Lalo's Spanish Symphony with spirit and abandon. She possesses a sure technique, an agreeable tone, a musical style, and an unlimited amount of confidence, all of which enabled her to give a well-rounded performance of this sparkling music.

S. M.

MONTR-JAN. 30.

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

The Symphony Orchestra Routine and Inert—Too Condescending a Programme from Mr. Monteux—Mme. Chemet, Violinist, for Offset—Mme. Sylva Mates and Mismates Songs and Babble

TO pleasure the audience is one of the reasonable purposes of the supplementary Symphony Concerts. Reaping this reward hearers will frequent them. So tempted, so gathering courage, they may even pass to the regular series, longer, more exacting, more costly. All this is practical wisdom, if the Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings of Symphony Hall in 1934 are to be as well peopled as are those of 1923. By every sign the audience of yesterday at the second of these fostering concerts enjoyed itself. Its very numbers was evidence of anticipated pleasure. It listened eagerly, without dutiful effort; it applauded honestly and heartily, especially when it had definite persons to approve, like the string choir, plucking through the Scherzo of Chaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, or Mme. Chemet, the new violinist. Better still, the quality of the company, like the numbers, left little to be desired. Half the hearers, say, were finding their way to the pleasures of symphonic music, well gratified. The other already knew them, but their preference is for the homœopathy of five supplementary concerts at convenient intervals rather than for the allopathy of twenty-four through six months on end.

Yet a more interesting programme than Mr. Monteux happened to assemble, a more animated performance on the part of a conductor and an orchestra, still quite free from the weights and measures of "The Planets," might have given ampler pleasure, better fulfilled the purpose of the concert. Plausibly, these audiences of Mondays are more receptive, more practised and discriminating, than Mr. Monteux sometimes seems to beheve. Certainly a considerable part of them is listening to symphonic music not for the tenth but, maybe, for the hundredth time. Not a few more have the open ears the clear minds, the susceptible yet discriminating temper that together make musical instinct. The experienced and the intuitive may both have mistrusted—and with reason—the return even to a supplementary concert of Mendelssohn's Overture to Hugo's play, "Ruy Blas," of Sibelius's tone-poem, "Finlandia."

There are overtures of Mendelssohn—outside that to "A Midsummer Night's Dream"—well deserving revival, long unheard hereabouts. "Fingal's Cave" is one; "Calm Sea and Happy Voyage" another; possibly "The Fair Melusina" a third. Any one of them is a master-work (as the Germans say) beside this bustling claptrap, this "old hat" (as it seems by the composer's own standards) that he strung together in a night and a day to oblige a society of play-actors. The best of Mendelssohn's music has returned deservedly to life in twentieth-century concert-halls; and reason there is not to pull from the dust-heap such a commonplace as this Overture to "Ruy Blas." It only creaks noisily. . . . . And Sibelius's "Finlandia" seemed so well settled in the repertory of "The Pops." There with reason and for pleasure Mr. Jacchia annualy sounds its sonorities, sets the folk a-marching, lets them moon a bit along the way. Sibelian commonplace upon Mendelssohnian commonplace was indeed over-plus. Let Mr. Monteux play "The Swan of Tuonela," or "The Night Ride" to a "Monday audience" and see whether it fails him—and Sibelius tingling with darksome or racing imagery.

The offsets should have been Chaikovsky's Fourth Symphony and Lalo's Spanish Concerto as played by Mme. Chemet. In these days, however, Chaikovsky, in almost every surviving piece, needs all that an orchestra may do for him. Little enough did the band of yesterday. They played the notes; they played them with routined skill; they heeded also the marks expressed; and therewith rested less on their laurels than on their oars. Like-minded was Mr. Monteux; faithfully he followed the letter of Chaikovsky's staves; clearly he beat the measure and conveyed the due sign to the orchestra. Therewith he also was content. Beneath poor Chaikovsky was mourning or musing wrestling or dreading, flinging this way, flinging that in his usual passion of self-torture. Orchestral song is his balm, orchestral thunders are his relief. Give him his melody and he wil open his heart. Give him his instrumental furies and he wil rage himself happy again. But last evening no one seemed to care two red pennies for him. Had he not written notes? Did not the orchestra play them?

A plump and pleasing person is Mme. Chemet, confidential with the conductor in the concert-room, honestly restless, even after presumable experience, before a new public. She is expert, sensitive, refined and altogether unobtrusive technician. She is also a perceiving and practising musician, for whom phrase and line, transition and progression, color and accent, hide few secrets. As violinist, she summons and shades a light, fine, supple, sensuous, lustrous tone. So tempered and so voiced, she played the solo-part in Lalo's "Spanish Symphony" as adroitly and animatedly as it was written. Wine and oil were melody and tone through the sl[illegible] movement; the Scherzo was bright with [illegible]thm and with the variations of pace that are intuition; the Finale ran—in the violin—warm and glowing. But the orchestra was not to be shaken from its "evening off." Three weeks hence there should be repentance—and what is worth ten times more—reparation.

H. T. P.

TRA[illegible] JAN 30

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
JAN 20 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE THIRD CONCERT ON TUESDAY

Jean Bedetti to Play Two Cello Solo Numbers.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its third Providence concert of this season at Infantry Hall at 8:15 o'clock next Tuesday evening. The soloist will be Jean Bedetti, reputed to be one of the greatest 'cellists in the world. He came from Europe four years ago to become the leader of the 'cello division of the orchestra. He will play Bruch's "Kol Nidrei" and the "Allegro" from Dvorak's concerto.

Conductor Monteux will open the concert with Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony in B-minor." Richard Strauss's Merry tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," will be played. A novelty will be the suite by Igor Stravinsky from his ballet, "Pulcinella," written for small orchestra after the manner of Pergolesi, the early 18th century Italian composer. The closing number will be Chabrier's rhapsody, "Espana."

[59]

HOLST AND MACDOWELL

A SECOND HEARING FOR THE NEW "PLANETS"

The Demurrers to the Composer's Method and a Word About His Right to Choice—"Mars" for the New Power, Which Is Rhythm and "Venus" for the New Beauty Which Is Luminous Transparency—"Jupiter" and "Uranus" for a Sturdy British Music — The Withering Years Upon "The Indian Suite"

SECOND hearing of the tone-poems that Holst assembles as "The Planets," both confirmed and diversified the impressions of the first; while the performance at the Symphony Concert of Saturday evening was more secure, elastic and generally ardent than that of Friday. Possibly, too, the second audience was less haunted than the first with the notion that it was to sit before the unrolling in tones of a huge cosmic panorama; whereas it had only to listen to fancies in music suggested, according to the astrologers, by seven great stars. Even so, it was easy to understand the disappointment in many a professional musician over the pieces. Holst has chosen to write them with little or no polyphony, with little or none even of the polytony that is present substitute. That is to say, first, that he almost abjures counterpoint; that, within each tone-poem, he does not develop, diversify, plait and part the generating motivs. Not often, either, in the fashion of polytony, does he lay and work them one upon another. So written, his music through "The Planets," goes neither up nor down, except as it marches at need and will to climax. Rather, it lays measure beside measure, period beside period, paragraph beside paragraph, relying for diversity, interest and significance upon chordal design, and progress, upon play of rhythm, harmony and timbres. Therewith Holst would prove his invention and skill, convey his fancies, gain beauty, touch power. Quite certainly he chose his own procedure; since upon many a page in many another piece he has written counterpoint. Quite certainly, setting hand to "The Planets," he had clear right to this choice. For us listeners there is only to ask how far did this means accomplish his ends, so far as we may discover them.

On this score, it is easy to believe that "the lay vote" (as they say in Episcopalian conventions) would lean to Holst's side. To listen to "Mars" unmoved is surely to be deaf to the power of rhythm, reiterated until it grinds; to strident tonal mass masterfully martialled, to the power of music, "savaged" as it were. In Holst's mind, there could have been no other way wish "The Bringer of War" and beyond doubter, the composer gains his end. Listen a second time to the tone-poem of Saturn as "Bringer of Old Age." Not only is it often a sluggish, a neutral music, redolent of inertia and decay; but when it mounts and quickens, insistence speaks from it, as of old age inevitable portion, sparing not. In "Saturn" as in "Mars," discover what seems to be the composer's design and either seems resistless. For, throughout "The Planets," Holst is writing no absolute, self-contained music, but music to convey a prescribed, a labelled, mood.

It is true that in the lighter tone-poems, like "Venus" or "Mercury," Holst is loth to have done. He must turn and re-turn the crystal of his tones, even if it reflect somewhat similar images. Yet in "Venus" he seems close to one of the goals that the younger composers the world over steadily pursue and in the pursuit purify music and the pleasure of music. Tonal luxuriance, tonal length, breadth and thickness are going out of the fashion. The new day is the day of limpidity, clear, fine line, textures as fine and gleaming, lucent harmonies, thinned instrumental voices weblike. The ear listens to "Venus"; but the eye sees the calm transparencies, the long bright vistas of Italian pictures past the naivetés of "the primitives," but not yet within the opulence of the Renaissance. Akin, in the handiwork of the younger composers, is the plastic precision of "Mercury." Here goes rhythmic motion unceasing, here the choirs and the instruments therein are ever bandying scraps and phrases. Yet exact is all this fluidity; while Holst uses voice after voice so that the ear shall hear it individualized. The romantic generation used the orchestra largely, collectively. The present generation hears it almost instrument by instrument—sometimes with a Mendelssohnian fineness of perception and usage.

Two more of the tone-poems, "Jupiter" for "jollity," Uranus for "magic," should bring comfort to the brethren in London and in Manchester in recurring dispute over what is or is not British music. No Frenchman is likely to write so hearty a music of "jollity"; no Italian a music with so heavy a footfall; a Berliner would sentimentalize it; a Viennese would be more scintillant and less candid; the Russians would sow in a fitful melancholy; the Scandinavians make no such red-cheeked measures; the Americans are much too nervous for Holst's genial expansions slow-moulded. In fine, through this sturdy, honest, frank, large-fibred, full-voiced, broadly songful music, quite unhastened, never self-conscious, with a tune of the soil and the folk, goes a true English spirit in clear English voice.

In degree, both seem discoverable in "Uranus the Magician." No doubt certain rhythms, certain modulations recall the scherzo in which the Frenchman, Dukas, set into tones the sorcery of Goethe's German ballad. Only here indeed, in all the seven tone-poems has Holst "remembered"—no doubt unconsciously. Yet elsewhere for Uranus he writes a bouncing, striding, hearty-humored, cajoling music that well nigh turns him into magician [illegible] a sidereal side-show. And—toward the [illegible]—the soft, veiled measures that it is [illegible] to label "mysterious." What [illegible] swift and quite un- [illegible] ear-mark written in words or tones? Has not the Latin for ages been sure that the Anglo-Saxon cannot be logical—with exceptions enough to prove the rule.

Mystical, however, the Anglo-Saxon surely can be, especially if other northern bloods mix in him as in Holst. The wraiths of tone winding through "Neptune," the drifting keys, the broken harmonies, the pale instrumental voices whitening and whispering into silence, the wisp-like line into nothing finally vanishing—here again is music of imagination to stand beside the tone-poem of "Saturn" or of "Mars." Not one or two hearings may quite unbosom "The Planets." Maybe also Holst—the foolish fellow!—presumed imagination in his hearers.

Possibly it was a deaf ear; possibly it was a dull wit or an unsympathetic mood; but somehow MacDowell's "Indian Suite"—the other number of the concert—sounded remote from this kindling, searching, stirring music of our immediate time; yet not far enough away or, vital and rich enough to wear the dignity and the permanance of a classic. True, MacDowell wrote few orchestral pieces; yet all the others, even to the "Woodland Suite," have gradually vanished from active repertories; while not too often—with Loeffler, Carpenter, Griffes, Gilbert or Chadwick (of the best years) waiting on the American shelf—do conductors nowadays take down even this "Indian Suite." (Did Mr. Monteux choose it because of spiteful gossip in New York that he thought but poorly of MacDowell?) Truth to tell, alike on Friday and Saturday, it seemed a tame, conventionalized music, willed by the composer rather than outflowing from him, made according to formulas and manners that the years are fast withering.

Recall Mr. Gilbert's Indian pieces, played two winters ago at these concerts and well deserving repetition—and what studio-and-parlor savages do MacDowell's become? How superfluously he subdues their motivs to the gentiles of the Victorian concert-room; how he passes the legend and feast, love-song and war-song through the softening alembic of his musicianship! It is as though his Indians never spoke out; as though his hand turned the leaves of treatises while his imagination never overheard, peering into bottom or canyon. And in these days, trite seem his harmonies, and pale and narrow his instrumental palette. Free of passing time and changing fashion, a classic keeps life and place by the vitality of the musical thought, the enkindling passion behind, the beauty and the power of the encompassing tonal imagery, the fertility and the felicity of the musical expression. Fervor informs it; fervently—sometimes in spite of themselves—hearers answer to it. In 1923, it is hard to find in such heats in this "Indian Suite"; harder still to become excited over the presence or the absence of them. The devotees to the contrary notwithstanding, the inexorable years are stripping MacDowell naked to the scorners. And to make him a fetich was to make them many.

H. T. P.

TRANS-JAN 29.

CHEMET SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

French Violinist Pleases at Boston Debut

Renee Chemet, the noted French violinist, played for the first time in Boston at last night's Boston Symphony concert, the second of the extra series. Mme Chemet wisely substituted Lalo's "Spanish Symphony" for the Bruch concerto originally announced. This is one of the most enjoyable of the stock pieces by which solo violinists display their skill at orchestral concerts. The music is vividly imaginative, full of rhythmic energy and of melody.

Mme Chemet plays with a remarkable technical skill which is subordinate as it should be to musicianly interpretation of the composer's intentions. Her delicate variations of dynamic energy, her subtle phrasing, her beautiful tone, her accurate intonation all commend her.

Mr Monteux gave a romantic, a brilliant performance of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, the first movement of which is, perhaps, that composer's best work. To Mendelssohn's shallow and tawdry "Ruy Blas" overture, written to order for a play which seemed to him trivial, Mr Monteux and the orchestra lent a facile brilliance. Sibelius' "Finlandia," on the other hand, was played with rather more sound and fury than one expected, and rather less precision. A very large audience applauded orchestra and soloist with great cordiality.

GLOBE JAN. 30.

SYMPHONY DISPLAYS LAZINESS

Not Up to Standard—Miss Chemet Saves Concert

BY OLIN DOWNES

The feature of the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, last night, in Symphony Hall, was the [illegible] appearance here of Renee Chemet, violinist. She played four movements of the Lalo Symphonic Espagnole, and so doing proved a notable addition to the list of virtuosi who visit this city for the first time this winter.

AN ARTIST OF MENTALITY

There was individuality and authority in the first stroke of her bow, and the immediate effect of her performance was to remind the hearer of how relatively few players who get up to play have ideas of their own about a composition and have the equipment properly to express them.

The interpretation was wholly appropriate to the character of the music—full of sensuous feeling and caprice. There was constant elasticity of tempo, but the rubato of Miss Chemet was not exaggerated. It was logical and it suited well the nature of the composer's idea. It carried conviction with it. It duly alternated on occasion with a splendid breadth of phrase and a noble sonority in a tone always vibrant and full of life. Once or twice there was a tendency to sharpness of intonation, perhaps due to momentary conditions. On the whole this was a performance to remember, distinguished by its virile individuality as by its sensitiveness of feeling, and this is in the face of an understanding by no means always of the best with the orchestra.

Orchestra Off Form

The orchestral performances were on the whole of an exceptionally sluggish and indifferent quality. When they were not sluggish they were noisy. Tschaikowsky's symphony was played in a hack manner, with a lack in the two middle movements of technical crispness and in a lockadaisicol spirit which suggested that either the orchestra was indifferent to the music and not particularly disposed to conceal its indifference or that the conductor was not particularly in sympathy with the conception of the composer.

The finale, of course, goes anyhow, granted an orchestra technically capable of dashing it off, as the Boston Symphony is. The more inexcusable the general character of the performance.

A Poor Choice

Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" overture was slung off in good routine style, but why this overture? Certainly it is one of the poorest Mendelssohn ever wrote, and it has been a long time since we heard either the "Melusina" of "Fingal's Cave" music, which, incidentally, have gone too long without a hearing on the Boston Symphony programmes.

The "Finlandia" of Sibelius completed the concert. It is a piece of patriotic music—not Sibelius at his greatest, and yet how superb is the strength of its form, the breadth of the introduction, the simplicity but admirable sonority of the orchestration. Sibelius is a master even when he is not attempting a great symphony.

POST-JAN. 30.

GIVES SECOND EXTRA CONCERT

Interesting Contrasts Mark Symphony Orchestra Program

MISS CHEMET IS VIOLIN SOLOIST

For the second Symphony concert of the supplementary series, Mr. Monteux arranged this program:

Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4 in F minor; Mendelssohn, Overture, "Ruy Blas"; Lalo, Spanish Symphony for violin and orchestra (soloist, Renee Chemet); Sibelius, symphonic poem, "Finlandia."

If orchestras, as we conceive orchestras, still exist 100 years from now, and if in 2023 the conductor of one of them should take a fancy to perform Tchaikovsky's F minor symphony, only what beauty it might still retain could please that audience of the future; all its emotion would long be dead. Mr. Monteux last night read the symphony something as though he had a 2023 audience behind him—with a nice regard for light and shade and sound which would have delighted the Tchaikovsky who wrote frankly to "Dame" Ethel Smyth of his superior powers of making an orchestra sound well, but with an absence of emotion not so pleasing to the Tchaikovsky who analyzed the symphony in letters to Frau von Meck. If Mr. Monteux not so very long ago, had not played this symphony far more tellingly than he did last night, one might collect that he feels scant sympathy for music of a man in mood to sit on the ground and tell sad stories of the death of kings, with sudden bursts of hopeless despair, wailing and gnashing of teeth. To interpret music of desperation, one cannot always be in the vein.

Better suited to Mr. Monteux's humor last night were the placid measures of Mendolssohn's overture, with it touch of dramatic fervor at the close. It sounded exceedingly well. So did the orchestral part of Lalo's Spanish Symphony, so well indeed that a listener could only wonder at the confidence violinists must feel in their abilities who venture it with piano accompaniment. Miss Chemet played the solo part with the composure that proceeds from competence. She has a small tone, sweet enough in the lower register, but sounding to the ear of a person not expert in violin technique, in the upper reaches pinched. Playing with a clear understanding of how it should be done, Miss Chemet, nevertheless, failed to bring from this delightful music the [illegible] that in it lies.

The audience was very large. The next symphony concert of the extra series will take place Monday evening, Feb. 19. The soloist will be Magdeleine Brard, pianist.

R. R. G.

HERALD.JAN.30

SECOND EXTRA SYMPHONY

In spite of a week crowded with other musical events of importance, including the Chicago Civic Opera Company at the Opera House, Symphony Hall contained a large and appreciative audience last evening on the occasion of the second extra Symphony concert.

The program was as carefully chosen and as interesting as any of the regular concerts. If it included more that was familiar and nothing with the "first time in Boston" label, it was not the less enjoyable. Mr. Monteux had chosen Tschaikovsky's Fourth Symphony for his opening number, and the audience approved. Especially delightful was the scherzo movement with the sprightly beauty of plucked strings.

The chief event was the appearance of Renee Chemet as soloist in Lalo's Spanish Symphony for violin and orchestra. Mme. Chemet's violin speaks to the heart, one feels the message rather than admires the mastery of technique. The four movements were beautifully rendered with full sonorous tone, yet with a femininity of charm. The audience and orchestra both were delighted with Mme. Chemet's playing. The concert ended with Sibelius's symphonic poem, "Finlandia."

TRAV-JAN. 30.

Extra Symphony Concert

For the second concert of the Monday evening series the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, played last evening Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony in F minor; Mendelssohn's Overture "Ruy Blas"; and Sibelius' "Finlandia." Renée Chemet played Lalo's Spanish Symphony for violin and orchestra.

Ernest Newman, in a recent article in the London Times, most aptly says: "I have a theory that some day melancholy, and indeed every sort of mental malaise, will cease to be subjects for art, because of the egoism they imply. We instinctively avoid already certain composers whom we feel to be unhealthy." And after citing Tschaikowsky as a particular example he goes on to say: "But after a time we grow weary of Tschaikowsky's absorption in his own troubles; we feel that it isn't decent of him to inflict them on us so persistently, and at such length." The truth of this statement was more than ever apparent last evening on listening to this fourth symphony, particularly coming as it did after a week of operas dealing with a catalogue of crimes, which might well fill a page of the Newgate Calendar. To be sure, the average opera as it is staged and acted is so artificial that the listener often fails to realize (and fortunately so) the horrible import of much of its subject matter, but in the case of a large part of Tschaikowsky's music, and in this fourth symphony in particular, there is so much morbidity that it is almost a relief to turn from it to the facile and often trite Mendelssohn or the robust Sibelius of the melodramatic "Finlandia." Yet to many, this symphony gives pleasure by reason of its brilliant orchestration, its insistent rhythms and its glowing melodies. Mlle. Chemet played Lalo's Spanish Symphony with spirit and abandon. She possesses a sure technique, an agreeable tone, a musical style, and an unlimited amount of confidence, all of which enabled her to give a well-rounded performance of this sparkling music.

S. M.

MONTR-JAN 30.

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

The Symphony Orchestra Routine and Inert—Too Condescending a Programme from Mr. Monteux—Mme. Chemet, Violinist, for Offset—Mme. Sylva Mates and Mismates Songs and Babble

TO pleasure the audience is one of the reasonable purposes of the supplementary Symphony Concerts. Reaping this reward hearers will frequent them. So tempted, so gathering courage, they may even pass to the regular series, longer, more exacting, more costly. All this is practical wisdom, if the Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings of Symphony Hall in 1934 are to be as well peopled as are those of 1923. By every sign the audience of yesterday at the second of these fostering concerts, enjoyed itself. Its very numbers was evidence of anticipated pleasure. It listened eagerly, without dutiful effort; it applauded honestly and heartily, especially when it had definite persons to approve, like the string choir, plucking through the Scherzo of Chaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, or Mme. Chemet, the new violinist. Better still, the quality of the company, like the numbers, left little to be desired. Half the hearers, say, were finding their way to the pleasures of symphonic music, well gratified. The other already knew them, but their preference is for the homoeopathy of five supplementary concerts at convenient intervals rather than for the allopathy of twenty-four through six months on end.

Yet a more interesting programme than Mr. Monteux happened to assemble, a more animated performance on the part of a conductor, and an orchestra, still not quite free from the weights and measures of "The Planets," might have given ampler pleasure, better fulfilled the purpose of the concert. Plausibly, these audiences of Mondays are more receptive, more practised and discriminating, than Mr. Monteux sometimes seems to believe. Certainly a considerable part of them is listening to symphonic music not for the tenth but, maybe, for the hundredth time. Not a few more have the open ears the clear minds, the susceptible yet discriminating temper that together make musical instinct. The experienced and the intuitive may both have mistrusted—and with reason—the return even to a supplementary concert of Mendelssohn's Overture to Hugo's play, "Ruy Blas," of Sibelius's tone-poem, "Finlandia."

There are overtures of Mendelssohn outside that to "A Midsummer Night's Dream"—well deserving revival, long unheard hereabouts. "Fingal's Cave" is one; "Calm Sea and Happy Voyage" another; possibly "The Fair Melusina" a third. Any one of them is a master-work (as the Germans say) beside this bustling claptrap, this "old hat" (as it seems by the composer's own standards) that he strung together in a night and a day to oblige a society of play-actors. The best of Mendelssohn's music has returned deservedly to life in twentieth-century concert-halls; and reason there is not to pull from the dust-heap such a commonplace as this Overture to "Ruy Blas." It only creaks noisily. . . . And Sibelius's "Finlandia" seemed so well settled in the repertory of "The Pops." There with reason and for pleasure Mr. Jacchia annually sounds its sonorities, sets the folk a-marching, lets them moon a bit along the way. Sibelian commonplace upon Mendelssohnian commonplace was indeed over-plus. Let Mr. Monteux play "The Swan of Tuonela," or "The Night Ride" to a "Monday audience" and see whether it fails him—and Sibelius tingling with darksome or racing imagery.

The offsets should have been Chaikovsky's Fourth Symphony and Lalo's Spanish Concerto as played by Mme. Chemet. In these days, however, Chaikovsky, in almost every surviving piece, needs all that an orchestra may do for him. Little enough did the band of yesterday. They played the notes; they played them with routined skill; they heeded also the marks expressed; and therewith rested less on their laurels than on their oars. Like-minded was Mr. Monteux; faithfully he followed the letter of Chaikovsky's staves; clearly he beat the measure and conveyed the due sign to the orchestra. Therewith he also was content. Beneath poor Chaikovsky was mourning or musing wrestling or dreading flinging this way, flinging that in his usual passion of self-torture. Orchestral song is his balm, orchestral thunders are his relief. Give him his melody and he wil open his heart. Give him his instrumental furies and he wil rage himself happy again. But last evening no one seemed to care two red pennies for him. Had he not written notes? Did not the orchestra play them?

A plump and pleasing person is Mme. Chemet, confidential with the conductor in the concert-room, honestly restless, even after presumable experience, before a new public. She is expert, sensitive, refined and altogether unobtrusive technician. She is also a perceiving and practising musician, for whom phrase and line, transition and progression, color and accent, hide few secrets. As violinist, she summons and shades a light, fine, supple, sensuous, lustrous tone. So tempered and so voiced, she played the solo-part in Lalo's "Spanish Symphony" as adroitly and animatedly as it was written. Wine and oil were melody and tone through the slow movement; the Scherzo was bright with rhythm and with the variations of pace that are intuition; the Finale ran—in the violin—warm and glowing. But the orchestra was not to be shaken from its "evening off." Three weeks hence there should be repentance—and what is worth ten times more—reparation.

H. T. P.

TRA JAN

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
JAN 20 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE THIRD CONCERT ON TUESDAY

Jean Bedetti to Play Two Cello Solo Numbers.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its third Providence concert of this season at Infantry Hall at 8:15 o'clock next Tuesday evening. The soloist will be Jean Bedetti, reputed to be one of the greatest 'cellists in the world. He came from Europe four years ago to become the leader of the 'cello division of the orchestra. He will play Bruch's "Kol Nidrei" and the "Allegro" from Dvorak's concerto.

Conductor Monteux will open the concert with Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony in B-minor." Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," will be played. A novelty will be the suite by Igor Stravinsky from his ballet, "Pulcinella," written for small orchestra after the manner of Pergolesi, the early 18th century Italian composer. The closing number will be Chabrier's rhapsody, "Espana."

N. Y.
TIMES
ISSUE OF
JAN 21 1923

There have been conductors, says The Boston Transcript, who, sought for the Symphony Orchestra, doubted their ability of their disposition—to bear the burden of twenty-four concerts distributed through seven months in Boston. Learning also that they must visit other cities and there lead in fifty concerts more, even though every piece had been previously played at home, they threw up their hands in mingled disgust and despair. The hunred-odd concerts of the Symphony Orchestra from every October through every April, as far north as Montreal, as far west as Toronto, as far south as Washington or Richmond—ten in New York, a varying allotment up and down New England—are "a large order." Taxed are the body, mind, the whole responsive and communicating power of the conductor. If his Summer holiday seem long, in his working months there is naught for him but work. Usually, in recent years, he has come bravely and devotedly through them; while, in the perversity or the persistence of human nature, he has ended each year riper and better-reputed in his calling.

FROM ~~NEWS,~~ Tribune JAN 21 1923
Providence, R. I.

heard.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT TUESDAY

Jean Bedetti, the celebrated 'cellist, will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its third concert of the Providence season, to be given in Infantry Hall next Tuesday evening, Jan. 23, at 8:15. This splendid artist, who is looked upon as one of the finest living masters of this beautiful instrument, came to America four years ago to take his present post as leader of the 'cello section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In Europe his reputation was supreme, and his fame here is now as great if not greater. Bedetti has appeared as soloist with the orchestra and in concerts of his own in Boston, New York and other cities, winning superlative praise on every hand for his brilliant skill and beautiful tone. He will play two numbers on this occasion, Bruch's "Kol Nidrei," and the first movement from Dvorak's concerto for the 'cello.

Peirre Monteux will open the concert with Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in B-minor, one of the most popular of all symphonies and richly deserving its popularity, since probably no work of higher melodic beauty has ever been written.

Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" will also be played. This score, which treats the mediaeval legend of the impish character who taunts the respectable and conservative burghers and potentates, and is ultimately hanged for his roguery, is in descriptive and humorous vein. Probably no other work has brought the great German composer more widespread fame than this.

A novelty of particular interest will be the suite by Igor Stravinsky, drawn from his ballet, "Pulcinella," and written for small orchestra after the manner of Pergolesi, the early 18th century Italian composer. The daring Russian has proved in this work that despite his tendency the polite and simple music of an earlier epoch. Pulcinella's Suite has been introduced to America by Pierre Monteux, and this orchestra and played in Boston and New York. The closing number on the program will be Chabrier's colorful and rhythmic Rhapsody, "Espana."

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
JAN 21 1923

Jean Bedetti, leader of the 'cello section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] the soloist of the concert in Infantry Hall next Tuesday night, came from France four years ago to take his present position. In his native land and in other countries on the continent he is held in the highest esteem as a virtuoso on his instrument, and since coming to this country has taken his place among the leaders. He will be heard Tuesday in two numbers, Bruch's "Kol Nidrei" and Dvorak's Allegro from his 'cello concerto. A descriptive review of the numbers to be played by Mr. Monteux is given elsewhere. The programme is headed by Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in B-minor, one of the most popular of all orchestral works and one that ranks among the highest in simple melodic beauty. There will also be Strauss's tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," humorous and descriptive, and Igor Stravinsky's suite drawn from his ballet "Pulcinella" and written for small orchestra after the manner of Pergolesi, the early 18th century Italian composer.

[60]

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
JAN 21 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE THIRD CONCERT ON TUESDAY

Jean Bedetti to Play Two Cello Solo Numbers.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its third Providence concert of this season at Infantry Hall at 8:15 o'clock next Tuesday evening. The soloist will be Jean Bedetti, reputed to be one of the greatest 'cellists in the world. He came from Europe four years ago to become the leader of the 'cello division of the orchestra. He will play Bruch's "Kol Nidrei" and the "Allegro" from Dvorak's concerto.

Conductor Monteux will open the concert with Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony in B-minor." Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," will be played. A novelty will be the suite by Igor Stravinsky from his ballet, "Pulcinella," written for small orchestra after the manner of Pergolesi, the early 18th century Italian composer. The closing number will be Chabrier's rhapsody, "Espana."

FROM JAN 22 1923
NEWS,
Providence, R. I.

JEAN BEDETTI SOLOIST WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

Tomorrow at 8:15 p. m. in Infantry Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its third Providence concert. The soloist will be Jean Bedetti, the illustrious 'cellist, who has a reputation both in the old world and the new as one of the finest masters of this beautiful instrument. He came from Europe four years ago to take his present post as leader of the 'cello section and has been praised both as soloist and in recitals of his own in New York, Boston, and other cities, for his brilliant skill and beauty of tone. Bedetti will play two numbers on this occasion, Bruch's "Kol Nidrei," and the Allegro from Dvorak's concerto for the 'cello.

Pierre Monteux will open the concert with Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in B minor, one of the most popular of all symphonies and richly deserving its popularity, since probably no work of higher melodic beauty has ever been written.

Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" will also be played. This score, which treats the mediaeval legend of the impish character who taunts the respectable and conservative burghers and potentates, and is ultimately hanged for his roguery, is in descriptive and humorous vein. Probably no other work has brought the great German composer more widespread fame than this.

A novelty of particular interest wil be the suite by Igor Stravinsky, drawn from his ballet "Pulcinella," and written for small orchestra after the manner of Pergolesi, the early 18th century Italian composer. The daring Russian has proved in this work that, despite his tendency toward a huge orchestra and clanging dissonances, he knows and reveres the polite and simple music of an earlier spoch. Pulcinella's Suite has been introduced to America by Pierre Monteux and this orchestra and played in Boston and New York. hTe closing number on the programme will be Charbrier's colorful and rhythmic Rhapsody "Espana."

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
JAN 24 1923

VARIED PROGRAMME IS PRESENTED BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played here for the third time this season at Infantry Hall last evening. M. Monteux and his players were heard by a big audience which seemed to thoroughly enjoy the programme. Schubert's Unfinished Symphony was the principal number. The other works presented offered plenty of contrast. Jean Bedetti, the orchestra's first 'cellist, appeared as soloist, playing two numbers, the Bruch [illegible] "Kol [illegible]" for violoncello and orchestra, and the Allegro from Dvorak's 'cello concerto in B-minor.

The programme was played as follows:

Schubert....Unfinished Symphony in B-Minor
Allegro moderato
Andante con moto
Strauss..."Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," in Rondo Form, Op. 28
Pergolesi-Stravinsky....Suite No. 1 for Small Orchestra, from the Ballet, "Pulcinella"
Sinfonia (Ouverture): Allegro moderato
Serenata: Larghetto
Scherzino
Allegro
Andantino
Alegro
Bruch....—"Kol Nidrei" for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 47
Dvorak..Allegro from the Violoncella Concerto in B-minor, Op. 104
Chabrier................Rhapsody, "Espana"

Schubert Symphony Pleases

The Schubert symphony offers a pleasing theme for the musical reviewer. It is indeed a work of never fading beauty. Its simple melodies flow on and on in a tide of harmony that tells of nature's sweetest gifts. Although the source of Schubert's inspiration in the writing of the symphony is not known, it breathes of the freshness of spring, of sunshine, of the sweetness of flowering fields and the serenity of mind born of meditation on nature's gifts to man. One may not hear this inspired work and remain unmoved. It is music, music from the heart and soul.

In direct contrast to this delightful musical conception is the Strauss tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel." Here is a composition which is nearly worthless as music. Strauss, a master of orchestral technique, has here erected a marvellous structure of intricate instrumentation. It is descrptive of the merry or devilisn pranks of the legendary Eulenspeigel. Amusing, perhaps, quite astonishing, it is true; but to what end? Coming after the symphony, the tone poem seemed entirely lacking in musical value. The orchestra played it in virtuoso style.

The Pergolesi-Stravinsky Suite for small orchestra is interesting as a modernist's redressing of musical material of the long ago. Sub-division in the strings gives color and effective embellishment has been written into the first violin part.

Bedetti Temperamental

Mr. Bedetti chose contrasted pieces for his solos. The "Kol Nidrei" arrangement by Bruch calls for the legato style, while the movement from the Dvorak concerto bids for technical display. In presenting these numbers Mr. Bedetti showed that first of all he is a very temperamental player. At times this natural tendency is a detriment to his work rather than an asset. When he controls his feelings and plays with repose, his tone is beautifully pure and delightful in quality. He is emotional and his playing is full of feeling. The "Kol Nidrei" found him at his best. It was phrased with artistic skill and in tone and general style was a finished performance.

The Allegro from the Dvorak concerto showed that he possesses a facile technique. It was in this number that a superabundance of temperament robbed his playing of complete tonal and technical finish. This, however, was noticeable because of the evidence of these same qualities in his preceding number. His dashing style made the allegro enjoyable and he received a fine tribute of applause.

After the concerto movement, he was obliged to return in acknowledgement of a continued demonstration.

The orchestra closed the programme with a spirited performance of Chabrier's 'Espana." In this final offering, as in earlier numbers, the men played with splendid finish. M. Monteux's reading of the Schubert symphony was most musicianly and appreciative.

A. F. P.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
JAN 24 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN THIRD CONCERT

M. Monteux and His Players Charm Big Audience at Infantry Hall.

VARIED PROGRAMME GIVEN

Mr. Bedetti, Soloist, Appears at Best in "Kol Nidrei"—Displays Facile Technique in Dvorak Concerto

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played here for the third time this season at Infantry Hall last evening. M. Monteux and his players were heard by a big audience which seemed to thoroughly enjoy the programme. Schubert's Unfinished Symphony was the principal number. The other works presented offered plenty of contrast. Jean Bedetti, the orchestra's first 'cellist, appeared as soloist, playing two numbers, the Bruch arrangement of "Kol Nidrei" for violoncello and orchestra, and the Allegro from Dvorak's 'cello concerto in B-minor.

The programme was played as follows:

Schubert....Unfinished Symphony in B-Minor
Allegro moderato
Andante con moto
Strauss.."Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," in Rondo Form, Op. 28
Pergolesi-Stravinsky....Suite No. 1 for Small Orchestra, from the Ballet, "Pulcinella"
Sinfonia (Ouverture): Allegro moderato
Serenata: Larghetto
Scherzino
[illegible]
Bruch....—"Kol Nidrei" for [illegible] and Orchestra, Op. 47
Dvorak..Allegro from the Violoncella Concerto in B-minor, Op. 104
Chabrier...................Rhapsody, "Espana"

SCHUBERT SYMPHONY PLEASES

The Schubert symphony offers a pleasing theme for the musical reviewer. It is indeed a work of never fading beauty. Its simple melodies flow on and on in a tide of harmony that tells of nature's sweetest gifts. Although the source of Schubert's inspiration in the writing of the symphony is not known, it breathes of the freshness of spring, of sunshine, of the sweetness of flowering fields and the serenity of mind born of meditation on nature's gifts to man. One may not hear this inspired work and remain unmoved. It is music, music from the heart and soul.

In direct contrast to this delightful musical conception is the Strauss tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel." Here is a composition which is nearly worthless as music. Strauss, a master of orchestral technique, has here erected a marvellous structure of intricate instrumentation. It is descrptive of the merry or devilisn pranks of the legendary Eulenspeigel. Amusing, perhaps, quite astonishing, it is true; but to what end? Coming after the symphony, the tone poem seemed entirely lacking in musical value. The orchestra played it in virtuoso style.

The Pergolesi-Stravinsky Suite for small orchestra is interesting as a modernist's redressing of musical material of the long ago. Sub-division in the strings gives color and effective embellishment has been written into the first violin part.

BEDETTI TEMPERAMENTAL

Mr. Bedetti chose contrasted pieces for his solos. The "Kol Nidrei" arrangement by Bruch calls for the legato style, while the movement from the Dvorak concerto bids for technical display. In presenting these numbers Mr. Bedetti showed that first of all he is a very temperamental player. At times this natural tendency is a detriment to his work rather than an asset. When he controls his feelings and plays with repose, his tone is beautifully pure and delightful in quality. He is emotional and his playing is full of feeling. The "Kol Nidrei" found him at his best. It was phrased with artistic skill and in tone and general style was a finished performance.

The Allegro from the Dvorak concerto showed that he possesses a facile technique. It was in this number that a superabundance of temperament robbed his playing of complete tonal and technical finish. This, however, was noticeable because of the evidence of these same qualities in his preceding number. His dashing style made the allegro enjoyable and he received a fine tribute of applause.

After the concerto movement, he was obliged to return in acknowledgement of a continued demonstration.

The orchestra closed the programme with a spirited performance of Chabrier's 'Espana.'' In this final offering, as in earlier numbers, the men played with splendid finish. M. Monteux's reading of the Schubert symphony was most musicianly and appreciative.

A. F. P.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
TRIBUNE
ISSUE OF
JAN 24 1923

SYMPHONY GETS WARM GREETIN

Infantry Hall Well Filled Third Concert of the Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ag delighted music lovers last evening wh it gave its third concert of the sea at Infantry Hall. The hall was well fil and the audience greeted warmly the cellent performance of the celebra musicians. Jean Bedetti, first 'cellist the orchestra, was presnted as solois

The orchestra played Schubert's U finished Symphony in B-minor, the P golesi-Stravinsky Suite Chabrier's pana," and Strauss' "Till Eulensp The former was the principal number it was read by M. Monteux, conductor, an intelligent and musicianly manner. is a work that never fails to please a it combines many beautiful melodies w rare harmony. The legendary music "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," fu nished marked contrast to the Schube work. It is a wonderful orchestration bright tuneful music which has made composer famous and the orchest played it in virtuoso style. Its tempo a difficult passages afford the opportuni great display and the musicians ma the most of it.

The Pergolesi-Stravinsky Suite w well received and colorfully played. It more often given by smaller orchestra but the Symphony did wonders with and gave an effective performance.

The final orchestral number was th Chabrier Rhapsody, "Espana," whic was played with great spirit and intell gence. The musicians gave it in exce lent style and left their audience with longing for more of it.

Mr. Bedetti gave two numbers that ba anced perfectly. His first was Buch "Kol Nidrei," and the second was th allegro from Dvorak's Concerto in minor. The former is a sweet melody the legato style and it was excellently given by the 'cellist. In giving it Mr. Bedetti was at his best and he gave an artistic performance. He struck the proper tempo from the first and held it until the end, weaving a tone picture that could be hard to duplicate. [illegible]

[illegible] received w[illegible] burst of applause that was well deserved.

The program was given as follows:

Schubert....Unfinished Symphony in B-Minor
Allegro moderato
Andante con moto
Strauss........"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," in Rondo Form, Op. 28
Pergolesi-Stravinsky......Suite No. 1 for Small Orchestra, from the Ballet, "Pulcinella"
Sinfonia (Ouverture): Allegro moderato
Serenata: Larghetto
Scherzino
Allegro
Andantino
Allegro
Bruch......"Kol Nidrei" for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 47
Dvorak......Allegro from the Violoncello Concerto in B-minor, Op. 104
Chabrier..............Rhapsody, "Espana"

FROM JAN 24 1923
NEWS,
Providence, R. I.

JEAN BEDETTI IS SOLOIST AT THIRD SYMPHONY CONCERT

Sharing honors with Pierre Monteux, conduotor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the third concert of the season in Infantry Hall last evening, was Jean Bedetti, violincellist. His interpretations of Bruch's "Kol Nidrie" and Dvorak's Violincello Concerto in B-minor were enthusiastically received, being skillfully and temperamentally played.

The third concert programme was, in many respects, the most pleasing of any this season. It had for its principal number Schubert's wonderful Unfinished Symphony in B-minor, played, under the sympathetic guidance of Monteux, with a grace and tonal style that brought out every bit of the many sidelights of harmony encased in its two movements. It seems a pity that Schubert did not write the third movement for, judging by the quality of the first two, it would have ranked this symphony even more highly as musical masterpiece. The lines flow easily and inspriightly fashion all the way through, being pleasing to the ear and extremely soothing and comforting.

One likes a little fun mixed in with the more serious musical numbers now and then. Monteux evidently has a keen sense of the humorous in music, and for this reason gave the audience Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," a freakish bit of reckless composition which, nevertheless, is fully expressive of its theme. It has to do with the legendary pranks of a scamp who, after frightening women, making a poor success as a Don Juan and poking fun at the serious members of society quite appropriately ends lift on the gallows. This story gives the composer a chance to work in much that is unusual and the piece is a lively, though perhaps not a beautiful one.

The selections from the Pergolesi-Stravinsky "Pulcinella" move with an ease and beauty which are inspiring, although the first number is really the best while the second and third give opportunity for musical vagaries. It was something new for symphony audiences here, however.

The "Kol Nidiie" was played with keen understanding by Mr. Bedetti, who deserves the praise he won last night and the enviable position he occupies as among the leading violoncellists in America. He is the thorough musician, master of his instrument and keenly alive to his duties and the value of his work. The violoncello concerto in B-minor also was played with finish, at times with fire, always in a considerable amount of temperament on the part of the soloist and was enthusiastically received.

Completing the programme was Charier's "Rhapsody Espana," which is a combination of two principal dances of Spain, the "Jota," which is vigorous and fiery, and the "Malanguena," languorous and sensual. As would be expected, the first part is quick of movement, wild and unrestrained in places and wholly abandoned at times, while in the last part it moves at a more leisure pace, modulated in tone, but with a barbaric undercurrent which stirs the pulses.

Monteux is giving to Providence audiences many selections seldom heard and some which one might wait years to hear if the Boston orchestra did not have a conductor with so keen a liking for the musically beautiful and unusual.

N. Y.
TIMES
ISSUE OF
JAN 21 1923

There have been conductors, says The Boston Transcript, who, sought for the Symphony Orchestra, doubted their ability—or their disposition—to bear the burden of twenty-four concerts distributed through seven months in Boston. Learning also that they must visit other cities and there lead in fifty concerts more, even though every piece had been previously played at home, they threw up their hands in mingled disgust and despair. The hunred-odd concerts of the Symphony Orchestra from every October through every April, as far north as Montreal, as far west as Toronto, as far south as Washington or Richmond—ten in New York, a varying allotment up and down New England—are "a large order." Taxed are the body, mind, the whole responsive and communicating power of the conductor. If his Summer holiday seem long, in his working months there is naught for him but work. Usually, in recent years, he has come bravely and devotedly through them; while, in the perversity or the persistence of human nature, he has ended each year riper and better-reputed in his calling.

FROM JAN 21 1923
~~NEWS,~~ Tribune
Providence, R. I.

hard.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT TUESDAY.

Jean Bedetti, the celebrated 'cellist, will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its third concert of the Providence season, to be given in Infantry Hall next Tuesday evening, Jan. 23, at 8:15. This splendid artist, who is looked upon as one of the finest living masters of this beautiful instrument, came to America four years ago to take his present post as leader of the 'cello section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In Europe his reputation was supreme, and his fame here is now as great if not greater. Bedetti has appeared as soloist with the orchestra and in concerts of his own in Boston, New York and other cities, winning superlative praise on every hand for his brilliant skill and beautiful tone. He will play two numbers on this occasion, Bruch's "Kol Nidrei," and the first movement from Dvcrak's concerto for the 'cello.

Peirre Monteux will open the concert with Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in B-minor, one of the most popular of all symphonies and richly deserving its popularity, since probably no work of higher melodic beauty has ever been written.

Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" will also be played. This score, which treats the mediaeval legend of the impish character who taunts the respectable and conservative burghers and potentates, and is ultimately hanged for his roguery, is in descriptive and humorous vein. Probably no other work has brought the great German composer more widespread fame than this.

A novelty of particular interest will be the suite by Igor Stravinsky, drawn from his ballet, "Pulcinella," and written for small orchestra after the manner of Pergolesi, the early 18th century Italian composer. The daring Russian has proved in this work that despite his tendency the polite and simple music of an earlier epoch. Pulcinella's Suite has been introduced to America by Pierre Monteux, and this orchestra and played in Boston and New York. The closing number on the program will be Chabrier's colorful and rhythmic Rhapsody, "Espana."

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
JAN 21 1923

* * *

Jean Bedetti, leader of the 'cello section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the soloist of the concert in Infantry Hall next Tuesday night, came from France four years ago to take his present position. In his native land and in other countries on the continent he is held in the highest esteem as a virtuoso on his instrument, and since coming to this country has taken his place among the leaders. He will be heard Tuesday in two numbers, Bruch's "Kol Nidrei" and Dvorak's Allegro from his 'cello concerto. A descriptive review of the numbers to be played by Mr. Monteux is given elsewhere. The programme is headed by Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in B-minor, one of the most popular of all orchestral works and one that ranks among the highest in simple melodic beauty. There will also be Strauss's tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," humorous and descriptive, and Igor Stravinsky's suite drawn from his ballet "Pulcinella" and written for small orchestra after the manner of Pergolesi, the early 18th century Italian composer.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
JAN 21 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE THIRD CONCERT ON TUESDAY

Jean Bedetti to Play Two Cello Solo Numbers.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its third Providence concert of this season at Infantry Hall at 8:15 o'clock next Tuesday evening. The soloist will be Jean Bedetti, reputed to be one of the greatest 'cellists in the world. He came from Europe four years ago to become the leader of the 'cello division of the orchestra. He will play Bruch's "Kol Nidrei" and the "Allegro" from Dvorak's concerto.

Conductor Monteux will open the concert with Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony in B-minor." Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," will be played. A novelty will be the suite by Igor Stravinsky from his ballet, "Pulcinella," written for small orchestra after the manner of Pergolesi, the early 18th century Italian composer. The closing number will be Chabrier's rhapsody, "Espana."

FROM JAN 22 1923
NEWS,
Providence, R. I.

JEAN BEDETTI SOLOIST WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

Tomorrow at 8:15 p. m. in Infantry Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its third Providence concert. The soloist will be Jean Bedetti, the illustrious 'cellist, who has a reputation both in the old world and the new as one of the finest masters of this beautiful instrument. He came from Europe four years ago to take his present post as leader of the 'cello section and has been praised both as soloist and in recitals of his own in New York, Boston, and other cities, for his brilliant skill and beauty of tone. Bedetti will play two numbers on this occasion, Bruch's "Kol Nidrei," and the Allegro from Dvorak's concerto for the 'cello.

Pierre Monteux will open the concert with Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in B minor, one of the most popular of all symphonies and richly deserving its popularity, since probably no work of higher melodic beauty has ever been written.

Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" will also be played. This score, which treats the mediaeval legend of the impish character who taunts the respectable and conservative burghers and potentates, and is ultimately hanged for his roguery, is in descriptive and humorous vein. Probably no other work has brought the great German composer more widespread fame than this.

A novelty of particular interest wil be the suite by Igor Stravinsky, drawn from his ballet "Pulcinella," and written for small orchestra after the manner of Pergolesi, the early 18th century Italian composer. The daring Russian has proved in this work that, despite his tendency toward a huge orchestra and clanging dissonances, he knows and reveres the polite and simple music of an earlier spoch. Pulcinella's Suite has been introduced to America by Pierre Monteux and this orchestra and played in Boston and New York. hTe closing number on the programme will be Charbrier's colorful and rhythmic Rhapsody "Espana."

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
JAN 24 1923

VARIED PROGRAMME IS PRESENTED BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played here for the third time this season at Infantry Hall last evening. M. Monteux and his players were heard by a big audience which seemed to thoroughly enjoy the programme. Schubert's Unfinished Symphony was the principal number. The other works presented offered plenty of contrast. Jean Bedetti, the orchestra's first 'cellist, appeared as soloist, playing two numbers, the Bruch arrangement of "Kol Nidrei" for violoncello and orchestra, and the Allegro from Dvorak's 'cello concerto in B-minor.

The programme was played as follows:

Schubert....Unfinished Symphony in B-Minor
Allegro moderato
Andante con moto
Strauss..."Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," in Rondo Form, Op. 28
Pergolesi-Stravinsky....Suite No. 1 for Small Orchestra, from the Ballet, "Pulcinella"
Sinfonia (Ouverture): Allegro moderato
Serenata: Larghetto
Scherzino
Allegro
Andantino
Alegro
Bruch....—"Kol Nidrei" for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 47
Dvorak..Allegro from the Violoncella Concerto in B-minor, Op. 104
Chabrier..................Rhapsody, "Espana"

Schubert Symphony Pleases

The Schubert symphony offers a pleasing theme for the musical reviewer. It is indeed a work of never fading beauty. Its simple melodies flow on and on in a tide of harmony that tells of nature's sweetest gifts. Although the source of Schubert's inspiration in the writing of the symphony is not known, it breathes of the freshness of spring, of sunshine, of the sweetness of flowering fields and the serenity of mind born of meditation on nature's gifts to man. One may not hear this inspired work and remain unmoved. It is music, music from the heart and soul.

In direct contrast to this delightful musical conception is the Strauss tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel." Here is a composition which is nearly worthless as music. Strauss, a master of orchestral technique, has here erected a marvellous structure of intricate instrumentation. It is descrptive of the merry or devilisn pranks of the legendary Eulenspeigel. Amusing, perhaps, quite astonishing, it is true; but to what end? Coming after the symphony, the tone poem seemed entirely lacking in musical value. The orchestra played it in virtuoso style.

The Pergolesi-Stravinsky Suite for small orchestra is interesting as a modernist's redressing of musical material of the long ago. Sub-division in the strings gives color and effective embellishment has been written into the first violin part.

Bedetti Temperamental

Mr. Bedetti chose contrasted pieces for his solos. The "Kol Nidrei" arrangement by Bruch calls for the legato style, while the movement from the Dvorak concerto bids for technical display. In presenting these numbers Mr. Bedetti showed that first of all he is a very temperamental player. At times this natural tendency is a detriment to his work rather than an asset. When he controls his feelings and plays with repose, his tone is beautifully pure and delightful in quality. He is emotional and his playing is full of feeling. The "Kol Nidrei" found him at his best. It was phrased with artistic skill and in tone and general style was a finished performance.

The Allegro from the Dvorak concerto showed that he possesses a facile technique. It was in this number that a superabundance of temperament robbed his playing of complete tonal and technical finish. This, however, was noticeable because of the evidence of these same qualities in his preceding number. His dashing style made the allegro enjoyable and he received a fine tribute of applause.

After the concerto movement, he was obliged to return in acknowledgement of a continued demonstration.

The orchestra closed the programme with a spirited performance of Chabrier's 'Espana." In this final offering, as in earlier numbers, the men played with splendid finish. M. Monteux's reading of the Schubert symphony was most musicianly and appreciative. A. F. P.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
JAN 24 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN THIRD CONCERT

M. Monteux and His Players Charm Big Audience at Infantry Hall.

VARIED PROGRAMME GIVEN

Mr. Bedetti, Soloist, Appears at Best in "Kol Nidrei"—Displays Facile Technique in Dvorak Concerto

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played here for the third time this season at Infantry Hall last evening. M. Monteux and his players were heard by a big audience which seemed to thoroughly enjoy the programme. Schubert's Unfinished Symphony was the principal number. The other works presented offered plenty of contrast. Jean Bedetti, the orchestra's first 'cellist, appeared as soloist, playing two numbers, the Bruch arrangement of "Kol Nidrei" for violoncello and orchestra, and the Allegro from Dvorak's 'cello concerto in B-minor.

The programme was played as follows:

Schubert....Unfinished Symphony in B-Minor
Allegro moderato
Andante con moto
Strauss.."Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," in Rondo Form, Op. 28
Pergolesi-Stravinsky....Suite No. 1 for Small Orchestra, from the Ballet, "Pulcinella"
Sinfonia (Ouverture): Allegro moderato
Serenata: Larghetto
Scherzino
Allegro
Andantino
Bruch....—"Kol Nidrei" for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 47
Dvorak..Allegro from the Violoncella Concerto in B-minor, Op. 104
Chabrier.................Rhapsody, "Espana"

SCHUBERT SYMPHONY PLEASES

The Schubert symphony offers a pleasing theme for the musical reviewer. It is indeed a work of never fading beauty. Its simple melodies flow on and on in a tide of harmony that tells of nature's sweetest gifts. Although the source of Schubert's inspiration in the writing of the symphony is not known, it breathes of the freshness of spring, of sunshine, of the sweetness of flowering fields and the serenity of mind born of meditation on nature's gifts to man. One may not hear this inspired work and remain unmoved. It is music, music from the heart and soul.

In direct contrast to this delightful musical conception is the Strauss tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel." Here is a composition which is nearly worthless as music. Strauss, a master of orchestral technique, has here erected a marvellous structure of intricate instrumentation. It is descrptive of the merry or devilisn pranks of the legendary Eulenspeigel. Amusing, perhaps, quite astonishing, it is true; but to what end? Coming after the symphony, the tone poem seemed entirely lacking in musical value. The orchestra played it in virtuoso style.

The Pergolesi-Stravinsky Suite for small orchestra is interesting as a modernist's redressing of musical material of the long ago. Sub-division in the strings gives color and effective embellishment has been written into the first violin part.

BEDETTI TEMPERAMENTAL

Mr. Bedetti chose contrasted pieces for his solos. The "Kol Nidrei" arrangement by Bruch calls for the legato style, while the movement from the Dvorak concerto bids for technical display. In presenting these numbers Mr. Bedetti showed that first of all he is a very temperamental player. At times this natural tendency is a detriment to his work rather than an asset. When he controls his feelings and plays with repose, his tone is beautifully pure and delightful in quality. He is emotional and his playing is full of feeling. The "Kol Nidrei" found him at his best. It was phrased with artistic skill and in tone and general style was a finished performance.

The Allegro from the Dvorak concerto showed that he possesses a facile technique. It was in this number that a superabundance of temperament robbed his playing of complete tonal and technical finish. This, however, was noticeable because of the evidence of these same qualities in his preceding number. His dashing style made the allegro enjoyable and he received a fine tribute of applause.

After the concerto movement, he was obliged to return in acknowledgement of a continued demonstration.

The orchestra closed the programme with a spirited performance of Chabrier's 'Espana." In this final offering, as in earlier numbers, the men played with splendid finish. M. Monteux's reading of the Schubert symphony was most musicianly and appreciative. A. F. P.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
TRIBUNE
ISSUE OF
JAN 24 1923

SYMPHONY GETS WARM GREETIN

Infantry Hall Well Filled Third Concert of the Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ag delighted music lovers last evening wh it gave its third concert of the seas at Infantry Hall. The hall was well fil and the audience greeted warmly the cellent performance of the celebrat musicians. Jean Bedetti, first 'cellist the orchestra, was presnted as solois

The orchestra played Schubert's U finished Symphony in B-minor, the P golesi-Stravinsky Suite Chabrier's " pana," and Strauss' "Till Eulenspi The former was the principal number a it was read by M. Monteux, conductor, an intelligent and musicianly manner. is a work that never fails to please a it combines many beautiful melodies w rare harmony. The legendary music "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," fu nished marked contrast to the Schube work. It is a wonderful orchestration bright tuneful music which has made composer famous and the orchestr played it in virtuoso style. Its tempo a difficult passages afford the opportuni great display and the musicians ma the most of it.

The Pergolesi-Stravinsky Suite wa well received and colorfully played. It more often given by smaller orchestra but the Symphony did wonders with and gave an effective performance.

The final orchestral number was th Chabrier Rhapsody, "Espana," whic was played with great spirit and intell gence. The musicians gave it in exce lent style and left their audience with longing for more of it.

Mr. Bedetti gave two numbers that ba anced perfectly. His first was Buch "Kol Nidrei," and the second was th allegro from Dvorak's Concerto in B minor. The former is a sweet melody o the legato style and it was excellently given by the 'cellist. In giving it Mr. Bedetti was at his best and he gave an artistic performance. He struck the proper tempo from the first and held it until the end, weaving a tone picture that would be hard to duplicate.

The Dvorak number was in direct con [illegible] It calls for a wealth of technica [illegible] Bedetti responded in a [illegible] His work, at the finish, was received with a warm outburst of applause that was well deserved.

The program was given as follows:

Schubert.....Unfinished Symphony in B-Minor
Allegro moderato
Andante con moto
Strauss........"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," in Rondo Form, Op. 28
Pergolesi-Stravinsky......Suite No. 1 for Small Orchestra, from the Ballet, "Pulcinella"
Sinfonia (Ouverture): Allegro moderato
Serenata: Larghetto
Scherzino
Allegro
Andantino
Allegro
Bruch......"Kol Nidrei" for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 47
Dvorak......Allegro from the Violoncella Concerto in B-minor, Op. 104
Chabrier..............Rhapsody, "Espana"

FROM JAN 24 1923
NEWS,
Providence, R. I.

JEAN BEDETTI IS SOLOIST AT THIRD SYMPHONY CONCERT

Sharing honors with Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the third concert of the season in Infantry Hall last evening, was Jean Bedetti, violincellist. His interpretations of Bruch's "Kol Nidrie" and Dvorak's Violincello Concerto in B-minor were enthusiastically received, being skillfully and temperamentally played.

The third concert programme was, in many respects, the most pleasing of any this season. It had for its principal number Schubert's wonderful Unfinished Symphony in B-minor, played under the sympathetic guidance of Monteux, with a grace and tonal style that brought out every bit of the many sidelights of harmony encased in its two movements. It seems a pity that Schubert did not write the third movement for, judging by the quality of the first two, it would have ranked this symphony even more highly as musical masterpiece. The lines flow easily and insprightly fashion all the way through, being pleasing to the ear and extremely soothing and comforting.

One likes a little fun mixed in with the more serious musical numbers now and then. Monteux evidently has a keen sense of the humorous in music, and for this reason gave the audience Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," a freakish bit of reckless composition which, nevertheless, is fully expressive of its theme. It has to do with the legendary pranks of a scamp who, after frightening women, making a poor success as a Don Juan and poking fun at the serious members of society quite appropriately ends lift on the gallows. This story gives the composer a chance to work in much that is unusual and the piece is a lively, though perhaps not a beautiful one.

The selections from the Pergolesi-Stravinsky "Pulcinella" move with an ease and beauty which are inspiring, although the first number is really the best while the second and third give opportunity for musical vagaries. It was something new for symphony audiences here, however.

The "Kol Nidrie" was played with keen understanding by Mr. Bedetti, who deserves the praise he won last night and the enviable position he occupies as among the leading violoncellists in America. He is the thorough musician, master of his instrument and keenly alive to his duties and the value of his work. The violoncello concerto in B-minor also was played with finish, at times with fire, always in a considerable amount of temperament on the part of the soloist and was enthusiastically received.

Completing the programme was Charier's "Rhapsody Espana," which is a combination of two principal dances of Spain, the "Jota," which is vigorous and fiery, and the "Malanguena," languorous and sensual. As would be expected, the first part is quick of movement, wild and unrestrained in places and wholly abandoned at times, while in the last part it moves at a more leisure pace, modulated in tone, but with a barbaric undercurrent which stirs the pulses.

Monteux is giving to Providence audiences many selections seldom heard and some which one might wait years to hear if the Boston orchestra did not have a conductor with so keen a liking for the musically beautiful and unusual.

Evening Globe
New York
2 5 192

Events in Music.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will depart from a rule broken rarely in recent years in the case of its New York concerts when it plays in Carnegie Hall Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon of next week. It will have a soloist on each occasion. The most notable other exception occurred last season when John McCormack appeared here with the orchestra as the singer of the new Irish songs by Mr. Loeffler, and also of two Bach airs. The soloists next week will be Georges Enesco, the violinist from Roumania and Paris, Thursday night, and Clarence Whitehill, the eminent bass-baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Saturday afternoon. Mr. Enesco will play the Brahms concerto, in which Paris regards him as a specialist; Mr. Whitehill will sing Wotan's farewell from "Die Walküre."

The programme Thursday night will have as its purely orchestral numbers Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espanole," César Franck's symphonic poem "Le Chasseur Maudit," and Smetana's symphonic poem "The Moldau." The programme Saturday afternoon will be devoted to Wagner, including the overture to "Der Fliegende Holländer," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the prelude to "Die Meistersinger," the prelude and "Love-Death" from "Tristan und Isolde," and excerpts from "Die Walküre," "Siegfried," and "Götterdämmerung."

NEW YORK
N. Y.
JOURNAL
ISSUE OF
AN 27 1923

Symphony Soloist

GEORGES ENESCO.

Georges Enesco, the Rumanian, who has appeared here as conductor and composer, as well as violinist, will be the soloist at next Thursday evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall.

BURY REPUBLICAN, THURSDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 1, 192

Symphonic Music Stirs Audience At Local Armory

Program Simple But Pleasing—Tardy Arrival of Orchestra Members, However, Spoils Otherwise Enjoyable Evening

As usual, Waterbury showed its preference for symphonic music last night by crowding the armory to hear the concert given by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Judging by the orchestra's reception, the hearers thoroughly enjoyed themselves. Pierre Monteux, the conductor, chose a program which was simple enough to please those who are finding their way into symphonic music as well as those who know it, but yet it had none of the triteness that such programs sometimes display especially when an orchestra is playing on tour.

M. Monteux conducted carefully and faithfully. His work is more subdued than that of the spirited Nicholai Sokoloff, conductor of the Cleveland symphony which played here last season, but it is none the less effective for that. Last night he led a company of players whose work left little to be desired though the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven and the other numbers in a manner which made his hearers eager listeners and stirred them to enthusiasm.

The pleasurable anticipation of the Beethoven symphony, which opened the program, was somewhat subdued by the fact that the orchestra straggled nonchalantly into the hall long after the scheduled time fo starting and it was nearer 9 than 8 o'clock when Mr. Monteux raised his baton. However, even such irritations could not but be dispelled by the "Eroica" symphony with its novelty of idea and its wonderful harmonic and dramatic treatment. This particular work does not need commendation. It is enough to say that its poetry of movement was admirably brought out by the orchestra and M. Monteux, the second and third movements, with their contrasting themes of solemnity and spirit being especially impressive.

Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan" with its colorful score for a great variety of instruments was given with enthusiasm as was the familiar overture to "The Flying Dutchman." The fine tone and balance of the orchestra was always apparent and the rendition of the entire program was scholarly to a gratifying degree.

The soloist, Robert Burgin, played the Tchaikovsky concerto in D major in a manner which brought him a notable ovation from the audience. Young and thooughly sure of himself, Mr. Burgin played the difficult number with sure touch and deft bowing, lending to the whole a romantic and emotional effect. His work was emphasized by a subdued intensity and varying color that made it altogethe pleasing.

The symphony concert was the most successful yet heard in the new armory as far as the acoustics are concerned. The great hall seems built for such pretentious music.

~~SYMPHONY PROGRAM~~

Toscha Seidel, violinist, will appear for the first time as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Boston Symphony concerts in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. He will play Mendelssohn's concerto. Mr. Monteux will open the program with Chausson's Symphony in B flat major and will also conduct for the first time Edward Ballantine's suite "From the Garden of Hellas." The closing number will be the Danzas Fantasticas, by Turina, the noted Spanish composer. These dances will be played in America for the first time.

HERALD-FEB. 4.

SYMPHONY PROGRAMME

Toscha Seidel, the Russian violinist and Auer pupil, will appear for the first time as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Feb. 9 and 10. He will be heard with the orchestra in the concerto of Mendelssohn in E minor. Pierre Monteux will open the programme with Chausson's Symphony in B flat major and will also conduct for the first time Edward Ballantine's suite "From the Garden of Hellas." The closing number will be the "Danzas Fantasticas," by Turina, these dances to have their first American performance.

POST-FEB. 4.

BACK to his novel pieces, back to his usual variety of matter and manner goes Mr. Monteux in his programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. It will traverse Chausson's Symphony, which Mr. Monteux has been long minded to revive; in a set of Fantastic Dances by the Spaniard, Turina, little known to American ears; and a new Suite, "From the Gardens of "Hellas," written by Mr. Ballantine of the Department of Music at Harvard. Toscha Seidel, the violinist, will be the "assisting artist" playing the solo-part in Mendelsshon's Concerto. He has lately returned from an auspicious year in the concert-halls of Europe.

TRANS. FEB. 3.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Toscha Saidel, Russian violinist, will appear for the first time as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, February 9 and 10. He will be heard with the orchestra in Mendelssohn's E minor concerto, Chausson's Symphony in B flat major, Edward Ballantine's new suite "From the Garden of Hellas" and another novelty, the "Danzas Fantasticas" by Turina, will complete the program.

ADVTSR. FEB 4.

SEIDEL NEXT SOLOIST

At the next pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Feb. 9 and 10, Tosoha Seidel, the celebrated Russian violin virtuoso, will appear as soloist with the orchestra in Mendelssohn's con- [illegible]

MONDAY SYMPHONY

Magdeleine Biird, the talented young pianist, is to appear as soloist at the third concert of the extra series of five by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will take place in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, Feb. 12.

[illegible]-JAN. 3.

[illegible] Boston composer, Edward [illegible], an instructor in music at [illegible], is represented on the Boston Symphony program for this week. His new tone poem, "From the Garden of Hellas," is not the first of his works to [illegible] played [illegible] orchestra.

GLOBE FEB. 4.

Mr. Burgin, the concert-master of the Symphony Orchestra, and not Miss Roberts, the singer, will be the soloist, at its concert in Cambridge on Thursday evening next. His piece is Chaikovsky's Concerto, not too often heard hereabouts of late. For the orchestra Mr. Monteux sets Mozart's Symphony in E-flat; Mr. Ballantine's new Suite, "From the Garden of Hellas"; Strauss's tone-poem, "Til Eulenspiegel."

TRANS. FEB. 5.

CARDINAL NEWMAN'S "DREAM OF GERONTIUS" TO BE SUNG

An event of the highest musical importance will be the coming performance by the historical Handel and Haydn Society of Sir Edward Elgar's sacred cantata "The Dream of Gerontius," which is a musical setting of the great poem of the same name by Cardinal Newman This performance will take place in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 11, at 3.30.

As the poem is regarded as the great Cardinal's poetical masterpiece, so likewise was the music the making of Elgar, and marked the turning point in the English composer's career, from semi-obscurity to universal renown.

Elgar's musical score is most elaborate and difficult, both as regards it symphonic and its choral portions, and for this reason only is not frequently performed. Special efforts are being made by Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the Handel and Haydn Chorus of 400 voices, to do eloquent justice to the choral parts of the score.

PILOT-FEB 3.

Enesco With Bostonians.

Last night's Boston Symphony concert at Carnegie Hall was enriched by the presence of Georges Enesco, the Rumanian composer, who played the Brahms violin concerto to Mr. Monteux's accompaniment. This most difficult and most grateful work has appeared nine times on the programs of the current season. It has framed greater tonal purity, it has set forth more brilliant technic, it has enjoyed more sympathetic orchestral support, but rarely if ever has it given more deep musical pleasure, more throbbing poetry, more glorified emotion than last night. Many details arise for criticism: the violinist allowed himself more freedom in his rubato than Mr. Monteux could handle comfortably; there were even collisions in the opening of the last movement; but these flaws were drowned in the turbulent beauty of the interpretation.

Mr. Enesco seemed in and of the music. Its serene melody, its soaring purposes, its intimacy, its inaccessible nobility: all of them shone in the playing, through the vital understanding, the love of the player. And the audience, though tot large, glowed with gratitude for such measure of beauty.

Apart from this happy breach in the Boston Symphony's custom to use no soloists in New York, the rest of the program was a conventional one. Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture has not been played for nearly two years in the city, but the other three works have all been heard within the year; Franck's Poem "Le Chasseur Maudit," Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnole" and Smetana's "The Moldau." The chief criticism of the orchestra remains as usual: its inability to impress the hearers with the assurance of inner cohesion. In other respects Mr. Monteux achieved an excellent concert.

NY. SUN. FEB. 2

The Boston Symphony.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, celebrated the more richly sensuous aspects of music at its third concert in Carnegie Hall last night. In fact, John S. Sumner, merely reading the programme notes, might have felt called upon to register pious disapproval. Imagine Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, the pulsing rhythms of Brahms's Concerto in D major for violin, Franck's "Wild Huntsman," the bewitching Andalusian ladies of Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole," and Smetana's lush "Vivata" from "Ma Vlast," all in two short hours!

Georges Enesco's performance of the Brahms compositions was a notable event of the evening. Without ostentation or dependence upon technical stunts this Roumanian violinist nevertheless gave a profoundly moving interpretation. His playing was smooth flowing, musical, and replete with delicate nuances, particularly in the lovely Adagio movement. The audience responded with prolonged and thunderous applause.

The orchestral readings were distinguished for clarity, precision, and the characteristic Boston Symphony brand of verve and vividness. "The Wild Huntsman," given here earlier in the season by the City Symphony, intermingled blaring climaxes and eerie undercurrents with splendid effect. This same eerie quality, tempered by quixotic quirks and whimsies, colored the first two movements of the Ravel work, while the "Fair" movement was all fire and heart throbs. Familiar Bohemian folk tunes of the kind sometimes reproduced by those quaint musical ornaments relatives bring back from Europe tinkled through the Smetana Symphony, but were given life and individuality by Mr. Monteux and his men.

GLOBE-N.Y. FEB. 2.

BOSTON SYMPHONY AGAIN

WE are glad we can say that last night's performance of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall improved as it progressed. The early part of the programme was somewhat shadowed by Mr. Enesco's rather amorhous rendition of the Brahms concerto. He was frequently off key, and his interpretation seemed of the kind that is shaped largely by the performer's technical limitations. However an extremely colorful if not too accurate performance of Ravel's Rhapsodie Espagnole shortly after served to dispel the gloom. The climax of the evening came quite appropriately at the end in the form of Smetana's symphonic poem, "Vitava." It is no exaggeration to say that the beauty of its reading would have made up for almost anything.

NY. MAIL-FEB 2.

Boſtoner Symphonieorcheſter.

Vor ſehr zahlreichem Publikum, das eine ſehr anerkennende Haltung einnahm, gelangte geſtern abend ein Konzert des Orcheſters unſerer nachbarlichen Stadt Boſton unter Leitung von Herrn Pierre Monteux zu ſtarker Wirkung. Von den Orcheſterſtücken erfuhr die Berlioz'ſche „Benvenuto Cellini"-Ouverture eine ſehr farbige Wiedergabe, wie denn der Dirigent für dieſen Komponiſten ſtets eine liebevolle Tradition und kräftige Effekte auf ſeiner Palette hat.

Franck's ſymphoniſches Poem „Der verfluchte Jäger" wurde gleichfalls mit richtigem, myſtiſchen Ton geſpielt; das Orcheſter, das in der letzten Zeit noch weitere ſtarke Fortſchritte gemacht hat, zeichnete ſich darin durch das vornehmſte Kolorit aus. Glänzend und farbig rauſchte die bunte „Spaniſche Rhapſodie" von Ravel durch den Saal, wobei namentlich die virtuoſen Holzbläſer durch durchgeiſtigte Virtuoſität wirkten. Zum Schluß war es intereſſant, Smetana's ſymphoniſches Poem „Die Moldau" in einer etwas galliſch raffinierten Ausgabe zu hören. Das Melos war beſonders liebevoll ausgebreitet, aber es war doch ein wenig ſo, als ob man auf die delikaten, kräftigen böhmiſchen „Dolki" etwas Parfüm geſchüttet hätte. Das Publikum applaudierte ſehr lebhaft.

Als Soliſten der Veranſtaltung wurde dem rumäniſchen Muſiker ſtarker Verſalität, Herrn Georges Enesco, der diesmal die Violine ſpielte, ein ſehr ehrlicher und ſchallkräftiger Erfolg zuteil. Mit geſammelter Kraft, tief einſchürfendem Verſtändnis und einer jeder Brillanz baren, und daher beſonders Brahmſiſch wirkenden Technik ſpielte der Künſtler das herbe Werk ſeinem Publikum ungemein zu Danke. Er wurde ſchon nach dem erſten Satze mit einer „Ovation" bedacht und zum Schluſſe oft und enthuſiaſtiſch gerufen.

STAATS-FEB. 2.

By GRENA BENNETT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra had possession of Carnegie Hall last night and attracted an audience of good size and much distinction. The programme was broad in its appeal and its performance was reminiscent of the days when the band from the Hub played second fiddle to no organization.

George Enesco, Roumanian composer and conductor, appeared in a third capacity, playing the solo violin part in Brahms's Concerto. His reading was dramatically virile, lofty in spirit and in quality, hauntingly beautiful.

Conductor Monteux has grown considerably in musical stature He directed with vigor and authority

AMER. NY, FEB 2.

OTHER MUSIC.

After hearing the chef d'oeuvre of the Boston Symphony's program at Carnegie Hall last night, one felt tempted to set out to discover and strangle the man who first started the rumor that the music of Brahms is sticky, dull and muddy-pated. This savagery was prompted by Georges Enesco's fiery performance of the violin concerto in D, op. 77. Following immediately after Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, with all its thunderous blatancies, tinsel and claptrap, the work of the bearded sage of Hamburg seemed literally to float aloft on surprisingly youthful wings.

Enesco has spirit in abundance, together with melting tones in the cantabile passages that made the Adagio movement a thing of almost painful beauty. In the final movement also, in which the Brahms of the Hungarian dances raised—or rather wagged—his head, there was warmth and rhythmic verve in superabundance. "The Wild Huntsman" of Cesar Franck followed, and then one became doubly convinced that the composer's game is really an old man's sport.

Smetana's "Vitava" ended the evening's entertainment. The Bostonians throughout played with their accustomed precision and vitality. E. B.

WORLD-FEB. 2.

ENESCO GETS OVATION.

Composer Plays Brahms's Classic With Boston Orchestra.

Georges Enesco, the Rumanian composer, playing Brahms's violin concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening in Carnegie Hall, received one of those rarely earned ovations whereof "the votes should be weighed and not counted." The high musicianship of this great man, most modest of the season's guests, has hardly been more finely shown at recent appearances in recital or as conductor with other forces.

Motionless as a statue, denying all personal display, he made of the calm and lofty concerto no mere show piece. Instead, he restored to it, with all its dignity, a certain individuality of rhythm, transforming many a fiddler's phrase in the rhapsodic manner of tempo rubato known to Europe's southeast. It was racy but reverent Brahms playing, and the adagio's contrast midway was one of the notable performances of many years.

Mr. Monteux's program running to two hours, explored the sonorities of "The Wild Huntsman" of César Franck with impetuous tumult of trumpet and song. For overture tnere was Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini," and in conclusion Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody" and the Bohemian Smetana's "The Moldau."

NY. TIMES-FEB. 2

ENESCO AT CONCERT OF BOSTON ORCHESTRA

A miscellany of music mostly in the modern romantic vein made up Pierre Monteux's programme for the concert of the Boston Symphony Archestra last evening in Carnegie Hall. Berlioz, Ravel, Franck and Smetana were the composers he drew upon for the purely orchestral numbers, whilst Brahms's violin concerto was the vehicle for Georges Enesco's appearance as a soloist. He gave an absorbing performance of the piece, and was much applauded for it. The audience likewise enjoyed itself during the rest of the evening, taking special pleasure in Mr. Monteux's playing of the Ravel "Rapsodie Espagnole."

[61]

Evening Globe 1 25 192
New York

Events in Music.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will depart from a rule broken rarely in recent years in the case of its New York concerts when it plays in Carnegie Hall Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon of next week. It will have a soloist on each occasion. The most notable other exception occurred last season when John McCormack appeared here with the orchestra as the singer of the new Irish songs by Mr. Loeffler, and also of two Bach airs. The soloists next week will be Georges Enesco, the violinist from Roumania and Paris, Thursday night, and Clarence Whitehill, the eminent bass-baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Saturday afternoon. Mr. Enesco will play the Brahms concerto, in which Paris regards him as a specialist; Mr. Whitehill will sing Wotan's farewell from "Die Walküre."

The programme Thursday night will have as its purely orchestral numbers Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espanole," César Franck's symphonic poem "Le Chasseur Maudit," and Smetana's symphonic poem "The Moldau." The programme Saturday afternoon will be devoted to Wagner, including the overture to "Der Flegende Holländer," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the prelude to "Die Meistersinger," the prelude and "Love-Death" from "Tristan und Isolde," and excerpts from "Die Walküre," "Siegfried," and "Götterdämmerung."

NEW YORK
N. Y.
JOURNAL
ISSUE OF
AN 27 192

Symphony Soloist

GEORGES ENESCO.

Georges Enesco, the Rumanian, who has appeared here as conductor and composer, as well as violinist, will be the soloist at next Thursday evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall.

BACK to his novel pieces, back to his usual variety of matter and manner goes Mr. Monteux in his programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. It will traverse Chausson's Symphony, which Mr. Monteux has been long minded to revive; in a set of Fantastic Dances by the Spaniard, Turina, little known to American ears; and a new Suite, "From the Gardens of "Hellas." written by Mr. Ballantine of the Department of Music at Harvard. Toscha Seidel, the violinist, will be the "assisting artist" playing the solo-part in Mendelssohn's Concerto. He has lately returned from an auspicious year in the concert-halls of Europe.

TRANS. FEB. 3.

SEIDEL NEXT SOLOIST

At the next pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Feb. 9 and 10, Toscha Seidel, the celebrated Russian violin virtuoso, will appear as soloist with the orchestra in Mendelssohn's concerto in E minor.

MONDAY SYMPHONY

Magdeleine Biird, the talented young pianist, is to appear as soloist at the third concert of the extra series of five by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will take place in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, Feb. 12.

TRAVER-JAN. 3.

Another Boston composer, Edward Ballentine, an instructor in music at Harvard, is represented on the Boston Symphony program for this week. His new tone poem, "From the Garden of Hellas," is not the first of his works to be played by this orchestra.

GLOBE-FEB. 4.

ATERBURY REPUBLICAN, THURSDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 1, 192

Symphonic Music Stirs Audience At Local Armory

Program Simple But Pleasing—Tardy Arrival of Orchestra Members, However, Spoils Otherwise Enjoyable Evening

As usual, Waterbury showed its preference for symphonic music last night by crowding the armory to hear the concert given by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Judging by the orchestra's reception, the hearers thoroughly enjoyed themselves. Pierre Monteux, the conductor, chose a program which was simple enough to please those who are finding their way into symphonic music as well as those who know it, but yet it had none of the triteness that such programs sometimes display especially when an orchestra is playing on tour.

M. Monteux conducted carefully and faithfully. His work is more subdued than that of the spirited Nicholai Sokoloff, conductor of the Cleveland symphony which played here last season, but it is none the less effective for that. Last night he led a company of players whose work left little to be desired though the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven and the other numbers in a manner which made his hearers eager listeners and stirred them to enthusiasm.

The pleasurable anticipation of the Beethoven symphony, which opened the program, was somewhat subdued by the fact that the orchestra straggled nonchalantly into the hall long after the scheduled time fo starting and it was nearer 9 than 8 o'clock when Mr. Monteux raised his baton. However, even such irritations could not but be dispelled by the "Eroica" symphony with its novelty of idea and its wonderful harmonic and dramatic treatment. This particular work does not need commendation. It is enough to say that its poetry of movement was admirably brought out by the orchestra and M. Monteux, the second and third movements, with their contrasting themes of solemnity and spirit being especially impressive.

Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan" with its colorful score for a great variety of instruments was given with enthusiasm as was the familiar overture to "The Flying Dutchman." The fine tone and balance of the orchestra was always apparent and the rendition of the entire program was scholarly to a gratifying degree.

The soloist, Robert Burgin, played the Tchaikovsky concerto in D major in a manner which brought him a notable ovation from the audience. Young and thooughly sure of himself, Mr. Burgin played the difficult number with sure touch and deft bowing, lending to the whole a romantic and emotional effect. His work was emphasized by a subdued intensity and varying color that made it altogethe pleasing.

The symphony concert was the most successful yet heard in the new armory as far as the acoustics are concerned. The great hall seems built for such pretentious music.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Toscha Seidel, violinist, will appear for the first time as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Boston Symphony concerts in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. He will play Mendelssohn's concerto. Mr. Monteux will open the program with Chausson's Symphony in B flat major and will also conduct for the first time Edward Ballantine's suite "From the Garden of Hellas." The closing number will be the Danzas Fantasticas by Turina, the noted Spanish composer. These dances will be played in America for the first time.

HERALD-FEB. 4.

SYMPHONY PROGRAMME

Toscha Seidel, the Russian violinist and Auer pupil, will appear for the first time as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Feb. 9 and 10. He will be heard with the orchestra in the concerto of Mendelssohn in E minor. Pierre Monteux will open the programme with Chausson's Symphony in B flat major and will also conduct for the first time Edward Ballantine's suite "From the Garden of Hellas." The closing number will be the "Danzas Fantasticas," by Turina, these dances to have their first American performance.

POST-FEB. 4.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Toscha Saidel, Russian violinist, will appear for the first time as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, February 9 and 10. He will be heard with the orchestra in Mendelssohn's E minor concerts, Chausson's Symphony in B flat major, Edward Ballantine's new suite "From the Garden of Hellas" and another novelty, the "Danzas Fantasticas" by Turina, will complete the program.

ADVTSR. FEB 4.

Mr. Burgin, the concert-master of the Symphony Orchestra, and not Miss Roberts, the singer, will be the soloist, at its concert in Cambridge on Thursday evening next. His piece is Chaikovsky's Concerto, not too often heard hereabouts of late. For the orchestra Mr. Monteux sets Mozart's Symphony in E-flat; Mr. Ballantine's new Suite, "From the Garden of Hellas"; Strauss's tone-poem, "Til Eulenspiegel."

TRANS. FEB. 5.

CARDINAL NEWMAN'S "DREAM OF GERONTIUS" TO BE SUNG

An event of the highest musical importance will be the coming performance by the historic Handel and Haydn Society of Sir Edward Elgar's sacred cantata "The Dream of Gerontius," which is a musical setting of the great poem of the same name by Cardinal Newman. This performance will take place in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon February 11, at 3.30.

As the poem is regarded as the great Cardinal's poetical masterpiece, so likewise was the music the making of Elgar and marked the turning point in the English composer's career, from semi-obscurity to universal renown.

Elgar's musical score is most elaborate and difficult both as regards its symphonic and its choral portions, and for this reason only is not frequently performed. Special efforts are being made by Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the Handel and Haydn Chorus of 400 voices to do eloquent justice to the choral parts of the score.

PILOT-FEB. 3.

Enesco With Bostonians.

Last night's Boston Symphony concert at Carnegie Hall was enriched by the presence of Georges Enesco, the Rumanian composer, who played the Brahms violin concerto to Mr. Monteux's accompaniment. This most difficult and most grateful work has appeared nine times on the programs of the current season. It has framed greater tonal purity, it has set forth more brilliant technic, it has enjoyed more sympathetic orchestral support, but rarely if ever has it given more deep musical pleasure, more throbbing poetry, more glorified emotion than last night. Many details arise for criticism: the violinist allowed himself more freedom in his rubato than Mr. Monteux could handle comfortably; there were even collisions in the opening of the last movement; but these flaws were drowned in the turbulent beauty of the interpretation.

Mr. Enesco seemed in and of the music. Its serene melody, its soaring purposes, its intimacy, its inaccessible nobility: all of them shone in the playing, through the vital understanding, the love of the player. And the audience, though tot large, glowed with gratitude for such measure of beauty.

Apart from this happy breach in the Boston Symphony's custom to use no soloists in New York, the rest of the program was a conventional one. Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture has not been played for nearly two years in the city, but the other three works have all been heard within the year: Franck's Poem "Le Chasseur Maudit," Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnole" and Smetana's "The Moldau." The chief criticism of the orchestra remains as usual: its inability to impress the hearers with the assurance of inner cohesion. In other respects Mr. Monteux achieved an excellent concert.

NY. SUN. FEB. 2

The Boston Symphony.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, celebrated the more richly sensuous aspects of music at its third concert in Carnegie Hall last night. In fact, John S. Sumner, merely reading the programme notes, might have felt called upon to register pious disapproval. Imagine Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, the pulsing rhythms of Brahms's Concerto in D major for violin, Franck's "Wild Huntsman," the bewitching Andalusian ladies of Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole," and Smetana's lush "Vlvata" from "Ma Vlast," all in two short hours!

Georges Enesco's performance of the Brahms compositions was a notable event of the evening. Without ostentation or dependence upon technical stunts this Roumanian violinist nevertheless gave a profoundly moving interpretation. His playing was smooth flowing, musical, and replete with delicate nuances, particularly in the lovely Adagio movement. The audience responded with prolonged and thunderous applause.

The orchestral readings were distinguished for clarity, precision, and the characteristic Boston Symphony brand of verve and vividness. "The Wild Huntsman," given here earlier in the season by the City Symphony, intermingled blaring climaxes and eerie undercurrents with splendid effect. This same eerie quality, tempered by quixotic quirks and whimsies, colored the first two movements of the Ravel work, while the "Fair" movement was all fire and heart throbs. Familiar Bohemian folk tunes of the kind sometimes reproduced by those quaint musical ornaments relatives bring back from Europe tinkled through the Smetana Symphony, but were given life and individuality by Mr. Monteux and his men.

GLOBE-N.Y.-FEB. 2.

BOSTON SYMPHONY AGAIN

WE are glad we can say that last night's performance of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall improved as it progressed. The early part of the programme was somewhat shadowed by Mr. Enesco's rather amorhous rendition of the Brahms concerto. He was frequently off key, and his interpretation seemed of the kind that is shaped largely by the performer's technical limitations. However, an extremely colorful if not too accurate performance of Ravel's Rhapsodie Espagnole shortly after served to dispel the gloom. The climax of the evening came quite appropriately at the end in the form of Smetana's symphonic poem, "Vltava." It is no exaggeration to say that the beauty of its reading would have made up for almost anything.

NY. MAIL-FEB. 2.

Boſtoner Symphonieorcheſter.

Vor ſehr zahlreichem Publikum, das eine ſehr anerkennende Haltung einnahm, gelangte geſtern abend ein Konzert des Orcheſters unſerer nachbarlichen Stadt Boſton unter Leitung von Herrn Pierre Monteux zu ſtarker Wirkung. Von den Orcheſterſtücken erfuhr die Berlioz'ſche „Benvenuto Cellini"=Ouverture eine ſehr farbige Wiedergabe, wie denn der Dirigent für dieſen Komponiſten ſtets eine liebevolle Tradition und kräftige Effekte auf ſeiner Palette hat.

Franck's ſymphoniſches Poem „Der verfluchte Jäger" wurde gleichfalls mit richtigem, myſtiſchen Ton geſpielt; das Orcheſter, das in der letzten Zeit noch weitere ſtarke Fortſchritte gemacht hat, zeichnete ſich darin durch das vornehmſte Kolorit aus. Glänzend und farbig rauſchte die bunte „Spaniſche Rhapſodie" von Ravel durch den Saal, wobei namentlich die virtuoſen Holzbläſer durch durchgeiſtigte Virtuoſität wirkten. Zum Schluß war es intereſſant, Smetana's ſymphoniſches Poem „Die Moldau" in einer etwas galliſch raffinierten Ausgabe zu hören. Das Melos war beſonders liebevoll ausgebreitet, aber es war doch ein wenig ſo, als ob man auf die delikaten, kräftigen böhmiſchen „Dolki" etwas Parfüm geſchüttet hätte. Das Publikum applaudierte ſehr lebhaft.

Als Soliſten der Veranſtaltung wurde dem rumäniſchen Muſiker ſtarker Verſalität, Herrn Georges Enesco, der diesmal die Violine ſpielte, ein ſehr ehrlicher und ſchallkräftiger Erfolg zuteil. Mit geſammelter Kraft, tief einſchürfendem Verſtändnis und einer jeder Brillanz baren, und daher beſonders Brahmſiſch wirkenden Technik ſpielte der Künſtler das herbe Werk ſeinem Publikum ungemein zu Danke. Er wurde ſchon nach dem erſten Satze mit einer „Ovation" bedacht und zum Schluſſe oft und enthuſiaſtiſch gerufen.

STAATS-FEB. 2.

By GRENA BENNETT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra had possession of Carnegie Hall last night and attracted an audience of good size and much distinction. The programme was broad in its appeal and its performance was reminiscent of the days when the band from the Hub played second fiddle to no organization.

George Enesco, Roumanian composer and conductor, appeared in a third capacity, playing the solo violin part in Brahms's Concerto. His reading was dramatically virile, lofty in spirit and in quality, hauntingly beautiful.

Conductor Monteux has grown considerably in musical stature He directed with vigor and authority

AMER. NY. FEB 3

OTHER MUSIC.

After hearing the chef d'oeuvre of the Boston Symphony's program at Carnegie Hall last night, one felt tempted to set out to discover and strangle the man who first started the rumor that the music of Brahms is sticky, dull and muddy-pated. This savagery was prompted by Georges Enesco's fiery performance of the violin concerto in D, op. 77. Following immediately after Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, with all its thunderous blatancies, tinsel and claptrap, the work of the bearded sage of Hamburg seemed literally to float aloft on surprisingly youthful wings.

Enesco has spirit in abundance, together with melting tones in the cantabile passages that made the Adagio movement a thing of almost painful beauty. In the final movement also, in which the Brahms of the Hungarian dances raised—or rather wagged—his head, there was warmth and rhythmic verve in superabundance. "The Wild Huntsman" of Cesar Franck followed, and then one became doubly convinced that the composer's game is really an old man's sport.

Smetana's "Vitava" ended the evening's entertainment. The Bostonians throughout played with their accustomed precision and vitality. E. B.

WORLD-FEB

ENESCO GETS OVATION.

Composer Plays Brahms's Classic With Boston Orchestra.

Georges Enesco, the Rumanian composer, playing Brahms's violin concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening in Carnegie Hall, received one of those rarely earned ovations whereof "the votes should be weighed and not counted." The high musicianship of this great man, most modest of the season's guests, has hardly been more finely shown at recent appearances in recital or as conductor with other forces.

Motionless as a statue, denying all personal display, he made of the calm and lofty concerto no mere show piece. Instead, he restored to it, with all its dignity, a certain individuality of rhythm, transforming many a fiddler's phrase in the rhapsodic manner of tempo rubato known to Europe's southeast. It was racy but reverent Brahms playing, and the adagio's contrast midway was one of the notable performances of many years.

Mr. Monteux's program running to two hours, explored the sonorities of "The Wild Huntsman" of César Franck with impetuous tumult of trumpet and song. For overture there was Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini," and in conclusion Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody" and the Bohemian Smetana's "The Moldau."

NY. [illegible] -FEB. 2

ENESCO AT CONCERT OF BOSTON ORCHESTRA

A miscellany of music mostly in the modern romantic vein made up Pierre Monteux's programme for the concert of the Boston Symphony Archestra last evening in Carnegie Hall. Berlioz, Ravel, Franck and Smetana were the composers he drew upon for the purely orchestral numbers, whilst Brahms's violin concerto was the vehicle for Georges Enesco's appearance as a soloist. He gave an absorbing performance of the piece, and was much applauded for it. The audience likewise enjoyed itself during the rest of the evening, taking special pleasure in Mr. Monteux's playing of the Ravel "Rapsodie Espagnole."

ENESCO, RUMANIAN VIOLINIST, BOSTON ORCHESTRA SOLOIST

Pierre Monteux Conducts Some Unfamiliar Music as Feature of Enjoyable Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its third evening concert here in Carnegie Hall last night with Georges Enesco as the soloist. The program comprised Berlioz's overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," the Brahms violin concerto, Cesar Franck's tone poem, "Le Chasseur Maudit," Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnole" and "The Moldau," of Smetana.

The orchestral numbers were all quite familiar, save one, but they whetted the musical appetite of the listener anew, because of their generally excellent performance under Mr. Monteux's baton. Franck's poem, "Le Chasuer Maudit" ("The Wild Huntsman"), Mr. Monteuv no doubt brought forward as an offering to the composer's centenary, which is being celebrated this season. The effective score had been heard here twice recently at concerts of the City Symphony Orchestra. The poem could easily bear more frequent hearings. Smetana's "Moldau," singing of the beauty of the Bohemian river, brought a singular charm of its own to the brilliant program.

Much artistic interest had centered in Mr. Eresco's appearance here with orchestra. The distinguished Rumanian had already been heard within the month as a conductor, a composer and a violin recitalist. His performance of Brahms's concerto made a profound impression. He had played the work a short time ago with this orchestra in Boston and left behind him a similar impression to the one he now created. Last night his technical and tonal powers, while not startling, supported him in a reading entirely poetic and lofty in style. The taste and feeling he imparted to his interpretation can justly be pronounced as genuinely beautiful.

The slow movement was an exquisite delight. The novelty of a soloist at one of these concerts may have lent a twofold interest for some persons in the audience to Mr. Enesco's appearance. But this is doubtful. He himself seemed to win the ovation he received.

Enseco the Soloist At Third Concert of Boston Symphony

Violinist in Brahms D Major Concerto Scores Success in First Appearance Here Accompanied by Orchestra

By F. D. Perkins

We have had opportunities of hearing Georges Enesco as conductor, and as violinist in recital, but his first appearance here as a soloist with orchestra, was at the third evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday, at Carnegie Hall. His choice was the Brahms D major concerto; one which has exerted a peculiar fascination over this season's violinists. Messrs Huberman and Seidel have played it with the Philharmonic; Erika Morini with the City Symphony, but by far the best performance was Mr. Enesco's.

What the concerto is long is beyond doubt; likewise that it is difficult. As past performances have shown, it can seem heavy and tedious with even a fairly good performance—witness Mr. Seidel's. But it was not so this time, as Mr. Enesco proved to have made a happy choice.

Not a showy violinist, but serious, sound and thoroughly competent, he showed a thorough harmony between the music and its mode of performance. There was some tightness in his tone at first, but it soon warmed up. Though it had hardly the copious flow of Mr. Kreisler's, it was clear and expressive, bringing melody where there often seemed drought. The labored quality often found in the concerto was absent from his technique; in his phrasing and expression Mr. Enesco showed a thorough sympathy with Brahms, as did generally, the accompanying orchestra.

Perhaps the most enjoyable movement was the second, with its unbroken flow of quiet melody, played with unfaltering smoothness over a delicately colored, well-blended background furnished by the musicians under Mr. Monteux. The violinist was deservedly applauded at length, while in this and in the others the orchestra gave a generally good performance, with a lively opening in Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture.

Though not a novelty, Ravel's Rhapsodie Espagnole is hardly familiar here. It conveys, indeed, a generally Spanish atmosphere, though its ways are modern French. It has lightness and delicacy, which were brought out in the performance, as well as rhythm, but it left a somewhat unsatisfied atmosphere, as of a beginning never quite begun. The orchestra seems always on the point of launching into a lively Spanish dance-tune, a la Chabrier, but never does, at least, until the last moment. But this was not the fault of Mr. Monteux and the orchestra, who played it well, likewise Cesar Franck's symphonic poem "La Chasseur Maudit" and the pleasantly flowing melody of Smetana's "Vltava." There was a fair-sized audience.

TRIBUNE - FEB. 2.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF

FEB 3 1923

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Is it possible that Pierre Monteux has been consulting Coue in Boston along with Mary Garden? Certainly his programs are getting better and better, if not day by day then month by month. It is a long time since such a wealth of noble music has been assembled for a single evening as that which his Boston Symphony Orchestra gave for its third Brooklyn concert at the Academy last evening. The one possible criticism is that the program was a little too long, so that even enthusiasts were tired before the end. Two hours of serious music is enough for most people.

The opening was Beethoven's Eighth Symphony with its enchanting second movement. That is not too long, and was the more welcome because it is not played as often as some of the others, and its refreshing measures fell upon waiting ears. Then came Smetana's tone poem, "The Moldau," which so vividly pictures the flow of a river from its sparkling current as a mountain rill to its mighty sweep as a great river. This is a tone poem that needs no program and its picture is reinforced with attractive melody and with ingenious and varied orchestral development.

Then came the novelty of the evening, Brahms' seldom heard violin concerto, played by Georges Enesco, a New York musician whose name has been familiar as a composer on orchestral programs for several years, but whose face was new to a Brooklyn audience and who in fact has played very little as a soloist. He has none of the display tricks of the hardened soloist, leaving his performance to stand by its interpretation of the music. How well he met that test was shown by the fact that he captivated his audience with a concerto which is long, constantly elevated in tone and which most violinists have left severely alone, probably because it affords so little opportunity for personal display. Now that Mr. Enesco has shown that an audience can be made to enjoy Brahms at his best, it is to be hoped that we shall hear the work oftener. We can hardly hope to hear it to better advantage than last evening. The close was a grouping of several fine passages from Wagner's "Ring" music, which served to remind the audience what a monumental and inspiring work that is, just as the first opportunity to hear it complete since the war is about to be offered in New York. The combination included the awakening of Brunnhilde, the Rhine journey and the climax from "Gotterdammerung" with many of the most stirring moments in the two closing works of the trilogy.

H. O.

BALTIMORE,
MD.
SUN
ISSUE OF

FEB 4 1923

SOME WAR CHANGES

A Boston Observer Notes Reversion To German Music.

From the Boston Post.

It is interesting to watch the gradual changes in popular sentiment on certain matters since the war ended.

Some months after the armistice was signed there were riotous scenes in New York outside an opera house, where it was proposed to present a German opera. The crowd absolutely refused to "stand for" it.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was one of the first organizations to recognize that the war was over and to resume playing German music—without a ripple of protest on the part of the audience.

Now it is announced that the Deutcher Grand Opera Company, of Berlin, is to tour the United States; but if anybody is getting excited about it, I haven't seen any of the symptoms.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
TRIBUNE
ISSUE OF

Boston Orchestra Gives Full Matinee to Wagner

Whitehill Soloist in Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music of "The Valkyr"

How long ago the cry began that Wagner's music was becoming outmoded, losing its vogue and attractive power cannot be said; probably about the time that its popularity began to be universal. No doubt music, like everything else in this world, obeys the law laid down by the melancholy Jacques: It ripes and ripes and then rots and rots. But Wagner's art has not yet reached the turning point. Its popularity in the concert room, during the present season at least, has tried the patience of even those reviewers for the newspapers who do no more than make record of the programs. There have been perhaps twoscore performances from the dramas which are in the repertoire of the opera house, where they may be heard as they ought to be heard in association with scenery and action.

Nevertheless, Mr. Monteux and the Boston Orchestra devoted all of yesterday afternoon's concert in Carnegie Hall to Wagner's music: the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the prelude and finale of "Tristan and Yseult," Wotan's leavetaking and the magic fire scene from "The Valkyr" and the portions (combined) of "Siegfried" and "The Dusk of the Gods." To the number from "The Valkyr" Mr. Clarence Whitehill lent the aid of his voice and art, and again in his singing, enunciation of the words, diction and embodiment of the spirit of the scene set an example from which every German singer in town might have learned a lesson. And the hall was crowded with enthusiastic hearers.

FEB 4 192

NEW YORK CITY

SINGS FROM 'THE VALKYRIE.'

Clarence Whitehill Appears With Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Clarence Whitehill sang the music of Wotan in the farewell and magic fire scene from "The Valkyrie" yesterday afternoon in the Wagner concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall. His voice was not at its best, but the singing was of such excellent quality that he was recalled many times.

The orchestra under the direction of Pierre Monteux played the excerpts from the German operas with vivid contrasts and fine ensemble effects, although many of the passages were played so slowly that they were drab. The audience was the largest which has attended a concert of the Boston organization this season.

From
AMERICAN
New York City

MONTEUX LEADS IN AFTERNOON OF WAGNER

Conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra in Performance from Works of Great Master

By GRENA BENNETT.

PIERRE MONTEUX, who at present controls the musical destiny of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led the Hub band through the harmonious mazes and measures of Wagnerian composition in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon.

In limiting his programme to selections by the master of Bayreuth, Mr. Monteux, who rarely presents a list without a French number, followed the fashion adopted byg local orchestral conductors. The all-Wagner lure is undeniable and the size of yesterday's matinee audience definitely proved that fact.

The programme was not arranged chronologically though it began with "The Flying Dutchman," one of the early efforts from Wagner's pen, and ended with Siegfried's Rhine journey from "Dusk of the Gods," one of his later music dramas.

Between these the audience listened with evident gratification to a poetic performance of the "Lohengrin" prelude: the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," which was played with spirit and fevor; prelude and love death from "Tristan and Isolde," a poignant and noble [illegible] and Wotan's farewell [illegible] from "[illegible]

From FEB 5 192
Evening Globe
New York

MUSIC

By PITTS SANBORN.

"Loony Pete" and Sublunary Matters Come to the Klaw.

Sometimes I think it is simply because New York has so many concerts that new music is so long in getting to a hearing on our island. Numbers father competition, and when it comes to competition, what do concert audiences love and flock to hear? Why, the "Pathetic" symphony and the "Ride of the Valkyrs." After the years and years of waiting Mr. Stokowski dared to do the Schönberg "Five Pieces" for orchestra here with his Philadelphia band last winter, and the town is still humming with the outrage. Mr. Monteux's Boston Symphony programmes are as a rule generously spiced with novelty, and lo and behold, the largest Boston Symphony audience Carnegie Hall has sheltered in several years was drawn thither by Saturday afternoon's Wagner programme! I haven't a word to say against this loving of the old songs; only against the loving of them to the abortive death of the new.

Am Samstag nachmittag hat Herr Pierre Monteux an der Spitze der Boſtoner uns ein ausſchließlich Wagnerſches Programm geſchenkt, das erſte dieſer Art, welches der Dirigent uns bisher vorgeführt hat. Daß Herr Monteux ſich in die Wagnerwelt liebevoll und ebenſo intelligent als ſtilgerecht eingelebt hatte, wurde gleich nach der Eröffnungsnummer, der Ouverture zum „Fliegenden Holländer", klar, welche die durchgeiſtigten marinen Wirkungen ſehr lebhaft und farbig zum Effekt brachten. Es folgten in bunter Reihe das „Lohengrin"-Vorſpiel, in welchem namentlich die Streicher ſeraphiſch klangen, „Vorſpiel und Liebestod aus Triſtan", gebührend pathetiſch und chromatiſch-üppig geſchwellt, Excerpte aus „Siegfried" und „Götterdämmerung", effektvoll verbunden, und „Wotans Abſchied und Feuerzauber", dieſer in effektvoller Steigerung, wozu Herr Whitehill vom Metropolitan die Wagner'ſche Wotanmuſik in der ihm üblichen ſtiliſtiſch unvergleichlichen und emotionellen Art ſang. Es war vor einem den Saal in allen ſeinen Räumen dicht füllendem Publikum ein durchſchlagender Erfolg, an dem Dirigent, Soliſt und das wundervolle Orcheſter zu gleichen Teilen partizipieren durften.

U.

STAATS - FEB. 5

CONCERTS PLANNED AT NOMINAL PRICES

Providence Patron Makes Possible for Wage Earner to Hear Noted Artists.

FIRST PROGRAMME FEB. 18

Boston Symphony Orchestra Obtained for First of Series.—Tickets to Be Sold for Equivalent of 13 Cents Each

To place the best music of the great symphony orchestras and Grand Opera soloists within reach of even the smallest wage-earner in Providence, a lover of music who withholds his name from the public has launched an enterprise which will make its debut here Feb. 18 with a concert by the 100 musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for which the admission charge will be at the rate of 13 cents per person.

Announcement of this was made yesterday in connection with organization of the Providence Music League, which receives its support at the beginning from this unknown source.

Under the auspices of the league, it is stated, a series of three concerts will be given at the Albee Theatre during February, March and April. The first will be by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Pierre Monteux, conductor, and for the others, stars of the Metropolitan Grand Opera will be brought to Providence.

If the public demand for these three concerts proves sufficient it is the hope of the Providence Music League ultimately to achieve the endowment of a foundation for music in Rhode Island, to devote itself to the education of the people in the appreciation of music. Such enterprises are now being widely discussed by musicians and music lovers throughout the United States, and it is hoped thereby to spread an appreciation for and love of music throughout the country. In organizing these concerts Providence is taking the leadership in this movement.

PLANS OF LEAGUE

The statement of the league says, in part:

"It is the plan of those behind the movement here to see to it that tickets for the concerts go only to those who would be unable to afford tickets if the usual concert rates were charged. Safeguards will be thrown around the sale of tickets with this end in view.

[illegible] the series of concerts will be given at 3 [illegible] afternoon, Feb. 18, at the E. F. Albee Theatre. The offering will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, with Richard Burgin, violinist, as soloist. The second concert will come Sunday, March 18, and the third Sunday, April 15.

"Tickets admitting to all three concerts will be sold by the sponsors of the music movement for 40 cents, making the cost of a single concert 13 cents. In this way, persons will be able to attend three concerts, at which the total admission charge ordinarily would be from $3 to $10, for about the price of a single seat for a moving picture show.

"Tickets will be distributed to officials of factories, mills and stores for sale to their employes, and to Federal Hill House, Girls' City Club, Young Men's Christian Association and Young Women's Christian Association. Tickets will also be placed at the Brown Unoin at Brown University. Distributors of the tickets will be asked to bear in mind that the purpose of the whole movement is to make available music at a very low cost to those who cannot afford to pay a greater price.

"For the purpose of the concerts, the Keith interests have offered the use of the Albee Theatre at about cost and the artists participating have also made concessions. The remainder of the cost of the experiment will be borne entirely by a Providence man who desires to aid in the movement for the education of the public in the appreciation of music. The sum realized from the sale of tickets will all be given to Providence charitable organizations.

"The concert series will be given under the auspices of a newly-formed organization known as the Providence Music League. The league was established for the sole purpose of undertaking the proposed experiment and, if it proves successful, of attempting to carry the plan to its logical conclusion, namely, the endowment of a foundation to make possible the indefinite continuation of the undertaking.

"The league is going forward on the belief that there are literally thousands of persons in Providence who love music and who are unable to pay the charges ordinarily asked for concerts. There are other thousands, members of the league believe, whose love of music would be stimulated and their appreciation sharpened by the mere opportunity to hear good music. It is to prove these beliefs accurate that the present concert series has been arranged.

ENDOWMENT FOUNDATION

"If the response of the public to the experiment is what the league confidently expects it will be, the next logical step will be one toward the goal of an endowed foundation, to make the work thus started permanent. If such a foundation is established, it is the plan to turn into its treasury the money which will be realized by the sales of tickets at the nominal prices decided upon.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be the attraction at the first concert of the series, is one of the oldest and best known organizations of its kind in America, and consists of 101 musicians under the guidance of Pierre Monteux, well-known conductor. The orchestra was formed more than 40 years ago, under the inspiration of Maj. Henry L. Higginson of Boston. The orchestra is known throughout the United States as an organization of finished musicians.

"Many concerts have been given in Providence by the orchestra in past years, Infantry Hall being the usual place. Charging of the prices necessary to finance the visit of the organization to the city, members of the league declare, has kept from the concerts hundreds of persons who were anxious to attend but who were unable to pay the prices asked."

Firms desiring tickets for the concerts for sale to their employes may obtain them by making application to the Providence Music League, care of the Providence Chamber of Commerce.

JOURNAL FEB 9

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD

ARRANGE 13 CENT CONCERTS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Feb. 8.—Three concerts will be given here under an arrangement announced to-day by the Providence Music League, a recently organized society, formed for the purpose of stimulating a love of music among the people. Tickets will be 40 cents for the three concerts. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the attraction at the first concert, February 18.

FROM FEB 9 1923
Times
NEW YORK CITY

40-Cent Concerts in Providence.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Feb. 8.—A series of three concerts by high-class artists will be given in this city for 40 cents under an arrangement announced today by the Providence Music League, a recently organized society formed for the purpose of stimulating a love of music among the mass of people. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the attraction at the first concert a week from Sunday. The plan is supported financially by a music lover who will not permit his name to be made public.

BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
FEB 8 1923

MUSICAL ARTISTS TO BE HEARD HERE AT NOMINAL PRICES

Boston Symphony and Other Organizations to Play in City, with Providence Man as Patron, and Tickets Will Sell for Equivalent of 13 Cents Each.

To place the best music of the great symphony orchestras and Grand Opera soloists within reach of even the smallest wage-earner in Providence, a lover of music who withholds his name from the public has launched an enterprise which will make its debut here Feb. 18 with a concert by the 100 musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for which the admission charge will be at the rate of 13 cents per person.

Announcement of this was made to-day in connection with the organization of the Providence Music League, which receives its support at the beginning from this unknown source.

Under the auspices of the league, it is stated, a series of three concerts will be given at the Albee Theatre during February, March and April. The first will be by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Pierre Monteux, conductor, and for the others, stars of the Metropolitan Grand Opera will be brought to Providence.

If the public demand for these three

Continued from Page 1.

concerts proves sufficient it is the hope of the Providence Music League ultimately to achieve the endowment of a foundation for music in Rhode Island, to devote itself to the education of the people in the appreciation of music. Such enterprises are now being widely discussed by musicians and music lovers throughout the United States, and it is hoped thereby to spread an appreciation for and love of music throughout the country. In organizing these concerts Providence is taking the leadership in this movement.

The statement of the league says, in part:

"It is the plan of those behind the movement here to see to it that tickets for the concerts go only to those who would be unable to afford tickets if the usual concert rates were charged. Safeguards will be thrown around the sale of tickets with this end in view.

"The first of the series of concerts will be given at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, Feb. 18, at the E. F. Albee Theatre. The offering will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, with Richard Burgin, violinist, as soloist. The second concert will come Sunday, March 18, and the third Sunday, April 15.

"Tickets admitting to all three concerts will be sold by the sponsors of the music movement for 40 cents, making the cost of a single concert 13 cents. In this way, persons will be able to attend three concerts, at which the total admission charge ordinarily would be from $3 to $10, for about the price of a single seat for a moving picture show.

"Tickets will be distributed to officials of factories, mills and stores for sale to their employes, and to Federal Hill House, Girls' City Club, Young Men's Christian Association and Young Women's Christian Association. Tickets will also be placed at the Brown Unoin at Brown University. Distributors of the tickets will be asked to bear in mind that the purpose of the whole movement is to make available music at a very low cost to those who cannot afford to pay a greater price.

"For the purpose of the concerts, the Keith interests have offered the use of the Albee Theatre at about cost and the artists participating have also made concessions. The remainder of the cost of the experiment will be borne entirely by a Providence man who desires to aid in the movement for the education of the public in the appreciation of music. The sum realized from the sale of tickets will all be given to Providence charitable organizations.

New League is Sponsor

"The concert series will be given under the auspices of a newly-formed organization known as the Providence Music League. The league was established for the sole purpose of undertaking the proposed experiment and, if it proves successful, of attempting to carry the plan to its logical conclusion, namely, the endowment of a foundation to make possible the indefinite continuation of the undertaking.

"The league is going forward on the belief that there are literally thousands of persons in Providence who love music and who are unable to pay the charges ordinarily asked for concerts. There are other thousands, members of the league believe, whose love of music would be stimulated and their appreciation sharpened by the mere opportunity to hear good music. It is to prove these beliefs accurate that the present concert series has been arranged.

"If the response of the public to the experiment is what the league confidently expects it will be, the next logical step will be one toward the goal of an endowed foundation, to make the work thus started permanent. If such a foundation is established, it is the plan to turn into its treasury the money which will be realized by the sales of tickets [illegible] decided upon.

[illegible] Orchestra, [illegible] musicians under the guidance of Pierre Monteux, well-known conductor. The orchestra was formed more than 40 years ago, under the inspiration of Maj. Henry L. Higginson of Boston. The orchestra is known throughout the United States as an organization of finished musicians.

"Many concerts have been given in Providence by the orchestra in past years, Infantry Hall being the usual place. Charging of the prices necessary to finance the visit of the organization to the city, members of the league declare, has kept from the concerts hundreds of persons who were anxious to attend but who were unable to pay the prices asked."

Firms desiring tickets for the concerts for sale to their employes may obtain them by making application to the Providence Music League, care of the Providence Chamber of Commerce.

TO GIVE 40-CENT CONCERT SERIES

Boston Symphony Players and N. Y. Opera Stars in Providence Plan

ENTERPRISE TO BE LAUNCHED ON FEB. 18

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 8—Through the efforts of the Providence Music league and the generosity of an anonymous lover of music, the people of Providence are to have the opportunity to hear a series of three concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and stars from the Metropolitan Grand Opera at a cost of 40 cents a seat for the series, or 13 cents a concert.

Announcement was made today by the music league that the enterprise will be launched Feb. 18, when 100 musicians from the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Pierre Monteux, conductor, will give a concert at the Albee Theatre. Two concerts by Metropolitan artists will be given in March and April and, if the project receives the support merited by such an enterprise, it is hoped ultimately to achieve the endowment of a foundation for music in Rhode Island.

USE OF PLAYHOUSE GIVEN

The Keith theatrical interests have offered the use of the playhouse and the artists participating have also made concessions. The remainder of the cost will be borne by the philanthropic backer who insists that his name be withheld. The entire proceeds from the sale of tickets will be given to local charitable institutions.

HERALD - FEB. 9

Mr. Ballantine and Mr. Burgin

Busy days are these for Mr. Burgin. Wednesday evening he must guide his string quartet through its first concert of the season. Yesterday in Sanders Theatre he plays the solo part in Chaikovsky's exacting Concerto; while throughout the remainder of that concert, as in those in Symphony Hall today and tomorrow, he must fulfill his regular duties as concertmaster of the Symphony Orchestra. It is greatly to Mr. Burgin's credit that, although all these tasks are now for him matters of routine, he does not permit himself to do any one of them perfunctorily, even when they so crowd themselves upon him. In the Concerto it was possible to detect in his bearing a suggestion of weariness, but this by no means showed itself in his playing, charged with characteristic nervous energy, keen edge, fine sensibility. Despite many passages that are still agreeable, even exciting to hear, Chaikovsky's Concerto is beginning perceptibly to tarnish and fade. Yet Mr. Burgin with his unceasing fervor did not once let it lapse into dulness or dryness.

To hear this Concerto again and for the first time in some years in rightful guise—with orchestral, not piano, accompaniment—brought renewed wonderment at the antagonism once aroused by the piece in certain quarters, an antagonism for which the amiable Mr. Hanslick was chief spokesman. That even so hard-shelled a reactionary as he could have found this music "stinking in the ear" is strange indeed. Of all Chaikovsky's larger pieces still keeping place in the repertory, none seems now more politely conventional. The Canzonetta barely rises above the level of charming salon-music, and there are measures in the opening Allegro—for all the sweep of the movement as a whole—that might have been signed by Mendelssohn. No doubt it was the Russian finale that most disturbed and distressed the Viennese reviewer. Yet even this movement seems now relatively tame, far more orderly and restrained than many another page on which Chaikovsky would play the Cossack.

To divide with Mr. Burgin's playing the interest last evening came the first performance anywhere of the newer and ampler version of Mr. Ballantine's suite, "From the Garden of Hellas." As Mr. Ballantine's music will be heard in Boston today and again tomorrow, there will be further opportunity for comment upon it. Yet in anticipation of this a few random impressions may here be set down. On a first hearing the four pieces seem to be the strongest of Mr. Ballantine's compositions. They are free from the tentativeness that marred portions of his symphonic poem, "The Eve of St. Agnes," and they seem far more individual and spontaneous, than his tone-picture, "By a Lake in Russia," recently heard here. Except the first, "Invocation to Pan," they are short and almost fragmentary. Each is well worked out; yet three at least im[illegible] germs from which [illegible] grow. Too much new music, however interesting in one way or another, is of the sort that leaves little desire for renewed and deeper acquaintance. Not so Mr. Ballantine's suite. There may be in his little pieces no omplexities which require unravelling, no ubtleties that may not be grasped in a ingle fleeting hearing, but such is the harm of the ideas expressed, such the felicity of the orchestral setting, and the bvious spontaneity and freshness of the hole, that one glimpse of them will hardly satisfy.

Of the four the "Invocation to Pan" and Aphrodite" seem the most successful. The octurne, notwithstanding many poetic easures and rich instrumentation, hardly ealizes the full possibility of the suggestg verses from Crinagoras. The last piece, Unloose Your Cables," impressed last vening as having a less well-defined physignomy than the others. But after all such azarded comparisons are beside the point. f greater interest and import is the fact hat an American composer of the younger eneration has here produced orchestral ieces that say something in their own ight, that owe their existence to a desire set forth a poetic idea, to unburden a uickened imagination, rather than to a ish to make the too-complacent sit up or, far worse, to write music wholly derivative merely for the sake of writing.

For beginning and ending of the concert came numbers heard this season in Symphony Hall—Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major, and Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel." Of all Strauss's tone-poems in "Till" Mr. Monteux seemingly most delights. Certainly he plays it oftener than the others, both in and out of Boston, and his interpretation of it, now ripened and established, is in many ways uncommonly interesting and effective. "Till Eulenspiegel," it may be said, cries for the larger spaces of Symphony Hall. But in the intimacy of Sanders Theatre the music of Mozart may sound to the best advantage. Here Mozart's exquisite writing for the woodwind can be fully appreciated, and last evening it was difficult to know which to praise the more, the composer's skill and fancy or the beauty of the playing. And not only in the woodwind choir but throughout the orchestra this perennially delightful Symphony sounded as it seldom sounds at the hands of any band or in any auditorium. Music such as this may hardly be idealized, it may only be released, and Mr. Monteux did it this service.

W. S. S.

TRANS. FEB. 9.

Toscha Seidel With Symphony

Toscha Seidel, the Russian violin prodigy, who came to the United States a few years ago with his teacher, the great Auer, made his first appearance as Symphony concert soloist yesterday, playing the brilliant and melodious Mendelssohn concerto. His performance was one of the popular triumphs of the season. He shared honors with Edward Ballantine, whose "Garden of Hellas" was written within the classic confines of Cambridge, and Pierre Monteux, who conducted a memorable performance of the Chausson B-flat symphony, a work as virile and unconventional as one of Rodin's statues.

Joaquin Turina's colorful "Danzas Fantasticas," full of Andalusian pep and charm, ended a distinctly modern program.

ADVTSR. FEB. 10.

---

urina from Spain

From distant Madrid and from neighboring Cambridge come the novel pieces on the programme for the Symphony Concerts of this week. Of the two composers thus represented, one, Edward Ballantine, is not unknown to audiences of these concerts. The other, Joaquin Turina, though not altogether a stranger in Boston concert rooms—even as an orchestral composer—is yet a newcomer to Symphony Hall. Mr. Ballantine's composition, to be heard in Boston for the first time, and indeed, saving the performance in Sanders Theatre this evening, for the first time anywhere, is a Suite in four movements, "From the Garden of Hellas." Turina's pieces, to receive tomorrow and Saturday a first hearing in America, are two of a set of three "Fantastic Dances"—of recent publication and presumably recent composition.

In Spain, as in the other countries of Europe, the chronicler of music has no sooner classified certain composers as the "newer" men than another brood of music-makers arises to claim this title. Broadly speaking, Turina, who was born in Andalusia in 1881, may be placed with de Falla (1877) and Granados (1867-1916). Notable and interesting as it is, the music of these men may no longer be considered representative of the newest ways in musical Spain. Writing of Spanish music in "The Chesterian" not so long ago, Adolfo Salazar mentions the names of several promising youngsters—it would be idle to list them here—who apparently are far more radical in their methods than any of the Spaniards now known to the world at large. Yet to Granados, de Falla and Turina, and to the older Pedrell and Albeñiz, is due the lasting credit of having restored to their country a long lost musical prestige. Like de Falla, Turina early found his way to Paris. But whereas the former joined the ranks of the Debussyites, the later sought the Schola Cantorum and became a disciple of d'Indy. At the outbreak of the late war both men returned to Madrid where they now dwell, and there Turina is occupied with composing and with the teaching of composition in the Conservatory.

As with many another prominent composer of today, Turina has published little. He has written among other things a successful opera, "Fea y con Gracia," a much-praised string quartet and other chamber-music, two brilliant Spanish Suites and sundry smaller compositions for the piano, and a few pieces for orchestra—among them "The Procession of Rocio," described by Debussy as a "luminous fresco." This colorful piece was played in Jordan Hall at a concert of the MacDowell Club Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Longy in the spring of 1918, and was again heard here last April at a concert of the People's Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Mason conducting. Turina's charming "Andalusian Scene," for viola, string quartet and piano, was played at a concert of the Boston Musical Association in January, 1920, and, to complete the list, one or another of the piano-pieces has been heard here from George Copeland.

Always a keen and sympathetic appraiser of contemporary musicians, Leigh Henry writes thus (in "The Musical Times") of Turina:

> Joaquin Turina is a musical impressionist of fine sensibility, both spiritually and musically. His work, however, differs in constructive methods from those generally termed impressionists. He tends towards the rather literary type of poetic expression exemplified in Albeniz's "Iberia" Suite, or in the "Images" of Debussy, but his treatment of sound and rhythm is more objective, in the strictly aural sense, and more full of a feeling for pure musical design than that of the elder Spaniard. Viewed as a whole, however, the general character of his work is subjective and impressionistic, and has a certain flavor of romanticism. Nevertheless, it is remarkably free from sentimentality, exaggerated pathos and musical rhetoric which are the ordinary marks of romanticism. He writes concisely and without musical ostentation, and his work reveals a fine sense of tone color.

The two Dances now to be played are entitled respectively "Ensueño" ("Revery") and "Orgia." As the general title "Fantastic Dances" would necessarily indicate, both are in dance-rhythm, although—as their specific titles suggest—they differ widely in mood. The "Ensueño" is languorous, the "Orgia" heady, intoxicating. According to the "mottoes" from the pen of José Más set upon the first pages of each of the pieces, the "Ensueño" concerns itself with the strum of a guitar that voices the lament of a soul weighted down with bitterness, while the "Orgia" is redolent of the perfume of flowers mingling with the aroma of wine—a truly Macchic picture.

W. S. S.

Ballantine from Cambridge

According to a note furnished by the composer, Mr. Ballantine's Suite was completed in the summer of 1922, and in a sense it is an outgrowth of a shorter Suite for smaller orchestra, performed at Peterborough, New Hampshire, in July, 1919. Two of the four movements, by title "Aphrodite" and "Unloose Your Cables," are orchestral transcriptions of songs for voice and piano. The others, a "Nocturne" and "Invocation to Pan," were begun as songs but later, to use the composer's words, "developed into purely orchestral pieces." The texts are Greek fragments translated by Lilla Cabot Perry, taken from a volume "From the Garden of Hellas," published by Houghton & Mifflin. Here, in the order of the movements suggested by them, are the four poems, together with the original sources and the tonality and tempo indication of Mr. Ballantine's music:

I.

Invocation to Pan. Allegro, B Major

(Crinagoras, Book VI., Epigram 253)

O many-watered caverns of the nymphs!
Where coolness trickles from o'er-hanging rock.
The echoing shrines of Pan with pine-trees crowned,
The lurking valleys hid beneath the cliff,
Or trunks of junipers, decayed and old,
But sacred still to hunters; heaps of rocks,
The piled up shrines of Hermes, will not ye
Receive propitious at Sosander's hands,
The first fruits of his ever-favored chase?

II.

Nocturne. Andante, D Major

(Crinagoras, Book VII., Epigram 633)

The moon, arising on the verge of twilight,
Hath clouded all her beams to hide her tears,
Since that Selene, her most lovely namesake,
Doth life relinquish and to shades descend.
For she would share death's darkness with the maiden
Round whom she flung the beauty of her light.

III.

Aphrodite. Andante con Moto, D Major

(Antipater, Book IX., Epigram 143)

Small indeed is this my home,
Here where dashes the white foam
On the shore.
But I love it and rejoice
In the distant threatening voice
Of ocean's roar.
Sailors, too, for help at sea
Or in love here come to me
And implore.

IV.

Unloose Your Cables. Allegro, G Major

(Marcus Argentarius, Book X., Epigram 4)

Unloose your cables! Be your swift sails spread
All ready, sailors, now to plough the sea!
From smiling zephyr's touch the winter's fled,
While the blue waves it smooths caressingly,
The chirping swallow builds of straw and clay
A nest to hold the little nestlings dear;
Fresh blossoms pierce the earth. Away! away!
Priapus bids you sail, nor dally here!

PROGRAM WILL BE ARTISTIC AND POPULAR

Beauty and [illegible]

Appeal Will Characterize Symphony Orchestra Concert.

A program of engrossing beauty and artistic distinction, combined with popular appeal, will characterize the coming to Brockton of the Boston Symphony orchestra for its concert to be given in the City theatre on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25th, at 3 o'clock.

The number in which George Smith, the brilliant young pianist is to be heard with the orchestra is Liszt's Fantasia on Hungarian Folk Tunes, which is also known in its form for piano solo as the 14th Hungarian Rhapsody. No other work bespeaks so eloquently the Hungarian blood which flowed in his veins.

Music no less national, which represents the Bohemian people, is the symphonic poem "The Moldau" by Smetana, "with the union of two streams, one warm and gushing, the other cold and tranquil. The current of the Moldau glides past the wonderful Bohemian landscape, now reflecting the forest in the morning sun, now a series of pastures, and lowlands where a wedding feast is being celebrated. With the shadows of night come the reflections of mediaeval fortresses and a scene of wood and water nymphs who revel in the shining waves. The Moldau farther on hews out for itself a rocky chasm, and then spreads forth broadly as it approaches Prague."

Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi" is a condensation of the principal themes of the opera itself. It opens with a characteristic call to freedom of the early Italian hero Rienzi—a trumpet call which is a prolongation of one note, increasing from a pianissimo to a thrilling fortissimo. The Overture finally works up to a crashing climax.

The principal number on the program will be Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony in F minor. This work is as truly Russian as the other pieces belong to their own people and indeed contains one of the most conspicuous instances of the use of a folk theme in symphonic music, for the song, "In the Woods There Stood a Birth Tree" is the main melody on which the Finale is constructed. The piercing theme announced by the full brass choir which occurs at the opening and also at the close of the symphony was called by the composer himself the theme of "Fate" and represents the fatality which more or less possessed the composer's mind throughout his life. The slow movement is a tender and simple melody, and the Scherzo an astounding feat of orchestration, for it is played pizzicato from first to last by the whole string orchestra.

BR. D[illegible] F[illegible] 10

BRARD AS SOLOIST

Magdeleine Brard, the celebrated pianist, will be the soloist at the third Boston Symphony concert of the extra Monday evening series, to be given in Symphony hall on Feb. 19. Miss Brard made her first Boston appearance when she played with the orchestra three seasons ago. She will appear with the orchestra in Grieg's concerto in A minor.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONCERTS

The second and last pair of Young People's Concerts to be given this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place next Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, Feb. 13 and 14, at 4 o'clock. All tickets for these concerts have been apportioned through the public schools of greater Boston.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Carlos Salzedo, the harp virtuoso and composer, will play the solo part in his symphonic poem "Terres Enchantees," which will be performed at the next pair of Boston Symphony concerts, to be given at Symphony hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Feb. 16 and 17.

TRAV. FEB 10

[63]

BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
FEB 8 1923

MUSICAL ARTISTS TO BE HEARD HERE AT NOMINAL PRICES

Boston Symphony and Other Organizations to Play in City, with Providence Man as Patron, and Tickets Will Sell for Equivalent of 13 Cents Each.

To place the best music of the great symphony orchestras and Grand Opera soloists within reach of even the smallest wage-earner in Providence, a lover of music who withholds his name from the public has launched an enterprise which will make its debut here Feb. 18 with a concert by the 100 musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for which the admission charge will be at the rate of 13 cents per person.

Announcement of this was made to-day in connection with the organization of the Providence Music League, which receives its support at the beginning from this unknown source.

Under the auspices of the league, it is stated, a series of three concerts will be given at the Albee Theatre during February, March and April. The first will be by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Pierre Monteux, conductor, and for the others, stars of the Metropolitan Grand Opera will be brought to Providence.

If the public demand for these three

Continued from Page 1.

concerts proves sufficient it is the hope of the Providence Music League ultimately to achieve the endowment of a foundation for music in Rhode Island, to devote itself to the education of the people in the appreciation of music. Such enterprises are now being widely discussed by musicians and music lovers throughout the United States, and it is hoped thereby to spread an appreciation for and love of music throughout the country. In organizing these concerts Providence is taking the leadership in this movement.

The statement of the league says, in part:

"It is the plan of those behind the movement here to see to it that tickets for the concerts go only to those who would be unable to afford tickets if the usual concert rates were charged. Safeguards will be thrown around the sale of tickets with this end in view.

"The first of the series of concerts will be given at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, Feb. 18, at the E. F. Albee Theatre. The offering will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, with Richard Burgin, violinist, as soloist. The second concert will come Sunday, March 18, and the third Sunday, April 15.

"Tickets admitting to all three concerts will be sold by the sponsors of the music movement for 40 cents, making the cost of a single concert 13 cents. In this way, persons will be able to attend three concerts, at which the total admission charge ordinarily would be from $3 to $10, for about the price of a single seat for a moving picture show.

"Tickets will be distributed to officials of factories, mills and stores for sale to their employes, and to Federal Hill House, Girls' City Club, Young Men's Christian Association and Young Women's Christian Association. Tickets will also be placed at the Brown Unoin at Brown University. Distributors of the tickets will be asked to bear in mind that the purpose of the whole movement is to make available music at a very low cost to those who cannot afford to pay a greater price.

"For the purpose of the concerts, the Keith interests have offered the use of the Albee Theatre at about cost and the artists participating have also made concessions. The remainder of the cost of the experiment will be borne entirely by a Providence man who desires to aid in the movement for the education of the public in the appreciation of music. The sum realized from the sale of tickets will all be given to Providence charitable organizations.

New League is Sponsor

"The concert series will be given under the auspices of a newly-formed organization known as the Providence Music League. The league was established for the sole purpose of undertaking the proposed experiment and, if it proves successful, of attempting to carry the plan to its logical conclusion, namely, the endowment of a foundation to make possible the indefinite continuation of the undertaking.

"The league is going forward on the belief that there are literally thousands of persons in Providence who love music and who are unable to pay the charges ordinarily asked for concerts. There are other thousands, members of the league believe, whose love of music would be stimulated and their appreciation sharpened by the mere opportunity to hear good music. It is to prove these beliefs accurate that the present concert series has been arranged.

"If the response of the public to the experiment is what the league confidently expects it will be, the next logical step will be one toward the goal of an endowed foundation, to make the work thus started permanent. If such a foundation is established, it is the plan to turn into its treasury the money which will be realized by the sales of tickets [illegible] prices decided upon.

[illegible] Symphony Orchestra [illegible]

[illegible] known [illegible] in America, and consists of 101 musicians under the guidance of Pierre Monteux, well-known conductor. The orchestra was formed more than 40 years ago, under the inspiration of Maj. Henry L. Higginson of Boston. The orchestra is known throughout the United States as an organization of finished musicians.

"Many concerts have been given in Providence by the orchestra in past years, Infantry Hall being the usual place. Charging of the prices necessary to finance the visit of the organization to the city, members of the league declare, has kept from the concerts hundreds of persons who were anxious to attend but who were unable to pay the prices asked."

Firms desiring tickets for the concerts for sale to their employes may obtain them by making application to the Providence Music League, care of the Providence Chamber of Commerce.

TO GIVE 40-CENT CONCERT SERIES

Boston Symphony Players and N. Y. Opera Stars in Providence Plan

ENTERPRISE TO BE LAUNCHED ON FEB. 18

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 8—Through the efforts of the Providence Music league and the generosity of an anonymous lover of music, the people of Providence are to have the opportunity to hear a series of three concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and stars from the Metropolitan Grand Opera at a cost of 40 cents a seat for the series, or 13 cents a concert.

Announcement was made today by the music league that the enterprise will be launched Feb. 18, when 100 musicians from the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Pierre Monteux, conductor, will give a concert at the Albee Theatre. Two concerts by Metropolitan artists will be given in March and April and, if the project receives the support merited by such an enterprise, it is hoped ultimately to achieve the endowment of a foundation for music in Rhode Island.

USE OF PLAYHOUSE GIVEN

The Keith theatrical interests have offered the use of the playhouse and the artists participating have also made concessions. The remainder of the cost will be borne by the philanthropic backer who insists that his name be withheld. The entire proceeds from the sale of tickets will be given to local charitable institutions.

H

Mr. Ballantine and Mr. Burgin

Busy days are these for Mr. Burgin. Wednesday evening he must guide his string quartet through its first concert of the season. Yesterday in Sanders Theatre he plays the solo part in Chaikovsky's exacting Concerto; while throughout the remainder of that concert, as in those in Symphony Hall today and tomorrow, he must fulfill his regular duties as concertmaster of the Symphony Orchestra. It is greatly to Mr. Burgin's credit that, although all these tasks are now for him matters of routine, he does not permit himself to do any one of them perfunctorily, even when they so crowd themselves upon him. In the Concerto it was possible to detect in his bearing a suggestion of weariness, but this by no means showed itself in his playing, charged with characteristic nervous energy, keen edge, fine sensibility. Despite many passages that are still agreeable, even exciting to hear, Chaikovsky's Concerto is beginning perceptibly to tarnish and fade. Yet Mr. Burgin with his unceasing fervor did not once let it lapse into dulness or dryness.

To hear this Concerto again and for the first time in some years in rightful guise—with orchestral, not piano, accompaniment—brought renewed wonderment at the antagonism once aroused by the piece in certain quarters, an antagonism for which the amiable Mr. Hanslick was chief spokesman. That even so hard-shelled a reactionary as he could have found this music "stinking in the ear" is strange indeed. Of all Chaikovsky's larger pieces still keeping place in the repertory, none seems now more politely conventional. The Canzonetta barely rises above the level of charming salon-music, and there are measures in the opening Allegro—for all the sweep of the movement as a whole—that might have been signed by Mendelssohn. No doubt it was the Russian finale that most disturbed and distressed the Viennese reviewer. Yet even this movement seems now relatively tame, far more orderly and restrained than many another page on which Chaikovsky would play the Cossack.

To divide with Mr. Burgin's playing the interest last evening came the first performance anywhere of the newer and ampler version of Mr. Ballantine's suite, "From the Garden of Hellas." As Mr. Ballantine's music will be heard in Boston today and again tomorrow, there will be further opportunity for comment upon it. Yet in anticipation of this a few random impressions may here be set down. On a first hearing the four pieces seem to be the strongest of Mr. Ballantine's compositions. They are free from the tentativeness that marred portions of his symphonic poem, "The Eve of St. Agnes," and they seem far more individual and spontaneous, than his tone-picture, "By a Lake in Russia," recently heard here. Except the first, "Invocation to Pan," they are short and almost fragmentary. Each is well worked out; yet three at least im[illegible] heard as germs from which some larger [illegible] might grow. Too much new music, however interesting in one way or another, is of the sort that leaves little desire for renewed and deeper acquaintance. Not so Mr. Ballantine's suite. There may be in his little pieces no complexities which require unravelling, no subtleties that may not be grasped in a single fleeting hearing, but such is the charm of the ideas expressed, such the felicity of the orchestral setting, and the obvious spontaneity and freshness of the whole, that one glimpse of them will hardly satisfy.

Of the four the "Invocation to Pan" and "Aphrodite" seem the most successful. The Nocturne, notwithstanding many poetic measures and rich instrumentation, hardly realizes the full possibility of the suggesting verses from Crinagoras. The last piece, "Unloose Your Cables," impressed last evening as having a less well-defined physiognomy than the others. But after all such hazarded comparisons are beside the point. Of greater interest and import is the fact that an American composer of the younger generation has here produced orchestral pieces that say something in their own right, that owe their existence to a desire to set forth a poetic idea, to unburden a quickened imagination, rather than to a wish to make the too-complacent sit up or, far worse, to write music wholly derivative merely for the sake of writing.

For beginning and ending of the concert came numbers heard this season in Symphony Hall—Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major, and Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel." Of all Strauss's tone-poems in "Till" Mr. Monteux seemingly most delights. Certainly he plays it oftener than the others, both in and out of Boston, and his interpretation of it, now ripened and established, is in many ways uncommonly interesting and effective. "Till Eulenspiegel," it may be said, cries for the larger spaces of Symphony Hall. But in the intimacy of Sanders Theatre the music of Mozart may sound to the best advantage. Here Mozart's exquisite writing for the woodwind can be fully appreciated, and last evening it was difficult to know which to praise the more, the composer's skill and fancy or the beauty of the playing. And not only in the woodwind choir but throughout the orchestra this perennially delightful Symphony sounded as it seldom sounds at the hands of any band or in any auditorium. Music such as this may hardly be idealized, it may only be released, and Mr. Monteux did it this service.

W. S. S.

TRANS. FEB. 9.

Toscha Seidel With Symphony

Toscha Seidel, the Russian violin prodigy, who came to the United States a few years ago with his teacher, the great Auer, made his first appearance as Symphony concert soloist yesterday, playing the brilliant and melodious Mendelssohn concerto. His performance was one of the popular triumphs of the season. He shared honors with Edward Ballantine, whose "Garden of Hellas" was written within the classic confines of Cambridge, and Pierre Monteux, who conducted a memorable performance of the Chausson B-flat symphony, a work as virile and unconventional as one of Rodin's statues.

Joaquin Turina's colorful "Danzas Fantasticas," full of Andalusian pep and charm, ended a distinctly modern program.

ADVTSR.

Turina from Spain

From distant Madrid and from neighboring Cambridge come the novel pieces on the programme for the Symphony Concerts of this week. Of the two composers thus represented, one, Edward Ballantine, is not unknown to audiences of these concerts. The other, Joaquin Turina, though not altogether a stranger in Boston concert rooms—even as an orchestral composer—is yet a newcomer to Symphony Hall. Mr. Ballantine's composition, to be heard in Boston for the first time, and indeed, saving the performance in Sanders Theatre this evening, for the first time anywhere, is a Suite in four movements, "From the Garden of Hellas." Turina's pieces, to receive tomorrow and Saturday a first hearing in America, are two of a set of three "Fantastic Dances"—of recent publication and presumably recent composition.

In Spain, as in the other countries of Europe, the chronicler of music has no sooner classified certain composers as the "newer" men than another brood of music-makers arises to claim this title. Broadly speaking, Turina, who was born in Andalusia in 1881, may be placed with de Falla (1877) and Granados (1867-1916). Notable and interesting as it is, the music of these men may no longer be considered representative of the newest ways in musical Spain. Writing of Spanish music in "The Chesterian" not so long ago, Adolfo Salazar mentions the names of several promising youngsters—it would be idle to list them here—who apparently are far more radical in their methods than any of the Spaniards now known to the world at large. Yet to Granados, de Falla and Turina, and to the older Pedrell and Albeñiz, is due the lasting credit of having restored to their country a long lost musical prestige. Like de Falla, Turina early found his way to Paris. But whereas the former joined the ranks of the Debussyites, the later sought the Schola Cantorum and became a disciple of d'Indy. At the outbreak of the late war both men returned to Madrid where they now dwell, and there Turina is occupied with composing and with the teaching of composition in the Conservatory.

As with many another prominent composer of today, Turina has published little. He has written among other things a successful opera, "Fea y con Gracia," a much-praised string quartet and other chamber-music, two brilliant Spanish Suites and sundry smaller compositions for the piano, and a few pieces for orchestra—among them "The Procession of Rocio," described by Debussy as a "luminous fresco." This colorful piece was played in Jordan Hall at a concert of the MacDowell Club Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Longy in the spring of 1918, and was again heard here last April at a concert of the People's Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Mason conducting. Turina's charming "Andalusian Scene," for viola, string quartet and piano, was played at a concert of the Boston Musical Association in January, 1920, and, to complete the list, one or another of the piano-pieces has been heard here from George Copeland.

Always a keen and sympathetic appraiser of contemporary musicians, Leigh Henry writes thus (in "The Musical Times") of Turina:

> Joaquin Turina is a musical impressionist of fine sensibility, both spiritually and musically. His work, however, differs in constructive methods from those generally termed impressionists. He tends towards the rather literary type of poetic expression exemplified in Albeniz's "Iberia" Suite, or in the "Images" of Debussy, but his treatment of sound and rhythm is more objective, in the strictly aural sense, and more full of a feeling for pure musical design than that of the elder Spaniard. Viewed as a whole, however, the general character of his work is subjective and impressionistic, and has a certain flavor of romanticism. Nevertheless, it is remarkably free from sentimentality, exaggerated pathos and musical rhetoric which are the ordinary marks of romanticism. He writes concisely and without musical ostentation, and his work reveals a fine sense of tone color.

The two Dances now to be played are entitled respectively "Ensueño" ("Revery") and "Orgia." As the general title "Fantastic Dances" would necessarily indicate, both are in dance-rhythm, although—as their specific titles suggest—they differ widely in mood. The "Ensueño" is languorous, the "Orgia" heady, intoxicating. According to the "mottoes" from the pen of José Más set upon the first pages of each of the pieces, the "Ensueño" concerns itself with the strum of a guitar that voices the lament of a soul weighted down with bitterness, while the "Orgia" is redolent of the perfume of flowers mingling with the aroma of wine—a truly Macchic picture.

W. S. S.

Ballantine from Cambridge

According to a note furnished by the composer, Mr. Ballantine's Suite was completed in the summer of 1922, and in a sense it is an outgrowth of a shorter Suite for smaller orchestra, performed at Peterborough, New Hampshire, in July, 1919. Two of the four movements, by title "Aphrodite" and "Unloose Your Cables," are orchestral transcriptions of songs for voice and piano. The others, a "Nocturne" and "Invocation to Pan," were begun as songs but later, to use the composer's words, "developed into purely orchestral pieces." The texts are Greek fragments translated by Lilla Cabot Perry, taken from a volume "From the Garden of Hellas," published by Houghton & Mifflin. Here, in the order of the movements suggested by them, are the four poems, together with the original sources and the tonality and tempo indication of Mr. Ballantine's music:

I.

Invocation to Pan. Allegro, B Major

(Crinagoras, Book VI., Epigram 253)

O many-watered caverns of the nymphs!
Where coolness trickles from o'er-hanging rock
The echoing shrines of Pan with pine-trees crowned,
The lurking valleys hid beneath the cliff,
Or trunks of junipers, decayed and old,
But sacred still to hunters; heaps of rocks,
The piled up shrines of Hermes, will not ye
Receive propitious at Sosander's hands,
The first fruits of his ever-favored chase?

II.

Nocturne. Andante, D Major

(Crinagoras, Book VII., Epigram 633)

The moon, arising on the verge of twilight,
Hath clouded all her beams to hide her tears,
Since that Selene, her most lovely namesake,
Doth life relinquish and to shades descend.
For she would share death's darkness with the maiden
Round whom she flung the beauty of her light.

III.

Aphrodite. Andante con Moto, D Major

(Antipater, Book IX., Epigram 143)

Small indeed is this my home,
Here where dashes the white foam
On the shore.
But I love it and rejoice
In the distant threatening voice
Of ocean's roar.
Sailors, too, for help at sea
Or in love here come to me
And implore.

IV.

Unloose Your Cables. Allegro, G Major

(Marcus Argentarius, Book X., Epigram 4)

Unloose your cables! Be your swift sails spread
All ready, sailors, now to plough the sea!
From smiling zephyr's touch the winter's fled,
While the blue waves it smooths caressingly.
The chirping swallow builds of straw and clay
A nest to hold the little nestlings dear;
Fresh blossoms pierce the earth. Away! away!
Priapus bids you sail, nor dally here!

PROGRAM WILL BE ARTISTIC AND POPULAR

Beauty and Popular

Appeal Will Characterize Symphony Orchestra Concert.

A program of engrossing beauty and artistic distinction, combined with popular appeal, will characterize the coming to Brockton of the Boston Symphony orchestra for its concert to be given in the City theatre on Sunday afternoon, Feb 25th, at 3 o'clock.

The number in which George Smith, the brilliant young pianist is to be heard with the orchestra is Liszt's Fantasia on Hungarian Folk Tunes, which is also known in its form for piano solo as the 14th Hungarian Rhapsody. No other work bespeaks so eloquently the Hungarian blood which flowed in his veins.

Music no less national, which represents the Bohemian people, is the symphonic poem "The Moldau" by Smetana, "with the union of two streams, one warm and gushing, the other cold and tranquil. The current of the Moldau glides past the wonderful Bohemian landscape, now reflecting the forest in the morning sun, now a series of pastures, and lowlands where a wedding feast is being celebrated. With the shadows of night come the reflections of mediaeval fortresses and a scene of wood and water nymphs who revel in the shining waves. The Moldau farther on hews out for itself a rocky chasm, and then spreads forth broadly as it approaches Prague."

Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi" is a condensation of the principal themes of the opera itself. It opens with a characteristic call to freedom of the early Italian hero Rienzi—a trumpet call which is a prolongation of one note, increasing from a pianissimo to a thrilling fortissimo. The Overture finally works up to a crashing climax.

The principal number on the program will be Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony in F minor. This work is as truly Russian as the other pieces belong to their own people and indeed contains one of the most conspicuous instances of the use of a folk theme in symphonic music, for the song, "In the Wood There Stood a Birch Tree" is the main melody on which the Finale is constructed. The piercing theme announced by the full brass choir which occurs at the opening and also at the close of the symphony was called by the composer himself the theme of "Fate" and represents the fatality which more or less possessed the composer's mind throughout his life. The slow movement is a tender and simple melody, and the Scherzo an astounding feat of orchestration, for it is played pizzicato from first to last by the whole string orchestra.

BRARD AS SOLOIST

Magdeleine Brard, the celebrated pianist, will be the soloist at the third Boston Symphony concert of the extra Monday evening series, to be given in Symphony hall on Feb. 19. Miss Brard made her first Boston appearance when she played with the orchestra three seasons ago. She will appear with the orchestra in Grieg's concerto in A minor.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONCERTS

The second and last pair of Young People's Concerts to be given this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place next Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, Feb. 13 and 14, at 4 o'clock. All tickets for these concerts have been apportioned through the public schools of greater Boston.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Carlos Salzedo, the harp virtuoso and composer, will play the solo part in his symphonic poem "Terres Enchantees," which will be performed at the next pair of Boston Symphony concerts, to be given at Symphony hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Feb. 16 and 17.

[63]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Symphony

SYMPHONY CONCERT

PREVAILING FASHIONS WITH THE VIOLIN

Mr. Sirdel in Mendelssohn's Concerto for Fresh Example—A Tone Close-Mated to the Music — Mr. Ballantine Does a Little Thing Well—Turina, Moody and Restless

FROM the violin Mr. Kreisler draws a tone slender of body, fine of texture, silken in lustre, undulant in motion. By common consent Mr. Kreisler is the foremost violinist of his time; while from the ends of Europe to the ends of America countless audiences hear him gladly. Naturally, inevitably, the younger generation of violinists would be as Mr. Kreisler is. They cultivate like qualities of tone, seek similar refinements and poise of musical speech, return to the pieces that he is wont to choose. Once upon a time Mr. Ysaye carried all before him in American concert-halls by the breadth and depth, the richness and the splendor to which he expanded the voice of the violin. Through his pieces he swept molton, torrential. No virtuoso of the hour now follows his fashion. The ample tone, the large manner, the outflinging mood are as though Ysaye had never been Even Mr. Elman smothers the rhapsodic fire of his youth; while Miss Morini, disposed by temperament to the "grand style," promptly stifles the inclination. The subtle hand, the silken speech, the subdued spirit are the universal mode. Upon the refinements of Mr. Kreisler and Mr. Heifetz would the youngsters yet more refine.

In this wise Mr. Seidel played Mendelssohn's Concerto at the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon—music, it is true, tempting such finesse and, in these days, gaining by it. Subdued figure, moreover, was the violinist himself. Not so long ago, hand, wrist and arm as means to perceiving mind and communicating spirit hardly sufficed him. He must play upon the violin—or perhaps upon the audience—with his whole body; while his countenance, as well as his tone, must be mirror to mood. Vanished now are these errors of excess and Mr. Seidel, coming upon the stage and continuing there, is a paragon of poise. Many times recalled, he betrayed not an emotion. Only upon Mr. Burgin, politely proffering the pitch, did he deign to smile. Of this new Seidel and also of the Kreisler aforesaid, is the violinist's present tone. Thread-like, it undulates upon the air. Light are the inflections he lays upon it. Sunshine and shadow no more than ripple over it. Fine-spun goes transition; a modulation is a mere touch of bow and finger; rhythm stirs rather than beats; arabesques are tracery in gossamer. Even to the pianissimo that is "felt" rather than heard" (as certain foolish Germans used to say) does M. Seidel now attain.

Yet this tone, that would out-Kreisler Kreisler in refinements upon the violin, keeps softly penetrating voice, is exceedingly sensitive to the contours and the accents of the music in hand; while to the very foot of the letter in this winter of 1923, it suits the Concerto of Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy. Much of his music survives into these days, returns into them with surprising freshness, by virtue of the workmanship. Mendelssohn in this particular piece, as in many another, may have had little to say. Yet so adept are his means, so ingratiating his manner that therewith the hearer sits content. The slender body, the fine-drawn line, the limpid progress of the Concerto win the ear. The polished surface still catches light and shadow; while at every turn Mendelssohn seems to be making the nicest, the surest choice. Even his tonal fancies catch this fineness, this precision. And yesterday the voices of Seidel and of Mendelssohn were as one.

As kindly minded was the audience toward the little pieces that Mr. Ballantine has assembled as orchestral Suite and labelled "The Garden of Hellas." It would look upon the composer as well as clap him; [illegible] so unprepared was he for such warmth and curiosity that Mr. Monteux must needs trundle him, as it were, to the stage. As modest—and as pleasing—are the merits of the music. Mr. Ballantine [illegible] read verses of the minor and the later [illegible] poets—verses bearing an offering to Pan; verses of moonlight mood; verses [illegible] Aphrodite muses out of her marble [illegible] the sea; verses with the zest of spring in them when sky and waters [illegible] to new voyaging. From all these he [illegible] received impressions that he would [illegible] in tones. Yet he writes no "impressionistic," no 'modernist' music. Full[illegible] are his phrases and periods; warm [illegible] harmonies; orderly his progress. He [illegible] a full orchestra, not, seemingly because he desires its mass of tone; but, be[illegible] only with it may he gain the [illegible] texture, the desired colorings. [illegible], expanding into terse melody, [illegible] than ample themes as amply de[illegible] generate this music. They are [illegible] motivs to mark Mr. Ballantine as composer of individual invention. They recall no one; yet they bear no "very personal" stamp. Like the matter of good prose, they are of the viable material for music.

Rather, the virtue of the little pieces lies in the freshness of mood and impression throughout animating them. Mr. Ballantine invokes Pan as though he also warmed to the god. For him, too, beat the spring-tides. He looks with Aphrodite's longing upon the sea; with the moon descends to darkness. For the instant and no more, the music records the image, imparts the answering mood. As instantly and completely the audience receives and knows it. Few of the younger composers so keep their [illegible] upon the object; so concentrate the [illegible] so waste no musical [illegible]

[illegible] Therein [illegible] wise [illegible]

More "mode[illegible]" in the usual s[illegible] the word is Turina of Madrid in the two "Fantastic Dances," played yesterday for the first time in America. Spanish Dances, according to the conventions of theatre and concert-hall, they are not. No more do they smack of the folk, of urban or rural scene, after the manner of the newer Spanish composers and now and again, of Turina himself. Less than in de Falla, less even than in Granados does following fancy discover a Spanish background. As scanty is the hint of close Parisian antecedents. By the evidence of the ear, Turina chose to write short tone-poems in dance-rhythms, letting a single mood permeate each piece. Writing, he chooses one of the familiar idioms of music nowadays—a matter and a manner that spare not in sharp-set harmonies, keen-edged timbres, abrupt modulation, restless motion. Short-breathed are his motive; fitful his play with them; while as often as not rhythm is the binding means.

The first of the two pieces would catch the mood of troubled dream. By the token of the motto set above it, lament and bitterness should color it. From afar should it also sound. Yet hearing, the ear receives no more than an uneasy, astringent, sharp-surfaced music. Clearer of impression is the second piece—blend, according to another motto, of the perfume of flower and the aroma of wine. With sensuous warmth, in moody tumult, Turina writes. For the instant, the breath of the wine whips his measures; or the odor of the flower stays and haunts them. Yet piecemeal and in patchwork, rather than unified and concentrated, remains the impression.

H. T. P.

TRANS. FEB. 10.

SEIDEL SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

New Music by Turina and Ballentine Also Heard

The vividly emotional performance by Toscha Seidel of Mendelssohn's concerto for violin is probably what most people will remember yesterday's Symphony concert by. He not only brought to the familiar show piece an extraordinary technical mastery of his instrument, he used that mastery as a means of revivifying and glorifying what most people have come to regard as conventionally correct and primly sentimental music. After all, the composer may have felt the piece as intensely as Mr Seidel did. Mendelssohn should certainly have appreciated the purity of tone, the musicianly phrasing, the subtle dynamics of yesterday's performance on the part of the soloist.

The audience was roused to an unwonted but becoming enthusiasm. It not only recalled Mr Seidel five times, almost a record for a newcomer to these concerts; it also listened to his playing with none of the discreet rustling of programs and almost none of the more or less stifled bronchial outbursts that ordinarily accompany all music in Symphony Hall. Mr Monteux and the orchestra played the accompaniment with more enthusiasm and less stodginess than they accord most assisting artists.

Chausson's symphony was given an eloquent and moving performance. The first two movements may be loosely constructed and too reminiscent of Wagner and Franck. The last movement is certainly a masterpiece worthy of many hearings, nobly individual music, proving that Frenchmen are sometimes able to compose in the grand manner.

Of the two new pieces played, Mr Ballentine's suite, "From the Garden of Hellas," gave by far the most pleasure. Poems in the Greek Anthology suggested the four movements, each of which is an imaginatively honest and faithful depiction of a human mood. Mr Ballentine has not used ultra modern harmonic or orchestral effects. He does not disdain melody and consonance. He has writen ingratiating, agreeable music, which was obviously enjoyed by yesterday's audience. The composer was recalled to the stage to bow his acknowledgments after the performance.

Turina's "Fantastic Dances" are a rather dull and labored reworking in modernist terms of conventionally Spanish musical material. A few pages at the beginning of the "Orgy" succeeded in painting a mental picture, or at least suggested that the Diaghilev ballet could paint in by illustrative action. Except for some quite unnecessary dissonance and a profusion of noise, especially from percussion instruments, the rest of Turina's music was harmlessly dull.

Next week Carlos Salzedo will play the harp solo in his own symphonic poem, "The Enchanted Isles." Mr Burgin, and not Mr Shirley, is announced to play the viola d'amore solo in Loeffler's "La mort de Tintagiles." Schumann's "Rhenish Symphony" and two of Dvorak's "Slavonic Dances" are the other numbers listed.

GLOBE-FEB. 10.

14TH CONCERT BY SYMPHONY

Toscha Seidel, Violinist, Plays Here for the First Time

LATE COMERS AGAIN DISTURB AUDIENCE

By PHILIP HALE

The 14th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux [illegible]

[illegible] of Hellas"; Mendelssohn, Violin concerto; Turina, two Fantastic Dances. Mr. Ballantine's Suite was performed for the first time in Boston; Turina's dances, for the first time in America. Toscha Seidel, violinist, played for the first time at these concerts.

Again late comers walked in the aisles between the first two movements of the symphony, and thus disturbed the impression left by the music already played and the anticipation of the music to come. Would it not be advisable to begin the concert with an overture or some other piece of comparatively short duration? This was once the custom at these concerts. After this introductory composition, the late comers—and in some cases tardiness no doubt is unavoidable—could be seated without interrupting symphonic continuity. The Chicago orchestra has adopted this plan with good results. There is no dearth of overtures and other short pieces, nor need the overture be one of weighty importance, "presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line." Let us not be afraid of light and sparkling music, provided it be of the first quality. At present too many overtures are gathering dust on the shelves of the Symphony library.

The second and third movements of Chausson's symphony contain many pages that are beautiful, many that are uplifting and noble. The introduction to the first movement is impressive; that which follows is at times amateurish; the thematic material is not of marked significance and in the treatment of this material there are crudities, experiments, haltings and gropings. The movement is not firmly knit together. But all this is forgotten in the splendor of the movements that follow. It is easy to say that as Chausson was Franck's pupil, there is much of the master in the pupil's work; that in mood and in harmonic or rhythmic scheme at times the influence of Wagner is felt; one might even suspect the presence of the Gounod of the prelude to "Faust" in one of Chausson's pages; but there are no reminiscences akin to plagiarism. When Chausson wrote the symphony, he had not wholly found his own way, yet the greater part of the work shows genuine individuality and the spirit of the true artist. At the end of 30 years the symphony bears its age well; its life should be long. Mr. Monteux, with the orchestra, gave a masterly interpretation, a singularly euphonious performance of an uncommonly euphonious work.

Mr. Ballantine's Suite—Invocation to Pan, Nocturne, Aphrodite, Unloose Your Cables—was suggested by four short poems from the Greek Anthology. To give the impression of there poems, translated into English by Lilla Cabot Perry, Mr. Ballantine wrote for a modern full orchestra, percussion instruments and all. Of the four pieces the "Invocation to Pan" seemed the most fortunate in illustration of the text. Not that one should demand a literal or interlinear translation; but the impression made by the other movements was not a strong one. Was there really a need of so great an orchestra to express the composer's ideas? Suppose these ideas had been given only to strings and a few wood-wind instruments; would the ideas themselves have at once riveted the attention? The Suite was favorably received by the audience, and Mr. Ballantine bowed in acknowledgment.

As far back as 1911 Mr. George Copeland played piano music by Turina, an Andalusion, born in 1881. Later an orchestral piece and a chamber composition by him were heard in Boston. Yesterday Mr. Monteux brought out two or three "Danzas Fantasticas," "Dreaming" and "Orgy." They have an exotic, exhilarating flavor, but certain Frenchmen, Chabrier, Debussy, Ravel—have been more successful in giving us Spain in music. Then there is Laparra, whose opera "Habanera" showed us a Spain that was not all sunlight, guitars, and "Ole! Ole!" Rimsky-Korsakov tried his hand at it, but he might as well have been a Cook's tourist in Seville or Granada, personally conducted to a gypsy dance. And so yesterday, hearing Turina's music, we kept wishing that the orchestra were playing Chabrier's "Espana" or Debussy's "Iberia."

Mr. Seidel gave what might be called a "slick" performance of the smug and irritatingly respectable concerto by Mendelssohn. The concerto never seemed more sentimental, never longer. This was probably not so much the fault of Mr. Seidel as that of the genteel, irreproachable Mendelssohn, whose concerto is overfamiliar. The audience enjoyed the music and the playing hugely, and rapturous was the applause.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week comprises Schumann's Symphony No. 3 ("Rhenish"); Salzedo's "Enchanted Isles," a symphonic poem for harp and orchestra (Mr. Salzedo, harpist); Loeffler's "Death of Tintagiles" (after Maeterlinck), and two Slavonic dances by Dvorak. Mr. Burgin will play the viola d'amore in Mr. Loeffler's dramatic poem.

HERALD-FEB. 10

NEW WORKS PLAYED BY SYMPHONY

Ballantine of Harvard and Turina of Spain Honored

[illegible] University and Joaquin [illegible] Madrid, Spain, were played for the first time anywhere and for the first time in America, respectively, at the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Both compositions had local color.

TOSCHA SEIDEL, SOLOIST

Toscha Seidel, violinist, was soloist of the occasion, playing the Mendelssohn concerto. The symphony of Ernest Chausson, a symphony by a composer most unfortunately taken off before his time, opened the concert.

Chausson, a very rich man, a supersensitive nature, was just finding himself when a fall from a bicycle dashed his head against a stone wall. It is a great loss to modern music, because of the unquestionable gifts and the special temperament of the man. The slow movement of the symphony has an autumnal melancholy found in other pages of Chausson, and peculiar to him.

Finale Well Wrought

One thinks of Swinburne's lines about the end of every man's desire. The introduction of the first movement prepares one for something quite stupendous, but in the development which follows, and in spite of the cunning evolution and combination of leading themes, the musical material itself is tenuous and the thought rather halting.

But the finale is powerfully wrought—the finale which ends with a peroration in the symphonic manner that Franck had so nobly developed. Franck and Wagner are heard in this music of Chausson. His symphony feels to us like the last experiment before the appearance of the real masterwork. But fate is not as kind, in this world, as the fairy tales would have us believe.

Ballantine's Suite

Mr. Ballantine's suite of four pieces, "From the Garden of Hellas," is based on poems from the Greek Anthology as translated by Lilla Cabot Perry in the volume, 'From the Garden of Hellas." The titles of the pieces are "Invocation to Pan," after Epigram 253, Book VI, of Crinagoras; "Nocturne," Epigram 633, by the same author; "Aphrodite," Epigram 143, from Book IX of Antipater; "Unloose Your Cables," Epigram 4, Book X, of Marcus Argentarius.

Mr. Ballantine has gained a much surer touch of late in his treatment of the orchestra. His musical theme is at once clearer and better co-ordinated than in earlier scores. The question will arise in the minds of many whether a big orchestra of the dimensions he employs is well suited to the extremely simple style of the Greek verse.

Mr. Ballantine would perhaps reply that in these days a composer uses an orchestra, big or small, according to instinct, and for the sake of embodying in his own manner his musical thought. But this does not allay a certain objection in the hearer's mind to an artistic manner more swollen than that of the Greek model which inspired the music. What is very commendable in these pieces in their brevity and concentration. Barring a few conventional measures in the opening pieces there is little that is padding or repetitious. We must, however, admit that despite a perfected technic and an agreeable musical speech we do not find original ideas in this music. The composer, who was present, acknowledged hearty applause.

Mr. Seidel a Mature Artist

When Mr. Seidel first played in Boston his performances were distinguished by a fluency that did not always conduce to authority in interpretation. He played the Mendelssohn concerto yesterday with less of the old fluency and aplomb and more the air—and the effect—of a man who had thought very seriously of his task and was devoting more attention to musicianly interpretation than to technical display.

It was a pleasure to hear the concerto, which is so well known, interpreted without exaggeration, without sentimentality, without excessive whipping up of the tempo in the finale. The work was interpreted with a fine intelligence and sense of proportion, with genuine and undistorted feeling, and with complete authority.

Spanish Music Intrigues

Probably owing to the length of the programme, Mr. Monteux played two instead of three dances which belong to the set, "Danzas Fantasticas" of Turina. The two played were "Ensueno" and "Orgia." Ensueno" bears the motto, by Jose Mas, "The sound of the strings was as the lament of the soul which could no longer endure the weight of bitterness," and the "Orgia" has this motto, by the same Spanish poet, "The perfume of the flowers was mingled with the odor of the manzanilla, and from the depths of the narrow goblets filled with the incomparable wine joy rose like an incense."

The music is intriguing, not conventionally modern in the manner of so many Spanish composers who have studied in Paris, full of mood, caprice, exotic color. This is the most interesting and the most authentic music by Turina we have heard, and we could afford to hear more at the Symphony concerts of music by modern Spaniards.

POST-FEB. 10

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Carlos Salzedo, harp virtuoso and composer, will play the solo part in his symphonic poem, "Terres Enchantees," which will be performed at the next pair of Boston Symphony concerts, to be given at Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

AMER. FEB. 10.

[illegible] The principal number [illegible] will be the Third Symphony of [illegible] ven, known as the "Eroica." This work of mighty proportions was inspired by Napoleon Bonaparte, Beethoven's contemporary, upon whom the composer looked as the coming liberator of mankind.

When he heard that the General had taken the title "Emperor," Beethoven destroyed the dedication in anger and disappointment, but the great score remained.

The soloist at this concert will be Magdeleine Brard, the young pianist, who made an appearance in Boston as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra three seasons ago. Miss Brard will appear with the orchestra in the pianoforte concerto of Grieg. Pierre Monteux will close the concert with Enesco's Rumanian rhapsody in A major, the work by which this Rumanian composer, now paying his first visit to America, is best known.

GLOBE. FEB. 11

MONDAY SYMPHONY

The third Monday evening Symphony concert will be given in Symphony Hall on February 19.

The principal number will be Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. Magdeleine Brard, pianist, will appear with the orchestra in the Grieg Concerto. Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody will also be played.

CHILDREN'S CONCERTS

The last young people's concerts to be given this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place next Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons.

ADVTS - FEB. 8

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the following program will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor. The Third Symphony of Schumann in E-flat (the "Rhenish") will be performed. Carlos Salzedo, the noted harp virtuoso and composer, will take the solo part in his symphonic poem "Terres Enchantees." The other pieces will be Loeffler's dramatic poem "La Mort de Tintagiles" (after Maeterlinck), in which the viola d'amore solo will be played by Mr. Burgin, and the two Slavonic Dances of Dvorak, opus 46, Nos. 2 and 3.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONCERTS

The second and last pair of young people's concerts this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place next Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, Feb. 13 and 14, at 4 o'clock. All tickets for these concerts have been apportioned through the public schools of Greater Boston.

Mr. Monteux will present the following program: Weber's Overture to "Obereon"; the Allegretto from Beethoven's Symphony No. 7; Berlioz's "March to the Scaffold" from the "Fantastic" Symphony; "Invocation" from "The Erinyes," by Massenet; Suite from "Carmen"; "In Wartime" from MacDowell's "Indian Suite," and Tchaikovsky's Overture "1812."

3.17

BRARD MONDAY EVENING SOLOIST

The third Monday evening concert of the extra series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in Symphony hall on Monday evening, Feb. 19. The principal number on the program will be the third symphony of Beethoven, known as the "Eroica." This work of mighty proportions was inspired by Napoleon Bonaparte, Beethoven's contemporary, upon whom the composer looked as the coming liberator of mankind. When he heard that the general had abused his power, Beethoven destroyed the dedication in anger and disappointment, but the great score remained.

The soloist will be Magdeleine Brard, the talented young pianist, who made her former appearance in Boston as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra three seasons ago. She was then "a musical prodigy," but the beauty and brilliance of her playing astounded all who heard her. Her art has since matured and attained even finer distinctions. She will play Grieg's concerto. Mr. Monteux will close the concert with Enesco's Roumanian rhapsody in A-major.

HERALD. FEB. 11

18

[64]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Symphony

SYMPHONY CONCERT

PREVAILING FASHIONS WITH THE VIOLIN

Mr. Sirdel in Mendelssohn's Concerto for Fresh Example—A Tone Close-Mated to the Music — Mr. Ballantine Does a Little Thing Well—Turina, Moody and Restless

FROM the violin Mr. Kreisler draws a tone slender of body, fine of texture, silken in lustre, undulant in motion. By common consent Mr. Kreisler is the foremost violinist of his time; while from the ends of Europe to the ends of America countless audiences hear him gladly. Naturally, inevitably, the younger generation of violinists would be as Mr. Kreisler is. They cultivate like qualities of tone, seek similar refinements and poise of musical speech, return to the pieces that he is wont to choose. Once upon a time Mr. Ysaye carried all before him in American concert-halls by the breadth and depth, the richness and the splendor to which he expanded the voice of the violin. Through his pieces he swept molton, torrential. No virtuoso of the hour now follows his fashion. The ample tone, the large manner, the outflinging mood are as though Ysaye had never been Even Mr. Elman smothers the rhapsodic fire of his youth; while Miss Morini, disposed by temperament to the "grand style," promptly stifles the inclination. The subtle hand, the silken speech, the subdued spirit are the universal mode. Upon the refinements of Mr. Kreisler and Mr. Heifetz would the youngsters yet more refine.

In this wise Mr. Seidel played Mendelssohn's Concerto at the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon—music, it is true, tempting such finesse and, in these days, gaining by it. Subdued figure, moreover, was the violinist himself. Not so long ago, hand, wrist and arm as means to perceiving mind and communicating spirit hardly sufficed him. He must play upon the violin—or perhaps upon the audience—with his whole body; while his countenance, as well as his tone, must be mirror to mood. Vanished now are these errors of excess and Mr. Seidel, coming upon the stage and continuing there, is a paragon of poise. Many times recalled, he betrayed not an emotion. Only upon Mr. Burgin, politely proffering the pitch, did he deign to smile. Of this new Seidel and also of the Kreisler aforesaid, is the violinist's present tone. Thread-like, it undulates upon the air. Light are the inflections he lays upon it. Sunshine and shadow no more than ripple over it. Fine-spun goes transition; a modulation is a mere touch of bow and finger; rhythm stirs rather than beats; arabesques are tracery in gossamer. Even to the pianissimo that is "felt" rather than "heard" (as certain foolish Germans used to say) does Mr. Seidel now attain.

Yet this tone, that would out-Kreisler Kreisler in refinements upon the violin, keeps softly penetrating voice, is exceedingly sensitive to the contours and the accents of the music in hand; while to the very foot of the letter in this winter of 1923, it suits the Concerto of Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy. Much of his music survives into these days, returns into them with surprising freshness, by virtue of the workmanship. Mendelssohn, in this particular piece, as in many another, may have had little to say. Yet so adept are his means, so ingratiating his manner that wherewith the hearer sits content. The slender body, the fine-drawn line, the limpid progress of the Concerto win the ear. The polished surface still catches light and shadow; while at every turn Mendelssohn seems to be making the nicest, the surest choice. Even his tonal fancies catch this fineness, this precision. And yesterday the voices of Seidel and of Mendelssohn were as one.

As kindly minded was the audience toward the little pieces that Mr. Ballantine has assembled as orchestral Suite and labelled "The Garden of Hellas." It would look upon the composer as well as clap him; while so unprepared was he for such warmth and curiosity that Mr. Monteux must needs trundle him, as it were, to the stage. As modest—and as pleasing—are the merits of the music. Mr. Ballantine has read verses of the minor and the later Grecian poets—verses bearing an offering to Pan; verses of moonlight mood; verses in which Aphrodite muses out of her marble by the sea; verses with the zest of the spring in them when sky and waters [illegible] to new voyaging. From all these he has received impressions that he would convey in tones. Yet he writes no "impressionistic," no 'modernist' music. Full-[illegible]d are his phrases and periods; warm are his harmonies; orderly his progress. He uses a full orchestra, not, seemingly because he desires its mass of tone; but, because only with it may he gain the desired texture, the desired colorings. Motivs, expanding into terse melody, rather than ample themes as amply developed generate this music. They are [illegible] motivs to mark Mr. Ballantine as composer of individual invention. They recall no one; yet they bear no "very personal" stamp. Like the matter of good prose, they are of the viable material for music.

Rather, the virtue of the little pieces lies in the freshness of mood and impression throughout animating them. Mr. Ballantine invokes Pan as though he also warmed to the god. For him, too, beat the spring-tides. He looks with Aphrodite's longing upon the sea; with the moon descends to darkness. For the instant and no more, the music records the image, imparts the answering mood. As instantly and completely the audience receives and knows it. Few of the younger composers so keep their eye upon the object; so concentrate the mood; so waste no musical means. Once more [illegible] to tensity. Therein Mr. Ballantine is wise [illegible]

More "modernist" in the usual sense of the word is Turina of Madrid in the two "Fantastic Dances," played yesterday for the first time in America. Spanish Dances, according to the conventions of theatre and concert-hall, they are not. No more do they smack of the folk, of urban or rural scene, after the manner of the newer Spanish composers and now and again, of Turina himself. Less than in de Falla, less even than in Granados does following fancy discover a Spanish background. As scanty is the hint of close Parisian antecedents. By the evidence of the ear, Turina chose to write short tone-poems in dance-rhythms, letting a single mood permeate each piece. Writing, he chooses one of the familiar idioms of music nowadays—a matter and a manner that spare not in sharp-set harmonies, keen-edged timbres, abrupt modulation, restless motion. Short-breathed are his motivs; fitful his play with them; while as often as not rhythm is the binding means.

The first of the two pieces would catch the mood of troubled dream. By the token of the motto set above it, lament and bitterness should color it. From afar should it also sound. Yet hearing, the ear receives no more than an uneasy, astringent, sharp-surfaced music. Clearer of impression is the second piece—blend, according to another motto, of the perfume of flower and the aroma of wine. With sensuous warmth, in moody tumult, Turina writes. For the instant, the breath of the wine whips his measures; or the odor of the flower stays and haunts them. Yet piecemeal and in patchwork, rather than unified and concentrated, remains the impression.

H. T. P.

TRANS. FEB. 10

SEIDEL SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

New Music by Turina and Ballentine Also Heard

The vividly emotional performance by Toscha Seidel of Mandelssohn's concerto for violin is probably what most people will remember yesterday's Symphony concert by. He not only brought to the familiar show piece an extraordinary technical mastery of his instrument, he used that mastery as a means of revivifying and glorifying what most people have come to regard as conventionally correct and primly sentimental music. After all, the composer may have felt the piece as intensely as Mr Seidel did. Mendelssohn should certainly have appreciated the purity of tone, the musicianly phrasing, the subtle dynamics of yesterday's performance on the part of the soloist.

The audience was roused to an unwonted but becoming enthusiasm. It not only recalled Mr Seidel five times, almost a record for a newcomer to these concerts; it also listened to his playing with none of the discreet rustling of programs and almost none of the more or less stifled bronchial outbursts that ordinarily accompany all music in Symphony Hall. Mr Monteux and the orchestra played the accompaniment with more enthusiasm and less stodginess than they accord most assisting artists.

Chausson's symphony was given an eloquent and moving performance. The first two movements may be loosely constructed and too reminiscent of Wagner and Franck. The last movement is certainly a masterpiece worthy of many hearings, nobly individual music, proving that Frenchmen are sometimes able to compose in the grand manner.

Of the two new pieces played, Mr Ballentine's suite, "From the Garden of Hellas," gave by far the most pleasure. Poems in the Greek Anthology suggested the four movements, each of which is an imaginatively honest and faithful depiction of a human mood. Mr Ballentine has not used ultra modern harmonic or orchestral effects. He does not disdain melody and consonance. He has writen ingratiating, agreeable music, which was obviously enjoyed by yesterday's audience. The composer was recalled to the stage to bow his acknowledgments after the performance.

Turina's "Fantastic Dances" are a rather dull and labored reworking in modernist terms of conventionally Spanish musical material. A few pages at the beginning of the "Orgy" succeeded in painting a mental picture, or at least suggested that the Diaghilev ballet could paint in by illustrative action. Except for some quite unnecessary dissonance and a profusion of noise, especially from percussion instruments, the rest of Turina's music was harmlessly dull.

Next week Carlos Salzedo will play the harp solo in his own symphonic poem, "The Enchanted Isles." Mr Burgin, and not Mr Shirley, is announced to play the viola d'amore solo in Loeffler's "La mort de Tintagiles." Schumann's "Rhenish Symphony" and two of Dvorak's "Slavonic Dances" are the other numbers listed.

GLOBE-FEB. 10.

14TH CONCERT BY SYMPHONY

Toscha Seidel, Violinist, Plays Here for the First Time

LATE COMERS AGAIN DISTURB AUDIENCE

By PHILIP HALE

The 14th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in [illegible] major; [illegible] "From the [illegible] of Hellas"; Mendelssohn, Violin concerto; Turina, two Fantastic Dances. Mr. Ballantine's Suite was performed for the first time in Boston; Turina's dances, for the first time in America. Toscha Seidel, violinist, played for the first time at these concerts.

Again late comers walked in the aisles between the first two movements of the symphony, and thus disturbed the impression left by the music already played and the anticipation of the music to come. Would it not be advisable to begin the concert with an overture or some other piece of comparatively short duration? This was once the custom at these concerts. After this introductory composition, the late comers—and in some cases tardiness no doubt is unavoidable—could be seated without interrupting symphonic continuity. The Chicago orchestra has adopted this plan with good results. There is no dearth of overtures and other short pieces, nor need the overture be one of weighty importance, "presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line." Let us not be afraid of light and sparkling music, provided it be of the first quality. At present too many overtures are gathering dust on the shelves of the Symphony library.

The second and third movements of Chausson's symphony contain many pages that are beautiful, many that are uplifting and noble. The introduction to the first movement is impressive; that which follows is at times amateurish; the thematic material is not of marked significance and in the treatment of this material there are crudities, experiments, haltings and gropings. The movement is not firmly knit together. But all this is forgotten in the splendor of the movements that follow. It is easy to say that as Chausson was Franck's pupil, there is much of the master in the pupil's work; that in mood and in harmonic or rhythmic scheme at times the influence of Wagner is felt; one might even suspect the presence of the Gounod of the prelude to "Faust" in one of Chausson's pages; but there are no reminiscences akin to plagiarism. When Chausson wrote the symphony, he had not wholly found his own way, yet the greater part of the work shows genuine individuality and the spirit of the true artist. At the end of 30 years the symphony bears its age well; its life should be long. Mr. Monteux, with the orchestra, gave a masterly interpretation, a singularly euphonious performance of an uncommonly euphonious work.

Mr. Ballantine's Suite—Invocation to Pan, Nocturne, Aphrodite, Unloose Your Cables—was suggested by four short poems from the Greek Anthology. To give the impression of there poems, translated into English by Lilla Cabot Perry, Mr. Ballantine wrote for a modern full orchestra, percussion instruments and all. Of the four pieces the "Invocation to Pan" seemed the most fortunate in illustration of the text. Not that one should demand a literal or interlinear translation; but the impression made by the other movements was not a strong one. Was there really a need of so great an orchestra to express the composer's ideas? Suppose these ideas had been given only to strings and a few wood-wind instruments; would the ideas themselves have at once riveted the attention? The Suite was favorably received by the audience, and Mr. Ballantine bowed in acknowledgment.

As far back as 1911 Mr. George Copeland played piano music by Turina, an Andalusion, born in 1881. Later an orchestral piece and a chamber composition by him were heard in Boston. Yesterday Mr. Monteux brought out two or three "Danzas Fantasticas," "Dreaming" and "Orgy." They have an exotic, exhilarating flavor, but certain Frenchmen, Chabrier, Debussy, Ravel—have been more successful in giving us Spain in music. Then there is Laparra, whose opera "Habanera" showed us a Spain that was not all sunlight, guitars, and "Ole! Ole!" Rimsky-Korsakov tried his hand at it, but he might as well have been a Cook's tourist in Seville or Granada, personally conducted to a gypsy dance. And so yesterday, hearing Turina's music, we kept wishing that the orchestra were playing Chabrier's "Espana" or Debussy's "Iberia."

Mr. Seidel gave what might be called a "slick" performance of the smug and irritatingly respectable concerto by Mendelssohn. The concerto never seemed more sentimental, never longer. This was probably not so much the fault of Mr. Seidel as that of the genteel, irreproachable Mendelssohn, whose concerto is overfamiliar. The audience enjoyed the music and the playing hugely, and rapturous was the applause.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week comprises Schumann's Symphony No. 3 ("Rhenish"); Salzedo's "Enchanted Isles," a symphonic poem for harp and orchestra (Mr. Salzedo, harpist); Loeffler's "Death of Tintagiles" (after Maeterlinck), and two Slavonic dances by Dvorak. Mr. Burgin will play the viola d'amore in Mr. Loeffler's dramatic poem.

HERALD-FEB. 10

NEW WORKS PLAYED BY SYMPHONY

Ballantine of Harvard and Turina of Spain Honored

[illegible] the music department [illegible] University and Joaquin Turina of Madrid, Spain, were played for the first time anywhere and for the first time in America, respectively, at the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Both compositions had local color.

TOSCHA SEIDEL, SOLOIST

Toscha Seidel, violinist, was soloist of the occasion, playing the Mendelssohn concerto. The symphony of Ernest Chausson, a symphony by a composer most unfortunately taken off before his time, opened the concert.

Chausson, a very rich man, a supersensitive nature, was just finding himself when a fall from a bicycle dashed his head against a stone wall. It is a great loss to modern music, because of the unquestionable gifts and the special temperament of the man. The slow movement of the symphony has an autumnal melancholy found in other pages of Chausson, and peculiar to him.

Finale Well Wrought

One thinks of Swinburne's lines about the end of every man's desire. The introduction of the first movement prepares one for something quite stupendous, but in the development which follows, and in spite of the cunning evolution and combination of leading themes, the musical material itself is tenuous and the thought rather halting.

But the finale is powerfully wrought—the finale which ends with a peroration in the symphonic manner that Franck had so nobly developed. Franck and Wagner are heard in this music of Chausson. His symphony feels to us like the last experiment before the appearance of the real masterwork. But fate is not as kind, in this world, as the fairy tales would have us believe.

Ballantine's Suite

Mr. Ballantine's suite of four pieces, "From the Garden of Hellas," is based on poems from the Greek Anthology as translated by Lilla Cabot Perry in the volume, 'From the Garden of Hellas.' The titles of the pieces are "Invocation to Pan," after Epigram 253, Book VI, of Crinagoras; "Nocturne," Epigram 633, by the same author; "Aphrodite," Epigram 143, from Book IX of Antipater; "Unloose Your Cables," Epigram 4, Book X, of Marcus Argentarius.

Mr. Ballantine has gained a much surer touch of late in his treatment of the orchestra. His musical theme is at once clearer and better co-ordinated than in earlier scores. The question will arise in the minds of many whether a big orchestra of the dimensions he employs is well suited to the extremely simple style of the Greek verse.

Mr. Ballantine would perhaps reply that in these days a composer uses an orchestra, big or small, according to instinct, and for the sake of embodying in his own manner his musical thought. But this does not allay a certain objection in the hearer's mind to an artistic manner more swollen than that of the Greek model which inspired the music. What is very commendable in these pieces in their brevity and concentration. Barring a few conventional measures in the opening pieces there is little that is padding or repetitious. We must, however, admit that despite a perfected technic and an agreeable musical speech we do not find original ideas in this music. The composer, who was present, acknowledged hearty applause.

Mr. Seidel a Mature Artist

When Mr. Seidel first played in Boston his performances were distinguished by a fluency that did not always conduce to authority in interpretation. He played the Mendelssohn concerto yesterday with less of the old fluency and aplomb and more the air—and the effect—of a man who had thought very seriously of his task and was devoting more attention to musicianly interpretation than to technical display.

It was a pleasure to hear the concerto, which is so well known, interpreted without exaggeration, without sentimentality, without excessive whipping up of the tempo in the finale. The work was interpreted with a fine intelligence and sense of proportion, with genuine and undistorted feeling, and with complete authority.

Spanish Music Intrigues

Probably owing to the length of the programme, Mr. Monteux played two instead of three dances which belong to the set, "Danzas Fantasticas" of Turina. The two played were "Ensueno" and "Orgia." Ensueno" bears the motto, by Jose Mas, "The sound of the strings was as the lament of the soul, which could no longer endure the weight of bitterness," and the "Orgia" has this motto, by the same Spanish poet, "The perfume of the flowers was mingled with the odor of the manzanilla, and from the depths of the narrow goblets filled with the incomparable wine joy rose like an incense."

The music is intriguing, not conventionally modern in the manner of so many Spanish composers who have studied in Paris, full of mood, caprice, exotic color. This is the most interesting and the most authentic music by Turina we have heard, and we could afford to hear more at the Symphony concerts of music by modern Spaniards.

POST-FEB. 10

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Carlos Salzedo, harp virtuoso and composer, will play the solo part in his symphonic poem "Terres Enchantees," which will be performed at the next pair of Boston Symphony concerts, to be given at Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

AMER. FEB. 10.

[illegible] phony Orchestra will be given in Symphony Hall Monday evening, Feb. 19.

The principal number on the program will be the Third Symphony of Beethoven, known as the "Eroica." This work of mighty proportions was inspired by Napoleon Bonaparte, Beethoven's contemporary, upon whom the composer looked as the coming liberator of mankind.

When he heard that the General had taken the title "Emperor," Beethoven destroyed the dedication in anger and disappointment, but the great score remained.

The soloist at this concert will be Magdeleine Brard, the young pianist, who made an appearance in Boston as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra three seasons ago. Miss Brard will appear with the orchestra in the pianoforte concerto of Grieg. Pierre Monteux will close the concert with Enesco's Rumanian rhapsody in A-major, the work by which this Rumanian composer, now paying his first visit to America, is best known.

GLOBE. FEB. 11

MONDAY SYMPHONY

The third Monday evening Symphony concert will be given in Symphony Hall on February 19.

The principal number will be Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. Magdeleine Brard, pianist, will appear with the orchestra in the Grieg Concerto. Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody will also be played.

CHILDREN'S CONCERTS

The last young people's concerts to be given this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place next Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons.

ADVTS-FEB. 11

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the following program will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor. The Third Symphony of Schumann in E-flat (the "Rhenish") will be performed. Carlos Salzedo, the noted harp virtuoso and composer, will take the solo part in his symphonic poem "Terres Enchantees." The other pieces will be Loeffler's dramatic poem "La Mort de Tintagiles" (after Maeterlinck), in which the viola d'amore solo will be played by Mr. Burgin, and the two Slavonic Dances of Dvorak, opus 46, Nos. 1 and 3.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONCERTS

The second and last pair of young people's concerts this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place next Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, Feb. 13 and 14, at 4 o'clock. All tickets for these concerts have been apportioned through the public schools of Greater Boston.

Mr. Monteux will present the following program: Weber's Overture to "Obereon"; the Allegretto from Beethoven's Symphony No. 7; Berlioz's "March to the Scaffold" from the "Fantastic" Symphony; "Invocation" from "The Erinyes," by Massenet; Suite from "Carmen"; "In Wartime" from MacDowell's "Indian Suite," and Tchaikovsky's Overture "1812."

BRARD MONDAY EVENING SOLOIST

The third Monday evening concert of the extra series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in Symphony hall on Monday evening, Feb. 19. The principal number on the program will be the third symphony of Beethoven, known as the "Eroica." This work of mighty proportions was inspired by Napoleon Bonaparte, Beethoven's contemporary, upon whom the composer looked as the coming liberator of mankind. When he heard that the general had abused his power, Beethoven destroyed the dedication in anger and disappointment, but the great score remained.

The soloist will be Magdeleine Brard the talented young pianist, who made her former appearance in Boston as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra three seasons ago. She was then "a musical prodigy," but the beauty and brilliance of her playing astounded all who heard her. Her art has since matured and attained even finer distinctions. She will play Grieg's concerto. Mr. Monteux will close the concert with Enesco's Roumanian rhapsody in A-major.

HERALD. FEB. 11.

18.

8.17

[64]

Symphony Programme

The following programme will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall: Third Symphony, Schumann; symphonic poem, "Terres Enchantress," Carlos Salzedo; Loeffler's dramatic poem, "La Mort de Tintagiles," based on Maeterlinck, in which the viola d'amore solo will be played by Richard Burgin, and the two Slavonic dances of Dvorak, Opus 46, Nos. 1 and 2.

Brard Monday Evening Soloist

The third Monday evening concert of the extra series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, Feb. 19.

The principal number on the programme will be the Third Symphony of Beethoven, known as the "Eroica."

The soloist at this concert will be Magdeleine Brard, the remarkably talented young pianist, who made her former appearance in Boston as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra three seasons ago. She was then so young as to be called a musical prodigy. Miss Brard will appear with the orchestra in the pianoforte concerto of Greif. Mr. Monteux will close the concert with Enesco's Rumanian rhapsody in A major, the work by which this Rumanian composer, now paying his first visit to America, is best known.

Young People's Concerts

The second and last pair of Young People's Concerts to be given this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place next Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, Feb. 13 and 14, at 4 o'clock. All tickets for these concerts have been apportioned through the public schools of Greater Boston.

Mr. Monteux will present the following programmes: Weber's Overture to "Oberon," the Allegretto from Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, Berlioz's "March to the Scaffold" from the Fantastic Symphony; "Invocation," from "Les Erinyes," by Massenet; Suite from Bizet's "Carmen"; "In Wartime," from MacDowell's "Indian Suite," and Tschaikovsky's Overture "1812."

POST. FEB. 11.

MUSIC of less obvious shortcomin has survived less long than Cha son's Symphony in American co cert-halls. Mr. d'Indy brought it thith as long ago as 1906, and ever since t conductors have periodically replayed as Mr. Monteux did last Friday and Satu day, as Mr. Stock and Mr. Damrosch ha also done a few weeks or a few ment ago. (As Schumann's "Symphonic Stu ies" are the fashionable piece this sea for pianists, so is Chausson's Sympho with the mousing directors). Yet t casual listener, hears Franck and Wagn speaking from it loud and clear; disc ers measures that grope or are clums finds others of a sudden going blank; is haunted by a recurring inadequacy of means to matter. So far and no farther may Chausson go as achieving symphonist. Then, like Bruckner—a mind of a very different cast—he treads water until strong again of stroke, he can cleave the tonal waters.

Yet hereabouts the bravest flee from Bruckner; while the timidest set rapt be- [illegible] The reason is not far to seek. In his Symphony, as in his "Poem" for the violinists, Chausson felt deeply. He wrote because a mood, a passion within him cried for release in music. Writing, the more intense became these ardors. Of themselves they burn away, as it were, the impediments in the composer's musical speech. Franck himself may not peal forth joy beyond Chausson in the last movement of his symphony. Here sings elation concentrated, sublimated. The darkest-hued romantic of an earlier generation might have envied Chausson's intensity of lament through his middle measures. Yet most of them wore a sable livery of grief; while he speaks in an outpoured mourning. Deep and lasting goes music born of such exaltation. Bruckner could write it only in a few ethereal slow movements. Chausson knew joy and sorrow as well. Bruckner would open the heavens. Chausson heard the human cry. Questionless we humans also listen.

H. T. P.

TRANS. FEB. 12.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PLEASES YOUNG PEOPLE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave another program for young people yesterday afternoon to an audience that filled Symphony Hall. The tickets were distributed through the schools of Greater Boston, without public sale and at a nominal price.

Mr Monteux arranged a list of pieces more varied, and better suited to the purpose of these concerts than he has hitherto chosen for them. There was something on it calculated to attract every type of listener likely to be attracted by orchestral music.

The excerpts from Bizet's "Carmen" and the "Invocation," from Massenet's "Les Erinyes" afforded opportunities for several players to perform incidental solos, which were gleefully applauded. In Weber's "Oberon" overture a sudden loud chord startled the audience, and extorted chuckles from many youngsters. Otherwise, the gathering behaved quite as decorously as the usual grown-up audience. The allegretto from Beethoven's A major symphony and the "March to the Scaffold," from Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony," musically speaking the finest things played, were well received.

This program will be repeated today at 4, lasting until about 5. No seats are on public sale, however.

GLOBE-FEB. 14.

GIVES CONCERT FOR CHILDREN

Symphony Orchestra Program Appeals; Bedetti Is Soloist

IS SECOND PROGRAM FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

This is the program Mr. Monteux arranged for the second concert by the Symphony orchestra for young people, in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon:

Weber.......Overture to the Opera, "Oberon"
Beethoven,
"Allegretto" from the Symphony in A major, No. 7.
Berlioz,
"March to the Scaffold" from the Fantastic Symphony.
Massenet,
"Invocation" from Suite, "The Erinyes"
'Cello Solo—Jean Bedetti.
Bizet.......Suite from the Opera, "Carmen"
MacDowell. "In Wartime" from the Indian Suite
Tchaikovsky........................Overture, "1812"

For this second concert of the winter Mr. Monteux provided solider fare than has been his way heretofore. His audience as usual was interesting to watch. The Weber overture, barring the loud, sudden chord at the beginning of the allegro, which amused, left the company cold. So did the Beethoven movement, though it is indeed a fact that so long as this music really "moved" the audience attentively listened. In precisely the same way they responded to the MacDowell "In War Time," only the quiet middle portion bored. So, in the suite from "Carmen," the last movement, where most goes on, suited best.

It pleased by no means so well, however, as the Invocation from Massenet's suite "The Erinyes" less imposingly put, his hackneyed song "Elegie," played by Mr. Bedetti. A youthful audience, so much is clear, likes sentimental music smoothly played above all else. Next in favor, however, comes music with sound to it and substance, and some emotional appeal; near the end of the Berlioz march not a few boys, and girls too, in one part of the hall stood up, the better to see what was going on, and when the march was over everybody applauded lustily. If the sheer beauty of Mozart, Beethoven, Weber and Bizet fails as signally as the simplicities of Haydn and the music of rythm above all else to stir young company, luckily music remains of uninterrupted movement, of vivid color and of emotional force. There is always Wagner.

R. R. G.

HERALD-FEB. 14.

YOUNG FOLKS' SYMPHONY IS BIG SUCCESS

By ZOE FABER

"If you wish to ask questions, please do so between numbers." If kiddies carry out printed instructions on the program that is about all that can be asked or expected of them—so—if there was a good deal of scurrying around from seat to seat at the Young People's Symphony concert at Symphony Hall, it was mostly because a teacher or older sister sat across the aisle. At any rate, they seemed happier for the information they craved—and it gave them valuable exercise.

If anything can be more of a success than success itself then this concert was more successful than the last one. This is a subject, anyway, that uses up all one's superlative adjectives because the children themselves declare that this number is "Great, oh, gee!" or of the last one "My, but wasn't it sweet?" This in particular reference to Mr. Bedetti's playing of the Massenet "Elegie." It was, too.

Had the children suspected that there were any feet in the hall that were not tapping energetically, particularly during the Carmen numbers, they probably thought that the owner couldn't keep time for obviously, all the people that could, did.

The concert will be repeated this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

CHILDREN HEAR THE SYMPHONY

Concert for School Folks Much Enjoyed

The programme of the children's concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, consisted of Weber's overture to Oberon"; the Allegretto from Beethoven's 7th Symphony; "March to the Scaffold," from Berlioz "Fantastic" Symphony; "Invocation," from Massenet's suite, "Les Errinyes"; "In Wartime" from MacDowell's Indian Suite, and Tschaikowsky's overture, "1812."

The choice of the "Oberon" overture was a fortunate one for the occasion, and it was greatly appreciated by the children. Would that there were more of such music. The Allegretto from Beethoven's symphony is music, too, that should be familiar from childhood. Berlioz "March to the Scaffold" can be a gruesome affair, but the chattering of bassoons may seem amusing to a child where it is stark and macabre to older imaginations.

The triumph of the concert seemed principally the Weber music which continues to cast its spell, to transport the hearer on the note of a horn to Oberon's magic realm.

The orchestral performances were very brilliant. It is not possible to over-estimate the effect these concerts are having on the musical development of the rising generation of Boston.

POST. FEB. 14.

The program of the Symphony concerts this week should not disturb those who shudder at the thought of being obliged to hear new music by audacious radicals. Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony and two dances by Dvorak are not of the revolutionary nature. To be sure Loeffler's "Death of Tintagiles" is highly dramatic, but it is familiar. Mr. Salzedo's "Enchanted Isles" for harp and orchestra is new, but he is an amiable gentleman, and a harp in moderation is soothing.

Nor need Mr. Monteux's program for next week be dreaded by the good old conservatives: Rossini's overture to "Semiramide," Mozart's G minor symphony, Saint-Saens's piano concerto No. 4 (played by the excellent Mr. Cortot—Mr. Paderewski was the last to play it at a Symphony concert) and Ravel's Spanish Rhapsody.

At the extra concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Monday night, the "Eroica" Symphony and a Roumanian Rhapsody by Enesco will be performed. Magdeleine Brard, pianist, will play Grieg's Concerto.

HERALD-FEB. 15.

Mr. Salzedo as Composer

Already known here as harpist and as composer for his instrument, Carlos Salzédo appears in both these rôles at the Symphony Concerts of this week. In the past Boston has heard from Mr. Salzédo, the composer only music for harp alone, or music such as the strange settings of stranger poems by Sara Yarrow—sung by Miss Ethel Frank at a concert of the Boston Musical Association—in which several harps made the warp of the instrumental texture. Tomorrow and Saturday, however, Mr. Salzédo will be disclosed here as author of a piece for full orchestra, in which a solo harp predominates. Scorning the implications of the names concerto or concerted piece, Mr. Salzédo has dubbed this composition a symphonic poem with "harp-principal." Regarding it he has written thus:

> There is no programme in connection with my symphonic poem for harp and orchestra. The name—"Terres Enchantées ("Enchanted Isles")—has been preferred to any other chiefly on account of the newness of the orchestral balance, which unveils to the hearer a new world of sounds. In this work the harp is treated in an unexpected, unaccustomed fashion by taking advantage of the unlimited tone colors of the instrument, thirty-five in number. The conception and execution of these effects have been made possible only by the recent perfection of the instrument.

Written in 1918, the "Enchanted Isles" bears a dedication to the memory of Claude Debussy, and in the music this composer's influence is clearly seen. Mr. Salzédo directs that the beginning of his symphonic poem should sound "enveloped in mystery." Such mysteriousness is easy enough of attainment in view of the hyper-impressionistic methods employed in the fashioning of the music and in its instrumental presentation. The composer cultivates unusual rhythms and exceptional time-signatures, such as 20-4, and, at the other extreme, 1-4. The harmonies are often dissonant, according to the newest mode in such matters, but in effect they are veiled and shadowy rather than strident. As set forth in Mr. Salzédo's own words, the part for solo harp is replete with unusual sounds and with clang-tints unknown to those who have not heard his other compositions for the instrument. And perhaps he alone can bring from the harp the precise timbres that he desires, and for which he writes—to give a random example—such extraordinary indications as "meltingly calm and without dryness."

W. S. S.

A year ago, when Mr. Casella, the composer and pianist, first visited the United States, Boston had no opportunity to hear that arch-modernist. Next month, however, it may hear him four times over. With the Symphony Orchestra, he will play in Cambridge on March 1, and in Symphony Hall on March 2 and 3. Two weeks later in Jordan Hall, on Saturday afternoon, March 17, he is announced for a recital of his own. Modernist, however, is he only in his own pieces.

At the Symphony Concerts of next week, Mr. Monteux will revive one more Overture of Rossini—that to the opera, "Semiramide," not quite so novel as his other resurrections. A Symphony of Mozart; Ravel's glinting Spanish Rhapsody; and a Concerto of Saint-Saëns with Mr. Cortot to play the solo-part are the other items of the programme.

TRANS. FEB. 15.

BRARD SYMPHONY SOLOIS

Next Monday evening, Feb. 19, Boston Symphony Orchestra, P Monteux, conductor, will give its concert of the Extra Monday Eve Series, with Magdeleine Brard, the brated young French pianist, appe as soloist.

Pierre Monteux will conduct a principal number on the progra mighty "Eroica" Symphony No. Beethoven, and will close the with Enesco's Roumanian Rhaps

PENSION FUND SOLOIST

Sigrid Onegin, the Swedish contral of the Metropolitan Opera Compan whose recent debut in Boston prove an outstanding musical event of th season, will make a return appearance when she sings with the Boston Sym phony Orchestra at Symphony hall o Sunday afternoon, March 4th, at 3:30 as soloist at its Pension Fund conc

TRAVELR-FEB. 17.

HARPIST PLAYS OWN WORK AT SYMPHONY

By ZOE FABER

Carlos Salzedo, harpist, playing his own composition, "Enchanted Isles," was the outstanding figure of the fifteenth Symphony program, Mr. Monteux conducting.

Mr. Salzedo is far more interesting as a harpist than he is as a composer and there is much more pleasure in hearing him play the works of other composers for his instrument.

DEDICATED TO DEBUSSY.

This particular work is dedicated to the memory of Claude Debussy and reminds one strongly of the trend of thought of the latter, except that there is lacking the same spark, that has placed Debussy's name high in the annals of composers.

Charles Martin Loeffler was in the audience and acknowledge the applause of his hearers at the conclusion of his "La Mort de Tintagiles," a highly dramatic work, which is crowded with interest, beautiful themes and brilliant orchestration.

BURGIN ADDS PLEASURE.

Richard Burgin contributed not a little to the pleasure of the foregoing by his playing of the solo part for viola d'amore. Its insistent tone, sometimes lovely, always domineering, was skilfully employed by the concertmaster of the orchestra.

Mr. Monteux opened the program with the Schumann "Rhenish" Symphony and many of the audience were glad of another hearing of one of the well beloved classics.

The closing number was Dvorak's Two Slavonic Dances—both brilliant in the matter contained and the treatment thereof.

AMER. FEB. 17.

CORTOT, SOLOIST

At the next regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts, which will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Alfred Cortot, a French pianist, will appear as soloist. He will play with the orchestra the fourth pianoforte concerto of Saint-Saens.

BRARD WILL PLAY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its third concert of the extra Monday evening series on Monday night, with Magdeleine Brard, a young French pianist, appearing as soloist. Pierre Monteux will conduct as the principal number on the program the mighty "Eroica" Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven, and will close the concert with Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody.

AMER. JAN. 17.

SALZEDO HERE AS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Carlos Salzedo, who stands among the most brilliant harpists of the day, made his debut as Symphony star yesterday in his own symphonic poem for harp and orchestra, which bears the title of "Enchanted Isles." This remarkable work is new to Boston.

Charles Martin Loeffler, Boston composer, is represented by "The Death of Tintagiles," a symphonic poem on the Maeterlinck play. Richard Burgin played the viola d'amore solo in this famous modern masterpiece. Schumann's "Rhenish Symphony" and Dvorak's Slavonic dances are the other numbers on the program, which will be repeated tonight.

BRARD WITH SYMPHONY

Magdeleine Brard, one of the most brilliant French pianists, will be the star of the Monday night Symphony concert in Symphony Hall. She will play the solo part in the Grieg concerto in A minor. Pierre Monteux will conduct Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and Enesco's colorful "Roumanian Rhapsody."

ADVTSR. FEB. 17.

AT the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Mr. Monteux will revive one more Overture of Rossini—that to the opera, "Semiramide," not quite so novel as his other resurrections of century-old operatic preludes. A Symphony of Mozart in G minor; Ravel's glinting Spanish Rhapsody; and a Concerto of Saint-Saëns with Mr. Cortot to play the solo-part are the other items of the programme. In such a piece as this Fourth Concerto, the Parisian pianist may glint and refine, chisel and polish to the top of his bent.

The third in the supplementary series of Symphony Concerts befalls in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, enlisting the full orchestra, led by Mr. Monteux and traversing a programme of familiar or semi-familiar pieces, with a "soloist" for gilding. Magdeleine Brard, once prodigy, now young virtuoso, will be the assisting pianist. Beethoven's "Eroica Symphony"; Grieg's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra; Enesco's whirling Roumanian Rhapsody fill the programme.

TRANS. FEB. 17

EXTRA SYMPHONY

The third Monday evening concert of the extra series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to be given in Symphony hall tomorrow evening at 8:15 with Magdeleine Brard, the celebrated young French pianist. Miss Brard revealed extraordinary talent in childhood, entering the Paris Conservatory at 11, taking the first prize two years later, and the prize of honor in 1917. She studied with Cortot and also coached with Saint-Saens. She appeared as a prodigy in performances with Colone, Lamoureux and other orchestras in Paris and other cities, and first came to America in 1918, when she astonished by the brilliance of her playing. Mme Brard will play Grieg's Concerto. Mr. Monteux will conduct the "Eroica" Symphony by Beethoven, and Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, based upon Roumanian folk themes.

PENSION FUND

Sigrid Onegin, Swedish contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its pension fund concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, March 4, at 3:30. Mr. Monteux and the orchestra will give a Wagnerian program on this occasion; Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music from "The Valkyrie" as the climax. Charles H. Bennett will sing the music of Wotan.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Alfred Cortot, the celebrated French pianist, will be the soloist at the Boston Symphony concerts in Symphony hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Mr. Cortot will play the Fourth Concerto of Saint-Saens. Mr. Monteux will also conduct Rossini's Overture to "Semiramide," Mozart's Symphony in G minor, and the Spanish Rhapsody by Maurice Ravel.

HERALD, FEB. 1

Symphony Programme

The following programme will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall: Third Symphony, Schumann; symphonic poem, "Terres Enchantress," Carlos Salzedo; Loeffler's dramatic poem, "La Mort de Tintagiles," based on Maeterlinck, in which the viola d'amore solo will be played by Richard Burgin, and the two Slavonic dances of Dvorak, Opus 46, Nos. 1 and 2.

Brard Monday Evening Soloist

The third Monday evening concert of the extra series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, Feb. 19. The principal number on the programme will be the Third Symphony of Beethoven, known as the "Eroica." The soloist at this concert will be Magdeleine Brard, the remarkably talented young pianist, who made her former appearance in Boston as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra three seasons ago. She was then so young as to be called a musical prodigy. Miss Brard will appear with the orchestra in the pianoforte concerto of Greif. Mr. Monteux will close the concert with Enesco's Rumanian rhapsody in A major, the work by which this Rumanian composer, now paying his first visit to America, is best known.

Young People's Concerts

The second and last pair of Young People's Concerts to be given this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place next Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, Feb. 13 and 14, at 4 o'clock. All tickets for these concerts have been apportioned through the public schools of Greater Boston.

Mr. Monteux will present the following programmes: Weber's Overture to "Oberon," the Allegretto from Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, Berlioz's "March to the Scaffold" from the Fantastic Symphony; "Invocation," from "Les Erinyes," by Massenet; Suite from Bizet's "Carmen"; "In Wartime," from MacDowell's "Indian Suite," and Tschaikovsky's Overture "1812."

POST-FEB. 11.

MUSIC of less obvious shortcomin has survived less long than Cha son's Symphony in American co cert-halls. Mr. d'Indy brought it thith as long ago as 1906, and ever since t conductors have periodically replayed as Mr. Monteux did last Friday and Satu day, as Mr. Stock and Mr. Damrosch ha also done a few weeks or a few mont ago. (As Schumann's "Symphonic Stu ies" are the fashionable piece this seas for pianists, so is Chausson's Sympho with the mousing directors). Yet t casual listener, hears Franck and Wagn speaking from it loud and clear; disc ers measures that grope or are clums finds others of a sudden going blank; is haunted by a recurring inadequacy of means to matter. So far and no farther may Chausson go as achieving symphonist. Then, like Bruckner—a mind of a very different cast—he treads water until strong again of stroke, he can cleave the tonal waters.

Yet hereabouts the bravest flee from Bruckner; while the timidest set rapt be- [illegible] the reason is not far to seek. In his Symphony, as in his "Poem" for the violinists, Chausson felt deeply. He wrote because a mood, a passion within him cried for release in music. Writing, the more intense became these ardors. Of themselves they burn away, as it were, the impediments in the composer's musical speech. Franck himself may not peal forth joy beyond Chausson in the last movement of his symphony. Here sings elation concentrated, sublimated. The darkest-hued romantic of an earlier generation might have envied Chausson's intensity of lament through his middle measures. Yet most of them wore a sable livery of grief; while he speaks in an outpoured mourning. Deep and lasting goes music born of such exaltation. Bruckner could write it only in a few ethereal slow movements. Chausson knew joy and sorrow as well. Bruckner would open the heavens. Chausson heard the human cry. Questionless we humans also listen.

H. T. P.

TRANS. FEB. 12.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PLEASES YOUNG PEOPLE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave another program for young people yesterday afternoon to an audience that filled Symphony Hall. The tickets were distributed through the schools of Greater Boston, without public sale and at a nominal price.

Mr Monteux arranged a list of pieces more varied, and better suited to the purpose of these concerts than he has hitherto chosen for them. There was something on it calculated to attract every type of listener likely to be attracted by orchestral music.

The excerpts from Bizet's "Carmen" and the "Invocation," from Massenet's "Les Erinyes" afforded opportunities for several players to perform incidental solos, which were gleefully applauded. In Weber's "Oberon" overture a sudden loud chord startled the audience, and extorted chuckles from many youngsters. Otherwise, the gathering behaved quite as decorously as the usual grown-up audience. The allegretto from Beethoven's A major symphony and the "March to the Scaffold," from Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony," musically speaking the finest things played, were well received.

This program will be repeated today at 4, lasting until about 5. No seats are on public sale, however.

GLOBE-FEB. 14.

GIVES CONCERT FOR CHILDREN

Symphony Orchestra Program Appeals; Bedetti Is Soloist

IS SECOND PROGRAM FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

This is the program Mr. Monteux arranged for the second concert by the Symphony orchestra for young people, in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon:

Weber.......Overture to the Opera, "Oberon"
Beethoven,
"Allegretto" from the Symphony in A major, No. 7.
Berlioz,
"March to the Scaffold" from the Fantastic Symphony.
Massenet,
"Invocation" from Suite, "The Erinyes" 'Cello Solo—Jean Bedetti.
Bizet.......Suite from the Opera, "Carmen"
MacDowell. "In Wartime" from the Indian Suite
Tchaikovsky..................Overture, "1812"

For this second concert of the winter Mr. Monteux provided solider fare than has been his way heretofore. His audience as usual was interesting to watch. The Weber overture, barring the loud, sudden chord at the beginning of the allegro, which amused, left the company cold. So did the Beethoven movement, though it is indeed a fact that so long as this music really "moved" the audience attentively listened. In precisely the same way they responded to the MacDowell "In War Time," only the quiet middle portion bored. So, in the suite from "Carmen," the last movement, where most goes on, suited best.

It pleased by no means so well, however, as the Invocation from Massenet's suite "The Erinyes" less imposingly put, his hackneyed song "Elegie," played by Mr. Bedetti. A youthful audience, so much is clear, likes sentimental music smoothly played above all else. Next in favor, however, comes music with sound to it and substance, and some emotional appeal; near the end of the Berlioz march not a few boys, and girls too, in one part of the hall stood up, the better to see what was going on, and when the march was over everybody applauded lustily. If the sheer beauty of Mozart, Beethoven, Weber and Bizet fails as signally as the simplicities of Haydn and the music of rythm above all else to stir young company, luckily music remains of uninterrupted movement, of vivid color and of emotional force. There is always Wagner.

R. R. G.

HERALD-FEB. 14.

YOUNG FOLKS' SYMPHONY IS BIG SUCCESS

By ZOE FABER.

"If you wish to ask questions, please do so between numbers." If kiddies carry out printed instructions on the program that is about all that can be asked or expected of them—so—if there was a good deal of scurrying around from seat to seat at the Young People's Symphony concert at Symphony Hall, it was mostly because a teacher or older sister sat across the aisle. At any rate, they seemed happier for the information they craved—and it gave them valuable exercise.

If anything can be more of a success than success itself then this concert was more successful than the last one. This is a subject, anyway, that uses up all one's superlative adjectives because the children themselves declare that this number is "Great, oh, gee!" or of the last one "My, but wasn't it sweet?" This in particular reference to Mr. Bedetti's playing of the Massenet "Elegie." It was, too.

Had the children suspected that there were any feet in the hall that were not tapping energetically, particularly during the Carmen numbers, they probably thought that the owner couldn't keep time for obviously, all the people that could, did.

The concert will be repeated this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

CHILDREN HEAR THE SYMPHONY

Concert for School Folks Much Enjoyed

The programme of the children's concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, consisted of Weber's overture to Oberon"; the Allegretto from Beethoven's 7th Symphony; "March to the Scaffold," from Berlioz "Fantastic" Symphony; "Invocation," from Massenet's suite, "Les Errinyes"; "In Wartime" from MacDowell's Indian Suite, and Tschaikowsky's overture, "1812."

The choice of the "Oberon" overture was a fortunate one for the occasion, and it was greatly appreciated by the children. Would that there were more of such music. The Allegretto from Beethoven's symphony is music, too, that should be familiar from childhood. Berlioz "March to the Scaffold" can be a gruesome affair, but the chattering of bassoons may seem amusing to a child where it is stark and macabre to older imaginations.

The triumph of the concert seemed principally the Weber music which continues to cast its spell, to transport the hearer on the note of a horn to Oberon's magic realm.

The orchestral performances were very brilliant. It is not possible to over-estimate the effect these concerts are having on the musical development of the rising generation of Boston.

POST-FEB. 14.

The program of the Symphony concerts this week should not disturb those who shudder at the thought of being obliged to hear new music by audacious radicals. Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony and two dances by Dvorak are not of the revolutionary nature. To be sure Loeffler's "Death of Tintagiles" is highly dramatic, but it is familiar. Mr. Salzedo's "Enchanted Isles" for harp and orchestra is new, but he is an amiable gentleman, and a harp in moderation is soothing.

Nor need Mr. Monteux's program for next week be dreaded by the good old conservatives: Rossini's overture to "Semiramide." Mozart's G minor symphony, Saint-Saens's piano concerto No. 4 (played by the excellent Mr. Cortot—Mr. Paderewski was the last to play it at a Symphony concert) and Ravel's Spanish Rhapsody.

At the extra concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Monday night, the "Eroica" Symphony and a Roumanian Rhapsody by Enesco will be performed. Magdeleine Brard, pianist, will play Grieg's Concerto.

HERALD-FEB. 15.

Mr. Salzedo as Composer

Already known here as harpist and as composer for his instrument, Carlos Salzédo appears in both these rôles at the Symphony Concerts of this week. In the past Boston has heard from Mr. Salzédo, the composer only music for harp alone, or music such as the strange settings of stranger poems by Sara Yarrow—sung by Miss Ethel Frank at a concert of the Boston Musical Association—in which several harps made the warp of the instrumental texture. Tomorrow and Saturday, however, Mr. Salzédo will be disclosed here as author of a piece for full orchestra, in which a solo harp predominates. Scorning the implications of the names concerto or concerted piece, Mr. Salzédo has dubbed this composition a symphonic poem with "harp-principal." Regarding it he has written thus:

> There is no programme in connection with my symphonic poem for harp and orchestra. The name—"Terres Enchantées ("Enchanted Isles")—has been preferred to any other chiefly on account of the newness of the orchestral balance, which unveils to the hearer a new world of sounds. In this work the harp is treated in an unexpected, unaccustomed fashion by taking advantage of the unlimited tone colors of the instrument, thirty-five in number. The conception and execution of these effects have been made possible only by the recent perfection of the instrument.

Written in 1918, the "Enchanted Isles" bears a dedication to the memory of Claude Debussy, and in the music this composer's influence is clearly seen. Mr. Salzédo directs that the beginning of his symphonic poem should sound "enveloped in mystery." Such mysteriousness is easy enough of attainment in view of the hyper-impressionistic methods employed in the fashioning of the music and in its instrumental presentation. The composer cultivates unusual rhythms and exceptional time-signatures, such as 20-4, and, at the other extreme, 1-4. The harmonies are often dissonant, according to the newest mode in such matters, but in effect they are veiled and shadowy rather than strident. As set forth in Mr. Salzédo's own words, the part for solo harp is replete with unusual sounds and with clang-tints unknown to those who have not heard his other compositions for the instrument. And perhaps he alone can bring from the harp the precise timbres that he desires, and for which he writes—to give a random example—such extraordinary indications as "meltingly calm and without dryness."

W. S. S.

A year ago, when Mr. Casella, the composer and pianist, first visited the United States, Boston had no opportunity to hear that arch-modernist. Next month, however, it may hear him four times over. With the Symphony Orchestra, he will play in Cambridge on March 1, and in Symphony Hall on March 2 and 3. Two weeks later in Jordan Hall, on Saturday afternoon, March 17, he is announced for a recital of his own. Modernist, however, is he only in his own pieces.

At the Symphony Concerts of next week, Mr. Monteux will revive one more Overture of Rossini—that to the opera, "Semiramide," not quite so novel as his other resurrections. A Symphony of Mozart; Ravel's glinting Spanish Rhapsody; and a Concerto of Saint-Saëns with Mr. Cortot to play the solo-part are the other items of the programme.

TRANS. FEB. 15.

BRARD SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Next Monday evening, Feb. 19, Boston Symphony Orchestra, P Monteux, conductor, will give its concert of the Extra Monday Eve Series, with Magdeleine Brard, the brated young French pianist, appe as soloist.

Pierre Monteux will conduct a principal number on the progra mighty "Eroica" Symphony No. Beethoven, and will close the c with Enesco's Roumanian Rhaps

PENSION FUND SOLOIST

Sigrid Onegin, the Swedish contra of the Metropolitan Opera Compan whose recent debut in Boston prove an outstanding musical event of th season, will make a return appearanc when she sings with the Boston Sym phony Orchestra at Symphony hall o Sunday afternoon, March 4th, at 3:3 as soloist at its Pension Fund conc

TRAVELR-FEB. 17.

HARPIST PLAYS OWN WORK AT SYMPHONY

By ZOE FABER

Carlos Salzedo, harpist, playing his own composition, "Enchanted Isles," was the outstanding figure of the fifteenth Symphony program, Mr. Monteux conducting.

Mr. Salzedo is far more interesting as a harpist than he is as a composer and there is much more pleasure in hearing him play the works of other composers for his instrument.

DEDICATED TO DEBUSSY.

This particular work is dedicated to the memory of Claude Debussy and reminds one strongly of the trend of thought of the latter, except that there is lacking the same spark, that has placed Debussy's name high in the annals of composers.

Charles Martin Loeffler was in the audience and acknowledge the applause of his hearers at the conclusion of his "La Mort de Tintagiles," a highly dramatic work, which is crowded with interest, beautiful themes and brilliant orchestration.

BURGIN ADDS PLEASURE.

Richard Burgin contributed not a little to the pleasure of the foregoing by his playing of the solo part for viola d'amore. Its insistent tone, sometimes lovely, always domineering, was skilfully employed by the concertmaster of the orchestra.

Mr. Monteux opened the program with the Schumann "Rhenish" Symphony and many of the audience were glad of another hearing of one of the well beloved classics.

The closing number was Dvorak's Two Slavonic Dances—both brilliant in the matter contained and the treatment thereof.

AMER. FEB. 17.

CORTOT, SOLOIST

At the next regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts, which will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Alfred Cortot, a French pianist, will appear as soloist. He will play with the orchestra the fourth pianoforte concerto of Saint-Saëns.

BRARD WILL PLAY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its third concert of the extra Monday evening series on Monday night, with Magdeleine Brard, a young French pianist, appearing as soloist. Pierre Monteux will conduct as the principal number on the program the mighty "Eroica" Symphony No. 3 by Beethoven, and will close the concert with Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody.

AMER. JAN. 17.

SALZEDO HERE AS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Carlos Salzedo, who stands among the most brilliant harpists of the day, made his debut as Symphony star yesterday in his own symphonic poem for harp and orchestra, which bears the title of "Enchanted Isles." This remarkable work is new to Boston.

Charles Martin Loeffler, Boston composer, is represented by "The Death of Tintagiles," a symphonic poem on the Maeterlinck play. Richard Burgin played the viola d'amore solo in this famous modern masterpiece. Schumann's "Rhenish Symphony" and Dvorak's Slavonic dances are the other numbers on the program, which will be repeated tonight.

BRARD WITH SYMPHONY

Magdeleine Brard, one of the most brilliant French pianists, will be the star of the Monday night Symphony concert in Symphony Hall. She will play the solo part in the Grieg concerto in A minor. Pierre Monteux will conduct Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and Enesco's colorful "Roumanian Rhapsody."

ADVTSR. FEB. 17.

AT the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Mr. Monteux will revive one more Overture of Rossini—that to the opera, "Semiramide," not quite so novel as his other resurrections of century-old operatic preludes. A Symphony of Mozart in G minor; Ravel's glinting Spanish Rhapsody; and a Concerto of Saint-Saëns with Mr. Cortot to play the solo-part are the other items of the programme. In such a piece as this Fourth Concerto, the Parisian pianist may glint and refine, chisel and polish to the top of his bent.

The third in the supplementary series of Symphony Concerts befalls in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, enlisting the full orchestra, led by Mr. Monteux and traversing a programme of familiar or semi-familiar pieces, with a "soloist" for gilding. Magdeleine Brard, once prodigy, now young virtuoso, will be the assisting pianist. Beethoven's "Eroica Symphony"; Grieg's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra; Enesco's whirling Roumanian Rhapsody fill the programme.

TRANS. FEB. 17

EXTRA SYMPHONY

The third Monday evening concert of the extra series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to be given in Symphony hall tomorrow evening at 8:15 with Magdeleine Brard, the celebrated young French pianist. Miss Brard revealed extraordinary talent in childhood, entering the Paris Conservatory at 11, taking the first prize two years later, and the prize of honor in 1917. She studied with Cortot and also coached with Saint-Saens. She appeared as a prodigy in performances with Colone, Lamoureux and other orchestras in Paris and other cities, and first came to America in 1918, when she astonished by the brilliance of her playing. Mme Brard will play Grieg's Concerto. Mr. Monteux will conduct the "Eroica" Symphony by Beethoven and Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, based upon Roumanian folk themes.

PENSION FUND

Sigrid Onegin, Swedish contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its pension fund concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, March 4, at 3:30. Mr. Monteux and the orchestra will give a Wagnerian program on this occasion; Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music from "The Valkyrie" as the climax. Charles H Bennett will sing the music of Wotan.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Alfred Cortot, the celebrated French pianist, will be the soloist at the Boston Symphony concerts in Symphony hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Mr. Cortot will play the Fourth Concerto of Saint-Saens. Mr. Monteux will also conduct Rossini's Overture to "Semiramide," Mozart's Symphony in G minor, and the Spanish Rhapsody by Maurice Ravel.

HERALD

Symphony Concert

SYMPHONY CONCERT

SALZEDO'S MOONSHINE; LOEFFLER FULL-BODIED

A Rambling Piece for Harp and Orchestra and the Familiar Tone-Poem of Tintagiles—For Better and for Worse Schumann Symphonic—Excellent Performance

AMONG all the composers who for one reason or another are called great, Schumann alone may be described as a bungling workman. Almost reverent was the spirit in which Frederick Stock took upon himself not long ago the task of revising and re-scoring Schumann's Third, the so-called "Rhenish" Symphony; yet what a rebuke was here offered to the composer. Surely no one endowed with sound æsthetic sense would attempt to perform such office for any symphony of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert or Mendelssohn. In the orchestral writing of these men, making due allowance for the technical limitations of their day, the matter and manner are perfectly correlated. To change one would be to injure the other. There is, of course, the celebrated miscalculation of tonal balance at the end of the first movement of Schubert's C major Symphony, and Wagner has shown how a passage in the Scherzo of the "Ninth Symphony" of Beethoven can be made to sound to far better advantage. But these are random instances—the exceptions that prove the rule. Schumann is, however, in different case. Setting aside the Overture to "Manfred," his orchestral compositions might be wholly re-scored not only to greater effectiveness but also to the clearer presentation of their musical content.

It is almost a pity that Mr. Monteux, reviving Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony at the concerts of this week, did not give Bostonians an opportunity to pass upon the merits of Mr. Stock's version of the piece. Admitting the possible tastelessness of such revision, agreeing in general with the estimable Ebenezer Prout that in the matter of scoring we should take the classic as men take their wives 'for better or for worse," the fact remains that the Third Symphony according to Schumann is sufficiently familiar here and that this music according to Stock might prove an interesting revelation. Heard yesterday in its original estate, the piece proved again the force of Theodore Thomas's words as quoted by Mr. Stock, the words that spurred the latter to his task of revision: "Oh, if Schumann had only known how to handle the orchestra . . . how effectively his music could be made to sound! Such fine, noble themes, good workmanship, and yet such abominably poor orchestration."

Nor does all the fault in this Symphony lie in its instrumental presentation. The sweep and impetus, the sheer elation of the chief theme of the opening Vivace are not to be denied, but its characteristic rhythm is too insistently pursued throughout the movement and the resultant effect is that of a careless, headlong improvisation, not of a well balanced, well contrasted symphonic structure. Schumann seldom succeeded in developing his themes; he merely "worried" them, and the ineptitude of this process distresses though the theme itself, even on its thousandth reappearance still makes its appeal. To pursue these complainings, the second movement, with its subject taken from the so-called "Rheinweinlied," has a "beery" joviality, pleasing no doubt to the Teutonic mind, but savoring too strongly of the cellar. The third movement is undeniably pretty and comfortably soothing, yet the commentators wrangle as to which its principal melody resembles the more—the "Songs Without Words" of Mendelssohn, or an air from Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor." Then there is the ensuing "Cathedral Scene" over which Schumann originally wrote "In the character of the accompaniment of a solemn ceremony." Solemn this music is in a sense, but it may hardly conjure up in any vividness the picture that was in the composer's mind. Incidentally Mr. Stock has apparently revamped the scoring of this movement with exceptional thoroughness, yet as it left Schumann's hand it contains some of the most effective of his orchestral writing. Here in his treatment of the brass he seemed to feel the significance of tone-color as an end in itself and, as but rarely in his music, a thought expressed through a certain group of instruments would lose its meaning if transferred to another. For final thrust it may be added that the last movement of the Symphony has all the shortcomings and none of the virtues of the rest.

The performance yesterday was of excellent quality. All that a conductor might do for the music, short of adopting the tactics of Mr. Stock was done by Mr. Monteux. To what extent he might have clarified Schumann's opacity and smoothed over his clumsiness, while he made the most of such opportunities as the triumphant horns in the first movement, the soft coloring, the tender songfulness of the third and the sombre sonorities of the fourth. Not within memory have the opening measures of the Symphony sounded with so splendid a vigor. Here, indeed, is one of the most exhilarating pages in all symphonic music. . . . If only Schumann could have gone on as he began!

A strange accident or intentional irony in programme-making placed after the Symphony Carlos Salzédo's symphonic poem for harp and orchestra, "Enchanted Isles." In the one is to be found much music—such as it is—and but little effect; in the other there is a deal of effect and but little music. Mr. Salzédo, an amazing virtuoso of the harp, has also composed voluminously, and practically all his music has the harp in the foreground. With uncanny ingenuity he has invented many new and hitherto undreamed-of tone-colors for the instrument, and these are embodied in his compositions. But in this symphonic poem the harp part, played yesterday by the composer with his familiar skill, brought no effects in any way surprising to one acquainted with Mr. Salzédo's solo pieces. And the rest of the music—hardly more than an ingenious study in orchestral timbres, unfettered rhythms and strange harmonies, the whole paraphanalia of impressionism—seemed but a misty background against which these pluckings, pickings, pattings and poundings of the harp might be displayed. Technically this background shows adroitness aplenty, but, save in a few passages that seem born of impulse rather than of calculation, its value as music is negligible.

After such tonal moonshine the gusty opening of Mr. Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" came as a refreshing, vitalizing breath of ozone. Here is music that nearly a quarter of a century of life has left undimmed. Later in this "dramatic poem" come passages with which time has dealt less kindly—for time has a way of making clichés of even the most audacious melodic designs and harmonic progressions, and so must inevitably rob even the greatest music of a measure of its original effectiveness. No longer may Mr. Loeffler's music, as once it did, mirror almost unclouded the piteousness, the horror, the boding of Maeterlinck's "Little Drama for Marionettes." The poet's words have lost none of these things. But it is the tragedy of all composers that the expressive power of their music must gradually and inevitably wane. Stirring, moving, beautiful, charged with poetry, often noble ,always admirably made, is this "Death of Tintagiles." To hear it is still to feel an exaltation, a quickening of the spirit, to experience a response of both heart and mind. Without too much thought of Maeterlinck's play, intrinsically this "dramatic poem" is eloquent as few pieces from the land of living composers are eloquent. Only as voice to the horrors and terrors of his drama of the boy Tintagiles and the monstrous, loathsome Queen, whose pitiful prey he becomes, has Mr. Loeffler's music lost appreciably in potency and power. It might almost be better if the title Mr. Loeffler chose for his piece could now be disregarded, but since that is scarcely possible, the hearer of this music, if he be wise, will no longer seek too closely the correlation that the composer surely intended. As music of tragedy in the broader sense, "La Mort de Tintagiles" is still persuasive and compelling, but hardly as the exact musical counterpart of the particular tragedy that inspired it.

The composer, who was present yesterday and who was appropriately applauded, may alone know how fully his intentions were revealed in the performance. Yet it was possible for one not so intimately acquainted with the music to find this performance rarely eloquent. Surely it seemed that Mr. Monteux had given Mr. Loeffler all that any composer may justly ask—the chance to let his music speak unhampered for itself.

From Loeffler of "La Mort de Tintagiles" to Dvorák of the Slavonic Dances Numbers Three and One from Opus 46, is a long step. But as maker of programmes Mr. Monteux's instinct seldom fails him. His audience of yesterday had heard a fading, over-long and thick-voiced romantic symphony it had heard for nearly a quarter of an hour, the vacuities of Mr. Salzédo's symphonic poem and upon that the fervors and intensities, the occasional furies of Mr. Loeffler's drama in tones. Presumably after these experiences it would relish music that was frankly light, tuneful, colorful and, in its modest way, engaging. And this in Dvorák's Dances Mr. Monteux granted it.

W. S. S.

Cortot for Charity

THE Boston Branch of the American Friends of Musicians in France is once more bestirring itself—this time for the advantage of the Municipal School of Music at Rheims. Like the community it serves, the school is still overborne by the aftermath of the war and is in need of funds to be set firmly on its feet again. For this good end, the American Friends have arranged a concert at nine o'clock next Tuesday evening in the house of Mrs. Robert Jordan at 46, Beacon Street. Then and there Mr. Cortot, the pre-eminent Parisian pianist of these days, will play various pieces and Walter Damrosch, experienced and amusing speaker, will describe a visit that he paid last summer to the school at Rheims. So will the audience be both entertained and informed—and, doubtless, moved the more to these good works. Tickets may be had for $5 at Herrick's.

TRANS. FEB. 17.

Post Feb. 17

MASTER OF HARP WITH SYMPHONY

Loeffler's Tone Poem Arouses Great Enthusiasm

BY OLIN DOWNES

The Schumann "Rhenish symphony," a new composition by Carlos Salzedo, the harpist and composer, called "Enchanted Isles"; Charles Martin's Loeffler's symphonic poem, "Mort de Timtagile," after Maeterlinck, and two Slavonic dances of Dvorak, made the programme of the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

NEW WORLD OF SOUNDS

Mr Salzedo, a master harpist and a composer of much strange music, states in the programme book that there is no plot or poetic idea back of his composition. "The name," he says, "'Terres Enchantees,' has been preferred to any other chiefly on account of the newness of the orchestral balance, which unveils to the hearer a new world of sounds."

If a real analysis, a psychological analysis, of the individual's sense of what is called in orchestral parlance "tone color" could be scientifically made, and the reasons stated why to one man the tone of an oboe sounds green and to another blue, we would be curious to see the results of the test as applied to Mr. Salzedo. For we believe that if he didn't play the harp he would not have his special ideas of the orchestra.

Dislikes to Let Go

This harp, which Mr. Salzedo plays with an amazing dexterity and skill, to which he is bound, as one might say, by a fanatical devotion, suggests to him instrumental combinations, every one of which he is bound to attempt before he finishes composing. It seemed to us that there were several places where the composer might as well have stopped as not.

What was interesting of Mr. Salzedo's composition seemed wholly in the direction of color, but we cannot say that we experienced a shock of novelty in listening to his effects, even though they do give the solo harp unique opportunities, nor do we personally discover any particular purpose—aside from harp combinations—or reason for being, in "Enchanted Isles."

Mr. Loeffler's Poem

It may now be said that the public has fairly caught up to the Loeffler of "Mort de Tintagile." It never fails to respond to the romantic sweep and poetic mood of the work, which is as it should be. We wonder what Mr. Loeffler thinks of this work today. The use of the viola d'amore, inspired by the thought of the helpless and fated little prince, is an inspiration, and the orchestral background for that tone quality is an equally felicitous stroke of scoring. Then there is the terrifying fanfare of the trumpets, and the passages suggested, no doubt, by the thoughts of the footsteps of invisible servants of the monstrous queen, who abduct and destroy Tinagile. There is Loefflerian mood, and there is the fine wild sonority of the storm.

In places there is resort to more conventional methods than Mr. Loeffler would employ today, as in the battledoring and shuttle-cocking of thematic fragments, in one instance, in the manner of the so-called "free fantasia"—which was anything but free—of the classic symphony. With his orchestra, admirably balanced and wild and picturesque enough, we think Mr. Loeffler would now be more economical. And he might cut.

The applause which always greets this music, considered a few years ago dangerously, and by some insufferably "advanced," brought the conductor several times back to the platform, while the composer, in the audience bowed his acknowledgements. Why do we not hear more of the other works of Mr. Loeffler? The "Villanelle du diable" is a masterpiece of irony, and there is the latest orchestral work, the "Hora mystica."

Schumann's Symphony

We love Schumann's symphony. Everybody knows that Schumann was a poor hand at orchestration. We observe that whatever its defects the score did not conceal the individuality, the romantic sentiment and warm imagination of this composer. And we reflect on an additional fact, which is, that Mendelssohn, to whom Schumann humbly went for advice about his scoring, has written symphonies, of which the "Scotch" symphony is the best, and a model of refined, clear, brilliant orchestration. And yesterday—who could exchange Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony, whatever its defects, [illegible]

Glob Feb 17

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Harpist Soloist in His Own Symphonic Poem

Yesterday's Symphony concert followed established traditions with its Schumann Symphony, Loeffler Tone Poem and Dvorak "Slavonic Dances," except for the soloist, Carlos Salzedo, harpist who elected to play his own "Terres Enchantees," a symphonic poem for harp and orchestra. There have been harpists as soloists with the Boston Orchestra in the past, among them, Ada Sassoli and Alfred Holy, though at rare intervals, but never in symphonic poems of their own composition.

Mr Salzedo informed the compiler of the program notes that the name "Enchanted Isles" was chosen for this piece because "the newness of the orchestral balance unveils to the hearer a new world of sounds." He added that the chief theme in the piece was borrowed from another work of his own, an "Idyllic Poem," one of the "Poetic Studies" for harp solo.

The poetic suggestion of this piece is confined to the title. The performance proved, what was well enough known before, that Mr Salzedo excels at glissando and other trick effects on the harp. The "new orchestral balance" proved to consist of duets between Mr Salzedo at the harp and Mr Burgin's solo violin or Mr Laurent's solo flute, with occasional alarms and excursions from the percussion players. There seemed no plausible justification for the inclusion of "Terres Enchantees," on a Boston Symphony program. The time spent on it might well have been devoted to a more representative modernist composition by Stravinsky, Pizetti, Schoenberg, or Bela Bartok, none of whom write music more annoying to conservative ears than Mr Salzedo's. Mr Salzedo will be heard at Jordan Hall in recital March 6.

Schumann's "Rhenish Symphony," except for the delightful scherzo and the impressive "Cathedral Scene," is diffuse and not over interesting. It was well played. A bit more of the invaluable qualities called by the proverbial man in the street "pep" and "punch" would not have harmed Mr Monteux's interpretation of this symphony and of the two "Slavonic Dances" by Dvorak which brought the concert to a close. Suavity is a good thing in an orchestral performance, but so is energy.

The other number, Loeffler's "Death of Tintagiles," has been long familiar here as vigorously poetic music. It contains eloquent pages, but would gain by condensation. The performance lacked delicacy; it tended to become merely noisy when it ought to have been brilliant. Mr Loeffler, rather against his apparent wishes, had to rise in his place in the first balcony and bow repeatedly, though he tried to direct the applause to Mr Monteux and to Richard Burgin, who had played the viola d'amore solo.

Next week Mozart's G minor symphony, Saint-Saens' C minor piano concerto, Rossini's "Semiramide" overture and Ravel's "Spanish Caprice" are the numbers announced. Alfred Cortot will be the soloist.

Herald Feb 17

1923

15TH SYMPHONY CONCERT GIVEN

Compositions by Schumann, Salzedo, Loeffler and Dvorak on Program

HARPIST INTERPRETS HIS OWN TONE POEM

By PHILIP HALE

The 15th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The program was as follows: Schumann, Symphony No. 3 ("Rhenish"); Salzedo, "Enchanted Isles," Symphonic poem for harp and orchestra (first time in Boston; Mr. Salzedo, harpist); Loeffler, "The Death of Tintagiles" dramatic poem (after Maeterlinck)—Mr. Burgin, Viole d'Amour; Dvorak, Slavonic Dances, op. 46, Nos. 3 and 1.

Schumann's Symphony is worth playing and hearing if only for the third movement, music peculiar in mood and expression, and for the "Cathedral Scene," music that is solemnly and nobly pontifical. In these movements Schumann's remarkable ability to score in a coarse, heavy, lumpish manner, is not so apparent. The first movement is lacking in contrasts, and the finale is not impressive. As for the Scherzo, Mr. Apthorp was right when he found the chief theme to be of "a rather ponderous joviality," expressing well the sentiment of Goethe's Drinkers in Auerbach's cellar—"As 'twere five hundred hogs, we feel so cannibalic jolly." The constant repetition of this theme reminds one of a drunkard insisting at intervals on telling the same rude jest, or, what is worse, roaring a stave of a song for Meg or Moll.

Mr. Salzedo's symphonic poem, composed in 1918, was first performed at Milwaukee by the Chicago Symphony in November, 1919. There was a performance at Chicago in the same month. The composer entitled his work "Terres Enchantees," translating the title "Enchanted Isles."

Years ago Herman Melville wrote a [illegible] description of "The Enchanted [illegible] given by Span- [illegible] as Mr. Salzedo [illegible] from the harp and the other instruments.

Another enchanted isle was reigned over by Prospero, the usurper; for the rightful lord was Caliban, who said to Stephano and Trinculo

"The isle is full of noises,
Sounds and Sweet airs, that give delight and hurt not.
Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments
Will hum about mine ears."

No, this was not Mr. Salzedo's enchanted isle.

He is known as a harpist of uncommon technical ability, of rare skill in producing unusual effects from his instrument. He has written much for the harp; not content with six harps, he has achieved the feat of writing for 21 harps, wood-wind choir, female voices and percussion. Thus he has almost eclipsed the virtuoso spoken of by the western preacher: "And he played on a harp of a thousand strings: Spirit of just men made perfect."

In his "Enchanted Isles," he has evidently sought first after color. He has thus gained strange, sometimes beautiful effects, but, men and brethren, are splashes of color, delicate tints and demi-tints all that we have a right to expect in an orchestral work for a symphony concert? This symphonic poem starts from nowhere and finally after long ramblings arrives there. There is tinkling of the harp, there are sweepings up and down, but the musical ideas have little significance; there is no body, no substance. Experiments in color. The audience was entertained; the composer-virtuoso was recalled.

A gentleman of ancient Greece once humbly apologized for having a pompous funeral for his very small child. If one should ask, why this elaborate musical composition to portray the death of little Tintagiles, the purport of Maeterlinck's drama is misunderstood. Not without reason did he call it a play for marionettes, so that the symbolism might be the plainer and the more impressive. Tintagiles was a child, but we are all children when we know that the "hidden, noiseless monster" is waiting for us, nor do the assurances of Sir Conan Doyle, Sir Oliver Lodge and others wholly dispel the fear that has haunted mankind through the centuries. Rightly, then did Mr. Loeffler give dramatic intensity to his symphonic poem, with the superb introduction depicting the wild night and the raging storm; the suggestion of the old scarred warrior, no longer relying on his sword; with the voice of the child wailing in fright; with the whisperers outside the door guarded in vain. After hearing this firmly-knit, eloquently expressive music, played con amore by the orchestra, we must associate Mr. Loeffler with Maeterlinck as, when "Pelleas and Melisande" is mentioned, the Belgian's name is inseparably linked with that of Debussy.

Here the concert might have ended with memorable music in one's ears and mind. Dvorak's Slavonic dances, originally for pianoforte (four hands), brought him fame. Has his Slavonic Rhapsody or his once brilliant Scherzo Capriccio aged with time?

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program for next week comprises Rossini's overture to "Semiramide," Mozart's G minor symphony, Ravel's Spanish Rhapsody and Saint-Saen's piano concerto, C minor, No. 4, to be played by Mr. Cortot.

TELEGRAM-FEB. 17

Brard to Play at Extra Symphony Concert Monday

The third Monday evening concert of the extra series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to be given in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening at 8:15 with Magdeleine Brard, the young French pianist, appearing as soloist. Miss Brard revealed extraordinary talent in childhood, entering the Paris Conservatory at 11 and taking the first prize two years later and the prize of honor in 1917.

She studied with Cortot and also coached with Saint-Saens. She appeared as a prodigy in performances with the Colonne, Lamoureux and other orchestras in Paris and other cities, and first came to America in 1918, when still a mere child, astounding her audiences by the brilliance of her playing.

Those who heard Sigrid Onegin, the Metropolitan's other recent great acquisition, at her Boston debut concert recently are doubtless already warning their friends not to miss the Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund concert, March 4, at which she will sing in Wagner excerpts. Charles Bennett is to sing Wotan in "Wotan's Farewell" and the "Magic Fire Music" from "Die Walkuere" at this concert. The other numbers are not announced. Onegin is the great contralto of this generation, vocally speaking, in the opinion of many reviewers, including the writer.

GLOBE-FEB. 18.

LIKE NOTHING ELSE

We doubt if such a thing could be done [illegible] in any other way. Music, [illegible] is to be a totally different development from what it has been in [illegible]. It will be entirely different, first of all, for the reason that there is [illegible] American folk-song. There are [illegible] of folk-songs from all the races [illegible] the sun floating about, but we [illegible] no music at all of the kind that appears in the childhood of a race. [illegible] childhood can never be ours. When we came here we were the product of old peoples. We were born in a modern age. No amount of harking back to folk-songs will extinguish that fact and all it implies.

The foundations of a real American music, then, cannot be based on the past, any more than they can be written as if we did not hear Europe. We are wholly of today, and our nationalism is composite. It is only from our modernity and our compositeness that a genuine American music can spring. And it is the records which take cognizance of this, which go everywhere and echo everything, native and foreign, "jazz" and symphony, monologue and burlesque, and lay the kind of a foundation we must have. They make music a part of the life of the busiest and most Philistine American. With the radio they send it across vast stretches of unpopulated territory and to every class and condition of people. They are the artistically democratizing contraption which the Yankee, with his infernal ingenuity, has invented, in response to the times and the need of his soul. What the devil will evolve from his artistic consciousness in the future is known to no man, but the evolution is proceeding, with Thomas Edison the deus machina of the strange business.

As we listened to Mr. Carlos Salzedo, [illegible] and composer, playing his piece,

"'Tis Mine Own"

We wondered as we listened to the splendid sonorities of Mr. Loeffler's orchestra in "Le Mort de Tintagiles" last Friday what Mr. Loeffler thinks of this, a comparatively early work, today. The Loeffler of today is the same man yet a different one from the Loeffler of the period which saw the creation of "Le Morta." The Loeffler of today might be inclined to do some polishing and finishing off, some revision here, some re-instrumentation, and possibly shortening there. But doubtless Mr. Loeffler is wiser. Doubless he says what every man who has sincerely wrought in his art can say when he looks back on his creative struggles. He can say to himself: "I could do it better today. But that is mine. That was what I felt and dreamed and made years ago Let it stand"—and turn to a new composition. It is as unprofitable for an artist as for Lot's wife to look back the way he has come. The path of the creative spirit is ever forward.

Brard With Orchestra

The third Monday evening concert of the extra series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to be given in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening at 8:15, with Magdeleine Brard, the celebrated young French pianist, appearing as soloist. Miss Brard revealed extraordinary talent in childhood, entering the Paris Conservaory at 11, and taking the first prize two years later and the prize of honor in 1917. She studied with Cortot and also coached with Saint-Saens himself. She appeared as a prodigy in performances with the Colonne, Lamoureux and other orchestras in Paris and other cities, and first came to America in 1918, when still a mere child, astounding her audiences by the brilliance of her playing. Miss Brard will also play with the orchestra in the concerto by Grieg.

Mr. Monteux will conduct as the principal number on the programme the great "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven, and will close the concert with Enesco's Rumanian Rhapsody, based upon characteristic Rumanian folk themes.

POST-FEB. 18.

MONDAY SYMPHONY

The third Monday Symphony concert is to be given in Symphony Hall tomorrow with Magdeleine Brard, celebrated young French pianist, as soloist. She will play with the orchestra in the concerto by Grieg. Pierre Monteux will conduct Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody."

PENSION FUND SOLOIST

Sigrid Onegin, Swedish contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, whose recent debut in Boston proved one of the big events of the season, will sing with the Symphony Orchestra at its pension fund concert on Sunday, March 4. Pierre Monteux will give a Wagnerian program with Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkure" as the climax, Charles H. Bennett singing the part of Wotan.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Alfred Cortot, French pianist, will appear as soloist at the Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, playing the fourth concerto of Saint-Saens. Rossini's "Semiramide" overture, Mozart's Symphony in G minor and the Spanish Rhapsody by Maurice Ravel are on the program.

ADVTSR-FEB. 18.

GIRL PIANISTE IS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

By ZOE FABER.

A little slip of a girl in silver from head to foot was soloist last night with the Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Monteux in the third of the extra series of Monday evening concerts.

Mlle. Magdeleine Brard played the Grieg Concerto in A minor. She is young indeed to have attained the place she has secured for herself. Her playing shows much intelligent study and the result it has brought to a born musician.

There is a finesse in her touch, now light as a wind-blown feather, now with deep ringing resonance in the sustaining bass. She is interesting and shows much promise for a big pianiste.

The "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven opened the program, and the reading was a fine one, which the audience, practically a capacity house, was quick to appreciate and commend. Mr. Monteux acknowledged the applause by calling his men to their feet.

The Roumanian Rhapsody in A major of Enesco (who recently appeared as soloist and also composer with the symphony) was the closing number. It is full of color, vivid in rhythm and theme and the audience found it a happy selection.

Surely, Mr. Monteux should feel happy over the very evident pleasure that a great number of people derive from these concerts—people, who for the most part, are unable to attend the regular concerts.

AMER. FEB. 20.

BRARD SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Young French Pianist Gives Fin Performance of Grieg Concerto

Magdeleine Brard, the young French pianist first heard here two years ago as soloist at a Symphony concert for the pension fund, gave a brilliant performance of the Grieg concerto last night at the third of the extra Symphony concerts. A very large audience applauded her with marked cordiality. Mr Monteux and the orchestra also received many plaudits after Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, and again at the end of the program following a vigorously romantic interpretation of Enesco's "Rumanian Rhapsody" in A major.

Miss Brard is still in her 'teens, yet her playing is not the mechanically efficient work of the usual soulless infant prodigy who causes the groundlings to gape and the judicious to grieve. On the contrary, her interpretation showed subtle and mature mucianship.

In the main theme of the first movement her phrasing and her subtle variations of rhythm and accent showed extraordinary artistry. Anybody with the requisite degree of muscular control can learn to play like a pianola, but it takes imagination to really render music as the composer meant it. The Grieg concerto, though agreeable enough in its rather sentimental way, is not the best music Miss Brard might well attempt.

Mr Monteux took the "Eroica" symphony as all in the day's work, not as an almost unexampled revelation of power and glory. He did not heed many of Beethoven's less crucial directions about crescendos, sforzandos, staccatos, and other fine points of interpretation.

To Enesco's effective but rather superficial pot-pourri of Rumanian themes, monotonously in the key of A major, Mr Monteux brought a kindling imagination. The piece was played as brilliantly as it has been in years, and obviously greatly pleased the audience. Yet one wondered whether a "American Rhapsody," made up say of "Yankee Doodle," "The Old Oaken Bucket" and "Dixie' would not have had quite as much musical value and considerably more popular entertainment in it. There are plenty of American composers as able to concoct such a piece as Enesco's to concoct "Rumanian Rhapsodies."

The fourth concert of this series will be given March 26, with Mme Ferrabini as soloist.

GLOBE-FEB. 26.

SYMPHONY IN EXTRA CONCERT

Mlle. Brard Soloist at Third Monday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the third of the Monday evening concerts last night. Pierre Monteux conducted. Magdeleine Brard, French pianist, recently "prodigy," was the assisting artist in Grieg's A-minor concerto. The other two pieces on the programme were Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Enesco's Rumanian Rhapsody in A.

INSPIRED BY "EROICA"

It was a good programme, and on the whole the concert was more successful than the previous two of the series.

There was good reason for the enthusiasm. First there was a good performance of the great "Eroica." There have been better performances and worse, but all this music needs is a first-rate orchestra—which the Boston Orchestra is at its worst—and a passable performance; given these and the piece sweeps all before it. It is amazing how this work, which is absolutely sexless, produces such a powerful emotional reaction. On every rehearing one simply re-lives Beethoven's experiences and thoughts. M. Monteux was eloquent in many of the pages.

Mlle. Brard's Playing

In the concerto Mlle. Brard gave renewed evidence of her consummate virtuosity. The piece is a pleasing one, not too often heard hereabouts and it can afford to be heard more often. The most remarkable characteristic of the concerto is that it is written almost as the ideal concerto should be written—over-emphasis neither of the solo-instrument, nor of the orchestral portion. The piece sounds well—there is never a time when the orchestra drowns out the piano.

This was so even last night when Mlle. Brard displayed a none too powerful touch. Otherwise she was technically finished; and she played with the virtuoso abandon. The applause for this piece—as for the Symphony when the conductor was recalled over and over until he motioned to his orchestra to rise—was very enthusiastic.

The Rumanian Rhapsody was a typical closing of the concert. Hitherto M. Monteux has closed with such a piece (for example, Chabrier's "Espana") and in it he always puts the limit of his vitality with the result that the audience is simply carried away with the orchestra. In music of the dance, of marked rhythm, M. Monteux always excels.

POST-FEB. 20.

GIVES ITS THIRD EXTRA CONCERT

Boston Symphony Plays Beethoven's "Eroica"—Mme. Brard Is Soloist

PLEASES WITH GRIEG CONCERTO FOR PIANO

For the third Symphony concert of the extra series, in Symphony Hall last night, the soloist was Magdeleine Brard, pianist, and Mr. Monteux had arranged this program: Beethoven, "Eroica," symphony No. 3; Grieg, concerto for pianoforte; Enesco, "Roumanian Rhapsody in A-major," Op. 11, No. 1.

At the risk of heresy, one question: Why should not Beethoven symphonies be played today with judicious cuts? For even so radical a departure from the accepted way there is precedent enough. Bach's passion music is rarely sung entire; "Don Giovanni" is always cut; nearly always, except at festivals, the Ring is. Beethoven sonatas themselves, for the matter of that, have been played by bold pianists with a movement or two left out—and the skies have not fallen. What harm could come from trying an experiment with one of the symphonies?

For some of the symphonies, in very truth, and those long held the greatest, have suffered the fate of most great music—they have lost their compelling emotional force. Was there man or woman last night in Symphony hall, unless it be a person mighty well along in years, who could honestly testify to being emotionally roused by the heroic character of Beethoven's symphony? Such persons were certainly few, or else curiously undemonstrative, for the first movement received but faint applause. The march got little more, whereas the scherzo and the finale pleased so heartily that the orchestra had to rise to acknowledge the acclaim.

Cannot an inference be drawn? The high spirits of the finale and the scherzo live today; hence audiences respond. But for most people today the overwhelming emotion under which Beethoven wrote the first two movements has vanished; people in the mass no longer respond—unless a conductor of extraordinary power can restore to the music its lost potency.

The beauty, of course, remains, since beauty is all but eternal. Beauty though, even of the highest order, if lacking in vitality, cannot hold the attention too long, it palls. And vitality means emotional power. To make once more absorbing than this music of supreme beauty, would it not be wise to shorten it by cutting away much of the working out with its constant repetitions? A single experiment at all events could do no harm.

It would be a pleasure as well to hear the Grieg concerto freed of the interruption of the cadenza. Mme. Brard played this delightful music last night in the vein of [illegible] as back in the dark ages he showed he wanted it played—to be more exact, in the late nineties—like a romantic improvisation, without one touch of the dramatic till very near the end. Though the dramatic Mme. Brard could scarcely attain all else she played charmingly, with a shapely design underlying her apparent extempore way. In just the right spirit the orchestra accompanied her, beautifully indeed. Mme. Brard was warmly applauded by a very large audience.

The fourth concert will be given on Monday evening, March 26. The soloist will be Mme. Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, soprano.

R. R. G.

HERALD. FEB. 20.

WHEN the impending Mr. Casella plays with the Symphony Orchestra in Cambridge on Thursday evening, March 1, he will be heard as pianist only—in Mozart's Concerto in D minor. In Boston, with the Symphony Orchestra on March 2 and 3, he will be more his manifold self—pianist in his own version for orchestra of Albeniz's "Spanish Rhapsody"; conductor and composer in his arrangement for orchestra of "Puppazzi," originally piano pieces for marionettes; and conductor and composer again in his rhapsody, "Italia." At last that vivid and vigorous music is to pass, as it should have done long since, from "The Pops" to the Symphony Concerts.

In Cambridge, Chausson's Symphony, the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and the Overture to "Tannhäuser" will round out the programme of the concert aforesaid. In Boston Glazunov's Fourth Symphony and Mendelssohn's Overture, "Fingal's Cave," will preface Mr. Casella's numbers.

TRANS. FEB. 23.

CORTOT SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Music by Mozart, Rossini, Saint-Saens, Ravel

Globe Feb 24

Alfred Cortot, soloist at yesterday's Symphony concert, wisely selected an unhackneyed concerto, the one in C minor, opus 44, of Saint-Saens, last played at these concerts by Paderewski in 1909. This music is deftly made, though the system of interlocking themes seemed as usual more ingenious than impressive. There is one good tune in the concerto, and much not too obvious conventional padding.

Mr Cortot gave a good routine performance, a bit more heavy-handed and lacking in finesse than the music demands. If there was no sublimity, no plumbing of depths in his work, the fault lay at least partially with the composer, who always kept both feet securely if daintily planted on Parisian pavements. The audience remained at the end to recall the pianist twice.

Mr Monteux began the program with Rossini's overture to his forgotten opera "Semiramide." One wished that the overture had remained in oblivion. It is cheerfully vulgar music, with not quite enough tune to it to belong in the hand-organ repertory. The performance was excellent, lively and sentimental by turns.

The most genuine applause of the afternoon burst out after the slow movement in Mozart's G minor symphony, a proof that Mozart has not lost his hold on the affection of the public, despite neglect and worse. Mr Monteux took the first allegro too fast. It is really an elegant allegretto, as Dr Muck's exquisite version of it proved to Boston audiences.

Yesterday this symphony, except for the simple, almost clumsy minuet, was merely given the proverbial "lick and a promise." It is easy enough to play the notes in Mozart's music, but very difficult to do it justice. Each note from every player must receive exactly the right emphasis, the phrasing must be clean cut, the orchestral euphony perfect. Until the Boston orchestra can again play Mozart as it once did, its restoration, despite great and commendable progress, will be incomplete.

Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody" fared far better than Mozart's symphony at the hands of conductor and players. It, too, is delicate, highly wrought music, despite its superficial vigor and color. Enough of Ravel's great cunning was appreciated by the performers to make their interpretation polished as well as brilliant.

Next week, Alfredo Casella, the noted Italian composer, conductor and pianist, will appear as soloist in all three capacities. He will play his arrangement for piano and orchestra of Albeniz' "Spanish Rhapsody," and conduct his own "Puppazzetti" and "Italia." The program yesterday announced Tchaikovsky's G major Suite as the other number for next week, but Glazunov Symphony will be substituted if press advance notices are reliable.

SYMPHONY IS PUT SECOND ON PROGRAM

By ZOE FABER.

Instead of placing the symphony at the beginning of his program as has been the custom, Mr. Monteux placed it second on the list following the Overture to "Semiramide" (Rossini). The new position is an improvement, as there is less disturbance during the course of the symphony as late comers straggle in. It was the Mozart in G minor and the audience enjoyed it immensely, particularly the Menuetto.

M. Alfred Cortot was soloist, playing the Saint-Saens Concerto in C minor. M. Cortot is an exceptional pianist. He did all [illegible] with the concerto—but that leaves much to be desired (from M. Saint-Saens, not M. Cortot).

The Ravel Spanish Rhapsody was the most brilliant spot of the afternoon.

AMER. FEB. 24

CORTOT AT PIANO WITH SYMPHONY

French Virtuoso Is Heard in Saint Saens' Concerto

Alfred Cortot, the distinguished French pianist, was the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, at the concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Cortot's vehicle was the concerto in C minor of Saint-Saens, a work which called out all the admirable qualities of this great virtuoso.

CONTRAST ON LIST

The orchestral pieces were Rossini's overture to "Semiramide," the Mozart G minor symphony, and the Spanish Rhapsody of Ravel. It was rather an extraordinary juxtaposition of compositions which had little relation to each other in form of style, but this very contrast was doubtless piquant to the audience.

And after all, although Rossini's overture is old, the slow introduction contains one of his loveliest melodies in the theme for the horns, and the allegro has the Rossinian gayety and sparkle which intoxicated the audiences of his day and found the audience of yesterday, more than a hundred years later, not unresponsive.

From Rossini to the purest classicism of Mozart's symphony was a delightful transition, and under Mr. Monteux the Boston Symphony, restored to its former technical finish and tonal beauty, is an instrument of instruments to do justice to this inspired, perfect masterpiece.

Finally came Ravel's Rhapsody, a work of singular imagination and impressionism. Here is a Spain, partly realistic, partly very fantastical. Here are black shadows, monstrous vague shapes, that recall moods which might be excited by pictures of Goya, and side by side with strange and macabre effects are hard, crocking colors that rightly or wrongly one associates with the most picturesque, the most sad, the most exotic of lands. In this music Mr. Monteux is particularly versed and he made the most of an extraordinary composition.

POST-FEB. 24.

Herald Feb 24

1923

16TH SYMPHONY CONCERT GIVEN

Rossini's Overture to "Semiramide" Brilliant Feature of Program

CORTOT'S WORK AT PIANO PLEASING

By PHILIP HALE

The 16th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The program was as follows: Rossini, Overture to "Semiramide"; Mozart, Symphony in G minor; Ravel, Spanish Rhapsody; Saint-Saens, Concerto, C minor, No. 4, for piano (Alfred Cortot, pianist).

What? Rossini's Overture to "Semiramide" on a Symphony program? Yes, and it was brilliantly played and the audience enjoyed it hugely, calling out Mr. Monteux several times. The opera was produced at Venice 100 years ago this month. It did not please the Venetians, nor did it please the Parisians when it was first performed in Paris the next year, but later it grew in favor. Some found the music abounding in "Assyrian coloring." Others found it ravishingly beautiful; that one sublime, and so on through the gamut of eulogy.

In Boston the opera is associated with the names of Adelina Patti and Mme. [illegible] Melba has [illegible]

LIKE NOTHING ELSE

We doubt if such a thing could be done here in any other way. Music, with us, is to be a totally different development from what it has been in Europe. It will be entirely different, first of all, for the reason that there is no real American folk-song. There are scraps of folk-songs from all the races under the sun floating about, but we have no music at all of the kind that appears in the childhood of a race. That childhood can never be ours. When we came here we were the product of old peoples. We were born in a modern age. No amount of harking back to folk-songs will extinguish that fact and all it implies.

The foundations of a real American music, then, cannot be based on the past, any more than they can be written as if we did not hear Europe. We are wholly of today, and our nationalism is composite. It is only from our modernity and our compositeness that a genuine American music can spring. And it is the records which take cognizance of this, which go everywhere and echo everything, native and foreign, "jazz" and symphony, monologue and burlesque, and lay the kind of a foundation we must have. They make music a part of the life of the busiest and most Philistine American. With the radio they send it across vast stretches of unpopulated territory and to every class and condition of people. They are the artistically democratizing contraption which the Yankee, with his infernal ingenuity, has invented, in response to the times and the need of his soul. What the devil will evolve from his artistic consciousness in the future is known to no man, but the evolution is proceeding, with Thomas Edison the deus machina of the strange business.

As we listened to Mr. Carlos Salzedo, harpist and composer, playing his piece, "'Tis Mine Own"

We wondered as we listened to the splendid sonorities of Mr. Loeffler's orchestra in "Le Mort de Tintagiles" last Friday what Mr. Loeffler thinks of this, a comparatively early work, today. The Loeffler of today is the same man yet a different one from the Loeffler of the period which saw the creation of "Le Morta." The Loeffler of today might be inclined to do some polishing and finishing off, some revision here, some re-instrumentation, and possibly shortening there. But doubtless Mr. Loeffler is wiser. Doubless he says what every man who has sincerely wrought in his art can say when he looks back on his creative struggles. He can say to himself: "I could do it better today. But that is mine. That was what I felt and dreamed and made years ago. Let it stand"—and turn to a new composition. It is as unprofitable for an artist as for Lot's wife to look back the way he has come. The path of the creative spirit is ever forward.

Brard With Orchestra

The third Monday evening concert of the extra series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to be given in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening at 8:15, with Magdeleine Brard, the celebrated young French pianist, appearing as soloist. Miss Brard revealed extraordinary talent in childhood, entering the Paris Conservaory at 11, and taking the first prize two years later and the prize of honor in 1917. She studied with Cortot and also coached with Saint-Saens himself. She appeared as a prodigy in performances with the Colonne, Lamoureux and other orchestras in Paris and other cities, and first came to America in 1918, when still a mere child, astounding her audiences by the brilliance of her playing. Miss Brard will also play with the orchestra in the concerto by Grieg.

Mr. Monteux will conduct as the principal number on the programme the great "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven, and will close the concert with Enesco's Rumanian Rhapsody, based upon characteristic Rumanian folk themes.

POST-FEB.18.

MONDAY SYMPHONY

The third Monday Symphony concert is to be given in Symphony Hall tomorrow with Magdeleine Brard, celebrated young French pianist, as soloist. She will play with the orchestra in the concerto by Grieg. Pierre Monteux will conduct Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody."

PENSION FUND SOLOIST

Sigrid Onegin, Swedish contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, whose recent debut in Boston proved one of the big events of the season, will sing with the Symphony Orchestra at its pension fund concert on Sunday, March 4. Pierre Monteux will give a Wagnerian program with Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music from "Die Walkure" as the climax, Charles H. Bennett singing the part of Wotan.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Alfred Cortot, French pianist, will appear as soloist at the Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, playing the fourth concerto of Saint-Saens. Rossini's "Semiramide" overture, Mozart's Symphony in G minor and the Spanish Rhapsody by Maurice Ravel are the program.

ADVTSR-FEB.18.

GIRL PIANISTE IS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

By ZOE FABER.

A little slip of a girl in silver from head to foot was soloist last night with the Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Monteux in the third of the extra series of Monday evening concerts.

Mlle. Magdeleine Brard played the Grieg Concerto in A minor. She is young indeed to have attained the place she has secured for herself. Her playing shows much intelligent study and the result it has brought to a born musician.

There is a finesse in her touch, now light as a wind-blown feather, now with deep ringing resonance in the sustaining bass. She is interesting and shows much promise for a big pianiste.

The "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven opened the program, and the reading was a fine one, which the audience, practically a capacity house, was quick to appreciate and commend. Mr. Monteux acknowledged the applause by calling his men to their feet.

The Roumanian Rhapsody in A major of Enesco (who recently appeared as soloist and also composer with the symphony) was the closing number. It is full of color, vivid in rhythm and theme and the audience found it a happy selection.

Surely, Mr. Monteux should feel happy over the very evident pleasure that a great number of people derive from these concerts—people, who for the most part, are unable to attend the regular concerts.

AMER. FEB.20.

BRARD SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Young French Pianist Gives Fin Performance of Grieg Concerto

Magdeleine Brard, the young French pianist first heard here two years ago as soloist at a Symphony concert for the pension fund, gave a brilliant performance of the Grieg concerto last night at the third of the extra Symphony concerts. A very large audience applauded her with marked cordiality. Mr Monteux and the orchestra also received many plaudits after Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, and again at the end of the program following a vigorously romantic interpretation of Enesco's "Rumanian Rhapsody" in A major.

Miss Brard is still in her 'teens, yet her playing is not the mechanically efficient work of the usual soulless infant prodigy who causes the groundlings to gape and the judicious to grieve. On the contrary, her interpretation showed subtle and mature mucianship.

In the main theme of the first movement her phrasing and her subtle variations of rhythm and accent showed extraordinary artistry. Anybody with the requisite degree of muscular control can learn to play like a pianola, but it takes imagination to really render music as the composer meant it. The Grieg concerto, though agreeable enough in its rather sentimental way, is not the best music Miss Brard might well attempt.

Mr Monteux took the "Eroica" symphony as all in the day's work, not as an almost unexampled revelation of power and glory. He did not heed many of Beethoven's less crucial directions about crescendos, sforzandos, staccatos, and other fine points of interpretation.

To Enesco's effective but rather superficial pot-pourri of Rumanian themes, monotonously in the key of A major, Mr Monteux brought a kindling imagination. The piece was played as brilliantly as it has been in years, and obviously greatly pleased the audience. Yet one wondered whether a "American Rhapsody," made up say of "Yankee Doodle," "The Old Oaken Bucket" and "Dixie' would not have had quite as much musical value and considerably more popular entertainment in it. There are plenty of American composers as able to concoct such a piece as Enesco's to concoct "Rumanian Rhapsodies."

The fourth concert of this series will be given March 26, with Mme Ferrabini as soloist.

GLOBE-FEB 26.

SYMPHONY IN EXTRA CONCERT

Mlle. Brard Soloist at Third Monday Affair

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the third of the Monday evening concerts last night. Pierre Monteux conducted. Magdeleine Brard, French pianist, recently "prodigy," was the assisting artist in Grieg's A-minor concerto. The other two pieces on the programme were Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Enesco's Rumanian Rhapsody in A.

INSPIRED BY "EROICA"

It was a good programme, and on the whole the concert was more successful than the previous two of the series.

There was good reason for the enthusiasm. First there was a good performance of the great "Eroica." There have been better performances and worse, but all this music needs is a first-rate orchestra—which the Boston Orchestra is at its worst—and a passable performance; given these and the piece sweeps all before it. It is amazing how this work, which is absolutely sexless, produces such a powerful emotional reaction. On every rehearing one simply re-lives Beethoven's experiences and thoughts. M. Monteux was eloquent in many of the pages.

Mlle. Brard's Playing

In the concerto Mlle. Brard gave renewed evidence of her consummate virtuosity. The piece is a pleasing one, not too often heard hereabouts and it can afford to be heard more often. The most remarkable characteristic of the concerto is that it is written almost as the ideal concerto should be written—over-emphasis neither of the solo-instrument, nor of the orchestral portion. The piece sounds well—there is never a time when the orchestra drowns out the piano.

This was so even last night when Mlle. Brard displayed a none too powerful touch. Otherwise she was technically finished; and she played with the virtuoso abandon. The applause for this piece—as for the Symphony when the conductor was recalled over and over until he motioned to his orchestra to rise—was very enthusiastic.

The Rumanian Rhapsody was a typical closing of the concert. Hitherto M. Monteux has closed with such a piece (for example, Chabrier's "Espana") and in it he always puts the limit of his vitality with the result that the audience is simply carried away with the orchestra. In music of the dance, of marked rhythm, M. Monteux always excels.

POST-FEB.20

GIVES ITS THIRD EXTRA CONCERT

Boston Symphony Plays Beethoven's "Eroica"—Mme. Brard Is Soloist

PLEASES WITH GRIEG CONCERTO FOR PIANO

For the third Symphony concert of the extra series, in Symphony Hall last night, the soloist was Magdeleine Brard, pianist, and Mr. Monteux had arranged this program: Beethoven, "Eroica," symphony No. 3; Grieg, concerto for pianoforte; Enesco, "Roumanian Rhapsody in A-major," Op. 11, No. 1.

At the risk of heresy, one question: Why should not Beethoven symphonies be played today with judicious cuts? For even so radical a departure from the accepted way there is precedent enough. Bach's passion music is rarely sung entire; "Don Giovanni" is always out; nearly always, except at festivals, the Ring is. Beethoven sonatas themselves, for the matter of that, have been played by bold pianists with a movement or two left out—and the skies have not fallen. What harm could come from trying an experiment with one of the symphonies?

For some of the symphonies, in very truth, and those long held the greatest, have suffered the fate of most great music—they have lost their compelling emotional force. Was there man or woman last night in Symphony hall, unless it be a person mighty well along in years, who could honestly testify to being emotionally roused by the heroic character of Beethoven's symphony? Such persons were certainly few, or else curiously undemonstrative, for the first movement received but faint applause. The march got little more, whereas the scherzo and the finale pleased so heartily that the orchestra had to rise to acknowledge the acclaim.

Cannot an inference be drawn? The high spirits of the finale and the scherzo live today; hence audiences respond. But for most people today the overwhelming emotion under which Beethoven wrote the first two movements has vanished; people in the mass no longer respond—unless a conductor of extraordinary power can restore to the music its lost potency.

The beauty, of course, remains, since beauty is all but eternal. Beauty though, even of the highest order, if lacking in vitality, cannot hold the attention too long, it palls. And vitality means emotional power. To make once more absorbing then this music of supreme beauty, would it not be wise to shorten it by cutting away much of the working out with its constant repetitions? A single experiment at all events could do no harm.

It would be a pleasure as well to hear the Grieg concerto freed of the interruption of the cadenza. Mme. Brard played this delightful music last night in the vein of Grieg himself, as back in the dark ages he showed he wanted it played—to be more exact, in the late nineties—like a romantic improvisation, without one touch of the dramatic till very near the end. Though the dramatic Mme. Brard could scarcely attain all else she played charmingly, with a shapely design underlying her apparent extempore way. In just the right spirit the orchestra accompanied her, beautifully indeed. Mme. Brard was warmly applauded by a very large audience.

The fourth concert will be given on Monday evening, March 26. The soloist will be Mme. Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, soprano.

R. R. G.

HERALD: FEB.20.

WHEN the impending Mr. Casella plays with the Symphony Orchestra in Cambridge on Thursday evening March 1, he will be heard as pianist only—in Mozart's Concerto in D minor. In Boston, with the Symphony Orchestra on March 2 and 3, he will be more his manifold self—pianist in his own version for orchestra of Albeniz's "Spanish Rhapsody"; conductor and composer in his arrangement for orchestra of "Puppazzi," originally piano pieces for marionettes; and conductor and composer again in his rhapsody, "Italia." At last that vivid and vigorous music is to pass, as it should have done long since, from "The Pops" to the Symphony Concerts.

In Cambridge, Chausson's Symphony, the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and the Overture to "Tannhäuser" will round out the programme of the concert aforesaid. In Boston Glazunov's Fourth Symphony and Mendelssohn's Overture, "Fingal's Cave," will preface Mr. Casella's numbers.

TRANS. FEB.23.

CORTOT SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Music by Mozart, Rossini, Saint-Saens, Ravel

Globe Feb 24

Alfred Cortot, soloist at yesterday's Symphony concert, wisely selected an unhackneyed concerto, the one in C minor, opus 44, of Saint-Saens, last played at these concerts by Paderewski, in 1909. This music is deftly made, though the system of interlocking themes seemed as usual more ingenious than impressive. There is one good tune in the concerto, and much not too obvious conventional padding.

Mr Cortot gave a good routine performance, a bit more heavy-handed and lacking in finesse than the music demands. If there was no sublimity, no plumbing of depths in his work, the fault lay at least partially with the composer, who always kept both feet securely if daintily planted on Parisian pavements. The audience remained at the end to recall the pianist twice.

Mr Monteux began the program with Rossini's overture to his forgotten opera "Semiramide." One wished that the overture had remained in oblivion. It is cheerfully vulgar music, with not quite enough tune to it to belong in the hand-organ repertory. The performance was excellent, lively and sentimental by turns.

The most genuine applause of the afternoon burst out after the slow movement in Mozart's G minor symphony, a proof that Mozart has not lost his hold on the affection of the public, despite neglect and worse. Mr Monteux took the first allegro too fast. It is really an elegant allegretto, as Dr Muck's exquisite version of it proved to Boston audiences.

Yesterday this symphony, except for the simple, almost clumsy minuet, was merely given the proverbial "lick and a promise." It is easy enough to play the notes in Mozart's music, but very difficult to do it justice. Each note from every player must receive exactly the right emphasis, the phrasing must be clean cut, the orchestral euphony perfect. Until the Boston orchestra can again play Mozart as it once did, its restoration, despite great and commendable progress, will be incomplete.

Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody" fared far better than Mozart's symphony at the hands of conductor and players. It, too, is delicate, highly wrought music, despite its superficial vigor and color. Enough of Ravel's great cunning was appreciated by the performers to make their interpretation polished as well as brilliant.

Next week, Alfredo Casella, the noted Italian composer, conductor and pianist, will appear as soloist in all three capacities. He will play his arrangement for piano and orchestra of Albeniz' "Spanish Rhapsody," and conduct his own "Puppazzetti" and "Italia." The program yesterday announced Tchaikovsky's G major Suite as the other number for next week, but Glazunov Symphony will be substituted if press advance notices are reliable.

SYMPHONY IS PUT SECOND ON PROGRAM

By ZOE FABER.

Instead of placing the symphony at the beginning of his program as has been the custom, Mr. Monteux placed it second on the list following the Overture to "Semiramide" (Rossini). The new position is an improvement, as there is less disturbance during the course of the symphony as late comers straggle in. It was the Mozart in G minor and the audience enjoyed it immensely, particularly the Menuetto.

M. Alfred Cortot was soloist, playing the Saint-Saens Concerto in C minor. M. Cortot is an exceptional pianist. He did all that could be done with this concerto—but that leaves much to be desired (from M. Saint-Saens, not M. Cortot).

The Ravel Spanish Rhapsody was the most brilliant spot of the afternoon.

AMER. FEB.24

CORTOT AT PIANO WITH SYMPHONY

French Virtuoso Is Heard in Saint Saens' Concerto

Alfred Cortot, the distinguished French pianist, was the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, at the concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Cortot's vehicle was the concerto in C minor of Saint-Saens, a work which called out all the admirable qualities of this great virtuoso.

CONTRAST ON LIST

The orchestral pieces were Rossini's overture to "Semiramide," the Mozart G minor symphony, and the Spanish Rhapsody of Ravel. It was rather an extraordinary juxtaposition of compositions which had little relation to each other in form of style, but this very contrast was doubtless piquant to the audience.

And after all, although Rossini's overture is old, the slow introduction contains one of his loveliest melodies in the theme for the horns, and the allegro has the Rossinian gayety and sparkle which intoxicated the audiences of his day and found the audience of yesterday, more than a hundred years later, not unresponsive.

From Rossini to the purest classicism of Mozart's symphony was a delightful transition, and under Mr. Monteux the Boston Symphony, restored to its former technical finish and tonal beauty, is an instrument of instruments to do justice to this inspired, perfect masterpiece.

Finally came Ravel's Rhapsody, a work of singular imagination and impressionism. Here is a Spain, partly realistic, partly very fantastical. Here are black shadows, monstrous vague shapes, that recall moods which might be excited by pictures of Goya, and side by side with strange and macabre effects are hard, crocking colors that rightly or wrongly one associates with the most picturesque, the most sad, the most exotic of lands. In this music Mr. Monteux is particularly versed and he made the most of an extraordinary composition.

POST-F

Herald Feb 24

1923

16TH SYMPHONY CONCERT GIVEN

Rossini's Overture to "Semiramide" Brilliant Feature of Program

CORTOT'S WORK AT PIANO PLEASING

By PHILIP HALE

The 16th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The program was as follows: Rossini, Overture to "Semiramide"; Mozart, Symphony in G minor; Ravel, Spanish Rhapsody; Saint-Saens, Concerto, C minor, No. 4, for piano (Alfred Cortot, pianist).

What? Rossini's Overture to "Semiramide" on a Symphony program? Yes, and it was brilliantly played and the audience enjoyed it hugely, calling out Mr. Monteux several times. The opera was produced at Venice 100 years ago this month. It did not please the Venetians, nor did it please the Parisians when it was first performed in Paris the next year, but later it grew in favor. Curious praise was given it. Some found the music abounding in "Assyrian coloring." This page was ravishingly beautiful; that one sublime, and so on through the gamut of eulogy.

In Boston the opera is associated with the names of Adelina Patti and Mme. Scalchi, though Mme. Melba has sung here the [illegible] of the Queen [illegible] whom strange stories were told, most of them no doubt unfounded. The last time the opera was heard in Mechanics building, it was regarded as a bore; but the overture is still an old and dear friend, known to us from boyhood days in our little village, when we played it in a four-hand piano arrangement with a maiden aunt. It is a good thing for the younger generation in the Symphony audience to learn what delighted their fathers and their grandfathers. Nor need these younger listeners, who grow enthusiastic over the music of Milhaud and other ultra-modern composers turn up their noses at the great Rossini, who once ruled the musical world. Old-fashioned as it is, this overture is in the grand style, melodious, pompous, with the irresistible, crescendos attributed to Rossini, but used more sparingly by a few composers before him. And if these young eulogists of dissonances without significance admire Mr. Casella—and not without reason—let them know that he recently wrote an article in glowing praise of this same Rossini, whose "Barber of Seville" is still one of the glories and the wonders of the operatic stage.

It seems as if Mozart lost his classic serenity whenever he chose the key of G minor. In the immortal symphony there is, except in the beautiful, characteristically Mozartian Andante, a feverishness, an intensity not to be found in his other symphonies; and so in the perfect flower of his chamber music, there is a direct, passionate appeal of one theme (G minor again) that reminds one of the terribly earnest Verdi of the fifties.

It was to be expected that the "Feria" section of Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody" with its intoxicating fury would excite greater applause than the preceding nocturnal prelude, an example of exquisite impressionism or the tantalizing hints at Spanish dances in the middle movements. There are comedians who do not arouse laughter unless they knock the hearer down, sit on him, and hammer the joke into his skull, until he exclaims: "I see it," and roars his "Ha-ha's!" And so any large audience, whether it be in Boston, London, Paris, Berlin, Rome, prefers the obvious to the subtle, and cries out with delight at the sight of blazing colors, indifferent towards tints and demi-tints.

Mr. Cortot gave a remarkable performance of Saint-Saens's concerto, an exhibition of piano playing that it would be hard to parallel as one recalls the visiting pianists of the last 35 years. For his playing was so musical, and technically so masterly. He worked wonders with the modest air of one mindful only of the composer, not considering his own glory. The concerto itself is a finer work than the more popular one in G minor. The thematic material is not so important as the ingenious and effective manner in which it is employed. It was said when the concerto was brought out in 1875 that it belonged to Saint-Saens's "Biblical and Christian" period, during which he composed oratorios, cantatas and "Samson and Delilah"; that the themes had a "mystical character and contemplative intentions." Would that we could have seen Satin-Saens's face when he read these remarks; would that we could have heard his comment! Would also that he could have heard Mr. Cortot yesterday! Would that he could have heard Mr. Monteux's accompaniment!

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Mendelssohn, Overture to "Fingal's Cave"; Glazounov, Symphony No. 4; Albeniz-Casella, Span-

---

Cortot Triumphs With Symphony

Alfred Cortot triumphed at the Symphony concerto yesterday. The French pianist gave a brilliant and thoroughhly artistic exhibition in the performance of the Saint-Saens concerto in C minor, but the orchestra kept pace with him. He very properly shook hands with Pierre Monteux when the performance was over. The concerto is a melodious, dramatic work not heard at these concerts since Paderewski played the solo part 14 years ago.

Mr. Monteux and his men were in fine fettle all through the matinee. Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody," Mozart's G minor symphony and Rossini's "Semiramis" overture were all splendidly done.

ADVTSR. FEB 24.

CASELLA IS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

In the triple role of composer, piano soloist, and conductor, Alfredo Casella, the distinguished Italian musician, will make his first visit to Boston to be the guest of honor at the next regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 2 and 3.

Casella will take the piano part in his own arrangement for piano and orchestra of Albeniz's "Spanish Rhapsody." He will also conduct his "Pupazzetti," Five Pieces for Marionettes, and his Rhapsody "Italia." Pierre Monteux will open the concert by a performance of Glazounov's Fourth Symphony and Mendelssohn's Overture, "Fingal's Cave."

ADVR-FEB 24.

PHOTO OF PIANIST'S HANDS SHOWS VIRTUOSO'S ABILITY; APPEARS HEAR TOMORROW

X-RAY PHOTO OF HAND OF GEORGE SMITH, Pianist With Boston Symphony Orchestra playing in Brockton February 25

A young American virtuoso of the highest promise will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra at its third annual concert, to be given in the City theatre on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, at 3 o'clock.

George Smith is already looked upon as ranking among the most brilliant piano virtuosos of the day. Born in Boston, he also studied there under Arthur Foote and Richard Platt, and it was in Boston that he made his debut in recital in 1918. The brilliant skill and poetic beauty of his playing attracted concentrated and enthusiastic attention. He gave other recitals, notably in New York, with a similar reception and this led to appearances with orchestra in other cities. His coming appearance in Brockton, however, will be his first with the Boston Symphony orchestra. Mr. Smith will take the piano part in the tremendously difficult fantasia on "Hungarian Folk Tunes," by Franz Liszt, the Hungarian composer.

GEORGE SMITH
Pianist

Pierre Monteux, the conductor of the orchestra, will open this concert with Tchaikovsky's "Fourth Symphony in F Minor," a work which is often called the masterpiece of the great Russian composer, and ranked even higher than the "Pathetic Symphony No. 6." The symphonic poem, "The Moldau," by Smetana, the Bohemian composer, a score of great melodic charm and interesting national characteristics, will also be played, and, to close the concert, Wagner's "Overture to Rienzi."

The number in which George Smith, the brilliant young pianist, is to be heard with the orchestra is Liszt's Fantasia on Hungarian Folk Tunes, which is also known in its form for piano solo as the 14th Hungarian Rhapsody. No other work bespeaks so eloquently the Hungarian blood which flowed in his veins.

Music no less national, which represents the Bohemian people, is the symphonic poem "The Moldau" by Smetana, "with the union of two streams, one warm and gushing, the other cold and tranquil. The current of the Moldau glides past the wonderful Bohemian lanscape, now reflecting the forest in the morning sun, now a series of pastures, and lowlands where a wedding feast is being celebrated. With the shadows of night come the reflections of mediaeval fortresses and a scene of wood and water nymphs who revel [illegible] waves. The Moldau farther on hews out for itself a rocky chasm, and then spreads forth broadly as it approaches Prague."

BROCKTON-TIMES.FEB 24

WAGNER PROGRAM AT PENSION CONCERT

A program of Wagnerian excerpts, with the two noted soloists, will be offered at the pension fund concert of the Symphony Orchestra next Sunday afternoon.

The overtures to "Rienzi" and "Tannhauser," the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers," "The Death of Siegfried," the funeral march from "The Dusk of the Gods," and a scene from "The Valkyrie" are the selections. Charles H. Bennett will sing Wotan's farewell. Sigrid Onegin, celebrated contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing an aria from Bruch's "Achilles" and Wagner's "Schmerzen" and "Traeume."

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Alfredo Casella will be heard as composer, piano soloist, and conductor at the Symphony concerts this week. The distinguished Italian comes to Boston to play the piano part of his own arrangement of Albeniz's "Spanish Rhapsody" and to conduct two of his own works, "Pupazzetti" and his rhapsody "Italia." Glazounoff's fourth symphony and Mendelssohns "Fingal's Cave" overture are the other numbers.

ADVTSR ·FEB.25

Wagner Pension Concert

A programme of Wagnerian excerpts, with two noted soloists, should make the coming Pension Fund concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon, March 4, in Symphony Hall, an event of unusual musical importance.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Overtures to "Rienzi" and "Tannhauser," the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers," "The Death of Siegfried" and the Funeral March from "The Dusk of the Gods," and Wotan's Farewell and the Magic Fire Music which closes the "Valkyrie," the part of Wotan in this excerpt to be taken by Charles H. Bennett.

The other soloist will be Sigrid Onegin, the celebrated contralto, newly acquired by the Metropolitan Opera Company, who is looked upon as the most important newcomer this season. Madame Onegin's Boston debut was but a repetition of her almost unprecedented reception in New York and other cities. She will sing with the Orchestra Bruch's Lament of Andromache from "Achilles" and the two songs of Richard Wagner "Schmerzen" and "Traume."

Casella With Symphony

Alfredo Casella will be heard as composer, piano soloist, and conductor at the next regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 2 and 3. The distinguished Italian musician, who is to make his first visit to Boston for this occasion, will play the piano part in his own arrangement for piano and orchestra of Albeniz's Spanish Rhapsody. Casella will conduct two of his own [illegible] Five Pie[illegible] for Marionettes [illegible] cietta; 2. Berceuse [illegible] turnino. 5. Polka—and his Rhapsody "Italia."

---

Pierre Monteux will open the concert by conducting the Fourth Symphony of Glazounov, and Mendelssohn's Overture "Fingal's Cave."

POST-FEB.26.

ALFREDO CASELLA (LEFT), COMPOSER AND

CASELLA SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Alfredo Casella will be heard as composer, piano soloist and conductor at the next Symphony concerts in Symphony hall Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The distinguished Italian musician, who will then make his first visit to Boston, will play the piano part in his own arrangement for piano and orchestra of Albeniz's Spanish Rhapsody. Mr. Casella will conduct two of his own works—"Pupazzetti," five pieces for Marionettes (Marcietta, Berceuse, Serenata, Notturnio, Polka) and his rhapsody "Italia." Mr. Monteux will open the concert with the Fourth Symphony of Glazounov, and Mendelssohn's Overture, "Fingal's Cave."

WAGNER PROGRAM

A program of Wagnerian excerpts, with two noted soloists, should make the coming pension fund concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon, March 4, in Symphony hall, an event of unusual interest. Mr. Monteux will conduct the overture to "Rienzi" and "Tannhaeuser," the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers," "The Death of Siegfried" and the Funeral March from "Dusk of the Gods," Wotan's Farewell and the Magic Fire Music which closes the "Valkyrie." The music of Wotan will be sung by Charles H. Bennett. The other soloist will be Sigrid Onegin, the celebrated contralto, newly acquired by the Metropolitan Opera Company. She will sing the Lament of Andromache from Bruch's "Achilles" and Wagner's "Schmerzen" and "Traeume."

HERALD-FEB. 26.

N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
FEB 2 1923

Enesco as Soloist

A programme of wide variety was given last evening at Carnegie Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Pierre Monteaux conducting, and Georges Enesco, the Roumanian composer, as soloist. The numbers ranged from the dramatic "Benvenuto Cellini" overture of Berlioz, with its thrilling climax, to Smetana's poetic composition, "The Moldau," and included besides César Franck's "Le Chasseur Maudit," and Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnole." The concerto was the Brahms, which was played with admirable dignity. M. Enesco is a violinist of real greatness, modest to the point of self-effacement, and without the slightest trace of affectation. He was recalled many times at the conclusion of the concerto, and it was noticeable that the applause from the orchestra was unusually vigorous, as it should have been for so artistic a performance.

The brass sonorities of Franck's "Wild Huntsman" were apparently appreciated, too, and the really delightful Spanish rhapsodizing of Ravel came in for much applause. It was conducted and played beautifully, in particular the charming "Prelude à la Nuit," with its bird song theme, and its all-pervasive brooding beauty of tropical night. It requires little imagination to reconstruct the story Ravel is trying to tell. Smetana's more conventional poem "The Moldau," brought a two-hour programme to its conclusion.

H. B.

N. Y.
JOURNAL
ISSUE OF
FEB 2 1923

ENESCO AT CONCERT OF BOSTON ORCHESTRA

A miscellany of music mostly in the modern romantic vein made up Pierre Monteux's programme for the concert of the Boston Symphony Archestra last evening in Carnegie Hall. Berlioz, Ravel, Franck and Smetana were the composers he drew upon for the purely orchestral numbers, whilst Brahms's violin concerto was the vehicle for Georges Enesco's appearance as a soloist. He gave an absorbing performance of the piece, and was much applauded for it. The audience likewise enjoyed itself during the rest of the evening, taking special pleasure in Mr. Monteux's playing of the Ravel "Rapsodie Espagnole."

TELEGRAM
New York City

Georges Enesco was the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Carnegie Hall, playing the Brahms violin concerto. His interpretation was unconventional but decidedly interesting. Mr. Enesco is not a player of the virtuoso type, but he is an intensely interesting musician. Under the direction of Pierre Monteux, the players from Boston presented Berlioz's overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Franck's "Le Chasseur Maudit," [illegible] and

---

SUN
ess New York City
[illegible] 2 1923

Enesco With Bostonians.

Last night's Boston Symphony concert at Carnegie Hall was enriched by the presence of Georges Enesco, the Rumanian composer, who played the Brahms violin concerto to Mr. Monteux's accompaniment. This most difficult and most grateful work has appeared nine times on the programs of the current season. It has framed greater tonal purity, it has set forth more brilliant technic, it has enjoyed more sympathetic orchestral support, but rarely if ever has it given more deep musical pleasure, more throbbing poetry, more glorified emotion than last night. Many details arise for criticism: the violinist allowed himself more freedom in his rubato than Mr. Monteux could handle comfortably; there were even collisions in the opening of the last movement; but these flaws were drowned in the turbulent beauty of the interpretation.

Mr. Enesco seemed in and of the music. Its serene melody, its soaring purposes, its intimacy, its inaccessible nobility: all of them shone in the playing, through the vital understanding, the love of the player. And the audience, though tot large, glowed with gratitude for such measure of beauty.

Apart from this happy breach in the Boston Symphony's custom to use no soloists in New York, the rest of the program was a conventional one. Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture has not been played for nearly two years in the city, but the other three works have all been heard within the year: Franck's Poem "Le Chasseur Maudit," Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnole" and Smetana's "Tho Moldau." The chief criticism of the orchestra remains as usual: its inability to impress the hearers with the assurance of inner cohesion. In other respects Mr. Monteux achieved an excellent concert.

STABLISHED 1881
FEB 2 1923
rom
EVENING MAIL
New York City

BOSTON SYMPHONY AGAIN

WE are glad we can say that last night's performance of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall improved as it progressed. The early part of the programme was somewhat shadowed by Mr. Enesco's rather amorhous rendition of the Brahms concerto. He was frequently off key, and his interpretation seemed of the kind that is shaped largely by the performer's technical limitations. However, an extremely colorful if not too accurate performance of Ravel's Rhapsodie Espagnole shortly after served to dispel the gloom. The climax of the evening came quite appropriately at the end in the form of Smetana's symphonic poem, "Vltava." It is no exaggeration to say that the beauty of its reading would have made up for almost anything.

LENOX STRING QUARTET

[68]

from
FEB 2 1923
EVENING WORLD
New York City

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Georges Enesco, the Roumanian violinist, as soloist, started its third pair of concerts in Carnegie Hall in the evening. The "Tannhauser" temptation was too strong for one reviewer who is, unfortunately, unable to report upon the doings of the Boston men.

N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
FEB 2 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY HAS ENESCO AS SOLOIST

Lenox String Quartette in Important Concert—Richard Hale, Baritone, at Aeolian Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, played its third recital of the season at Carnegie Hall last evening with Georges Enesco as soloist in Brahms's D major Concerto for violin with orchestra. Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, Franck's Symphonic Poem, "The Wild Huntsman," Ravel's Rapsodie Espagnole and Smetana's Symphonic Poem "The Moldau" from "My Country" made up the orchestral program.

The Lenox String Quartet, Sandor Harmati, first violin; Wolfe Wolfinson, second violin; Nicholas Meldavan, viola, and Emmeran Stoeber, 'cello, offered D'Indy's Quartet in E major and Schubert's G major (opus 161) Quartet at Aeolian Hall in the evening.

Richard Hale, baritone, at Aeolian Hall in the afternoon, sang an interesting list of songs in French and English. Helen Chase was at the piano.

N. Y.
WORLD
ISSUE OF
FEB 2 1923

OTHER MUSIC.

After hearing the chef d'oeuvre of the Boston Symphony's program at Carnegie Hall last night, one felt tempted to set out to discover and strangle the man who first started the rumor that the music of Brahms is sticky, dull and muddy-pated. This savagery was prompted by Georges Enesco's fiery performance of the violin concerto in D, op. 77. Following immediately after Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, with all its thunderous blatancies, tinsel and claptrap, the work of the bearded sage of Hamburg seemed literally to float aloft on surprisingly youthful wings.

Enesco has spirit in abundance, together with melting tones in the cantabile passages that made the Adagio movement a thing of almost painful beauty. In the final movement also, in which the Brahms of the Hungarian dances raised—or rather wagged—his head, there was warmth and rhythmic verve in superabundance. "The Wild Huntsman" of Cesar Franck followed, and then one became doubly convinced that the composer's game is really an old man's sport.

Smetana's "Vitava" ended the evening's entertainment. The Bostonians throughout played with their accustomed precision and vitality. E. B.

LOUISVILLE
KY.
POST
10 1923

IN A LINE OR TWO.

The Boston Symphony, with Georges Enesco as violin soloist, ... a ... feature concert here ... is striving earnestly to re... former position. Conductor ... Monteux does not seem, however, to command widespread attention. Enesco played like the musician he is, but as a violinist he will probably achieve no great popularity here. Musicians respond to him more readily than the public seems to.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
FEB 3 1923

The Boston Symphony

The third of the season's five Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in Brooklyn (Institute auspices) was given at the Academy of Music last night. Mr. Monteux's programme opened with Beethoven's Eighth symphony (F major), followed by Smetana's "The Moldau," Brahms' concert (D major) for violin and orchestra, and excerpts (Richter) from Wagner's "Ring." The soloist was Georges Enesco, Roumanian composer-violinist, who is just now invading the United States concert field even as Rachmaninoff, Russia's illustrious composer, has done with his remarkable pianoforte playing.

The audience was of good size, but its enthusiasm was not quite up to accustomed standard.

The eighth symphony of Beethoven seems to have been rightly called "the little symphony," this being the composer's own term in a letter to Salomon, in distinguishing it from its predecessor (No. 7), which Beethoven called "a great symphony * * one of my best." The opening movement has not the breadth, intensity, or dignity of the other opening movements of the master's symphonic works. Sandwiched in between the joyous and inspired seventh symphony and the immortal ninth, the eighth proves that even so great a master as Beethoven does not always soar to Olympian heights, but is, in fact, sometimes not far from the ordinary and commonplace. The work as a whole does not seem to be either highly inspired or inspiring. Much, of course, depends upon the mood of the listener in respect to derivement of pleasure in listening to this "little symphony." The orchestra last night got out of it all that humanly was possible.

The playing of the Smetana number gave Mr. Monteux and his forces an opportunity for a display of genuine virtuosity which it accepted, making of the composition a veritable tour-de-force. The audience showed prolonged approval and the gentlemen of the orchestra responded by a rise.

Came then the real music of the night—Brahms' concerto, one of the noblest works of its kind ever written and dedicated to the great German artist Joachim, of whom it is said that he assisted in the arranging of the violin passages. Mr. Philip Hale, in his historical and descriptive programme notes, again recalls the story of this concerto's first performance with Joachim as soloist and Brahms (at the baton) nearly overcome by disaster because of unbuttoned suspenders. Conducting with unusual energy under these dangerous conditions, a large portion of his shirt showed between trousers and waistcoat. Brahms' violin concerto, however, will no doubt outlive this comic incident.

Mr. Enesco is already well known to orchestra patrons by several of his interesting compositions. Last night he made bid for recognition as violinist. Considering in quick detail his playing, it may be set down that Mr. Enesco's tone is always penetratingly vibrant and of a thoroughly musical color and timbre, but often inclined to thinness and a decided lack in the matter of passionate utterance or ecstatic flight. But although he does not thrill with the luscious and enticing tone so much in vogue among present-day violinists, Mr. Enesco's playing makes appeal by reason of purity of style and lofty interpretation. He also revealed superior musicianship by blending the solo instrument and making of it almost an integral part of the orchestra, thus avoiding an extravagant and vulgar display of virtuosity.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
4 1923

WHITEHILL STARS IN FINE CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Wagner Program Features Metropolitan Baritone.

IGNAZ FRIEDMAN AT AEOLIAN

Olga Samaroff Plays Impromptu Piano Recital—Japanese Tenor Has Dancing Aid.

By JOHN H. RAFTERY

The outstanding feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at Carnegie Hall yesterday and the musical event of the day was Clarence Whitehill's magnificent singing of Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music, the close of "The Valkyrie." A genuine ovation followed Mr. Whitehill's memorable performance. Conductor Monteux and the orchestra ... the generous applause. ...

... the beginning ... orchestra blared forth ... and threatened to engulf the soloist. He refused to be stampeded into shouting, however, and presently Mr. Monteaux discerned the situation and thereafter the orchestra gave an almost perfectly adjusted performance and Mr. Whitehill's noble voice again became the solo instrument to the end.

It was an all-Wagner program with much great playing in the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" and the prelude and love death from "Tristan and Isolde." The final section of the program included Siegfried's "Ascent to Brunhilde's Rock" ("Siegfried"), "Morning Dawn," Siegfried's "Rhine Journey" and the close of "The Dusk of the Gods."

Sixteenth Program of Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its sixteenth concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Alfred Cortot was the soloist. The program:

Rossini, Overture to "Semiramide"
Mozart, Symphony in G minor
Ravel, Spanish Rhapsody
Saint-Saëns, Concerto for pianoforte in C minor, No. 4, op. 44

It is fast becoming the fashion to revive operatic overtures by Rossini, Halévy and the earlier Verdi at symphony concerts. Was not this fashion started by Mr. Toscanini? They afford a measure of relief from the overtures of Weber, which for many years have held a disproportionate place on symphony programs. Then, too, the younger generation of listeners is less familiar with these old-time pieces and to them they come with a certain degree of freshness. But there is more to be found in them than their interest as mere musical curiosities. After their years of retirement they still retain some of their original bloom and it would be a narrow-minded and prejudiced modernist indeed who could not find in them something of interest and profit. So Rossini's "Semiramide" was welcome yesterday. Although its orchestration and harmonic scheme are simple as compared with those of a composer of these latter days, there is the touch of genius and superlative craftsmanship on every page. Few composers of today, despite the almost unlimited means at their command, are able to express themselves with such clarity and sincerity. The music of this overture may certainly be of no great depth of emotional expressiveness, yet it says so aptly just what the composer of it intended to say that it cannot but remain as an example of true and apposite musical expression. Mr. Monteux played it with no air of condescension, no attempt at showy trickery, but simply with due attention to its musical values.

So, too, did he play Mozart's G minor Symphony, a work often used by conductors for the purpose of giving so-called "readings," a medium for the display of their own peculiar fancies in the matter of interpretation. In this respect this symphony, together with Beethoven's "Eroica," has suffered most at their hands. It was refreshing to hear it as played yesterday, shorn of all this trumpery; to hear Mozart, "the most perfect of musicians," speaking through its measures, and none other.

Ravel's Spanish Rhapsody is agreeable, clever music. It is filled from beginning to end with all the oddities of orchestration which are the stock in trade of the present day composer. Of real musical invention there is little. Perhaps it was so intended. It evokes the atmosphere of Spain in many of its measures, though more often than not one receives the impression of a Frenchman masquerading in Spanish costume. Not so with Ravel's illustrious countryman, Chabrier, who succeeded in becoming more Spanish than the Spaniards themselves whenever he undertook the task of portraying that land in tones. The performance of the Rhapsody was brilliant and rhythmically vigorous.

In conclusion Mr. Cortot and the orchestra played Saint-Saëns' fourth concerto. It would be mere senseless faultfinding to seek for flaws in its performance. In some pages there is a deeper sentiment than is commonly to be found in Saint-Saëns' music, and yet again there are others which are little more than musical fustian.

S. M.

MONITOR. FEB. 24.

IN WAGNER PROGRAM

A Pension Fund Concert is anticipated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, March 4. The music will consist of numbers from the music dramas of Wagner, with two soloists—Sigrid Onegin, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Charles H. Bennett, baritone. Mme. Onegin, the great Swedish contralto, will sing Bruch's Lament from "Achilles" and the two songs of Wagner "Schmerzen" and "Traume."

CASELLA WITH ORCHESTRA

In the triple role of composer, piano soloist and conductor, Alfredo Casella, the distinguished Italian musician, will make his first visit to Boston to be the guest of honor at the next regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 2 and 3.

Casella will take the piano part in his own arrangement for piano and orchestra of Albeniz's "Spanish Rhapsody."

TRAV. FEB 24.

At three concerts next week—one in Cambridge and two in Boston—Alfredo Casella, pianist, composer, conductor, writer, as well, about music, arch-modernist, wanderer over the European and American worlds, will be the guest of the Symphony Orchestra. At Cambridge in Sanders Theatre, on Thursday evening, he will be heard as pianist only—in Mozart's Concerto in D minor. In Boston, on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, he will be more his manifold self—pianist in his own version for orchestra of Albeniz's "Spanish Rhapsody"; conductor and composer in his arrangement for orchestra of "Puppazzi," originally piano-pieces for marionettes; and conductor and composer again in his rhapsody, "Italia." At last that vivid and vigorous music is to pass, as it should have done long since, from "The Pops" to the Symphony Concerts. In Cambridge, Chausson's Symphony, the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and the Overture to "Tannhäuser" will round out the concert. In Boston Glazunov's Fourth Symphony and Mendelssohn's Overture, "Fingal's Cave," will preface Mr. Casella's numbers. In Paris, it used to be said that Mr. Monteux was the first French conductor to give Mr. Casella hearing. Now in Boston, he redoubles these favors and with reason.

Sunday afternoon, March 4, in Symphony Hall, a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the increase of its Pension Fund. Mr. Monteux will conduct; fragments of Wagner's operas will sprinkle the programme; and Mme. Onegin will be the assisting singer. Within the hour her richness of voice, her opulence of mood, her large ways of song and spirit have commended her. She will sing Wagner's songs "Traüme" and "Schmerzen" and an Air from Bruch's "Achilles." For the orchestra the Wagnerian numbers are the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger"; the overtures to "Rienzi" and "Tannhäuser"; the final scene of "Die Walküre," with Mr. Charles Bennett as voice to Wotan; the music of Siegfried's Death and Glorification.

Not Unknown

The concert of tomorrow afternoon at Symphony Hall falls to Mme. Ganna Walska, more familiar to the social and matrimonial chronicles of the newspapers than to the records of the concert-hall. Yet she also sings. There is Parisian word for it—and here is her concert for first appearance in Boston. Her numbers include airs of Mozart; songs of Scarlatti and Strauss; other pieces light and ornate. Max Kaplick, of old baritone of the Bostono Opera Company, will assist Mme. Walska.

TRANS. FEB. 24.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

ROSSINI OUTDOES ANCIENTS AND MODERNS

His Overture to "Semiramide" as Piece of the Day and for Good Reason —Mozartean Melancholy Overdone—Faded Saint-Saens and Fading Ravel—Correct Cortot

Of the four composers represented on the programme of the Symphony Concert yesterday not Saint-Saëns, or Ravel or even Mozart, but Rossini, seemed for the time the most arresting figure. No reasonable person would maintain that in point of musical worth the Overture to "Semiramide" is deserving of serious comparison with the Symphony in G minor of Mozart; though its inferiority to the "Spanish Rhapsody" of Ravel or to Saint-Saëns's Fourth Concerto for the piano is more open to question. But for us of Boston in the year 1923 this Overture of Rossini has a fresher interest than has Mozart's Symphony, and this freshness had much to do with the vivid impression that the piece made yesterday. To the Symphony the audience responded but indifferently; the Overture aroused its enthusiasm. Beyond question the Symphony in G minor is the most beautiful among the symphonies of Mozart. Yet through frequent repetition here is it not losing a little of its rightful appeal? Might it not have been better to play the "Jupiter," which of late has been heard far less frequently? And there are many of the earlier symphonies that languish undeservedly on the shelves of the Orchestra's library.

Until recently those same shelves made undisturbed resting place for the Overtures of Rossini (that is "William Tell" excepted). ... its way ... ing music for a Young People's Concert, Mr. Monteux bethought him of the Overture to "The Italian in Algiers," and subsequently that engaging piece made welcome appearance at a subscription concert. Now that the Overture to "Semiramide" has followed it, may we not also look for revivals of the overtures to "The Siege of Corinth," to "La Gazza Ladra," to "Tancredi," or perhaps "The Barber of Seville"? By every sign they would be heard to general enjoyment.

To follow concerts over a period of years is to witness many changes in fashion, to observe many reversals of judgment. Once, outside the opera house, Rossini was dismissed with a sneer, but of late he has come into new favor and an increased regard at the hands of musicians. The approaching visit of Mr. Casella brings to mind an amusing article by him that appeared a little more than two years ago in The Chesterian, and that bore the title, "Some Reasons Why a 'Futurist' May Admire Rossini." The opening lines of this article have already been quoted in these columns, but they will bear repeating:

> A few months ago I was present at a certain concert, no matter in what town or country, where a performance of a delightful symphony of Mozart was given. My pleasure was great, but it would seem that my face betrayed no sign of it, for in the middle of the Adagio my neighbor, an amiable and wealthy man, whose millions allow him that which my poverty entirely precludes me from—to have one's music composed by others and merely affixing one's signature thereto—my neighbor, I say, cautiously remarked to me: "How you must suffer listening to such music, and how I admire your self-control!" Although I have long ago given up the problem of determining the limit of human stupidity, I turned a somewhat bewildered face on my companion and rejoined as quietly as possible: "My dear colleague, what if I told you that I adore Rossini?"

Whether Mr. Casella's brother-futurists of Paris would echo this sentiment is not certain; but they have openly expressed their liking for Ambroise Thomas, a composer less deserving of such tribute. As Mr. Casella's article is not at hand, his specific reasons for "adoring" Rossini may not with accuracy be cited. But there are reasons enough why any thoughtful musician, whether he be radical or reactionary, or betwixt-and-between, should praise the composer of "William Tell." First of all there is the man's amazing fecundity of invention. Though he did not take for the composing of "Semiramide" the forty days that his contract allowed him, he could yet say that it was the only one of his Italian operas that he wrote at his leisure. A bare fortnight sufficed for the composition of the immortal "Barber of Seville." Yet of these melodies that were scribbled so hastily, often under most extraordinary circumstances, many have a perennial freshness. The violinists of the Symphony Orchestra might smile as they played the lively tune that is the main theme of the Overture to "Semiramide," but this smile was not all disparaging. Rather it was in part an inevitable response to the infectious gaiety of the music. Nor was Rossini's gift all for sprightly melody. He could, on occasion, be expressively songful, as the horn quartet in this same Overture abundantly proves. It is recorded that Rossini stopped his study of counterpoint when he had "learned enough to compose operas," and in the Italy of the early nineteenth century that "enough" was not a great deal.

We need not, then, look in Rossini's scores for any profound display of musical science. He was neither a great contrapuntist nor a resourceful harmonist. But besides his wit, his dramatic sense and his gift for melody, Rossini had as composer another quality that has done much to keep his music alive—his genius for orchestration. Had he scored them less adroitly his Overtures might hardly make today the appeal that they do. If his musical thoughts were never profound and were often undeniably trivial, he could present them in terms of the orchestra with a beguiling grace, a captivating cleverness. The Overture to "Semiramide" is now a century old, almost to a day, yet the instrumentation is still a delight, almost an excitement, to hear. Beside it that of any other music of its immediate time, whether by Beethoven, Schubert, Cherubini or even by Weber (the Weber of 1823) is relatively classic. Hear in this "Semiramide" Overture the ingeniously contrived crescendo at the beginning, the mellow richness of the quartet of horns, the glinting color of the piccolo so freely and so effectively employed, the buoyancy of the strings, the luminosity, the perfect balance, the incessant euphony of the whole tonal fabric. After it yesterday much of the Symphony in G minor seemed almost drab—and Mozart had himself a felicitous touch in scoring.

The glory of the Symphony seems now ...ed above, the piece as a whole is too well known to concert-goers. Certainly, t known to concertgoers. Certainly, the Andante aside, the less highly esteemed Symphony in E-flat major proved, when played earlier in the season, more enjoyable than did the G minor yesterday. In the latter is a note of melancholy, and melancholy is not one of the most enduring things in music. Frank cheerfulness has often a better chance of surviving. There is also matter for reflection in the fact that the key of G minor has never made strong appeal to the writers of symphonies. Indeed the only other instances of a symphony of any reputation that has for its basis this plaintive tonality are found in the now forgotten Symphony by Lalo and the now neglected First Symphony of Chaikovsky. Mendelssohn and Bruch, each using the key for a Concerto, were careful to drop it after the first movement. Mozart's persistent use of it through three of the four sections of his Symphony helped to give the piece its characteristic emotional color. But it may also account for the fact that, in full realization of the beauty and the technical perfection of the music, it is possible to find in it more than a hint of monotony.

... for G Minor

from FEB 2 1923
EVENING WORLD
New York City

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Georges Enesco, the Roumanian violinist, as soloist, started its third pair of concerts in Carnegie Hall in the evening. The "Tannhauser" temptation was too strong for one reviewer who is, unfortunately, unable to report upon the doings of the Boston men.

N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
FEB 2 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY HAS ENESCO AS SOLOIST

Lenox String Quartette in Important Concert—Richard Hale, Baritone, at Aeolian Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, played its third recital of the season at Carnegie Hall last evening with Georges Enesco as soloist in Brahms's D major Concerto for violin with orchestra. Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, Franck's Symphonic Poem, "The Wild Huntsman," Ravel's Rapsodie Espagnole and Smetana's Symphonic Poem "The Moldau" from "My Country" made up the orchestral program.

The Lenox String Quartet, Sandor Harmati, first violin; Wolfe Wolfinson, second violin; Nicholas Meldavan, viola, and Emmeran Stoeber, 'cello, offered D'Indy's Quartet in E major and Schubert's G major (opus 161) Quartet at Aeolian Hall in the evening.

Richard Hale, baritone, at Aeolian Hall in the afternoon, sang an interesting list of songs in French and English. Helen Chase was at the piano.

N. Y.
WORLD
ISSUE OF
FEB 2 1923

OTHER MUSIC.

After hearing the chef d'oeuvre of the Boston Symphony's program at Carnegie Hall last night, one felt tempted to set out to discover and strangle the man who first started the rumor that the music of Brahms is sticky, dull and muddy-pated. This savagery was prompted by Georges Enesco's fiery performance of the violin concerto in D, op. 77. Following immediately after Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, with all its thunderous blatancies, tinsel and claptrap, the work of the bearded sage of Hamburg seemed literally to float aloft on surprisingly youthful wings.

Enesco has spirit in abundance, together with melting tones in the cantabile passages that made the Adagio movement a thing of almost painful beauty. In the final movement also, in which the Brahms of the Hungarian dances raised—or rather wagged—his head, there was warmth and rhythmic verve in superabundance. "The Wild Huntsman" of Cesar Franck followed, and then one became doubly convinced that the composer's game is really an old man's sport.

Smetana's "Vitava" ended the evening's entertainment. The Bostonians throughout played with their accustomed precision and vitality. E. B.

LOUISVILLE
KY.
POST
FEB 10 1923

IN A LINE OR TWO.

The Boston Symphony, with Georges Enesco as violin soloist, was a recent feature concert here. This band is striving earnestly to regain its former position. Conductor Pierre Monteux does not seem, however, to command widespread attention. Enesco played like the musician he is, but as a violinist he will probably achieve no great popularity here. Musicians respond to him more readily than the public seems to.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
FEB 3 1923

The Boston Symphony

The third of the season's five Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in Brooklyn (Institute auspices) was given at the Academy of Music last night. Mr. Monteux's programme opened with Beethoven's Eighth symphony (F major), followed by Smetana's "The Moldau," Brahms' concert (D major) for violin and orchestra, and excerpts (Richter) from Wagner's "Ring." The soloist was Georges Enesco, Roumanian composer-violinist, who is just now invading the United States concert field even as Rachmaninoff, Russia's illustrious composer, has done with his remarkable pianoforte playing.

The audience was of good size, but its enthusiasm was not quite up to accustomed standard.

The eighth symphony of Beethoven seems to have been rightly called "the little symphony," this being the composer's own term in a letter to Salomon, in distinguishing it from its predecessor (No. 7), which Beethoven called "a great symphony * * one of my best." The opening movement has not the breadth, intensity, or dignity of the other opening movements of the master's symphonic works. Sandwiched in between the joyous and inspired seventh symphony and the immortal ninth, the eighth proves that even so great a master as Beethoven does not always soar to Olympian heights, but is, in fact, sometimes not far from the ordinary and commonplace. The work as a whole does not seem to be either highly inspired or inspiring. Much, of course, depends upon the mood of the listener in respect to derivement of pleasure in listening to this "little symphony." The orchestra last night got out of it all that humanly was possible.

The playing of the Smetana number gave Mr. Monteux and his forces an opportunity for a display of genuine virtuosity which it accepted, making of the composition a veritable tour-de-force. The audience showed prolonged approval and the gentlemen of the orchestra responded by a rise.

Came then the real music of the night—Brahms' concerto, one of the noblest works of its kind ever written and dedicated to the great German artist Joachim, of whom it is said that he assisted in the arranging of the violin passages. Mr. Philip Hale, in his historical and descriptive programme notes, again recalls the story of this concerto's first performance with Joachim as soloist and Brahms (at the baton) nearly overcome by disaster because of unbuttoned suspenders. Conducting with unusual energy under these dangerous conditions, a large portion of his shirt showed between trousers and waistcoat. Brahms' violin concerto, however, will no doubt outlive this comic incident.

Mr. Enesco is already well known to orchestra patrons by several of his interesting compositions. Last night he made bid for recognition as violinist. Considering in quick detail his playing, it may be set down that Mr. Enesco's tone is always penetratingly vibrant and of a thoroughly musical color and timbre, but often inclined to thinness and a decided lack in the matter of passionate utterance or ecstatic flight. But although he does not thrill with the luscious and enticing tone so much in vogue among present-day violinists, Mr. Enesco's playing makes appeal by reason of purity of style and lofty interpretation. He also revealed superior musicianship by blending the solo instrument and making of it almost an integral part of the orchestra, thus avoiding an extravagant and vulgar display of virtuosity.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
[illegible]

WHITEHILL STARS IN FINE CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Wagner Program Features Metropolitan Baritone.

IGNAZ FRIEDMAN AT AEOLIAN

Olga Samaroff Plays Impromptu Piano Recital—Japanese Tenor Has Dancing Aid.

By JOHN H. RAFTERY

The outstanding feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at Carnegie Hall yesterday and the musical event of the day was Clarence Whitehill's magnificent singing of Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music, the close of "The Valkyrie." A genuine ovation followed Mr. Whitehill's memorable performance, Conductor Monteaux and the orchestra sharing in the generous applause. Even [illegible] threatened the great baritone at the beginning of the number, for the orchestra blared forth tonal torrents that threatened to engulf the soloist. He refused to be stampeded into shouting, however, and presently Mr. Monteaux discerned the situation and thereafter the orchestra gave an almost perfectly adjusted performance and Mr. Whitehill's noble voice again became the solo instrument to the end.

It was an all-Wagner program with much great playing in the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" and the prelude and love death from "Tristan and Isolde." The final section of the program included Siegfried's "Ascent to Brunhilde's Rock" ("Siegfried"), "Morning Dawn," Siegfried's "Rhine Journey" and the close of "The Dusk of the Gods."

Sixteenth Program of Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its sixteenth concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Alfred Cortot was the soloist. The program:

Rossini, Overture to "Semiramide"
Mozart, Symphony in G minor
Ravel, Spanish Rhapsody
Saint-Saëns, Concerto for pianoforte in C minor, No. 4, op. 44

It is fast becoming the fashion to revive operatic overtures by Rossini, Halévy and the earlier Verdi at symphony concerts. Was not this fashion started by Mr. Toscanini? They afford a measure of relief from the overtures of Weber, which for many years have held a disproportionate place on symphony programs. Then, too, the younger generation of listeners is less familiar with these old-time pieces and to them they come with a certain degree of freshness. But there is more to be found in them than their interest as mere musical curiosities. After their years of retirement they still retain some of their original bloom and it would be a narrow-minded and prejudiced modernist indeed who could not find in them something of interest and profit. So Rossini's "Semiramide" was welcome yesterday. Although its orchestration and harmonic scheme are simple as compared with those of a composer of these latter days, there is the touch of genius and superlative craftsmanship on every page. Few composers of today, despite the almost unlimited means at their command, are able to express themselves with such clarity and sincerity. The music of this overture may certainly be of no great depth of emotional expressiveness, yet it says so aptly just what the composer of it intended to say that it cannot but remain as an example of true and apposite musical expression. Mr. Monteux played it with no air of condescension, no attempt at showy trickery, but simply with due attention to its musical values.

So, too, did he play Mozart's G minor Symphony, a work often used by conductors for the purpose of giving so-called "readings," a medium for the display of their own peculiar fancies in the matter of interpretation. In this respect this symphony, together with Beethoven's "Eroica," has suffered most at their hands. It was refreshing to hear it as played yesterday, shorn of all this trumpery; to hear Mozart, "the most perfect of musicians," speaking through its measures, and none other.

Ravel's Spanish Rhapsody is agreeable, clever music. It is filled from beginning to end with all the oddities of orchestration which are the stock in trade of the present day composer. Of real musical invention there is little. Perhaps it was so intended. It evokes the atmosphere of Spain in many of its measures, though more often than not one receives the impression of a Frenchman masquerading in Spanish costume. Not so with Ravel's illustrious countryman, Chabrier, who succeeded in becoming more Spanish than the Spaniards themselves whenever he undertook the task of portraying that land in tones. The performance of the Rhapsody was brilliant and rhythmically vigorous.

In conclusion Mr. Cortot and the orchestra played Saint-Saëns' fourth concerto. It would be mere senseless faultfinding to seek for flaws in its performance. In some pages there is a deeper sentiment than is commonly to be found in Saint-Saëns' music, and yet again there are others which are little more than musical fustian.

S. M.

MONITOR. FEB. 24.

"IN WAGNER PROGRAM"

A Pension Fund Concert is anticipated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, March 4. The music will consist of numbers from the music dramas of Wagner, with two soloists—Sigrid Onegin, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Charles H. Bennett, baritone. Mme. Onegin, the great Swedish contralto, will sing Bruch's Lament from "Achilles" and the two songs of Wagner, "Schmerzen" and "Traume."

CASELLA WITH ORCHESTRA

In the triple [illegible] composer, piano soloist and conductor, Alfredo Casella, the distinguished Italian musician, will make his first visit to Boston to be the guest of honor at the next regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 2 and 3.

Casella will take the piano part in his own arrangement for piano and orchestra of Albeniz's "Spanish Rhapsody."

TRAV. FEB 24.

AT three concerts next week—one in Cambridge and two in Boston—Alfredo Casella, pianist, composer, conductor, writer, as well, about music, arch-modernist, wanderer over the European and American worlds, will be the guest of the Symphony Orchestra. At Cambridge in Sanders Theatre, on Thursday evening, he will be heard as pianist only—in Mozart's Concerto in D minor. In Boston, on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, he will be more his manifold self—pianist in his own version for orchestra of Albeniz's "Spanish Rhapsody"; conductor and composer in his arrangement for orchestra of "Puppazzi," originally piano-pieces for marionettes; and conductor and composer again in his rhapsody, "Italia." At last that vivid and vigorous music is to pass, as it should have done long since, from "The Pops" to the Symphony Concerts. In Cambridge, Chausson's Symphony, the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and the Overture to "Tannhäuser" will round out the concert. In Boston Glazunov's Fourth Symphony and Mendelssohn's Overture, "Fingal's Cave," will preface Mr. Casella's numbers. In Paris, it used to be said that Mr. Monteux was the first French conductor to give Mr. Casella hearing. Now in Boston, he redoubles these favors and with reason.

SUNDAY afternoon, March 4, in Symphony Hall, a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the increase of its Pension Fund. Mr. Monteux will conduct; fragments of Wagner's operas will sprinkle the programme; and Mme. Onegin will be the assisting singer. Within the hour her richness of voice, her opulence of mood, her large ways of song and spirit have commended her. She will sing Wagner's songs "Traüme" and "Schmerzen" and an Air from Bruch's "Achilles." For the orchestra the Wagnerian numbers are the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger"; the overtures to "Rienzi" and "Tannhäuser"; the final scene of "Die Walküre," with Mr. Charles Bennett as voice to Wotan; the music of Siegfried's Death and Glorification.

Not Unknown

The concert of tomorrow afternoon at Symphony Hall falls to Mme. Ganna Walska, more familiar to the social and matrimonial chronicles of the newspapers than to the records of the concert-hall. Yet she also sings. There is Parisian word for it—and here is her concert for first appearance in Boston. Her numbers include airs of Mozart; songs of Scarlatti and Strauss; other pieces light and ornate. Max Kaplick, of old baritone of the Bostono Opera Company, will assist Mme. Walska.

TRANS. FEB. 24.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

ROSSINI OUTDOES ANCIENTS AND MODERNS

His Overture to "Semiramide" as Piece of the Day and for Good Reason — Mozartean Melancholy Overdone—Faded Saint-Saens and Fading Ravel—Correct Cortot

OF the four composers represented on the programme of the Symphony Concert yesterday not Saint-Saëns, or Ravel or even Mozart, but Rossini, seemed for the time the most arresting figure. No reasonable person would maintain that in point of musical worth the Overture to "Semiramide" is deserving of serious comparison with the Symphony in G minor of Mozart; though its inferiority to the "Spanish Rhapsody" of Ravel or to Saint-Saëns's Fourth Concerto for the piano is more open to question. But for us of Boston in the year 1923 this Overture of Rossini has a fresher interest than has Mozart's Symphony, and this freshness had much to do with the vivid impression that the piece made yesterday. To the Symphony the audience responded but indifferently; the Overture aroused its enthusiasm. Beyond question the Symphony in G minor is the most beautiful among the symphonies of Mozart. Yet through frequent repetition here is it not losing a little of its rightful appeal? Might it not have been better to play the "Jupiter," which of late has been heard far less frequently? And there are many of the earlier symphonies that languish undeservedly on the shelves of the Orchestra's library.

Until recently those same shelves made undisturbed resting place for the Overtures of Rossini (that to "William Tell" excepted), save when one or another found its way to "The Pops." Last season, seeking music for a Young People's Concert, Mr. Monteux bethought him of the Overture to "The Italian in Algiers," and subsequently that engaging piece made welcome appearance at a subscription concert. Now that the Overture to "Semiramide" has followed it, may we not also look for revivals of the overtures to "The Siege of Corinth," to "La Gazza Ladra," to "Tancredi," or perhaps "The Barber of Seville"? By every sign they would be heard to general enjoyment.

To follow concerts over a period of years is to witness many changes in fashion, to observe many reversals of judgment. Once, outside the opera house, Rossini was dismissed with a sneer, but of late he has come into new favor and an increased regard at the hands of musicians. The approaching visit of Mr. Casella brings to mind an amusing article by him that appeared a little more than two years ago in The Chesterian, and that bore the title, "Some Reasons Why a 'Futurist' May Admire Rossini." The opening lines of this article have already been quoted in these columns, but they will bear repeating:

> A few months ago I was present at a certain concert, no matter in what town or country, where a performance of a delightful symphony of Mozart was given. My pleasure was great, but it would seem that my face betrayed no sign of it, for in the middle of the Adagio my neighbor, an amiable and wealthy man, whose millions allow him that which my poverty entirely precludes me from—to have one's music composed by others and merely affixing one's signature thereto—my neighbor, I say, cautiously remarked to me: "How you must suffer listening to such music, and how I admire your self-control!" Although I have long ago given up the problem of determining the limit of human stupidity, I turned a somewhat bewildered face on my companion and rejoined as quietly as possible: "My dear colleague, what if I told you that I adore Rossini?"

Whether Mr. Casella's brother-futurists of Paris would echo this sentiment is not certain; but they have openly expressed their liking for Ambroise Thomas, a composer less deserving of such tribute. As Mr. Casella's article is not at hand, his specific reasons for "adoring" Rossini may not with accuracy be cited. But there are reasons enough why any thoughtful musician, whether he be radical or reactionary, or betwixt-and-between, should praise the composer of "William Tell." First of all there is the man's amazing fecundity of invention. Though he did not take for the composing of "Semiramide" the forty days that his contract allowed him, he could yet say that it was the only one of his Italian operas that he wrote at his leisure. A bare fortnight sufficed for the composition of the immortal "Barber of Seville." Yet of these melodies that were scribbled so hastily, often under most extraordinary circumstances, many have a perennial freshness. The violinists of the Symphony Orchestra might smile as they played the lively tune that is the main theme of the Overture to "Semiramide," but this smile was not all disparaging. Rather it was in part an inevitable response to the infectious gaiety of the music. Nor was Rossini's gift all for sprightly melody. He could, on occasion be expressively songful, as the horn quartet in this same Overture abundantly proves. It is recorded that Rossini stopped his study of counterpoint when he had "learned enough to compose operas," and in the Italy of the early nineteenth century that "enough" was not a great deal.

We need not, then, look in Rossini's scores for any profound display of musical science. He was neither a great contrapuntist nor a resourceful harmonist. But besides his wit, his dramatic sense and his gift for melody, Rossini had as composer another quality that has done much to keep his music alive—his genius for orchestration. Had he scored them less adroitly his Overtures might hardly make today the appeal that they do. If his musical thoughts were never profound and were often undeniably trivial, he could present them in terms of the orchestra with a beguiling grace, a captivating cleverness. The Overture to "Semiramide" is now a century old, almost to a day, yet the instrumentation is still a delight, almost an excitement, to hear. Beside it that of any other music of its immediate time, whether by Beethoven, Schubert, Cherubini or even by Weber (the Weber of 1823) is relatively classic. Hear in this "Semiramide" Overture the ingeniously contrived crescendo at the beginning, the mellow richness of the quartet of horns, the glinting color of the piccolo so freely and so effectively employed, the buoyancy of the strings, the luminosity, the perfect balance, the incessant euphony of the whole tonal fabric. After it yesterday much of the Symphony in G minor seemed almost drab—and Mozart had himself a felicitous touch in scoring.

The glory of the Symphony seems no ed above, the piece as a whole is t well known to concert-goers. Certainly, t known to concertgoers. Certainly, the Andante aside, the less highly esteemed Symphony in E-flat major proved, when played earlier in the season, more enjoyable than did the G minor yesterday. In the latter is a note of melancholy, and melancholy is not one of the most enduring things in music. Frank cheerfulness has often a better chance of surviving. There is also matter for reflection in the fact that the key of G minor has never made strong appeal to the writers of symphonies. Indeed the only other instances of a symphony of any reputation that has for its basis this plaintive tonality are found in the now forgotten Symphony by Lalo and the now neglected First Symphony of Chaikovsky. Mendelssohn and Bruch, each using the key for a Concerto, were careful to drop it after the first movement. Mozart's persistent use of it through three of the four sections of his Symphony helped to give the piece its characteristic emotional color. But it may also account for the fact that, in full realization of the beauty and the technical perfection of the music, it is possible to find in it more than a hint of monotony.

Melody for G Minor

PINE scent brings back the blue hills of my homeland;
Salt air, the thunder of an offshore gale,
And sage, a painted desert in the moonlight,
Mysterious and pale.

We think that we forget when
Time's cool fingers
Have closed the wound and soothed away the pain—
Then comes a breath and all the things forgotten
Come flooding back again.
Now that a poignant lovely thing has faded;
Now that a hurt is healed, a grief
is gone—
God grant me this: to know no more forever
Red roses in the dawn.

[C. T. Davis in The Arkansas Gazette.

When first heard at a Symphony Concert some nine years ago, Ravel's Spanish Rhapsody seemed in many ways surprising. The composer's use of the orchestra was arresting; for some it was even disturbing. The music impressed the hearer as replete with atmosphere, fraught with a strange suggestion, on the whole a genuinely imaginative tonal evocation of Andalusia. Nor had subsequent performances greatly altered these impressions. But yesterday the music disclosed, at least to one listener, a hitherto unsuspected barrenness and artificiality. The masterly, ingenious orchestration is still in evidence, but since many of these effects have become the common property of composers they can no longer seem of themselves so eloquent. There are poetic measures in the "Prélude à la Nuit," though the movement does not match the similar movement in Debussy's "Iberia." There are brilliant measures in the final section, but they may hardly inflame the hearer as does the "España" of Chabrier or the Gypsy Dance in "Carmen." And between the poetry of the opening and the rhythmic tumult of the close, is much that now seems lacking both in meaning and in musical charm. Ravel's place as composer does not depend on the vitality of this or of any other single composition. Only recently his String Quartet has given here renewed proof of its rare beauty. But perhaps it will be necessary to strike his name from the list of those who have most successfully celebrated Spain in music.

Again to forecast the future, the day must surely come when Saint-Saëns will be known in concert-halls as the composer of one Concerto for the piano, while only the learned in such matters will be aware of the fact that he wrote four others. Three seasons ago Mr. Ganz resurrected the Fifth, and it seemed hardly worth the trouble of playing. Mr. Cortot is faithful to the Fourth, and yesterday he played it here for the second time. This last piece was once described by Philip Greeley Clapp as "not music at all, but a kind of tonal parlor-magic." Had Mr. Clapp then known Mr. Salzédo's "Enchanted Isles," he would not have wasted this happy phrase on Saint-Saëns's Concerto. In fact, there is in the piece music enough of a sort. It has form, melody and harmony. It is admirably made, effectively orchestrated, and well written for the piano. The chief theme of the Finale arrests the attention; but it is obvious, almost blatant. Yesterday Mr. Cortot played the piece agreeably, often brilliantly quite as well as it deserved to be played. But what a thankless and ungrateful task—one that might quite as well have been performed by a pianola. Beginning in the high spirits of Rossini, a hundred years young, the concert of yesterday came, in the hollow sound of Saint-Saëns forty-eight years old, to a dreary and disappointing conclusion.

W. S. S.

TRANS. FEB. 24

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

WEEK-END OF CASELLA, WAGNER, NOVAES

The Italian Again as Admirable Crichton of Music—The Thrill of an Elate Audience—Feats and Felicities of the Pianist—Past, Present and the People's Orchestra — Forthcoming Programmes

PAST finding out are once more the ways of audiences. Again on Saturday evening was Mr. Casella guest at Symphony Hall. Again he played the piano-part in his own arrangement of Albeñiz's "Spanish Rhapsody"—music languishing or leaping to rhythm, aflame with color, throughout either sigh or spring. Again he was conductor in his "Pupazzetti," wherein sophisticated sport with harmonies, timbres, modulations is voice to as sportive and witty fancy. Again he made half his "Italia" sound as Sicilian woe or ecstasy; while the other half shrilled out of Neapolitan fête over Neapolitan pavement. At every turn the orchestra rose to him; at the end of every piece the audience clapped him again and again. The warmth, the sincerity of it all were not to be questioned.

Yet half an hour before this same audience was hearing as raptly and applauding as heartily the trite or empty meanderings of Glazunov through a Symphony advisedly left these twenty years upon the shelf. It contains a deft and pretty Scherzo, since the Russian has long kept a neat hand at ballet-music. Otherwise it is dullness tonally incarnate. The first and the last divisions of the three-fold piece have nothing to say and say it with a persistent prolixity. Everyone knows the speaker or the writer who winds the thread of an idea into a web of words, forasmuch as he knows every trick of the verbal trade. Even so is Glazunov in this Fourth Symphony. His composing pen, like Gratiano's tongue, con- [illegible] infinite deal of nothing"—and coats it with the [illegible] ever was pit more plainly opened in sight of birds. And with glad twitterings and flappings, into it at these Symphony Concerts most of us gladly flew.

---

H. T. P.

Return and Revelation

A younger generation is discovering the glories of Wagner—receiving, marvelling, transported, elate. An elder generation, out of stores of memory renewed, is sharing with it these high delights. If ever Wagner were gone from Bostonian concert-halls and opera house, as a few seemed fondly to believe, he has returned undiminished, even enhanced, upon both old and young ears. To sit before "Die Walküre, when the Chicago Company passed to that music-drama, was to know the thrill of an audience alert with expectation, a-quiver with those anticipations not only fulfilled but fulfilled beyond all reckoning. Even a mediocre performance of the relatively barren "Parsifal" left like aftermath; while of such, again, were audience and concert yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

For the Pension Fund of the Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Monteux did no more than marshall two overtures, two preludes and two fragments from the operas of "The Ring." From the overtures to "Rienzi" and "Tannhäuser" through the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" to Siegfried murdered and mourned, to Wotan farewelling the fire-girt Valkyr, went the music—haskneyed pieces, played with Mr. Monteux's familiar energies and excitements of the theatre, with the recurring power and the returning beauty of tone as familiar from the answering orchestra. And an audience that stretched sitting-room and standing-room to the utmost limit, listened as to revelation. A piece ended; for an instant came the silence that is return from the world of imagination and emotion whither hearers have departed; then the applause that is release, relief and reward. So went Wagner, rekindled and rekindling. Even the glow of Mme. Onégin's voice and the ardor of her song seemed as passing accessories. Yet Wagner away they make a concert in themselves.

H. T. P.

TRANS. MAR. 5.

MAKING PROGRAMS FOR CHILDREN

Program making is at best a difficult art. No conductor the Boston Symphony has ever had has been able to escape harsh criticism from the subscribers and the reviewers because his programs were too ancient, too modern, too dull, too light, too heavy, too whatever the particular critic happens to abhor. The commonest comment among people leaving a concert hall seems to be "Well, he played all right, but why did he give—" this or that piece the speaker happens to dislike.

Program making for adult listeners is chiefly a problem of providing something to please all tastes likely to be found among those present. But program making for children is an immensely more important and considerably more difficult task.

Mr Monteux, for instance, must realize that for each of the Young People's Symphony concerts his choice of numbers offers many hundred boys and girls their first and possibly their only chance to hear an orchestral concert. If the pieces he selects do not interest the young people they will decide then and there that Symphony concerts are not for them, and will not grow up into potential subscribers for the Monday, the Saturday, or even the Friday series.

Such enterprises as the recitals in former seasons given in Jordan Hall by Messrs Maier and Pattison, or the one to be given next Saturday morning by the Boston Symphony ensemble have of course the same problem of program making to face. What kinds of music will the average boy or girl with no previous musical training and no marked special aptitude for music, find attractive?

What Every Child Likes

The answer may well be sought by considering for a moment what are the qualties the average child likes in the sort of music heard everywhere, in the churches, at the movie houses, from the hurdy gurdies, in the schools, and from the various mechanical devices now to be found in almost every American home. It is this every day music that gives the American child his musical education. The defects of that education are, of course, manifest, but not the subject of the present discourse.

Watch your children and see what music they enjoy. The chances are that it will be music with either a tune they can sing or whistle; or with a simple and vigorous rhythm that sets their toes and fingers a-tingle. It may also be music with a novel or a very rich tone color.

Children usually neither know nor care whether a piece of music is by a great composer. They know what they like and dislike and do not disguise their personal preferences for fear of being thought lacking in musical taste. Musical propaganda of all sorts is quite lost upon them. They trust their ears and not their eyes, their instincts, and not their sense of social fitness.

The problem of making programs for children, then, simmers down to the rather easy task of picking good music that is also simple, with good tunes and vigorous rhythms. The first movement and finale of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, the minuet from Mozart's "Jupiter," the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Berlioz' "Rackoczy March," the scherzo from Schumann's "Rhenish Symphony," the music for King Dodon's return from the wars in Rimsky Korsakov's "Le Coq d'or," the ballet music from Schubert's "Rosemunde" are examples that occur to one offhand as suited for young people's programs.

What Not to Play

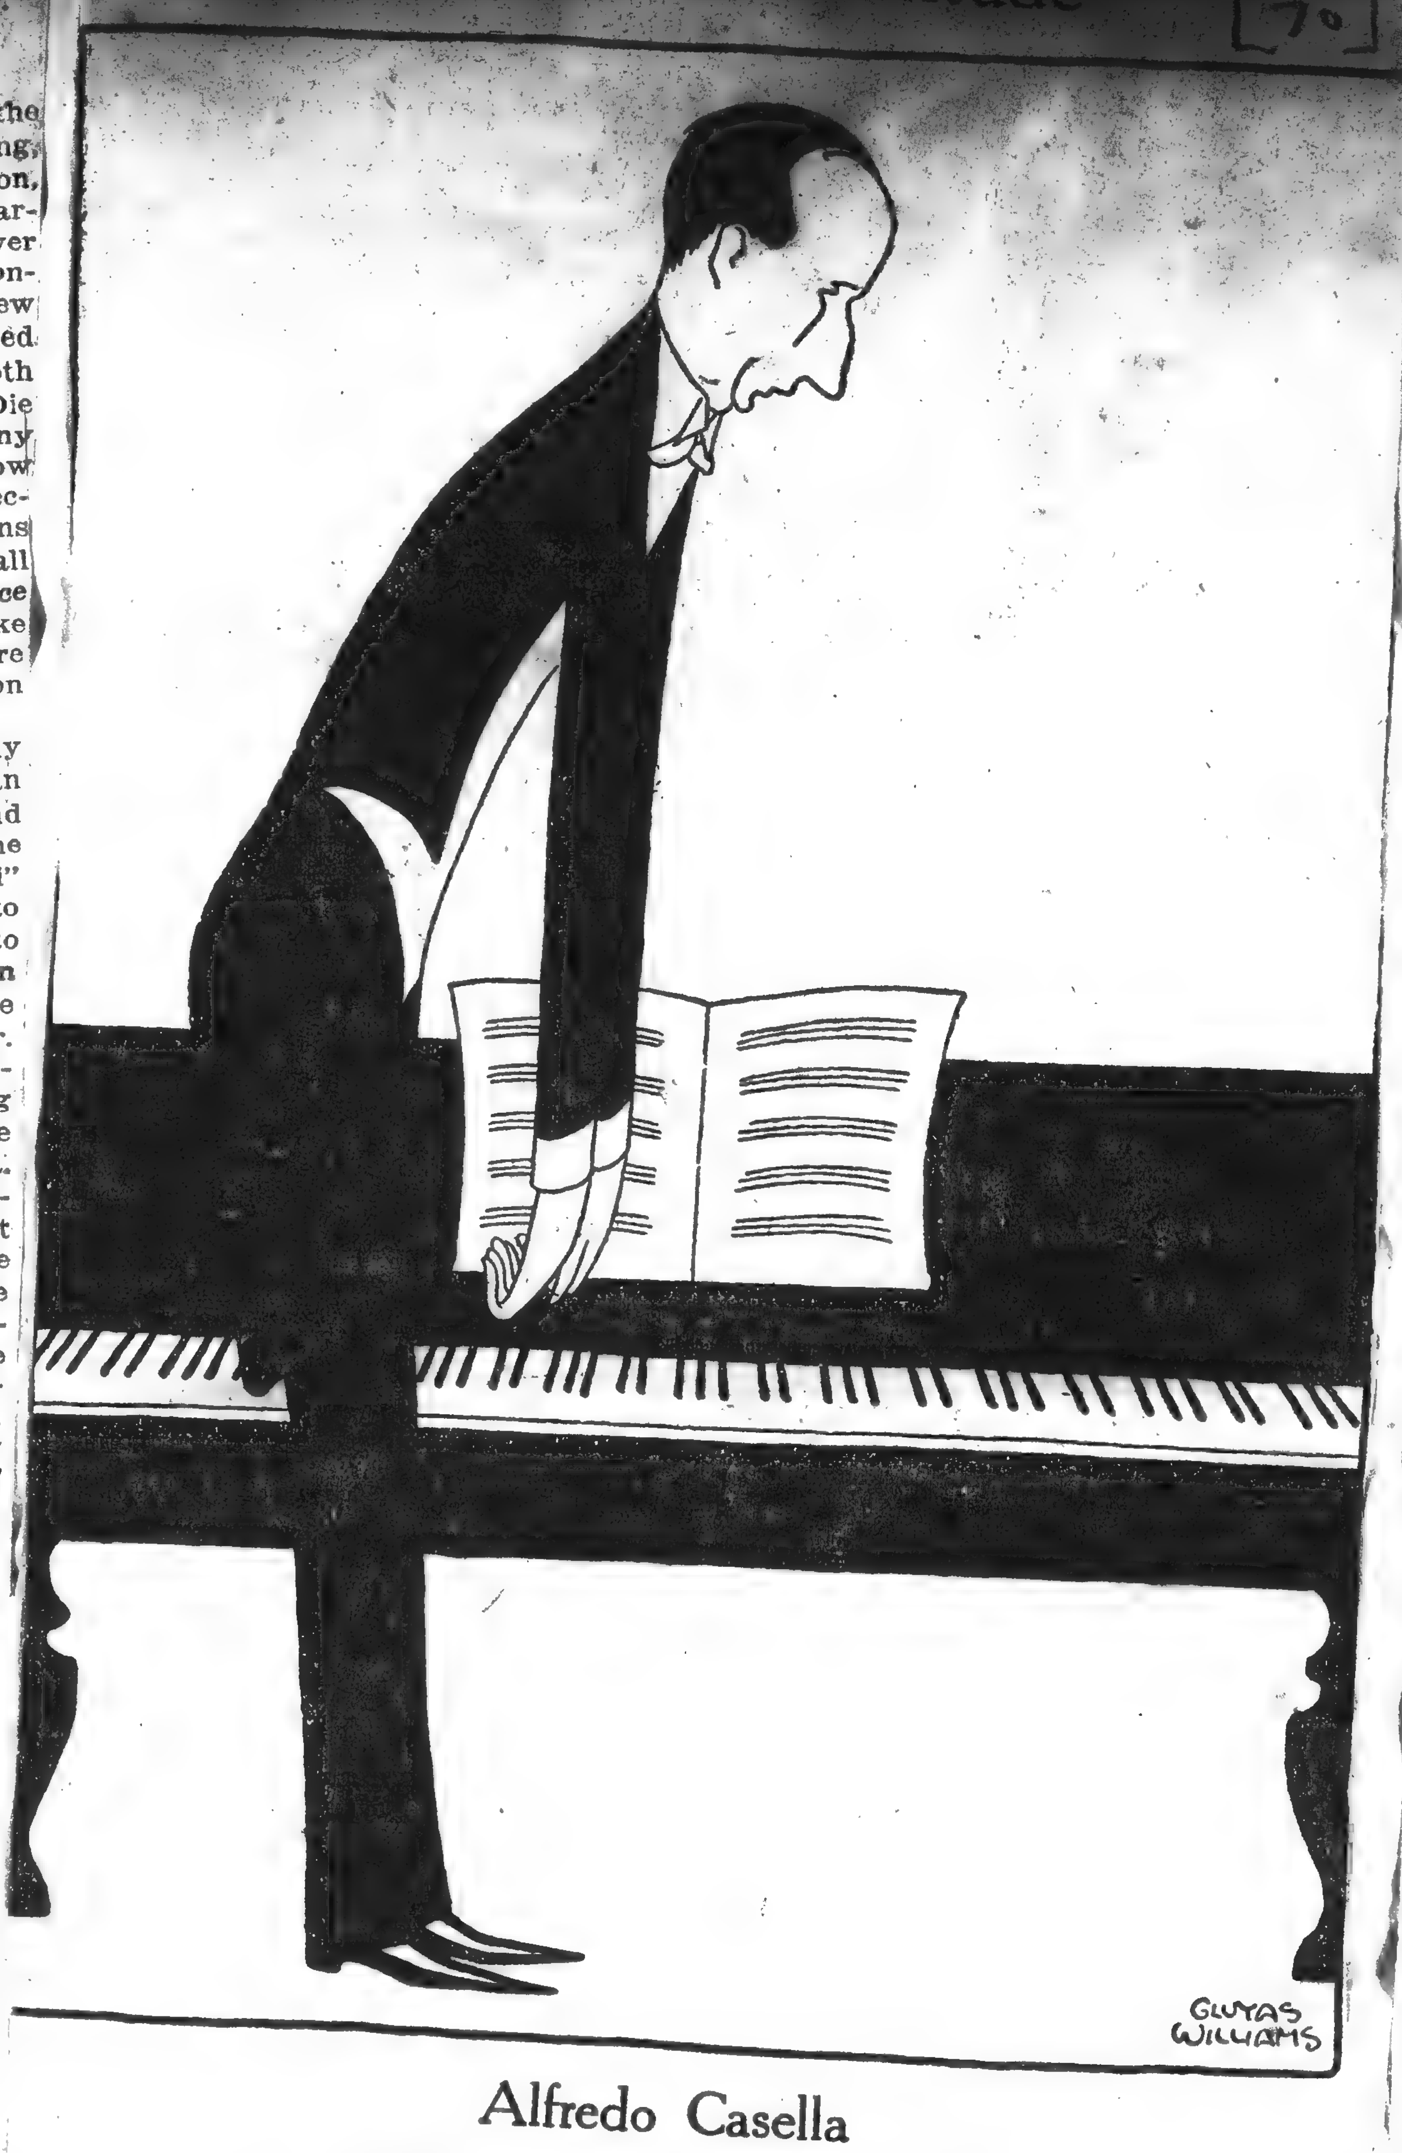
The pretentious, the complex, the sophisticated, the sentimental, and of course, the banal, should be shunned by makers of programs for children. The second rate symphonies will merely bore them, such luscious over ripe melodies as the "Intermezzo" from "Cavalleria Rusticana" will not impress them. The esoteric and not wholly effective things like Loeffler's "Le mort de Tintagiles" will not attract them. The subtle and the delicate will not appeal to them. "The Afternoon of a Faun" will not please, nor the slow movement of Mozart's G minor Symphony.

Pieces with a title suggesting fairy tales might off-hand seem ideal for children. Yet the vagueness of the connection between story and music will annoy the average child, a literal minded young animal that wants every "i" dotted and "t" crossed. What children [illegible] about "Hansel und Gretel" and other fairy operas is not the music.

Children will appreciate naive program music, directly imitative of actual every day sounds, such as the cackling of hens, thunder storms, jumping frogs, and so on, to take stock examples. They would also be impressed by the 'surprise" in Haydn's like-named symphony, or by the departure of the musicians one by one, blowing out their candles in the same composer's less familiar "Farewell" symphony.

The upshot of the matter is that programs at children's concerts should avoid all manner of "high brow stuff" and stick to great music that is also simple and lively.

Gripes of Gratitude [70]



Alfredo Casella

A Departing Guest Bows His Thanks

TRANS. MARCH. 5.

GLOBE FEB. 25.

GUEST of the Symphony Orchestra at its concerts of the current week, Mr. Casella purposes to play the piano-part in his own version of Albeniz's "Spanish Rhapsody." It exacts a band too numerous for the shallow stage of Sanders Theatre. Therefore it was the good fortune of the audience at the Symphony Concert in Cambridge last evening to hear Mr. Casella as pianist in another piece—a Concerto, in D minor, of Mozart. Almost as truly, he played the whole music since, in eighteenth-century fashion, the orchestra did no more than unroll introductions, sketch in backgrounds, and fill pauses with its united voice. Moreover, as was clearly to be heard, Mr. Monteux and his men took cue from the pianist in pace, rhythm, quality of tone and every attribute of performance. They did so with reason, because he brought to the music perfect understanding, perfect sensibility, perfect communication.

Instinctively, the listening ear answered to the pace that Mr. Casella chose; for it was at one with the spirit and the substance of the music. Through each movement, he held to it with eighteenth-century evenness, yet with subtle modifications that spiced or glamored the measures of the moment. So likewise with his rhythm. Again he sought Mozartean clarity, brightness, ease; again he varied the beat with equally adroit hand and fancy. Modulations flowed from fingers as sensitive as the mind and spirit directing them. Transition seemed impulse—for the instant lightly and surely leaping. Ornament purled from Mr. Casella's touch, weaving edgeless arabesques in a gentle shimmer of light and shade. His tone was crystal-clear, yet soft were the lustres and rounded the moving lines and jointures; while honeyed went the euphonies with the orchestral voices. Grace and lightness of line made the final rondo gossamer-elegance. Charm of sentiment played over charm of pattern through the slow song; while to them Mr. Casella added the charm of serene reticence. From him the ear heard the first Allegro as bright particles of tone taking form and shape upon the lambent air.

So went Mozart's music in its own image upon the mirror that was Mr. Casella. Modernist he may be, arch-modernist, if [illegible] praise prefers the word. Yet before he is modernist, he is also musician of keen perceptions, subtle sensibilities, powers as sharpened and refined. Mozart may hardly sound more limpid and lovely as designer of music than he does from Mr. Casella. Mozart may hardly seem more dowered with every felicity of procedure and workmanship than he does at Mr. Casella's hands. The Mozartean modulation and inflection, the Mozarten figure and arabesque, seem as impulse kindled by fancy. Playing, Mr. Casella catches the fancy, shares the impulse. The pure beauty of the Mozartean pattern keeps it perpetual delight. With like sense of beauty, Mr. Casella weaves it anew. The fingers of time may not ruffle the serenity of this Mozartean song. Mr. Casella's fingers brush anew the textures, mould afresh the gentle contours. It is as though a light hand reined sportive fancy through the circlings of Mozart's rondos. Akin is Mr. Casella's. As he is musician to Mozart, so also is he pianist, with every power fine-tempered to the task, with every ability instinct upon the music. Such union between composer and player, between music and medium—with a century and a half, besides, to part them—is as rare fusion as it is rare pleasure. "We also have heard Mozart." it was possible, last evening, for the listeners to say.

H. T. P.

TRANS. MAR. 2.

CASELLA CONDUCTS SYMPHONY

Composer a Pianist of Singular Gifts and Power

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, will be particularly remembered for the appearance as pianist, conductor and composer of Alfredo Casella, a leading spirit of the modern Italian school of composition. Mr. Casella, as pianist, aroused exceptional enthusiasm, which is the stronger [illegible] to his art, since his demeanor was so modest, indeed almost deprecating, that his [illegible] mastery of his instrument and the physical power which this man of slight frame assembled on occasion. The contrast between his obvious authority and his demeanor was indeed almost laughable.

PLAYER AND CONDUCTOR

As a composer, too, Mr. Casella made a lasting impression, and this is said whether one wholly agrees with his music or not. It is the expression of a singularly gifted and arresting personality. Conducting without score, Mr. Casella repeated his achievement as a pianist. He wasted no gestures. Very quietly, unprofessionally, and never in the manner of a prima donna conductor, he led the men in some of the most brilliant and spirited performances that the Boston Symphony has given in recent years.

The Casella compositions, and Casella's orchestration of Albeniz' "Spanish Rhapsody" for orchestra, in which he was the pianist, came in the second half of the programme. Mr. Casella devised his orchestration last summer at Capri. It is almost certain that the music gained by his supervision, since there are few more brilliant virtuosos of instrumentation in the world today. The piece itself is not pretentious, nor of symphonic proportions. It is a virtuoso composition for orchestra, simply devised, and based on Spanish dance rhythms if not themes.

Mr. Casella gave the music an eloquence, also form and dignity it may not originally have possessed, and with the first notes he struck, showed everyone that he was a master. Albeniz fared well in his hands. Albeniz, a performer himself of electrical temperament, a composer who had deep in his art the musical apotheosis of his people! Poor Albeniz!

There followed the "Pupazzetti" of Mr. Casella, "Five pieces for Marionettes," as the sub-title goes. "Composed as accompaniment for . . . the Punch and Judy show, the music mirrors the spasmodic gestures and necessarily angular and fantastic motion of the little mechanical wooden dolls. This is not music to make the man with the crease in the back of his neck laugh. It is more sardonic and it is more cerebral, at times it is piteous, reminding one how near the ludicrous may be to the tragic. It is always distinctive, more advanced in its harmonic idiom than the more popular and emotionally eloquent "Italia" which followed.

But this "Italia," written 12 or 13 years ago, would have a very high position among Mr. Casella's works, if it were only for the opening pages. The melodies employed there are respectively (1) a melody from the province of Caltanissetta, "the savage imprecation of a lover on his mistress"; (2) "a lament sung by the wretched miners of sulphur in their terrible work in the province of Caltanissetta"; (3) a hymn sung in this province during the Good Friday procession.

These themes have remarkable correlation. They are of a piece, and they make one of the noblest, the most mournful and wild invocations to the spirit of a country that we have heard in many a day.

Thereafter is a change of word. The melodies employed are taken from a popular collection and include "Funiculi, Funicula," with a harmonized audacious and biting, and "Lariula" and Tosti's "Amarchiare." The instrumentation is now of crackling brilliancy and again suggestive of the thrumming of guitars. It was played magnificently by the orchestra, inspired by the authority and enthusiasm of the composer, and thrice fortunate was Mr. Casella in the instrument he found at his command, to carry out his wishes.

POST - MAR. 3

CASELLA HEARD AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Conducts Two Works, Plays Piano in a Third

Alfredo Casella, one of the most distinguished of living Italian musicians, was given almost unprecedented prominence in the second half of yesterday's Symphony concert. He played the piano part in his arrangement of Albeniz' "Spanish Rhapsody," and then conducted two of his own compositions, "Pupazzetti" and "Italia." Mr. Casella and his music won a cordial reception from the audience, which is not prone so to honor modernist music and musicians.

Albeniz' rhapsody is a tawdry, trivial piece, which not even Casella's extraordinary skill and taste both as arranger for orchestra and as solo pianist can make emotionally interesting. He treats the piano as an integral part of the orchestra, not as an excuse for bravura display. His instrumentation shows an ear for striking new combinations that produce vivid tonal effects comparable at times to those of Berlioz. He does not always secure euphony and balance of orchestral forces.

One regretted that Casella did not play in Boston the Mozart concerto he gave with the Symphony in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Thursday night, in which his playing was considered by competent judges an almost perfect performance of music that sets the highest test of any performer's skill and taste.

Mr Casella did not shine as a conductor of his own music, not of course because he failed to perceive the type of interpretation it demanded, but because he lacks authority and decision. So subtle and original a musician, with such a wide range of musical sympathies, would no doubt achieve with greater experience a more perfect command of an orchestra under his baton.

His failing as a composer is not a lack of imagination, of sincere and individual emotion, or of mastery of musical idioms. It is that he does not attempt anything great or noble, possibly for fear of not being able to bear comarison with the great works of the ast. So he writes little pieces like the "Pupazzetti," which ironically portrays the sorrows and joys of marionette puppets. When he turns to real life as in "Italia," he relies upon folk songs and popular tunes for his thematic materials, and does not attempt to deal with them in the grand manner, but is content with a pot pourri.

Mr Monteux filled the first half of the program with Mendelssohn's overture, "The Hebrides" and Glazunov's Fourth Symphony. The performance of Mendelssohn's overture, which is in its kind an almost perfect masterpiece, had real distinction of style and subtlety of emotional sympathy. Nobody could have called it "dull."

Glazunov's Symphony, which derives from Rubinstein and Tchaikovsky and has all the defects with few of the merits of their works, was also effectively player. The noisy finale was very warmly applauded, though one felt that Tchaikovsky's "1812," which achieves what Glazunov here attempts would have met an even more cordial reception.

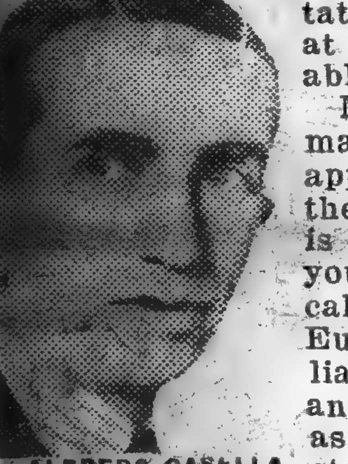
Next week the Harvard Glee Club will sing the choral part in Liszt's "A Faust Symphony," unheard here for some years, but enthusiastically remembered. Arthur Hackett will sing the tenor solo. The other number is a Handel "Concerto Grosso" in D major.

GLOBE. MAR 3

CASELLA PLAYS WITH SYMPHONY

By E. F. HARKINS

Two stars sparkle at this week's Symphony concerts, Alfredo Casella, Italian pianist, composer and conductor, and Pierre Monteux, the regular Symphony conductor, whose interpretative talent is at present all ablaze.



ALFREDO CASELLA

Mr. Casella, making his first appearance at these concerts, is one of the younger musical leaders of Europe—a brilliant pianist and conductor, as he demonstrated yesterday, and a writer of marked modernist tendencies. He played the solo piano part in the first Boston performance of Alboniz's "Spanish Rhapsody," a work of much rhythmic piquancy, with frequent quotations from the familiar Spanish dance catalogue. Later on the gifted visitor conducted his bizarre "Pupazetti," made up of five short pieces for marionettes. There is a great deal of fantastic humor in the composition and ingenious harmonization. Reminiscences, as of the clown band at the circus, made the audience smile. The connoisseurs admired the clever workmanship of the piece and the ironic fancy.

Finally Mr. Casella led the orchestra in a rousing performance of his rhapsody, "Italia," which might have been written as accompaniment to a Neapolitan melodrama. This piece was played at the Pops a few years ago. As a work of art it ranks far below his "Le Couvent sur l'Eau," excerpts from which were performed at the Symphony concerts last season.

However, it was a field day for the young Italian, all around; also for Mr. Monteux and the orchestra, who were in strikingly fine fettle. Conductor and band won deserved ovations after the performance of Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" overture and Glazounov's fine lyric fourth symphony

ADVTSR. MAR. 3.

TRIPLE ROLE FOR CASELLA AT SYMPHONY

By ZOE FABER.

Alfredo Casella, Italian composer, conductor and pianist. was the brilliant star in the symphony firmament yesterday. Two of the five compositions offered bore his name as composer and in a third he was soloist, playing the piano part. Musically, Mr. Casella is a commanding figure. His laurels in any of the three roles would be sufficient to place him high among contemporary musicians.

Since there was more opportunity to judge of him as composer, it is in that role that he appealed most strongly. His "Pupazetti," little bits of things for marionettes, is charming music, and was well conducted.

The Spanish Rhapsody for piano and orchestra by Albeniz, which Mr. Casella orchestrated, was interesting [illegible] his contribution to it through [illegible] of the pianoforte, was, [illegible] a small one. He plays [illegible] regard for the in E flat It has not been heard with this orchestra since 1904. Why so long on the shelf? It is undeserving of such neglect? The audience found it enjoyable and would, it is probable, take kindly to another hearing in the more or less near future.

---

The opening number was the Mendelssohn "Fingal's Cave." Mr. Monteux gave it an entirely satisfy- delssohn's "Fingal's Cave." Mr. peated tonight.

AMER. MAR. 3.

17TH SYMPHONY CONCERT GIVEN

Alfredo Casella, Pianist and Composer, Is Guest Conductor and Soloist

INTERPRETS SOME OF HIS OWN MUSIC

By PHILIP HALE

The 17th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Monteux conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The program was as follows: Mendelssohn, overture, "The Hebrides"; Glazounov, Symphony No. 4, E flat; Albeniz-Casella, Spanish Rhapsody for piano and orchestra (first time here); Casella, "Pupazzetti" (Five Pieces for Marionettes, first time here); Casella, "Italia," Rhapsody (first time at these concerts).

Alfredo Casella, pianist and composer, who yesterday made his first appearance in Boston, although this is his second season in the United States, played the piano part of The Spanish Rhapsody and conducted his "Pupazzetti" and "Italia."

His music was not unknown here. "Italia" was played here at a "Pop" concert some years ago; excerpts from his "Convent on the Water" have been performed twice at Symphony concerts; his 'cello sonata has been played here, and five extraordinary pieces for string quartet were produced by the Burgin Quartet last month. We have not heard his Symphonies, Suite, "Pagine di Guerra," "Elezia Eroica" or "A Notte Alta."

"Italia" was one of his early pieces (1909) before he became known as a leader in the ultra-modern school. "Pupazetti," originally written for piano four hands (performed here by Messrs. Maier and Pattison on two pianos), were orchestrated comparatively recently. The orchestration of the Spanish Rhapsody is dated 1922.

The original score of this Rhapsody was lost. Georges Enesco, who visited Boston this season, orchestrated the accompaniment and the Rhapsody with a young Spanish pianist, Alejandro Ribo, was performed in Paris in 1911.

This Rhapsody in its present form is noteworthy chiefly by reason of Mr. Casella's orchestration. Neither the "Catalonia" played here in 1919 nor this Rhapsody justifies the praise heaped on Albeniz as a composer after his death. Some of his piano pieces have greater individuality. Perhaps his reputation in time will rest on them and his opera "Pepita Jimenez." Surely not on the orchestral compositions that are known to us. For in this Rhapsody the more striking treatment of dance tunes only leads one to exclaim: "How much better all this was done by the Chabrier of the 'Espana!'" Mr. Casella's orchestration gives brilliance, but the music itself seems thrown together in a rather haphazard manner, giving one the idea of superficiality. Rhythm, dash, and instrumental color make at times an intoxicating effect, but the color does not give solidity to the development of Albeniz's ideas.

Mr. Casella's "Pupazzetti" are said to be examples of musical irony in accompaniment of a Punch and Judy show; music that should remind one of the angular motions of puppets. They are short: A Little March, Cradle Song, Serenade, Nocturine, Polka. They might have more significance if a Punch and Judy show were set up on the stage for action during the playing of the music. As music, pure and simple, they are not amusing, and the interest excited is due to the audacious harmonic schemes. Yet there is a certain beauty in the Cradle Song and the Nocturine, nor is the Polka without an appropriately vulgar jollity. We doubt if Mr. Casella reckons the five pieces among his more important works.

But he may well be proud of the first part of his "Italia" in which he evokes the feverish, superstitious, tragic side of Sicilian and Neapolitan life. Using folk themes he does much more than construct a pot-pourri. Here by harmonic originality and by eloquent orchestration he would suggest moods to the hearers even if there were no explanatory program. This music is not photographic in realism; it is emotionally poetic. The second part, intended to evoke the turbulent life of Naples, with the introduction of tunes by Denza, Costa and Tosti, will undoubtedly always be more popular, the music is so spirited, and one may add, so recklessly noisy, in the endeavor to translate Neapolitan characteristics into literal music.

Mr. Casella played and conducted modestly and effectively. They do him grievous wrong, who, amazed by his later works, call him a poseur. The man is sincere, terribly in earnest, broadminded, not puffed up by his own compositions, not discouraged when they are not understood, much less appreciated.

Mendelssohn's beautiful overture and Glazounov's Symphony were greatly enjoyed. The latter is more characteristically Russian than later symphonic works of this fertile composer; it is more interesting, fresher, melodically and contrapuntally. When he wrote this symphony Glazounov had original ideas galore. Perhaps there were too many of them for a constantly artistic work. It is a pity that he did not save some for later use. And in the Scherzo and in the Finale one is reminded of the fact that Glazounov wrote sumptuous ballet music. By the way, is "The Love of Three Kings," on which he was said to be at work five or six years ago, a ballet or an opera?

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of next week's concerts will comprise Handel's Concerto No. 5 for string orchestra and string quartet, and Liszt's "Faust" symphony (chorus the Harvard Glee Club; Arthur Hackett, tenor).

HERALD. MAR. 3.

CASELLA CONDUCTS SYMPHONY

Composer a Pianist of Singular Gifts and Power

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, will be particularly remembered for the appearance as pianist, conductor and composer of Alfredo Casella, a leading spirit of the modern Italian school of composition. Mr. Casella, as pianist, aroused exceptional enthusiasm, which is the stronger tribute to his art, since his demeanor was so modest, indeed almost deprecating, that his past mastery of his instrument and the physical power which this man of slight frame assembled on occasion. The contrast between his obvious authority and his demeanor was indeed almost laughable.

PLAYER AND CONDUCTOR

As a composer, too, Mr. Casella made a lasting impression, and this is said whether one wholly agrees with his music or not. It is the expression of a singularly gifted and arresting personality. Conducting without score, Mr. Casella repeated his achievement as a pianist. He wasted no gestures. Very quietly, unprofessionally, and never in the manner of a prima donna conductor, he led the men in some of the most brilliant and spirited performances that the Boston Symphony has given in recent years.

The Casella compositions, and Casella's orchestration of Albeniz' "Spanish Rhapsody" for orchestra, in which he was the pianist, came in the second half of the programme. Mr. Casella devised his orchestration last summer at Capri. It is almost certain that the music gained by his supervision, since there are few more brilliant virtuosos of instrumentation in the world today. The piece itself is not pretentious, nor of symphonic proportions. It is a virtuoso composition for orchestra, simply devised, and based on Spanish dance rhythms if not themes.

Mr. Casella gave the music an eloquence, also form and dignity it may not originally have possessed, and with the first notes he struck, showed everyone that he was a master. Albeniz fared well in his hands. Albeniz, a performer himself of electrical temperament, a composer who had deep in his art the musical apotheosis of his people! Poor Albeniz!

There followed the "Pupazzetti" of Mr. Casella, "Five pieces for Marionettes," as the sub-title goes. "Composed as accompaniment for . . . the Punch and Judy show, the music mirrors the spasmodic gestures and necessarily angular and fantastic motions of the little mechanical wooden dolls." This is not music to make the man with the crease in the back of his neck laugh. It is more sardonic and it is more cerebral, at times it is piteous, reminding one how near the ludicrous may be to the tragic. It is always distinctive, more advanced in its harmonic idiom than the more popular and emotionally eloquent "Italia" which followed.

But this "Italia," written 12 or 13 years ago, would have a very high position among Mr. Casella's works, if it were only for the opening pages. The melodies employed there are respectively (1) a melody from the province of Caltanissetta, "the savage imprecation of a lover on his mistress"; (2) "a lament sung by the wretched miners of sulphur in their terrible work in the province of Caltanissetta"; (3) a hymn sung in this province during the Good Friday procession.

These themes have remarkable correlation. They are of a piece, and they make one of the noblest, the most mournful and wild invocations to the spirit of a country that we have heard in many a day.

Thereafter is a change of word. The melodies employed are taken from a popular collection and include "Funiculi, Funicula," with a harmonized audacious and biting, and "Lariula" and Tosti's "Amarchiare." The instrumentation is now of crackling brilliancy and again suggestive of the thrumming of guitars. It was played magnificently by the orchestra, inspired by the authority and enthusiasm of the composer, and thrice fortunate was Mr Casella in the instrument he found at his command, to carry out his wishes.

POST. MAR. 3.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

VIVID AFTERNOON OF ALFREDO CASELLA

The Man and the Mind—The Career and the Work—The Composer in Talk, as Pianist and as Conductor—"Italia" as He Re-creates the Music—Flames to Heat Albeniz and a Little Exercise in Humorous, Fanciful, Concision with "Puppets"

EVEN in aspect, Mr. Casella is modernist—to the surprise of some that looked upon him in Sanders Theatre on Thursday evening and in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Gone or going—by the mercy of heaven and the wisdom of common sense—are the days in which musicians would differentiate their appearance from that of other men. Then they wore long hair and brushed it frowsy. Then their clothes were singularly cut and deliberately neglected. Their idiosyncracies protruded. Their manners commingled egotism and eccentricity. All that, no doubt, pleased those who like to babble about "genius" and "art," and who babble still louder when they believe they are in the company of either. Bored or amused, calmer minds and quieter tongues waited a wiser day, now fully dawned and to noon advancing. Eminent conductors now wear the aspect, speech, manners of cultivated men of the world. Illustrious pianists or violinists practice their profession much as do other men in the higher callings and to eye and ear seem as such. Monsieur Ravel, walking the streets of Paris, might be an Englishman in early middle age on holiday in that city. To encounter Schönberg in a café in Vienna were not even to lift the eye of curiosity. Vaughan Williams, seen and heard, might be a gentle professor at the University beyond the Charles; while Mr. Casella coming to Bostonian or Cantabrigian stage bore not a mark of his mingled callings.

These many years, though he is now but turning into his forties, the Italian has been virtuoso-pianist—signal in such a piece as the Concerto of Mozart played in Cambridge, able in the Rhapsody of Albeniz, heard in Boston. From his youth onward, he has been composer, gradually gaining the individual voice that has last spoken through the "Elegia Eroica" and the tone-poem, "A Notte Alta." In faith and work Mr. Casella is modernist in music. Having the gift of tongues—French, German, Italian and even a measure of English—he has spared not the spoken or the written word, defending and illuminating present theories and practice, unfolding and championing the whole generation of rising composers. In his own circle in Rome or in Paris, he is renowned as marvellous reader at sight of the most intricate orchestral score; as quick assimilator of the most baffling music; as ironist who can mock at will the high gods and the minor deities of the tonal Olympus. Yet in Rome or in Paris he does not long linger; and the eminent "programmist" of the Symphony Concerts seemed somewhat puzzled to discover where "he made his home"—as the Bostonian dialect has it. Fortunate Mr. Casella, disposed and able to wander the world, harvesting from it at will or pleasure, enriching thereby a quick, clear mind, a warm yet ironic spirit, a temperament in which ingrained taste is bridle upon inexhaustible curiosity.

Yet, happily, few or none of these traits and abilities are written upon the surface of the man. Mr. Casella is long-figured and slender; yet bearing himself with a natural grace and poise. His eyes are both quick and gentle. His face more suggests sympathies than curiosities. His voice, whatever be the language, runs in the intonations of the cultivated world. His gesture is light, passing, sparing. The chance comer, encountering him apart from the seats of music and musicians, knowing nothing of his nationality, might easily believe him one of those young Englishmen of the upper classes whose aspect and manner have become, for the while and in measure, conscious or unconscious model in the Latin world to men of the arts and men of cosmopolitan inclination.

Mr. Casella smiles, and a touch of wryness suggests the ironist who in a celebrated set of piano-pieces ("A la manière de . . .") mocked the idiosyncracies of famous composers. Mr. Casella speaks warmly of the new generation of Italian composers, praising here, discriminating there, individualizing yet again, and the quick play of idea and word suggests the spirit open at once to the ways of Schönberg and to the jazzing orchestra a' l' Americaine. Mr. Casella warms to his theme. "We Italians," he is saying, "have never been impressionists. We instinctively demand in all the arts clearness and force." And the listener catches a glimpse of the acute mind that has made him the theorist, par excellence, of the modernists. He speaks yet again of the place of beauty in music; of the new beauty of image and sensations that the modernists seek. His eyes brighten; his voice a little deepens and the hearer perceives the imagining spirit and the inventing hand that wrought the poignant and manifold beauty of "A Notte Alta," the plangent lament, high and deep, of the "Elegia Eroica."

Unfortunately not with either of these pieces—the present flower of Mr. Casella's work—did he come to Symphony Hall. They are written in the piercing, astringent modernist speech in which music is finding new voice. They are written with that directness of sensation and image which is glory to the modernists and shame to those who would have all things veiled, softened and smoothed away. They are written as well with that terseness of means and sharpness of impression which is strain to the listener in the concert-hall and therefore dreaded by the "speak-easies" and the "go-easies" of both sexes, all ages and every nationality. No; "A Notte Alta," with its imagery of the solitary, icy, stressful and pangful night, of human hearts in deep affection ravished and rent, is not for tender ears, lazy minds and the everlastingly content with what was, is and (in their fond view) ever shall be. No more does the "Elegia Eroica" lament the sort of war that it is the custom to glorify; nor traverse the woes thereof which it is the custom to set in public view. A year ago, did not the audience that sits before the Philadelphia Orchestra in New York—probably the most hide-bound company in America toward novel music—reject with scorn "A Notte Alta?"

Perish the thought that to Honegger should succeed Casella as disturber of the social peace of Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall or as perturber of tired business-men there seeking "recreation" on Saturday evening. Accordingly the audience heard Mr. Casella as pianist in his own orchestral version of Albeñiz's "Spanish Rhapsody," and as conductor and composer in the trifles named "Pupazzetti" and in the familiar "Italian Rhapsody." The piano-part gave him no such opportunity as the evening before the Concerto of Mozart afforded. Albeñiz's—or Casella's—piano through the "Spanish Rhapsody" is little more than one more instrument, more or less conspicuously added to the orchestra. Now and then it cleaves the tonal mass. Now and then it rides and whips the other instrumental voices. Again it adds its own flare of color; while once or twice in a way, it actually sounds a motiv or proclaims a rhythm. Whatever fell to it lay easily within Mr. Casella's abilities. Assiduous was he to hold it in balance with the other instruments; adept with its color; clear and clanging when, as they say in bridge, it really had the lead. Yet these were the works of the intelligent and practised virtuoso and musician, not of the diviner and recreator of Mozart in a half-forgotten Concerto.

As conductor, in turn, Mr. Casella—to make a paradox—is both remarkable and commonplace. By the testimony of the eye, here is one more composer conducting—with hazy beat, none too much solicitude for parted choirs or individualized instruments, none too clear a notion of means to ends. Yet by the testimony of the ear, Mr. Casella is making "Italia" sound as never before it has sounded in this town. As the pedantic analysts say, he is "exposing the motivs," whence the music upsprings and unfolds, and they become as though charactered anew. The Neapolitan street-tunes cut, flash, cleave their way into rhythmic being. With one and all, Mr. Casella accents the striding, feverish, gutter-note. Or he bares the lament of the sulphur-miners and it is knife-like. Or he sings the melody of the Good Friday hymn and the simple ecstasy touches the heart. Now love may be in Sicily a fierce, a savage thing, and fiercely, savagely does Mr. Casella make it sound. Period, by period, division by division, "Italia" is becoming the tone-poem that it really is. Here go the rattle and the flare of Neapolitan streets; and here go also and with infinitely deeper impression—the pangs, the plangencies, the bitter-sweet ecstasies of this Sicily in tones. Ever about the music crackle like little tongues of tonal flame harmonies and timbres, modulation and progression. Of course "Italia" is "early Casella"; but not a whit—"the composer conducting"—do the years diminish the pulsing vitality, the graphic power, of the music.

"Pupazetti" are another affair. Originally, this music of marionettes was five little pieces for two pianos. Now it is five little pieces for orchestra. not so numerous as it is variegated and pliant of voice. One piece marches in the puppets; in another the puppet-mother sings lullaby; or the dolls make sardonically merry in a Serenade; testify to their wooden angular loves; or go for the sport of it to a noisy and manifold fair. Mr. Casella writes of them as with an affectionate humor. With his hand he strokes them; while with his eye he mocks them. Like every Italian he likes them; even pins to their music the diminutives of affection. Brief indeed are the orchestral pieces—terse in the fashion dear to the modernists. Incisive also are they as well. Every modulation "counts"; every play of harmony or timbre tells. It is as though Mr. Casella were amusing himself with the utmost concision of quasi-humorous fancy making music. The listener smiles at the jerking march of the puppets uneasy; at the creak of their love-making; at the snap and cackle of their fun-making. So, perhaps, would Mr. Casella set foil to the whirling rhythms, the flaring color, the flaming languor, the flamboyant frenzies of Albeniz plus—and largely plus—himself.

H. T. P.

TRANS. M

[71]

SYMPHONY HALL. Today at [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra, concert in aid of the pension fund. Wagner program. Overtures to "Rienzi" and "Tannhauser"; preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger"; "Siegfried Funeral Music" from "Goetterdammerung"; "Wotan's Farewell" and "Magic Fire Music" from "Die Walkuere"; songs with orchestra, "Traume" and "Schmerzen," Wagner; "Lament of Andromache" from "Achilles," Max Bruch. Soloists, Sigrid Onegin, contralto, and Charles H. Bennett, baritone.

Friday at 2:30 and Saturday at 8:15. Boston Symphony Orchestra, 18th program. Concerto Grosso in D major, Handel; "A Faust Symphony," Liszt. The Harvard Glee Club will assist. Tenor soloist, Arthur Hackett.

Great curiosity is felt by many who missed hearing Onegin's recital here, which roused the enthusiasm of amateur as well as professional music critics, about the Metropolitan's wonderful new contralto. They can satisfy it by hearing her at the Pension Fund Wagner program today.

In a little essay on conductors printed in last Sunday's New York Times, and signed by Richard Aldrich, its musical editor, occur the following remarks about Karl Muck: "Karl Muck is still an active figure in German orchestral music; and there have been few or no finer conductors heard in New York than he," and again in the same article: "It is a rare thing to find a man like Dr Muck, who had his musical tastes and preferences like everybody else, but who kept them sternly suppressed when he made his programs. He played impartially all schools that he thought offered good music and he was one of the few men who could and would give as good a performance he had little sympathy with as of any he had." Boston has had ample opportunity to feel the truth of these remarks.

GLOBE - MAR 4

Alfredo Casella Guest of Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its seventeenth concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program:

Mendelssohn—Overture, "The Hebrides."
Glazounoff—Symphony No. 4 in E flat.
Albeniz—Spanish Rhapsody for Piano and Orchestra (orchestrated by Casella).
Casella—"Pupazzetti," Five Pieces for Marionettes.
Casella—"Italia" Rhapsody, Op. 11.

There was a time when the music of the Russians was a revelation by reason of its brilliant orchestration, the piquancy of its thematic material. Ears accustomed to the orchestra of Beethoven, Schumann, even Wagner, found delight in this music because of the novel employment and combinations of the instruments, and almost any piece by a Russian composer was certain to be an effective addition to a repertory which had over long been confined too exclusively to the so-called "classics". Now that many of these devices of orchestration have become an everyday affair, the listener seeks for something more substantial than mere effects of color, and, in a calmer frame of thought, is not led to such enthusiasm as in days of yore, unless he finds, beneath this surface glitter, music of solid structure and real poetic content.

Glazounoff's Symphony is a case in point. A few years ago, this music, by its very brilliancy, would have carried all before it, and even yesterday it almost succeeded in doing so. Nevertheless, there is much in it which is essentially commonplace, much that is, after all, but fine-sounding stuff without much musical worth. The introduction and parts of the first allegro are characteristically Russian, and for that reason charm, but the scherzo and final movement contain many measures of padding, manufactured according to familiar German formulas. When all is said and done, only a composer of the very first rank can sustain the interest in a fully developed symphonic movement, and even Beethoven, great as his genius was, did not always succeed in this respect in his longer movements. No unprejudiced listener will hesitate to admit that there are many tiresome repetitions even in the third and fifth symphonies, repetitions brought about by a too great attention to details of form, details which were considered important at the time, but which the years and a changed attitude on the part of the musical public have proved to be unessential and conventional. But the genius of a Beethoven could overcome these difficulties and shine forth in spite of them. Not so Glazounoff, a composer far below Beethoven as a symphonic writer, and so we find in this symphony pages of an exceeding dullness, pages given over to musical sermonizing which adds little to the interest of the composition.

The second half of the concert was given over to Alfredo Casella, the Italian composer, conductor and pianist. Mr. Casella is an interesting and outstanding figure in the musical world, though his talents, great as they are, would hardly seem to warrant so much time devoted to them in a symphony concert. As a composer he was represented by his set of five pieces for marionettes, "Pupazzetti," and his rhapsody "Italia," both of which he conducted. He also played the piano part in Albeniz's Spanish Rhapsody, which he has orchestrated.

The "Pupazzetti" are amusing little pieces, scarcely to be taken seriously. They show cleverness in the handling of modern harmonies but there is little in them to distinguish them from much other music in similar vein. They are not so daring as Strayinsky or Milhaud, though they venture further [illegible] than the compositions of other contempor[illegible] "Italia" is notable chiefly for the brilliancy of its orchestration, which is that of a master hand. In the final section there is much that is superfluous. Denza's Neapolitan song sets the feet to dancing, but after all it furnishes but slender material for extended development.

Mr. Casella's orchestration of the Spanish Rhapsody is singularly restrained for a transcriber of such unquestioned gifts. Musically, this rhapsody is loosely constructed, being but a succession of Spanish tunes, succeeding one another without particular design. It furnished the pianist little opportunity for other than technical display, and that of a conventional sort. As a pianist Mr. Casella will doubtless appear to better advantage in the recital which he purposes giving later in the season.

S. M.

MONITOR MAR. 3.

SIGRID ONEGIN DELIGHTS AUDIENCE

Wagner Program by Boston Symphony Orchestra

Crowded House for the Pension Fund Concert

A Wagner program and the presence of Sigrid Onegin, the Metropolitan Opera's wonderful new contralto, as soloist combined to attract throngs to Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon for the Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The hall was jammed to capacity, and to judge by the congested lobby around the box office just before the performance began, hundreds were turned away—this despite the competition of Galli-Curci at the Opera House and the People's Orchestra across the way at the St James.

One hopes Mr Monteux will see that choice of program and assisting artist have much to do with the success of these special concerts.

Despite a curious choice of numbers, which passed by Wagnerian opera to select a monotonous and insipid "Lament of Andromache" from the late Max Bruch's "Achilles," Mme Onegin swept her audience off its feet by the unparalleled power and beauty of her voice, which is an organ with no resemblance worth noting to any other heard here of late years. There were countless recalls for her, though nearly everyone present must have known that no encores could be permitted at a Boston Symphony concert.

She also sang with orchestra two Wagner songs, the unfamiliar and not wholly successful "Schmerzen" and the hackneyed "Traeume." In these she showed deep if not subtle emotion, and capable musicianship. There are technical faults in her singing. She seems a made rather than a born musician, but with vocal riches like hers she may expect to be forgiven much, even by professional critics.

Mr Monteux and the orchestra gave a performance of the "Rienzi" overture of such vigorous and appropriate dramatic intensity that the audience was stirred to extraordinarily energetic applause.

The prelude to "Die Meistersinger" was worse played than the writer has yet heard it at a concert of this orchestra. There were several unexpected and undesirable innovations in the performance which one hopes were accidents and not "new readings," though they consisted in giving prominence to details usually subordinate.

The nearer to ordinary opera house routine Wagner's music is, the better Mr Monteux conducts it. When it reaches the heights of the "Siegfried Funeral Music" he gets too excited to keep a steady tempo and accurate dynamics. When it is a stock piece one fears he does not rehearse it sufficiently. Whatever the cause, Mr Monteux's conducting of Wagner's greater works is almost invariably ineffective, comparatively speaking.

GLOBE MAR. 5.

SECOND PENSION FUND CONCERT

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Program of Wagner's Music

MME. ONEGIN AND MR. BENNETT SING

For the second "pension fund" concert of the season, Mr. Monteux arranged a program of Wagner's music, with the addition of Andromache's Lament from the third part of Bruch's "Achilles," sung by Mme. Sigrid Onegin.

Wagner……………Overture to "Rienzi"
Wagner……………Prelude to "Lohengrin"
Bruch..Lament of Andromache from "Achilles"
MME. ONEGIN
Wagner……………Overture to "Tannhauser"
Wagner,
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"
Wagner……………Songs with Orchestra
1. "Schmerzen"
2. "Traume"
MME. ONEGIN
Wagner,
Death of Siegfried and Funeral March from "Dusk of the Gods"
Wagner,
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music from "The Valkyrie"
Wotan—CHARLES H. BENNETT

Before even mounting the steps of Symphony hall one felt an exciting atmosphere of expectancy, as of something great to come. Indoors this [illegible] room, and the audience seemed unusually alive. Right through the concert this element of alertenes laster. The Rienzi overture and the Tannhauser caused such rousing applause that Mr. Monteux invited the orchestra to stand and share it. Mme. Onegin was recalled again and again, an honest tribute to her singing, not a teasing clamor for more. The spirit abroad in Symphony hall must have brought content to everybody who had a hand in the occasion. It is rarely enough aroused, in very truth.

But there was music yesterday to rouse it. Do not the throng in Symphony hall, and the enthusiasm it brought to bear, tell a tale? And the moral of that tale is surely this: To draw large audiences and to hold those audiences bound, programs must consist for the most part of music that for the vast majority of music lovers possesses the great quality of being alive—or into which, at all events, a conductor or a performer of genius can still infuse the breath of life. Great music of the past most of us still want to hear; music of the present that may prove great, we needs must hear, if musically we would grow. Music, though, that is emotionally stirring to the people of today, music that can bring thrills of joy or pain to men and women who are living, loving, suffering—this is the music that must make the mainstay of programs if people are to be lured to the concert hall. If, as in the case of Wagner, such music rejoices as well in beauty that is supreme, so much the better. But beauty alone, or an interest of the intellect, except for an audience of specialists, will not serve. Concert-givers who think otherwise imagine a vain thing.

The performance yesterday needs few words. Especially remarkable seemed the brilliant playing of the "Rienzi" overture, the superb close of the "Tannhauser," and the last part of the "Walkure" excerpt. Mme. Onegin, more artistically restrained than she was at her recent recital, by her beautiful voice, admirable technique and warmth of style, brought the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. Mr. Bennett sang with taste and intelligence, giving its full value to the impressive phrase where Wotan kisses away Brunnhilde's divinity.

R. R. G.

HERALD - MAR 5

The program of the Symphony concerts tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening will comprise Handel's Concerto Grosso, No. 5, for string orchestra and string quartet; and Liszt's great symphony, "Faust," with the Harvard Glee Club for the chorus music and Arthur Hackett, tenor. The last performance of the symphony was in March, 1917, in memory of Pauline Agassiz Shaw, when Mr. Townsend's chorus took part, and Mr. Hackett was the tenor.

HERALD - MAR. 8

HARVARD GLEE WITH SYMPHONY

Male Chorus Most Effective in Liszt's "Faust"

BY OLIN DOWNES

It will be a long time before the writer forgets the impression made upon him, and, evidently, upon the audience, by the singing of the Harvard Glee Club in the finale of Liszt's "Faust" symphony, at the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, yesterday afternoon, in Symphony Hall.

This music had not been sung before in Boston with such beauty, freshness, and sonority of tone, but what meant much more was the high and sincere spirit of the interpretation. This was no band of singers required to execute in more or less perfunctory fashion a part of a modern composer's score. The young men knew what they were singing. They felt it, and they conveyed what they felt with the unblemished sincerity of their years.

Their performance was a fitting capstone of a remarkable composition, and the conclusion of a brilliant concert. It offered additional testimony to the wonderful accomplishments of Dr. Archibald Davison of the Harvard music faculty. When young men from various localities and positions in life meet, and are trained, and express themselves as yesterday, it says much for the rising generation and for a university which fosters such a spirit.

Extraordinarily Impressive

The programme of the concert consisted of the Handel "Concerto grosso," No. 5, in D major and the "Faust" Symphony. For us this symphony grows more significant with repetition and better acquaintance. Dr. Muck made certain cuts in the score which made for desirable condensation. Mr. Monteux, if memory serves, restored some of the passages which had been eliminated. We thought his tempi in the opening of the first movement and in certain other phases somewhat too fast, so that the phrases [illegible] not o[illegible]

The [illegible] most effec[illegible] the spirit of Liszt, and it was not only the Glee Club but Mr. Monteux who made the final pages say so much. He achieved here, in very full measure, the ceremonious manner which, with Liszt, is sometimes shoddy, and sometimes, as in this "Faust" symphony, extraordinarily impressive.

The symphony itself looms greater with the years. We think it the most remarkable composition of Liszt for orchestra, and we include in this estimate the symphonic poems as well as the far inferior "Dante" symphony. The "Faust's" symphony is long. It is pretentious, if you like, Liszt is always that. But it is superbly proportioned, and so prophetic and completely of tomorrow in its technic that one can scarcely imagine such works as the "Zarathustra" or "Eulenspiegel" of Strauss, or, indeed, a good half of the musical scores of today, without it. Liszt selected his subject matter with an artist's intuition.

First Faust, the dreamer, longing for he knows not what, tormented by his scepticism on the one hand and the visions of the faith, the youth, the purity of Gretchen on the other. Gretchen, simple, trusting, the simple girl, and the wonderful introduction of the Faust motives which show in this music just as the image of Faust showed in the mirror that Gretchen holds before her in one version of the tale. Then Mephistofeles, the "spirit of denial," the malignant and sneering parody of the Faust music, and, for a final musical tableau, the "chorus mysticus," the woman soul leading upward and on.

Of Astounding Audacity

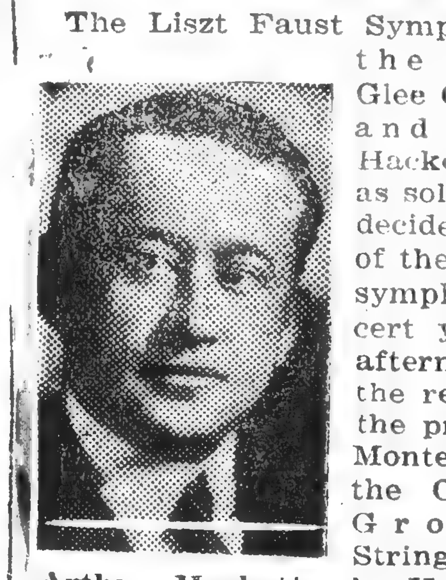
The composer's inspiration responds to each of these suggestions, and his technic, in the "Faust" symphony, is completely mature. It stands today, quality which will cause it long to remain on programmes and in the minds of lovers of music.

The audience recalled Mr. Monteux, the soloist, Mr. Hackett, the Glee Club, the orchestra itself, for long minutes after the end of the concert.

POST - MAR. 10.

GLEE CLUB ASSISTS AT SYMPHONY

By ZOE FABER.



Arthur Hackett.

The Liszt Faust Symphony, with the Harvard Glee Club chorus and Arthur Hackett, tenor, as soloist, were a decided feature of the eighteenth symphony concert yesterday afternoon. For the remainder of the program Mr. Monteux chose the Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra by Handel.

A great many people who were two or three minutes late were deprived of the pleasure of the entire five movements of the music since obviously, strict orders had been given that the doors were not to be opened. The soloists of the Concerto were R. Burgin and J. Theodorowicz, violins G. Fourel, viola, and J. Bedetti, cello. It was beautifully played.

The Faust symphony was impressive, both as to orchestra and chorus. The voice of Mr. Hackett was effective in spite of a slight cold. The audience seemed far more enthusiastic over the second movement, "Gretchen" than about the first.

But it was really in the third and last, the "Mephistopheles" that the climax of the whole is reached. The combination of a skilled orchestra, an experienced chorus, a splendid soloist and an organ make for sonority that is immensely impressive. The concert will be repeated tonight. It is well worth hearing because it is an unusual symphony concert.

AMER. MAR. 10.

18TH CONCERT OF SYMPHONY

Harvard Glee Club and Arthur Hackett, Tenor, Assist Orchestra

PROGRAM TO BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE

The 18th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The orchestra was assisted by Arthur Hackett, tenor, and the Harvard glee club. The program was as follows: Handel, Concerto Grosso No. 5, D major, for string orchestra and string quartet (Messrs. Burgin, Theodorowicz, Fourel and Bedetti), edited by [illegible]

After Handel has been idolized for years in England, it is now the fashion in some quarters to underrate him. He is accused of retarding the development of music in that country from the time of Purcell. The irreverent speak of him as a bigwig. As a matter of fact, Handel in these days is known chiefly in England by his "Messiah," which no doubt is performed there, as here, in a perfunctory manner. His orchestral works are seldom named on a program. The wealth of his operatic treasury of airs is little explored.

Whenever we hear a concerto of Handel's we recognize the truth of John F. Runciman's bold statement that Handel is the most superb personage in the history of music. Runciman used the word "superb" in its original meaning. The concerto of yesterday is of the proud, exalted kind. It was Handel's delight occasionally to give the indication "pomposo" to characterize the spirit of a movement; but his "pomp" was not the circus pomp in which Liszt too frequently indulged. There is no tinsel, no smell of the sawdust in Handel's music. The Introduction to this concerto has true pomp and majesty. It might serve as a prelude to the magnificent statement: "Belshazzar, the King, made a great feast to a thousand of his lords, and drank wine before the thousand."

As for the Largo, it might be played before a reading of "Paradise Lost." No one, not even Beethoven, has produced the same effect of unearthly solemnity with as simple means. There is an incomparable serenity, a spiritual beauty in this solemnity, as if it was the utterance of a mighty archangel.

And in the lighter movements of the concerto there is a human touch far different from the Gothic feeling of his contemporary Bach.

The Concerto was finely played. Mr. Monteux may well be proud of his strings as well as of the orchestra which he has formed and moulded into one euphonious, plastic and eloquent instrument.

What a pity that Liszt did not have the gift of self-criticism! What a pity that the "Faust" Symphony could not be put in a duck-press that the superfluities might be removed! It is, indeed, a colossal work, imaginative, with one movement, "Gretchen," charged constantly with beauty of the highest order; there is no denying the ingenuity of the purely orchestral portion of the last movement, which for some reason or other did not have yesterday the ironic bite that has characterized previous performances; but in the first and the third movements there are many measures of an inconsequentially portentous nature—as if one were heard crying—"In the name of the Prophet—figs!" Endless repetitions of trifling phrases weary the ear and check the attention. There are countless pauses—so many that they lose impressiveness—and dull curiosity as to what is to follow.

The Glee Club sang with an imposing tonal body in the forte and fortissimo passages, and with a regard for the nuances elsewhere. Mr. Hackett again sang the solo measures intelligently. His voice has such a beautiful quality; he uses it, as a rule, so skilfully and effectively that it was disappointing to hear yesterday occasional unsteadiness of tone.

The concert will be repeated tonight. There will be no concerts next week. The program of March 16 and 17 is as follows: Beethoven, Overture to "Coriolanus," and violin concerto (Mr. Burgin); Koechlin, Three Chorales: Goossens, Scherzo "Tam O'Shanter"; Debussy, Suite "Printemps."

HERALD - MAR. 10

Harvard Club At Symphony

At this week's Symphony concerts the outstanding feature is Liszt's "Faust" symphony, performed with the assistance of Arthur Hackett, tenor, and the Harvard Glee Club. The performance yesterday afternoon was one of the best on record, due to the spirited and sympathetic work of orchestra, chorus and soloist. Monteux, Mr. Hackett and Dr. Davison of the glee club shared in the ovation that followed. The symphony is one of Liszt's master works, poetic, dramatic, marvelously lyrical. Handel's "Concerto Grosso," for string orchestra, was also a great treat.

ADVTSR. MAR. 10.

GLEE CLUB SINGS AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Harvard Students Aid in Liszt's "Faust Symphony"

Boston Globe Mar. 10

If any further confirmation of the high standard of musical achievement reached by the Harvard Glee Club under its present leadership was needed, yesterday's appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Liszt's "A Faust Symphony" supplied it. The male chorus in the last movement was sung extraordinarily well, with technical accuracy and emotional energy, rousing prolonged and hearty applause. Dr Davison was warmly received by the audience when he came out on the stage at the end of the performance. Mr Monteux had, of course, conducted, since the chorus is an integral part of the symphony.

The tenor solo gave Arthur Hackett a chance to do the best singing he has yet offered a Boston audience. His voice has gained both resonance and sweetness. His assistance, like that of the Glee Club, contributed notably to the success of the performance. The movement in which the singers aided the orchestra was yesterday by far the most impressive of the three, though it has not always seemed so in the past.

This symphony is the most ambitious and the most original of Liszt's larger works. Yesterday it seemed longer and less brilliant than when the revised version discovered by Dr Muck was first played here. More incisive and more subtly varied dynamics would have improved the performance.

The tumultuous passion of Faust, the tender innocence of Gretchen, and the glittering harshness of Mephistopheles were not as well characterized by the orchestra and Mr Monteux as one had hoped they would be. But memory may have played the listener a trick in making him certain that former performances of this symphony were far more extraordinary than yesterday's was, except for the chorus and tenor.

The only other number was a Handel concerto grosso for string orchestra, in D major, edited by Kogel. The solo violins were Richard Burgin and Julius Theodorowicz, the viola Georges Fourel, the violoncello Jean Bedetti. This quartet played with a beauty of tone and a subtle musicianship beyond that attained by the rest of the strings. One felt that the tone of the mass of strings was not solid enough, not of fine and beautiful texture. The men did not keep absolutely together. The sum of their individual slight roughnesses of tone, and their almost infinitesimal failures to follow exactly the conductor's beat produced a rather heavy and lumpish effect. In this piece also dynamics and phrasing, for which Mr Monteux may be held largely responsible, were unsatisfactory at times.

It should be added that any failures of the present orchestra are not and cannot be solely the fault of the conductor, who without skilful and eager cooperation from the players is obviously not in a position to reach the highest possible standard of artistry.

There are no Symphony concerts next week. March 23 and 24 Richard Burgin is to play the Beethoven violin concerto. The other numbers now scheduled are Debussy's "Printemps," Goosens' "Tam o' Shanter," three chorales by Koechlin, and Beethoven's "Coriolan" overture.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

AFTER YEARS LISZT'S "FAUST" AGAIN

A Music in Which Mr. Monteux Has Still to Ripen—Too Literal, Too Expository a Performance—The Harvard Glee Club's Notable Share—And Always the Romantic Virtue of Many a Page

NO easy job was Mr. Monteux's at the Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon. Until Dr. Muck's day Liszt's "Faust Symphony" haunted the shelves rather than the stage of Symphony Hall. Seldom did conductors venture it; not too clearly did hearers recall it. Dr. Muck warmly admired the music; spared no pains, missed no merit, in performance. Speedily the "Faust Symphony" became one of the show-pieces of both orchestra and conductor; while repetition upon repetition hardly lessened it as event in the musical year. With Dr. Muck's departure, Faust, Gretchen and Mephistopheles slept again in the library; but Liszt's imaging of them, as lined and colored by the conductor, lingered in many a memory. The Symphony is one to attract Mr. Monteux. Yet five years has he waited to revive it, less conscious, perhaps, of the inevitable comparisons than disposed to wait until he, his orchestra and his audience were in full readiness.

As probabilities go, Mr. Monteux has lately rehearsed and yesterday conducted in the "Faust Symphony" for the first times; while in outcome with it he stands exactly as he did with one or another fragment from Wagner's music-dramas. When, of old, he essayed the Prelude to "Tristan" or the final scene from "Götterdämmerung," there were audible shortcomings a-plenty. Yet, as clearly, he answered to the substance and the spirit of the music, in degree conveying both to his hearers. The gist of Wagner was in him; he needed only ampler study, more expert adjustments, a larger ease and confidence, in order to impart and enhance it.

So, in fact, has Mr. Monteux ripened in the playing of Wagner's music until many a performance of it praises him. With it, however, his perpetual pitfall is over-excitement. He is ardent for the piece in hand, above all for the upspringing mood and emotion. With it he would drench orchestra and audience. In the exciting pursuit of this goal, he forgets to hold the performance in the clarity, the plasticity [illegible] which are as essential as the [illegible] result is such a blurred and [illegible] version of the Prelude to [illegible] that of last Sunday. [illegible] he becomes [illegible]

This tendency to detailing exposition and to consequent dryness haunted Mr. Monteux through the "Faust Symphony." In the "character-picture," as Liszt calls it, of Mephistopheles, the music often distorts and derides motivs that have already marked Faust or Gretchen. So, for example, Liszt's fiend mocks and wrenches the easily remembered motiv of Faust, romantic, ardent, impassioned. Mr. Monteux would have these ironies as clear as the day, plying upon them a Gallic logic and exactitude. He opened the orchestra, as it were, to state and restate them. In the process, however, they lost wit and bite. Everyone understood them, but nobody felt them. Mephistopheles was not so much playing his game of derision as taking his exercise in a kind of chop-logic. Similarly with the first "character-picture" which, at best, is rather over-expansive delineation of "Faust." Mr. Monteux would have every detail precise and pregnant. He would enumerate and label the attributes of "Faust" as though the music were a card-catalogue. So doing he molded phrases, sharpened lines, multiplied rhetorical pauses to dryness and desiccation, to the extinguishing of romantic glow. Not a character-picture of Faust, but a brief about Faust did Liszt seem to be making.

Only the music of Gretchen and the final pages of the Symphony set Mr. Monteux free from this excess of expository zeal. Even those who try their best not to see Liszt as he really and romantically is, agree to the sensuous imagery that he twines about the girl, to the voice of mingled innocence and passion with which he bids her speak, to the echo of the memories returning to haunt her. Here, in short, goes music clothed equally with intrinsic beauty and suggestion of character. Few Marguerites upon the stages of opera houses may be like to this Gretchen upon the stage of an orchestra and an imagination. The cue was ready for Mr. Monteux. As conductor in the theatre as well as conductor in the concert-hall, he was sure to take it. In one hand he bore the beauty of the Lisztian Gretchen; with the other he characterized her. Most of her music, moreover, falls primarily to the wood-wind choir. For long it has been the preëminent division of the orchestra. Man for man it excelled itself yesterday, since these virtuosi were actors too.

With the final pages of the Symphony, where the Harvard Glee Club was chorus, Mr. Monteux succeeded almost as well, though there still he lacked the freedom, the sureness, the intensity, bound, by the precedent of Wagner, to come as he ripens in the music. For the while he rather misses the thrill of the measures in which, so to say, the heavens are opened. Dr. Muck—for half the audience were making the comparison and it seems absurd to dodge it in print—sounded them like those in which Siegfried stands rapt above the sleeping Brünnhilde. From Mr. Monteux the ecstatic chords came more tamely; but once clear of those and, with the Glee Club taking up the tale, the performance fell not a whit short of the music. Hardly before in Boston has this "mystical chorus" been sung with such quality of voice, technical surety and spiritual significance. With reason Liszt may have imagined it for the fresh, young tones of the Harvard Choir. In them went the mingled brightness and softness of the music; while they caught as well the recurring rapture and remoteness. Not a repetition passed unshaded, yet without trace of finicking; finely graded was the mounting ecstasy; flawless the euphony of voices and orchestra. Rumor goes in Cambridge that next year Dr. Davison may set the club, with a choir from Radcliffe joined, to Brahms's Requiem. In the singing of Liszt's chorus, he may find promise and pledge for such difficult adventure. The day ought not to be too distant wherein the dullest alumnus will discover that such prowess in an art of music is prowess for the university also. Upon the darker sonorities of the orchestra ascended the brighter sonorities of the choir; higher still Mr. Hackett bore this tonal radiance. As field-marshal in such a moment, Mr. Monteux succeeds.

No performance, however, of the "Faust Symphony" will convert the unconvertible among those who hear. Of old, they defended themselves by saying that they yielded to Dr. Muck; but neither to Liszt nor to the music. Yesterday, of course, they were surer than ever of his and its demerits. Their grievance is easily discoverable and, at bottom, it is amusing. They cannot be content with Liszt as he was; as in his music he remains; always they would have him something different—and that he could not be. Liszt was a romantic temperament; he lived and worked through a romantic period. Few romantics have taste—possibly an over-exalted quality; few abound in self-criticism—a useful virtue in the practice of the arts. By very nature a romantic is not likely to be choice of expressive means. Readily he will fall into the pits of commonness and over-emphasis. He will be diffuse and insistent; he will be large of dimension rather than close-packed in matter. He will abound in the energies, the rhetoric, of creation; he will not be so secure in the mental processes that should sift and control it.

Throughout Liszt's music these faults and limitations are discoverable, though they less pervade the "Faust Symphony" than many another piece. The "character-picture" of Faust is diffuse and repetitious. We listeners hear, know and feel while Liszt is still multiplying his persuasions. Intellect, imagination make the music of Mephistopheles derision of the music of Gretchen and Faust; yet, clearly enough, Liszt likes the smart rhetoric of this procedure. The music of Gretchen, beautiful as it is, bears an audible suggestion of effect of the theatre. It is of Liszt operatic, even though he writes a symphonic music. There is not a doubt that Puccini admires it. Set the final music of esctasy beside the final pages of "Parsifal," beside certain pages of Franck and Liszt's largeness begins to hide an appreciable emptiness. In a tonal fresco of the dimensions of the "Faust Symphony," this and that thread will be spun thin and slacken; this or that color will run pale and fade. Wisely Liszt did not try to be other than he was.

Yet by these same tokens in Liszt also [illegible] romantic virtues and they are the enduring virtues of the "Faust Symphony." Since Gretchen, transfigured and redeeming, must enter into the close of most Faust legends, Liszt makes the incarnation in his mystical chorus. Contrast it with other ways and other musics, and there is no questioning the quality of his imagination. As long as composers write, they will have Mephistopheles in tones. Even in these days, Mr. Busoni is at work upon his own particular "Faust." Recall the usual aspect and substance of Goethe's devil in music and see how much Liszt, with these mocking transformations, has the better of his fellows alike in invention and method. Berlioz, Boito, Gounod—in degree romantics all—drew also on music paper their Marguerite. Set her in all these variants beside Liszt's Gretchen, and they pale beside his intensities. The moment of inspiration is the final glory to the romantic composer, the romantic practitioner of any art. It came not too often upon Liszt; but surely upon this music of Gretchen it descended, and beauty of substance and beauty of image were as one. Print does well with the legend of Gretchen; here in music lives and moves the spiritual presence that Goethe—and Liszt with him—also imagined.

Faust himself no more baffles Liszt than he has baffled all and sundry—Goethe himself included. If there is a futile restlessness, a busy rhetoric gradually wearing out itself, in Liszt's "character-picture," along with them also go both the ardor and the splendor of romance. Liszt's Faust pulses and glows; while even Wagner's no more than broods and writhes. Faust, Gretchen, Mephortopheles, born in the medium of poetry, are perpetual incitement to the artist who would shift them to his own channel, recreate them in his own spirit. For once, choosing and choosing wisely, Liszt was content to invest them with a music of romantic characterization and in the "Faust Symphony" he wrote it. As judgments go, Schumann's "Faust," though in these days none may hear it, is presumed to come closest to Goethe's inner substance and spirit. Yet none so well as Liszt has vitalized in tones Goethe's characters and rewoven in music their romantic vesture.

H. T. P.

TRANS, MAR. 10.

Friday afternoon, March 23, in Symphony Hall, the nineteenth of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, with Mr Monteux conducting. Upon the programme he has set pieces by an English and a French composer of the younger generation. From the Parisian, Koechlin, none of whose symphonic music has been heard here, he takes three Chorales for Orchestra. From the Londoner, Goossens, he chooses a Scherzo, suggested by Burns's tale of Tam o'Shanter. Beethoven's Overture, "Coriolanus," his Concerto for Violin with Mr. Burgin to play the solo-part; and Debussy's Suite, "Spring," round out the list.

TRANS. MAR. 10.

"Guests" at Symphony

This year the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have made practically a new departure in inviting visiting composers and conductors to lead the orchestra as "guests" at certain pairs of subscription concerts. Enesco, the Roumanian, and last Saturday week, Casella, the Italian, have led performances of their own compositions. At the next pair of Symphony concerts comes Mr. Bruno Walter, famous for the last 11 years as conductor of the music festivals at Munich.

This is a reversal, and a very important one, from the ideas of Major Higginson. Those ideas were born largely of the needs of the orchestra during the period of its early development. It was certainly not advisable, until the Boston Symphony became perfected in its ensemble and its technical equipment, that "guest" conductors should take the band in hand and interrupt the slow perfecting of the mechanism which comes of routine and of grinding toil under a single guiding hand.

Those days are now happily past. When Mr. Gericke left Boston the Symphony Orchestra was perhaps the finest organization of its kind in the world. Following the Muck debacle, and the strike of certain players technical standards necessarily fell. Mr. Monteux has rebuilt, almost from the bottom, the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is today at its old standard of technical excellence, and in addition it has acquired under this leader a suppleness and responsiveness to the wishes of the man at the baton—whoever he may be—which make the musical leadership of the Symphony concerts the dream of every European conductor of the hour.

Because of these conditions it is a good thing for the orchestra, the audiences and the regular conductor of the concerts that there should be occasionally the intermission in his labors brought about by the appearance, for one programme, of a "guest" leader of ability and renown.

Walter Dislikes Cuts

Mr. Walter, recently arriving in America, had this to say to an interviewer who asked him his opinion of cuts in the performance of long operas and the like. "The length of the operas was no bogey to the leisurely festival audience in Munich, for whom performances might begin at 4 o'clock. The works were not 'cut,' as they must be for your business man auditor. I am not in favor of the practice of 'cutting,' at any rate unless with the utmost discretion. An entire movement of a work may sometimes be omitted, but the ruthless snipping away of pages can be only disastrous. In opera, even where a whole act is pruned away, the artistic contrast of the units is disturbed. With classic works for the symphony, tampering is of course anathema! A creature deprived of legs or organs is something less than a genuine member of the species, is it not?"

What Would Beethoven Do?

"Raphael, if brought to life in a bushman family, would have drawn curiously realistic cattle on the walls of caves as well as [illegible] bushman women. Had [illegible]

he would have composed some of those delightful cacophonous melodies which the seeker for the quaint and unusual pretends to enjoy in Chinatown."—"Early Civilization," Goldenweiser.

No doubt. And if Bill, our friend the Pullman porter, had only lived in Vienna a century ago, he would have written the Ninth Symphony. And do you know Charley the jazz hound? Can't you just imagine him, sometime before Christ, with a toga and a harp, writing the "Iliad"?

POST-MAR. 11.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Following the tour by the Boston Symphony orchestra, which will occupy this week, the next Symphony concerts in Symphony hall will be on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 23 and 24. The soloist will be Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra, who will play Beethoven's concerto. Mr. Monteux will introduce this by Beethoven's overture to "Coriolanus." He will also present three chorales by Koechlin, the scherzo, "Tam o'Shanter," by the noted English composer, Goossens, and close the concert with Debussy's early orchestral suite, "Printemps."

EXTRA SYMPHONY

Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, the noted operatic singer, will appear as soloist at the fourth concert of the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux conductor, in Symphony Hall on March 26. The success of this, the second season of the series, is assured by the great audiences that fill the hall. The program will probably be as follows:

Rimsky-Korsakov—Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" (after "The Thousand Nights and a night"), op. 35.
Bach—Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form (arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).
Godard—Air of Leonora from "Tasso."
Verdi—Aria, "Ritorna Vincitor," from "Aida."
Respighi—Ballad of the Gnomides (first time in Boston).

HERALD-MAR. 11.

FOURTH MONDAY SYMPHONY

Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, the noted operatic singer, will appear as soloist at the fourth concert of the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor. This will take place in Symphony hall on March 26.

TRAV. MAR. 10.

BRUNO WALTER WILL CONDUCT

To Be Guest Conductor of Symphony Mar. 30-31

At the instance of Mr. Monteux, the conductor, and the trustees, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has invited to appear with it as "guest" conductor for the Symphony concerts of March 30 and 31, the distinguished director, until last year, of the Munich Music Festivals, Bruno Walter.

This will be Mr. Walter's first appearance in Boston. He was born in Berlin in 1876. After conducting with great success at Hamburg, Breslau, Cologne, Presburg, Riga and other central European cities, and working in close collaboration with the celebrated Gustav Mahler, Mr. Walter became conductor of the Berlin Royal Opera, and in 1901 director of the Vienna State Opera. He held this position till 1913, after which he became general music director of the Munich Music Festivals, a post he held for nine years.

At the Symphony concerts of the 30th and 31st Mr. Walter will conduct performances of Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, Mozart's Symphony in D major, Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," and Beethoven's 4th concerto for piano and orchestra, with Arthur Schnabel solo pianist.

POST-MAR. 13.

FOR new departure Mr. Monteux has set a novel piece on the programme of the next Symphony Concert—on March 26—in the "Monday Series." It will begin with the riches of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade," continue more sedately with a Suite for Strings from Bach and two operatic airs, to be sung by Mme. Ferrabini-Jacchia; end wildly with Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomes," to be played for the first time in an Eastern city. It was this piece that Mr. Taylor of The World heard in Cincinnati in his recent wanderings among Western orchestras and of which he wrote:

> Respighi's score is the most drastic, the most individual and the most successful thing of his that I have yet heard. Here is none of the sun-drenched sparkle and twilight charm of "The Fountains of Rome." Instead, there is the yelling laughter of demons, the howls of a tormented troll, the orgiastic frenzy of forbidden rites. There is a funeral march near the close like the trampling feet of the damned and a whirling devil-dance at the end that is sheer madness. The scoring is as diabolically clever as the music. Respighi calls for a huge orchestra full of pianos and celestas and contrabasses, E-flat clarinets and all sorts of monsters, and he paints from this unwieldy palette with complete mastery.

TRANS. MAR. 15.

LARGE CROWD ATTESTS APPROVAL OF ORCHESTRA

Boston Symphony Concert Fitting Close of Wilson-Greene Series.

By John George Harris.

As the last number of the Wilson-Greene series, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its long-heralded concert at the City Auditorium last night. An extremely large audience, probably the largest of the season, attended this closing concert and attested its approval in such manner as to leave no doubt of the high opinion held of the Boston organization.

The program embraced the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky in four movements, the Strauss tone poem, "Don Juan"; Vaughn Williams' Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis, and "Les Preludes" of Liszt. No encores were given.

It would be difficult to say which numbers of this superlative program were the most appreciated. Certainly the applause which followed the second and third movements of the symphony demonstrated that these exceedingly tuneful offerings were mentally grasped and emotionally welcomed. The pizzicati of the Scherzo were extremely delicate in execution, and M. Monteux' control of his forces was at its best.

In general comment upon the work of the Boston artists, it may be remarked that their precision is always an attribute to be admired, and perfect response to their conductor was always signally evident. Exceptionally good strings have likewise been a feature of this famous orchestra, and last night's concert found this quality emphasized.

The disadvantages of the Auditorium were marked last night—pardon a recurrence to this threadbare subject—in the disarray of the various parts. The basses were far up the mountain side; the drums and their accessories likewise poised at a high altitude, so much so that one marveled that M. Monteux knew at times where to look for them. But he invariably found them and led them in unerringly. It occurred to me, however, that an artist afflicted with aerophobia might have played under some discomfort.

Last night's concert was a fitting close of the Wilson-Greene series, and we hope we can look forward to another series during the coming season.

RICHMOND.TIMES. MAR. 13.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear as soloist at the next pair of concerts to be given at Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. He will be heard in Beethoven's famous violin concerto. Pierre Monteux will also conduct Beethoven's overture, "Coriolanus," Koechlin's "Three Chorales," Goosen's "Tam o' Shanter" and Debussy's "Prlintemps."

AMER. MAR. 17.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear as soloist at the next pair of concerts to be given at Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 23 and 24. He will be heard in Beethoven's famous Violin Concerto.

EXTRA SYMPHONY

Mme. Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, the celebrated operatic soprano, is to appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra at the fourth concert of the extra Monday evening series to be given in Symphony hall on March 26. She will sing arias of Godard and Verdi. The principal number on the program will be Romsky-Korsakov's Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade."

TRAV. MAR. 17.

GLEE CLUB SINGS AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Harvard Students Aid in Liszt's "Faust Symphony"

Boston Globe Mar. 10

If any further confirmation of the high standard of musical achievement reached by the Harvard Glee Club under its present leadership was needed, yesterday's appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Liszt's "A Faust Symphony" supplied it. The male chorus in the last movement was sung extraordinarily well, with technical accuracy and emotional energy, rousing prolonged and hearty applause. Dr Davison was warmly received by the audience when he came out on the stage at the end of the performance. Mr Monteux had, of course, conducted, since the chorus is an integral part of the symphony.

The tenor solo gave Arthur Hackett a chance to do the best singing he has yet offered a Boston audience. His voice has gained both resonance and sweetness. His assistance, like that of the Glee Club, contributed notably to the success of the performance. The movement in which the singers aided the orchestra was yesterday by far the most impressive of the three, though it has not always seemed so in the past.

This symphony is the most ambitious and the most original of Liszt's larger works. Yesterday it seemed longer and less brilliant than when the revised version discovered by Dr Muck was first played here. More incisive and more subtly varied dynamics would have improved the performance.

The tumultuous passion of Faust, the tender innocence of Gretchen, and the glittering harshness of Mephistopheles were not as well characterized by the orchestra and Mr Monteux as one had hoped they would be. But memory may have played the listener a trick in making him certain that former performances of this symphony were far more extraordinary than yesterday's was, except for the chorus and tenor.

The only other number was a Handel concert grosso for string orchestra, in D major, edited by Kogel. The solo violins were Richard Burgin and Julius Theodorowicz, the viola Georges Fourel, the violoncello Jean Bedetti. This quartet played with a beauty of tone and a subtle musicianship beyond that attained by the rest of the strings. One felt that the tone of the mass of strings was not solid enough, not of fine and beautiful texture. The men did not keep absolutely together. The sum of their individual slight roughnesses of tone, and their almost infinitesimal failures to follow exactly the conductor's beat produced a rather heavy and lumpish effect. In this piece also dynamics and phrasing, for which Mr Monteux may be held largely responsible, were unsatisfactory at times.

It should be added that any failures of the present orchestra are not and cannot be solely the fault of the conductor, who without skilful and eager cooperation from the players is obviously not in a position to reach the highest possible standard of artistry.

There are no Symphony concerts next week. March 23 and 24 Richard Burgin is to play the Beethoven violin concerto. The other numbers now scheduled are Debussy's "Printemps," Goosens' "Tam o' Shanter," three chorales by Koechlin, and Beethoven's "Coriolan" overture.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

AFTER YEARS LISZT'S "FAUST" AGAIN

A Music in Which Mr. Monteux Has Still to Ripen—Too Literal, Too Expository a Performance—The Harvard Glee Club's Notable Share—And Always the Romantic Virtue of Many a Page

NO easy job was Mr. Monteux's at the Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon. Until Dr. Muck's day Liszt's "Faust Symphony" haunted the shelves rather than the stage of Symphony Hall. Seldom did conductors venture it; not too clearly did hearers recall it. Dr. Muck warmly admired the music; spared no pains, missed no merit, in performance. Speedily the "Faust Symphony" became one of the show-pieces of both orchestra and conductor; while repetition upon repetition hardly lessened it as event in the musical year. With Dr. Muck's departure, Faust, Gretchen and Mephistopheles slept again in the library; but Liszt's imaging of them, as lined and colored by the conductor, lingered in many a memory. The Symphony is one to attract Mr. Monteux. Yet five years has he waited to revive it, less conscious, perhaps, of the inevitable comparisons than disposed to wait until he, his orchestra and his audience were in full readiness.

As probabilities go, Mr. Monteux has lately rehearsed and yesterday conducted in the "Faust Symphony" for the first times; while in outcome with it he stands exactly as he did with one or another fragment from Wagner's music-dramas. When, of old, he essayed the Prelude to "Tristan" or the final scene from "Götterdämmerung," there were audible shortcomings a-plenty. Yet, as clearly, he answered to the substance and the spirit of the music, in degree conveying both to his hearers. The gist of Wagner was in him; he needed only ampler study, more expert adjustments, a larger ease and confidence, in order to impart and enhance it.

So, in fact, has Mr. Monteux ripened in the playing of Wagner's music until many a performance of it praises him. With it, however, his perpetual pitfall is over-excitement. He is ardent for the piece in hand, above all for the upspringing mood and emotion. With it he would drench orchestra and audience. In the exciting pursuit of this goal, he forgets to hold the performance in the clarity, the plasticity the proportion which are as essential as the eloquence. The result is such a blurred and interlaced version of the Prelude to "Meistersinger" as that of last Sunday. [illegible] other extreme, he becomes [illegible] as though he were [illegible] paragraph

This tendency to detailing exposition and to consequent dryness haunted Mr. Monteux through the "Faust Symphony." In the "character-picture," as Liszt calls it, of Mephistopheles, the music often distorts and derides motivs that have already marked Faust or Gretchen. So, for example, Liszt's fiend mocks and wrenches the easily remembered motiv of Faust, romantic, ardent, impassioned. Mr. Monteux would have these ironies as clear as the day, plying upon them a Gallic logic and exactitude. He opened the orchestra, as it were, to state and restate them. In the process, however, they lost wit and bite. Everyone understood them, but nobody felt them. Mephistopheles was not so much playing his game of derision as taking his exercise in a kind of chop-logic. Similarly with the first "character-picture" which, at best, is rather over-expansive delineation of "Faust," Mr. Monteux would have every detail precise and pregnant. He would enumerate and label the attributes of "Faust" as though the music were a card-catalogue. So doing he molded phrases, sharpened lines, multiplied rhetorical pauses to dryness and desiccation, to the extinguishing of romantic glow. Not a character-picture of Faust, but a brief about Faust did Liszt seem to be making.

Only the music of Gretchen and the final pages of the Symphony set Mr. Monteux free from this excess of expository zeal. Even those who try their best not to see Liszt as he really and romantically is, agree to the sensuous imagery that he twines about the girl, to the voice of mingled innocence and passion with which he bids her speak, to the echo of the memories returning to haunt her. Here, in short, goes music clothed equally with intrinsic beauty and suggestion of character. Few Marguerites upon the stages of opera houses may be like to this Gretchen upon the stage of an orchestra and an imagination. The cue was ready for Mr. Monteux. As conductor in the theatre as well as conductor in the concert-hall, he was sure to take it. In one hand he bore the beauty of the Lisztian Gretchen; with the other he characterized her. Most of her music, moreover, falls primarily to the wood-wind choir. For long it has been the preëminent division of the orchestra. Man for man it excelled itself yesterday, since these virtuosi were actors too.

With the final pages of the Symphony, where the Harvard Glee Club was chorus, Mr. Monteux succeeded almost as well, though there still he lacked the freedom, the sureness, the intensity, bound, by the precedent of Wagner, to come as he ripens in the music. For the while he rather misses the thrill of the measures in which, so to say, the heavens are opened. Dr. Muck—for half the audience were making the comparison and it seems absurd to dodge it in print—sounded them like those in which Siegfried stands rapt above the sleeping Brünnhilde. From Mr. Monteux the ecstatic chords came more tamely; but once clear of those and, with the Glee Club taking up the tale, the performance fell not a whit short of the music. Hardly before in Boston has this "mystical chorus" been sung with such quality of voice, technical surety and spiritual significance. With reason Liszt may have imagined it for the fresh, young tones of the Harvard Choir. In them went the mingled brightness and softness of the music; while they caught as well the recurring rapture and remoteness. Not a repetition passed unshaded, yet without trace of finicking; finely graded was the mounting ecstasy; flawless the euphony of voices and orchestra. Rumor goes in Cambridge that next year Dr. Davison may set the club, with a choir from Radcliffe joined, to Brahms's Requiem. In the singing of Liszt's chorus, he may find promise and pledge for such difficult adventure. The day ought not to be too distant wherein the dullest alumnus will discover that such prowess in an art of music is prowess for the university also. Upon the darker sonorities of the orchestra ascended the brighter sonorities of the choir; higher still Mr. Hackett bore this tonal radiance. As field-marshal in such a moment, Mr. Monteux succeeds.

No performance, however, of the "Faust Symphony" will convert the unconvertible among those who hear. Of old, they defended themselves by saying that they yielded to Dr. Muck; but neither to Liszt nor to the music. Yesterday, of course, they were surer than ever of his and its demerits. Their grievance is easily discoverable and, at bottom, it is amusing. They cannot be content with Liszt as he was; as in his music he remains; always they would have him something different—and that he could not be. Liszt was a romantic temperament; he lived and worked through a romantic period. Few romantics have taste—possibly an over-exalted quality; few abound in self-criticism—a useful virtue in the practice of the arts. By very nature a romantic is not likely to be choice of expressive means. Readily he will fall into the pits of commonness and over-emphasis. He will be diffuse and insistent; he will be large of dimension rather than close-packed in matter. He will abound in the energies, the rhetoric, of creation; he will not be so secure in the mental processes that should sift and control it.

Throughout Liszt's music these faults and limitations are discoverable, though they less pervade the "Faust Symphony" than many another piece. The "character-picture" of Faust is diffuse and repetitious. We listeners hear, know and feel while Liszt is still multiplying his persuasions. Intellect, imagination make the music of Mephistopheles derision of the music of Gretchen and Faust; yet, clearly enough, Liszt likes the smart rhetoric of this procedure. The music of Gretchen, beautiful as it is, bears an audible suggestion of effect of the theatre. It is of Liszt operatic, even though he writes a symphonic music. There is not a doubt that Puccini admires it. Set the final music of esctasy beside the final pages of "Parsifal," beside certain pages of Franck and Liszt's largeness begins to hide an appreciable emptiness. In a tonal fresco of the dimensions of the "Faust Symphony," this and that thread will be spun thin and slacken; this or that color will run pale and fade. Wisely Liszt did not try to be other than he was.

Yet by these same tokens in Liszt also [illegible] the romantic virtues and they are the enduring virtues of the "Faust Symphony." Since Gretchen, transfigured and redeeming, must enter into the close of most Faust legends, Liszt makes the incarnation in his mystical chorus. Contrast it with other ways and other musics, and there is no questioning the quality of his imagination. As long as composers write, they will have Mephistopheles in tones. Even in these days, Mr. Busoni is at work upon his own particular "Faust." Recall the usual aspect and substance of Goethe's devil in music and see how much Liszt, with these mocking transformations, has the better of his fellows alike in invention and method. Berlioz, Boito, Gounod—in degree romantics all—drew also on music paper their Marguerite. Set her in all these variants beside Liszt's Gretchen, and they pale beside his intensities. The moment of inspiration is the final glory to the romantic composer, the romantic practitioner of any art. It came not too often upon Liszt; but surely upon this music of Gretchen it descended, and beauty of substance and beauty of image were as one. Print does well with the legend of Gretchen; here in music lives and moves the spiritual presence that Goethe—and Liszt with him—also imagined.

Faust himself no more baffles Liszt than he has baffled all and sundry—Goethe himself included. If there is a futile restlessness, a busy rhetoric gradually wearing out itself, in Liszt's "character-picture," along with them also go both the ardor and the splendor of romance. Liszt's Faust pulses and glows; while even Wagner's no more than broods and writhes. Faust, Gretchen, Mephortopheles, born in the medium of poetry, are perpetual incitement to the artist who would shift them to his own channel, recreate them in his own spirit. For once, choosing and choosing wisely, Liszt was content to invest them with a music of romantic characterization and in the "Faust Symphony" he wrote it. As judgments go, Schumann's "Faust," though in these days none may hear it, is presumed to come closest to Goethe's inner substance and spirit. Yet none so well as Liszt has vitalized in tones Goethe's characters and rewoven in music their romantic vesture.

H. T. P.

TRANS, MAR. 10.

Friday afternoon, March 23, in Symphony Hall, the nineteenth of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Monteux conducting. Upon the programme he has set pieces by an English and a French composer of the younger generation. From the Parisian, Koechlin, none of whose symphonic music has been heard here, he takes three Chorales for Orchestra. From the Londoner, Goossens, he chooses a Scherzo, suggested by Burns's tale of Tam o'Shanter. Beethoven's Overture, "Coriolanus," his Concerto for Violin with Mr. Burgin to play the solo-part; and Debussy's Suite, "Spring," round out the list.

TRANS. MAR. 10.

"Guests" at Symphony

This year the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have made practically a new departure in inviting visiting composers and conductors to lead the orchestra as "guests" at certain pairs of subscription concerts. Enesco, the Roumanian, and last Saturday week, Casella, the Italian, have led performances of their own compositions. At the next pair of Symphony concerts comes Mr. Bruno Walter, famous for the last 11 years as conductor of the music festivals at Munich.

This is a reversal, and a very important one, from the ideas of Major Higginson. Those ideas were born largely of the needs of the orchestra during the period of its early development. It was certainly not advisable, until the Boston Symphony became perfected in its ensemble and its technical equipment, that "guest" conductors should take the band in hand and interrupt the slow perfecting of the mechanism which comes of routine and of grinding toil under a single guiding hand.

Those days are now happily past. When Mr. Gericke left Boston the Symphony Orchestra was perhaps the finest organization of its kind in the world. Following the Muck debacle, and the strike of certain players technical standards necessarily fell. Mr. Monteux has rebuilt, almost from the bottom, the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is today at its old standard of technical excellence, and in addition it has acquired under this leader a suppleness and responsiveness to the wishes of the man at the baton—whoever he may be—which make the musical leadership of the Symphony concerts the dream of every European conductor of the hour.

Because of these conditions it is a good thing for the orchestra, the audiences and the regular conductor of the concerts that there should be occasionally the intermission in his labors brought about by the appearance, for one programme, of a "guest" leader of ability and renown.

Walter Dislikes Cuts

Mr. Walter, recently arriving in America, had this to say to an interviewer who asked him his opinion of cuts in the performance of long operas and the like. "The length of the operas was no bogey to the leisurely festival audience in Munich, for whom performances might begin at 4 o'clock. The works were not 'cut,' as they must be for your business man auditor. I am not in favor of the practice of 'cutting,' at any rate unless with the utmost discretion. An entire movement of a work may sometimes be omitted, but the ruthless snipping away of pages can be only disastrous. Iu opera, even where a whole act is pruned away, the artistic contrast of the units is disturbed. With classic works for the symphony, tampering is of course anathema! A creature deprived of legs or organs is something less than a genuine member of the species, is it not?"

What Would Beethoven Do?

"Raphael, if brought to life in a bushman family, would have drawn curiously realistic cattle on the walls of caves as well as steatopygous bushman women. Had Beethoven been a Chinaman, he would have composed some of those delightful cacophonous melodies which the seeker for the quaint and unusual pretends to enjoy in Chinatown."—"Early Civilization," Goldenweiser.

No doubt. And if Bill, our friend the Pullman porter, had only lived in Vienna a century ago, he would have written the Ninth Symphony. And do you know Charley the jazz hound? Can't you just imagine him, sometime before Christ, with a toga and a harp, writing the "Iliad"?

POST-MAR. 11.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Following the tour by the Boston Symphony orchestra, which will occupy this week, the next Symphony concerts in Symphony hall will be on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 23 and 24. The soloist will be Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra, who will play Beethoven's concerto. Mr. Monteux will introduce this by Beethoven's overture to "Coriolanus." He will also present three chorales by Koechlin, the scherzo, "Tam o'Shanter," by the noted English composer, Goossens, and close the concert with Debussy's early orchestral suite, "Printemps."

EXTRA SYMPHONY

Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, the noted operatic singer, will appear as soloist at the fourth concert of the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, in Symphony Hall on March 26. The success of this, the second season of the series, is assured by the great audiences that fill the hall. The program will probably be as follows:

Rimsky-Korsakov—Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" (after "The Thousand Nights and a night"), op. 35.
Bach—Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form (arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).
Godard—Air of Leonora from "Tasso."
Verdi—Aria, "Ritorna Vincitor," from "Aida."
Respighi—Ballad of the Gnomides (first time in Boston).

HERALD-MAR. 11.

FOURTH MONDAY SYMPHONY

Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, the noted operatic singer, will appear as soloist at the fourth concert of the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor. This will take place in Symphony hall on March 26.

TRAN MAR. 10.

BRUNO WALTER WILL CONDUCT

To Be Guest Conductor of Symphony Mar. 30-31

At the instance of Mr. Monteux, the conductor, and the trustees, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has invited to appear with it as "guest" conductor for the Symphony concerts of March 30 and 31, the distinguished director, until last year, of the Munich Music Festivals, Bruno Walter.

This will be Mr. Walter's first appearance in Boston. He was born in Berlin in 1876. After conducting with great success at Hamburg, Breslau, Cologne, Presburg, Riga and other central European cities, and working in close collaboration with the celebrated Gustav Mahler, Mr. Walter became conductor of the Berlin Royal Opera, and in 1901 director of the Vienna State Opera. He held this position till 1913, after which he became general music director of the Munich Music Festivals, a post he held for nine years.

At the Symphony concerts of the 30th and 31st Mr. Walter will conduct performances of Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, Mozart's Symphony in D major, Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," and Beethoven's 4th concerto for piano and orchestra, with Arthur Schnabel solo pianist.

POST-MAR. 13.

FOR new departure Mr. Monteux has set a novel piece on the programme of the next Symphony Concert—on March 26—in the "Monday Series." It will begin with the riches of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade," continue more sedately with a Suite for Strings from Bach and two operatic airs, to be sung by Mme. Ferrabini-Jacchia; end wildly with Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomes," to be played for the first time in an Eastern city. It was this piece that Mr. Taylor of The World heard in Cincinnati in his recent wanderings among Western orchestras and of which he wrote:

> Respighi's score is the most drastic, the most individual and the most successful thing of his that I have yet heard. Here is none of the sun-drenched sparkle and twilight charm of "The Fountains of Rome." Instead, there is the yelling laughter of demons, the howls of a tormented troll, the orgiastic frenzy of forbidden rites. There is a funeral march near the close like the trampling feet of the damned and a whirling devil-dance at the end that is sheer madness. The scoring is as diabolically clever as the music. Respighi calls for a huge orchestra full of pianos and celestas and contrabasses, E-flat clarinets and all sorts of monsters, and he paints from this unwieldy palette with complete mastery.

TRANS. MAR. 15.

LARGE CROWD ATTESTS APPROVAL OF ORCHESTRA

Boston Symphony Concert Fitting Close of Wilson-Greene Series.

By John George Harris.

As the last number of the Wilson-Greene series, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its long-heralded concert at the City Auditorium last night. An extremely large audience, probably the largest of the season, attended this closing concert and attested its approval in such manner as to leave no doubt of the high opinion held of the Boston organization.

The program embraced the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky in four movements, the Strauss tone poem, "Don Juan"; Vaughn Williams' Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis, and "Les Preludes" of Liszt. No encores were given.

It would be difficult to say which numbers of this superlative program were the most appreciated. Certainly the applause which followed the second and third movements of the symphony demonstrated that these exceedingly tuneful offerings were mentally grasped and emotionally welcomed. The pizzicati of the Scherzo were extremely delicate in execution, and M. Monteux' control of his forces was at its best.

In general comment upon the work of the Boston artists, it may be remarked that their precision is always an attribute to be admired, and perfect response to their conductor was always signally evident. Exceptionally good strings have likewise been a feature of this famous orchestra, and last night's concert found this quality emphasized.

The disadvantages of the Auditorium were marked last night—pardon a recurrence to this threadbare subject—in the disarray of the various parts. The basses were far up the mountain side; the drums and their accessories likewise poised at a high altitude, so much so that one marveled that M. Monteux knew at times where to look for them. But he invariably found them and led them in unerringly. It occurred to me, however, that an artist afflicted with aerophobia might have played under some discomfort.

Last night's concert was a fitting close of the Wilson-Greene series, and we hope we can look forward to another series during the coming season.

RICHMOND.T.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear as soloist at the next pair of concerts to be given at Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. He will be heard in Beethoven's famous violin concerto. Pierre Monteux will also conduct Beethoven's overture, 'Coriolanus," Koechlin's "Three Chorales," Goosen's "Tam o' Shanter" and Debussy's "Prlintemps."

AMER.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear as soloist at the next pair of concerts to be given at Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 23 and 24. He will be heard in Beethoven's famous Violin Concerto.

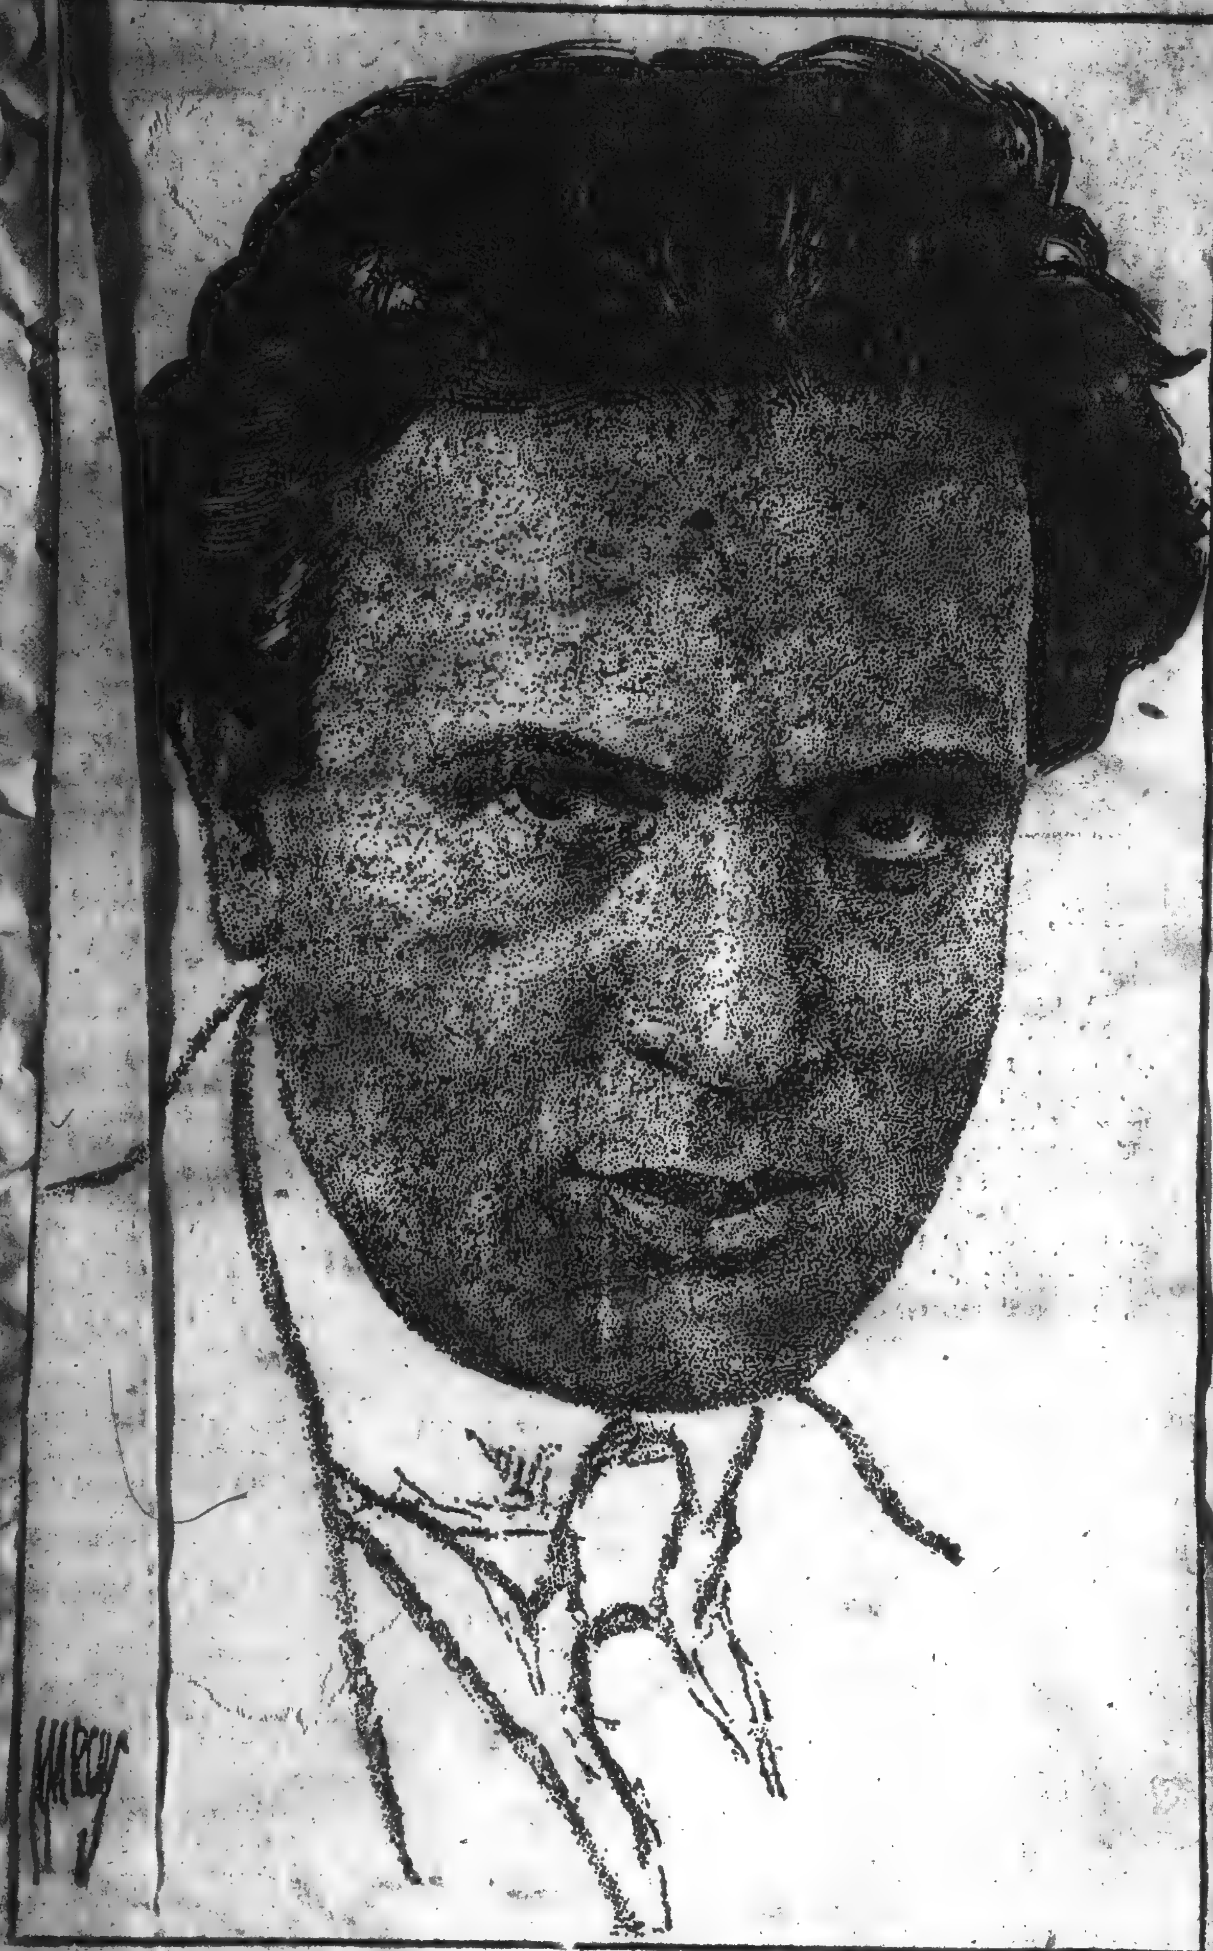
EXTRA SYMPHONY

Mme. Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, the celebrated operatic soprano, is to appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra at the fourth concert of the extra Monday evening series to be given in Symphony hall on March 26. She will sing arias of Godard and Verdi. The principal number on the program will be Romsky-Korsakov's Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade."

TRAV. MAR. 17.

…uest-Conductor at the Symphony Concerts

Bruno Walter Soon to Lead the Orchestra



FOR the first time through forty-two years, the Symphony Orchestra has called to its concerts a conductor who is not composer as well. The guest is Bruno Walter, and he will lead the band on the afternoon of Friday, March 30, and the evening of Saturday, March 31. Of old he was minor conductor at the Royal Opera at Berlin; thence he passed to the Court Opera at Vienna as first conductor through the directorship of Mahler. From Vienna, Munich called him to be master-musician of the State Theatres. Last autumn he quit that post and, this winter, under invitations from various orchestras, he came to the United States. In New York, Mr. Walter has twice led Mr. Damrosch's band; in Detroit, Cleveland and Minneapolis he has also been guest. Now, by invitation of the trustees of the Symphony Orchestra, of the management and of Mr. Monteux in particular, he comes to Boston. After the manner of visiting conductors, he has set for his concerts at Symphony Hall a programme of familiar and semi-familiar pieces: Mozart's Symphony in D major, unheard since Dr. Muck's day; Weber's Overture to his opera, "Euryanthe"; Strauss's tone-poem, "Till Eulenspiegel"; and the Fourth Concerto of Beethoven for Piano and Orchestra with Mr. Schnabel, likewise to be heard for the first times in Boston, to play the solo-part.

"Mr. Walter's methods as conductor," wrote Mr. Aldrich a month ago in the New York Times, "are of the simplest. His movements are direct and explicit, intended to obtain results already known and accomplished at rehearsal. He has nothing for public view, either in the expression of his back or the curve of his left arm. He seeks the finest and subtlest exposition of the outline, delicate contrasts, significant phrasing, pulsing rhythms, subtle modifications of tempo—modifications that were not thrown at the listener's head, but were such as to be felt, rather than noticed. His 'readings' are the 'readings' of a sensitive musician." By these signs Mr. Walter is a conductor of parts and quality. Calling him to their concerts, the controlling powers of the Symphony Orchestra wisely depart from a policy that of old was too chary of interesting guests. And there is no progress like the progress that liberalizes itself.

H. T. P.

TRANS. MAR. 10.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

At the Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the soloist will be Richard Burgin, who will play Beethoven's violin concerto. Pierre Monteux will present two novelties, Koechlin's "Three Chorales" and the Scherzo "Tam O'Shanter," by Eugene Goosens. Debussy's "Printemps" suite and Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture are other numbers.

MONDAY SYMPHONY

Rimsky-Korsakov's Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" will be the feature of the next Monday Symphony concert, on March 26. The soloist will be Madame Esther Ferrabini Jacchia, who will sing arias from Godard's "Le Tasse" and Verdi's "Aida." Bach's Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for string orchestra and the "Ballad of the Gnomides," by Respighi, are other numbers.

ADV. SR. MAR. 18.

Bruno Walter, one of the most noted of living orchestral conductors, has been invited by the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to conduct the concerts in the regular series March 30 and 31. Mr Walter came to this country last Fall after resigning his position as general musical director of the Bavarian National Theatres, in which he had succeeded Felix Mottl in 1914. He has been very highly praised by the leading New York reviewers as guest conductor of the New York Symphony Society. His program here will include Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, Mozart's D major Symphony (K. [illegible]), Beethoven's G minor piano concerto, with Arthur Schnabel as pianist, and Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel." Very seldom in the history of the orchestra has a guest conductor directed a whole program. The latest instance was Vincent d'Indy last season.

The fourth Monday Symphony concert, March 26, offers a new piece by Respighi, whose "Fountain of Rome" greatly pleased Boston audiences two years ago; "Scheherazade," by Rimsky-Korsakov; a Bach suite, and arias from Godard's "Tasso" and Verdi's "Aida" to be sung by Mme Ester Ferrabini-Jacchia, whose "Carmen" with the San Carlo opera is a pleasant memory for many of the local musical public.

GLOBE - MAR. 18.

FROM
NEWS, FEB 17 1923
Providence, R. I.

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN MUSIC LEAGUE CONCERT SUNDAY

Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose musicians will be heard tomorrow afternoon in the first of the series of Providence Music League concerts in the Albee Theatre, has chosen numbers to be playedby Richard Burgin, first violinist of the Boston Symphony is in keeping with the main programme.

Of especial interest are the two orchestra selections, Chabrier's "Overture 1812," and Tchaikowsky's Rhapsody "Espana," both of which, on two different occasions this winter have been played by the Monteux orchestra. They both are placed at the end of the programme tomorrow. In two of the regular symphony series in Infantry Hall this winter they have been used at the closing numbers with much success.

Mendelssohn's concerto in E minor will be the principal number supplied by Mr. Burgin.

The programme follows:

Overture, "The Roman Carnival," op. 9, Berlioz; Symphony "From the New World," No. 5, in E minor, op. 95 (two movements), Dvorak, Largo, Scherzo; "Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem, No. 3 (after Lamartine), Liszt; Concerto in E minor for violin, op. 64 (two movements), Andante, Allegretto non troppo, Allegro molto vivace; Rhapsody, "Espana," Chabrier; Overture, Solemnelle, "1812," op. 49, Tschaikowsky.

Tickets for the series of three concerts offered by the Providence Music League, the backer of which has remained a mystery, are sold for 40 cents. This makes the concerts about 13 cents each. The sole idea in promoting the series is to give to many persons with musical tastes a chance to hear some of the best artists although they cannot afford the prices usually charged. It is hoped that the interest in the league will grow so fast as to make a continuation of this work possible.

The league has sold the tickets through various persons and agencies which could put the promoters in touch with people who really appreciate good music but who are not financially able to pay the regular prices which an orchestra such as the Boston Symphony must charge or such as most of the great singers and musicians are paid.

The other concerts will be held on March 18 and on April 15, both in the Albee Theatre. At the first of these Lucy Marsh, soprano; Miquelle Longy, 'cellist, and Rose and Charlotte Presel, pianists, will be heard. In the second concert Mme. Sigrid Onegin, contralto, of the Metropolitan Opera House, will be the soloist.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
FEB 17 1923

CLARA CLEMENS SOLOIST AT NEXT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Will Sing Three Numbers at Infantry Hall Feb. 27.

Clara Clemens, the celebrated soprano, will be the soloist at the fourth Boston Symphony concert, the last but one of the Providence season, at Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, Feb. 27. She is a daughter of the late Mark Twain and wife of the pianist Gabrilowitsch and last summer extended the course of her tours to Europe, where she gave an historical cycle of seven song recitals in Munich, winning immediate attention. She will sing the aria from Wagner's "Rienzi," "My Life Fades in Its Bosom," and the two songs, "Phidyle," by Duparc, and "Hopak," by Moussorgsky.

Pierre Monteux will open the concert with the symphony of Cesar Franck, the Belgian master, declared to be the greatest symphonic achievement of the French school of music and often called the finest of modern symphonies. Another work bearing national characterictics is the symphonic poem, "The Moldau," by Smetana, the Czech composer, which is inspired by the river which is bound up with every Bohemian's pride for his country.

The evening will close with two numbers from the music dramas of Wagner—the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and the Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

NEWS, FEB 17 1923
Providence, R. I.

CLARA CLEMENS WITH SYMPHONY HERE FEBRUARY 27

The fourth Boston Symphony concert, and last but one of the Providence season, is to be given in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, Feb. 27. The soloist for this concert will be Clara Clemens, the celebrated mezzo-soprano, who is likewise known as the daughter of Mark Twain and husband of the pianist Gabrilowitsch. Clara Clemens will sing with the orchestra the aria from Wagner's "Rienzi," "My Life Fades in Its Blossom," and the two songs, "Phidyle" by Duparc and "Hopak" by Moussorgsky.

Pierre Monteux will open the concert with the symphony of Cesar Franck, the Belgian master, which is acknowledged to be the greatest symphonic achievement of the French school of music and is often called the finest of modern symphonies.

Another work bearing national characteritics is the symphonic poem, "The Moldau" by Smetana, the Czech composer, which is inspired by the river bound up with every Bohemian's pride for his country.

This evening will close with two numbers from the music dramas of Wagner—the prelude to "Lohengrin" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

FROM
Times
NEW YORK CITY

The Boston Orchestra played an orchestral suite by Edward Ballantine of Cambridge, Mass., entitled "From the Garden of Hellas," in four movements, some being transcriptions of songs with piano accompaniment. The composer is an instructor in the musical department of Harvard College. At the same concert was played Turina's two "Fantastic Dances," Turina being one of the latest contributions of Spain to modern music. According to Philip Hale in The Boston Herald, certain Frenchmen have been more successful in giving us Spain in music. "Hearing Turina's music, we kept wishing that the orchestra were playing Chabrier's 'Espana' or Debussy's 'Iberia.'"

N. Y.
HERALD
FEB 18 1923

"American and Barbarian."

Germans have been coming to this country for many years and saturating themselves with knowledge of how things musical are done here, but when they have returned to their own land they have found it convenient to keep their information to themselves and to disseminate only misinformation. When Mr. Gericke, for instance, went home to live in Vienna he speedily learned that if he did not wish his neighbors to classify him with Ananias he would do well to keep quiet about the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was useless for him to tell the Viennese that it was a great organization. They knew better. It was American and therefore barbarian.

The writer is not in possession of facts about what Arthur Nikisch did, but it is perfectly safe to say that his views about the Boston Symphony Orchestra had to be aired with great discretion. All this was at a time when the Boston orchestra was without any question the best in the world. But to the German mind this was simply inconceivable. It could not be the best because it was not German and Germany was the only country which knew how to play symphonies.

From FEB 22 1923
EVENING MAIL
New York City

Boston Ensemble.

Of exceeding interest is the announcement that the second of the series of interpretative concerts, under the auspices of the Simmons College Endowment Fund will be broadcasted from Jordan Hall this evening. These are given by the Boston Symphony Ensemble, the well-known organization of prominent members from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of able Augusto Vannini, conductor, who has been associated with the parent organization for over twenty years, and Henry Gidean, who will comment on the specially chosen programme, treating the subject, "Formal Beauty in Music."

R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
FEB 24 1923

CLARA CLEMENS SOLOIST AT NEXT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Principal Number to Be Cesar Franck's Masterpiece.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its next concert here next Tuesday evening in Infantry Hall at 8:15. The soloist will be Clara Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain and wife of Gabrilowitsch. Pierre Monteux has made the feature of the programme Cesar Franck's masterpiece.

Musical Bohemia will be represented by the symphonic poem of Smetana, "Vltava" ("The Moldau"). Two Wagnerian numbers, preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg," will conclude the concert.

Clara Clemens will sing the aria, "My Life Fades at Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienzi," and the songs, "Phydile," by Duparc, and "HoPpak," by Moussorgsky.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
FEB 24 1923

CLARA CLEMENS
Soloist with
BOSTON SYMPHONY
At INFANTRY HALL Tuesday Even

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 24 1923

CLARA CLEMENS SOLOIST AT NEXT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Principal Number to Be Cesar Franck's Masterpiece.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its next concert here next Tuesday evening in Infantry Hall at 8:15. The soloist will be Clara Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain and wife of Gabrilowitsch. Pierre Monteux has made the feature of the programme Cesar Franck's masterpiece.

Musical Bohemia will be represented by the symphonic poem of Smetana, "Vltava" ("The Moldau"). Two Wagnerian numbers, preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg," will conclude the concert.

Clara Clemens will sing the aria, "My Life Fades at Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienzi," and the songs, "Phydile," by Duparc, and "HoPpak," by Moussorgsky.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 25 1923

Boston Symphony Here Tuesday

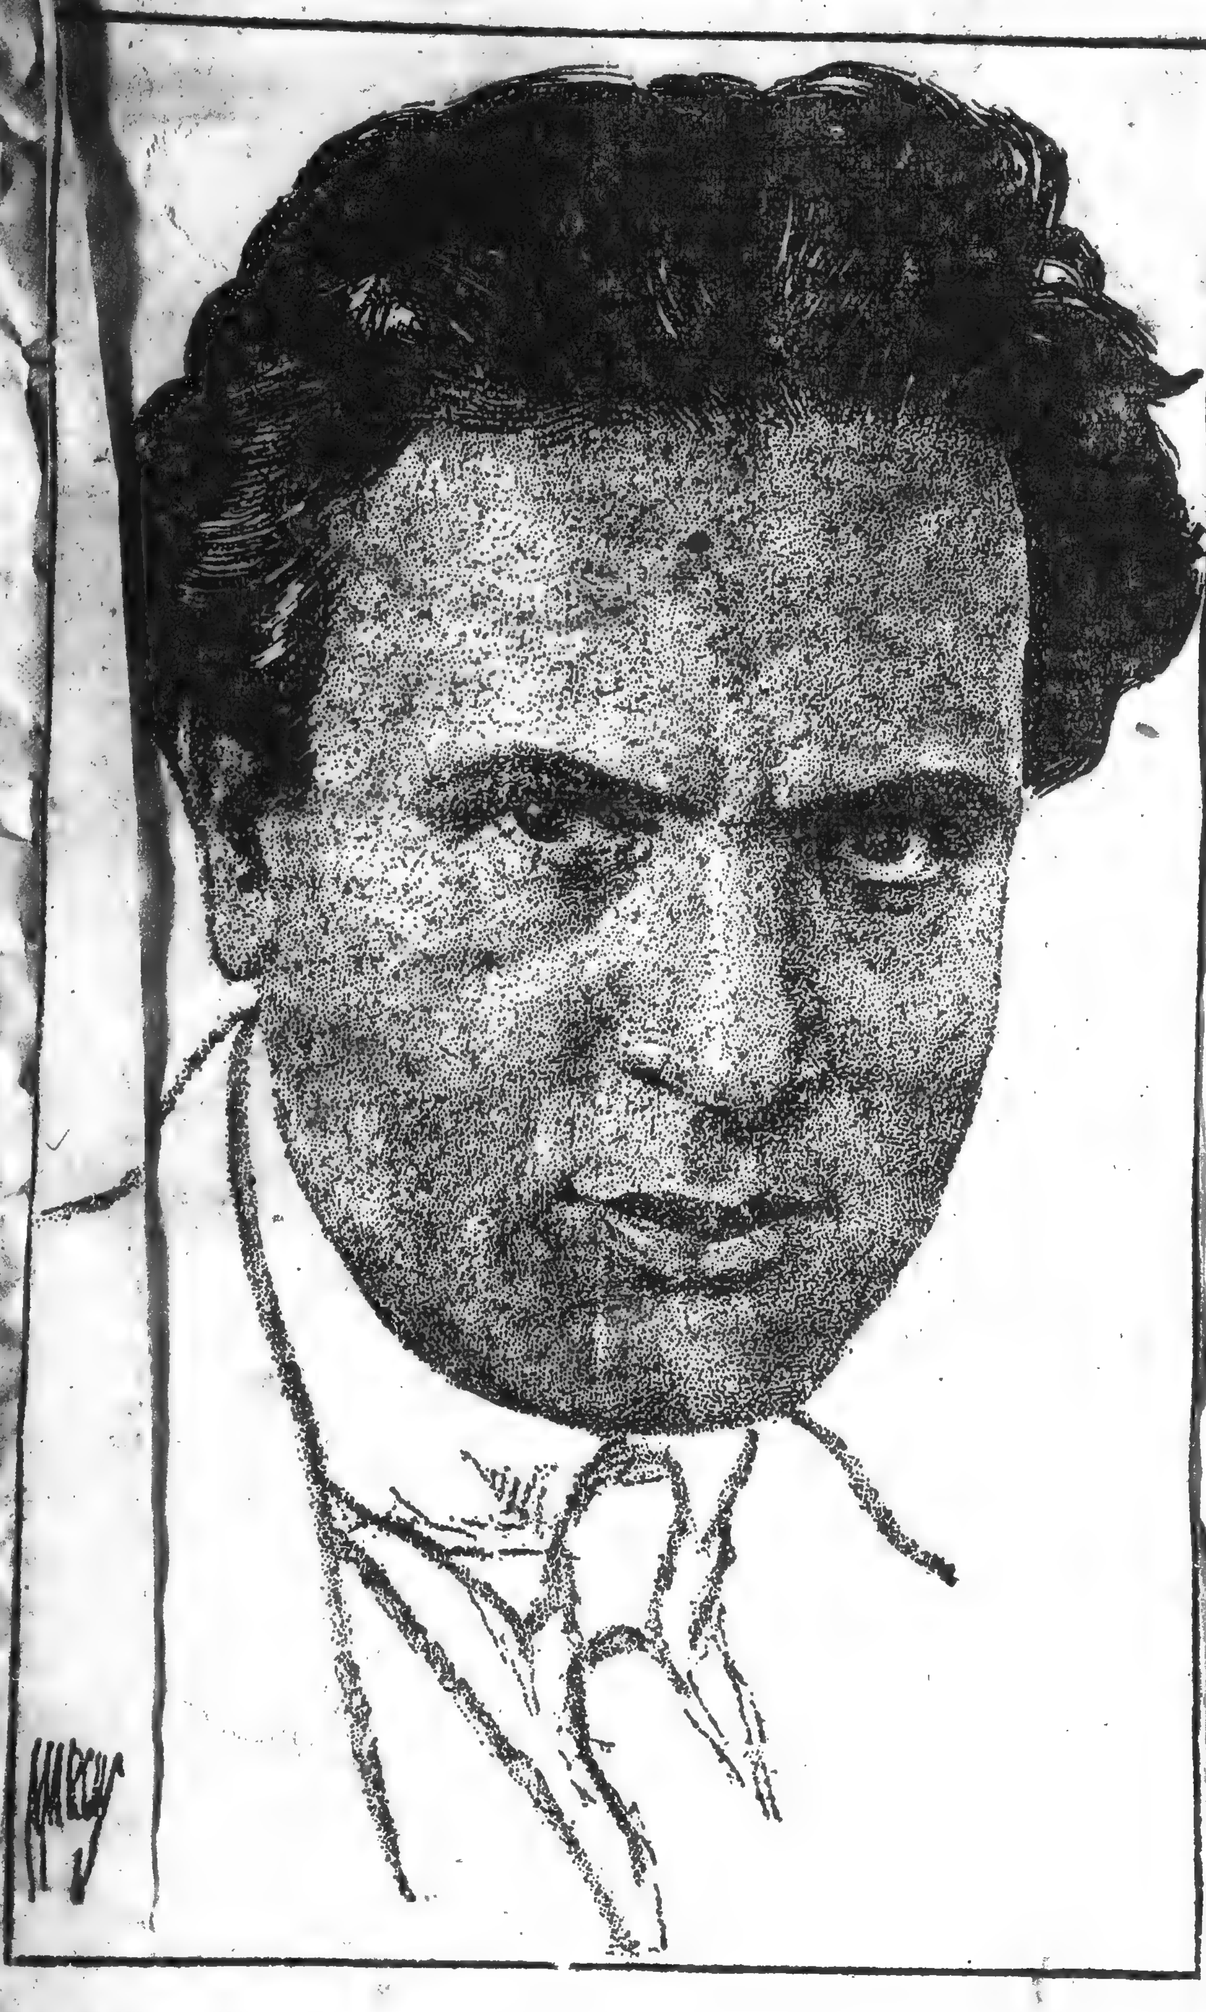
Next Tuesday night's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Infantry Hall will be the next to the last of the present season. It will start at 8:15 o'clock.

Mr. Monteux will give the first hearing in Providence in a number of seasons of the famous symphony in D-minor, by Cesar Franck, one of the most popular and likewise considered one of the most inspired masterpieces of the French school. He will also conduct Smetana's symphonic poem, "The Moldau," and two Wagnerian numbers, the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

The soloist is Clara Clemens, mezzo-soprano, daughter of Mark Twain and wife of Gabrilowitsch, who will sing the aria, "My Life Fades at Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienzi," and songs "Phydile," by Duparc, and "Hopac," by Moussorgsky.

uest-Conductor at the Symphony Concerts

Bruno Walter Soon to Lead the Orchestra



FOR the first time through forty-two years, the Symphony Orchestra has called to its concerts a conductor who is not composer as well. The guest is Bruno Walter, and he will lead the band on the afternoon of Friday, March 30, and the evening of Saturday, March 31. Of old he was minor conductor at the Royal Opera at Berlin; thence he passed to the Court Opera at Vienna as first conductor through the directorship of Mahler. From Vienna, Munich called him to be master-musician of the State Theatres. Last autumn he quit that post and, this winter, under invitations from various orchestras, he came to the United States. In New York, Mr. Walter has twice led Mr. Damrosch's band; in Detroit, Cleveland and Minneapolis he has also been guest. Now, by invitation of the trustees of the Symphony Orchestra, of the management and of Mr. Monteux in particular, he comes to Boston. After the manner of visiting conductors, he has set for his concerts at Symphony Hall a programme of familiar and semi-familiar pieces: Mozart's Symphony in D major, unheard since Dr. Muck's day; Weber's Overture to his opera, "Euryanthe"; Strauss's tone-poem, "Till Eulenspiegel"; and the Fourth Concerto of Beethoven for Piano and Orchestra with Mr. Schnabel, likewise to be heard for the first times in Boston, to play the solo-part.

"Mr. Walter's methods as conductor," wrote Mr. Aldrich a month ago in the New York Times, "are of the simplest. His movements are direct and explicit, intended to obtain results already known and accomplished at rehearsal. He has nothing for public view, either in the expression of his back or the curve of his left arm. He seeks the finest and subtlest exposition of the outline, delicate contrasts, significant phrasing, pulsing rhythms, subtle modifications of tempo—modifications that were not thrown at the listener's head, but were such as to be felt, rather than noticed. His 'readings' are the 'readings' of a sensitive musician." By these signs Mr. Walter is a conductor of parts and quality. Calling him to their concerts, the controlling powers of the Symphony Orchestra wisely depart from a policy that of old was too chary of interesting guests. And there is no progress like the progress that liberalizes itself.

H. T. P.

TRANS. MAR. 10.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

At the Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the soloist will be Richard Burgin, who will play Beethoven's violin concerto. Pierre Monteux will present two novelties, Koechlin's "Three Chorales" and the Scherzo "Tam O'Shanter," by Eugene Goosens. Debussy's "Printemps" suite and Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture are other numbers.

MONDAY SYMPHONY

Rimsky-Korsakov's Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade" will be the feature of the next Monday Symphony concert, on March 26. The soloist will be Madame Esther Ferrabini Jacchia, who will sing arias from Godard's "Le Tasse" and Verdi's "Aida." Bach's Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for string orchestra and the "Ballad of the Gnomides," by Respighi, are other numbers.

ADT SR. MAR. 18.

Bruno Walter, one of the most noted of living orchestral conductors, has been invited by the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to conduct the concerts in the regular series March 30 and 31. Mr Walter came to this countr last Fall after resigning his position a general musical director of the Bavaria National Theatres, in which he ha succeeded Felix Mottl in 1914. He ha been very highly praised by the leadin New York reviewers as guest conducto of the New York Symphony Society. His program here will include Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, Mozart's D major Symphony, (K. [illegible]; Beethoven' G minor piano concerto, with Arthu Schnabel as pianist, and Richar Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel." Very seldom in the history of the orchestra has a guest conductor directed a whole program. The latest instance was Vincent d'Indy last season.

The fourth Monday Symphony concert, March 26, offers a new piece by Respighi, whose "Fountain of Rome" greatly pleased Boston audiences two years ago; "Scheherezade," by Rimsky-Korsakoy; a Bach suite, and arias from Godard's "Tasso" and Verdi's "Aida" to be sung by Mme Ester Ferrabini-Jacchia, whose "Carmen" with the San Carlo opera is a pleasant memory for many of the local musical public.

GLOBE - MAR. 18.

FROM
NEWS, FEB 17 1923
Providence, R. I.

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN MUSIC LEAGUE CONCERT SUNDAY

Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose musicians will be heard tomorrow afternoon in the first of the series of Providence Music League concerts in the Albee Theatre, has chosen numbers to be playedby Richard Burgin, first violinist of the Boston Symphony is in keeping with the main programme.

Of especial interest are the two orchestra selections, Chabrier's "Overture 1812," and Tchaikowsky's Rhapsody "Espana," both of which, on two different occasions this winter have been played by the Monteux orchestra. They both are placed at the end of the programme tomorrow. In two of the regular symphony series in Infantry Hall this winter they have been used at the closing numbers with much success.

Mendelssohn's concerto in E minor will be the principal number supplied by Mr. Burgin.

The programme follows:

Overture, "The Roman Carnival," op. 9, Berlioz; Symphony "From the New World," No. 5, in E minor, op. 95 (two movements), Dvorak, Largo, Scherzo; "Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem, No. 3 (after Lamartine), Liszt; Concerto in E minor for violin, op. 64 (two movements), Andante, Allegretto non troppo, Allegro molto vivace; Rhapsody, "Espana," Chabrier; Overture, Solemnelle, "1812," op. 49, Tschaikowsky.

Tickets for the series of three concerts offered by the Providence Music League, the backer of which has remained a mystery, are sold for 40 cents. This makes the concerts about 13 cents each. The sole idea in promoting the series is to give to many persons with musical tastes a chance to hear some of the best artists although they cannot afford the prices usually charged. It is hoped that the interest in the league will grow so fast as to make a continuation of this work possible.

The league has sold the tickets through various persons and agencies which could put the promoters in touch with people who really appreciate good music but who are not financially able to pay the regular prices which an orchestra such as the Boston Symphony must charge or such as most of the great singers and musicians are paid.

The other concerts will be held on March 18 and on April 15, both in the Albee Theatre. At the first of these Lucy Marsh, soprano; Miquelle Longy, 'cellist, and Rose and Charlotte Presel, pianists, will be heard. In the second concert Mme. Sigrid Onegin, contralto, of the Metropolitan Opera House, will be the soloist.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
FEB 17 1923

CLARA CLEMENS SOLOIST AT NEXT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Will Sing Three Numbers at Infantry Hall Feb. 27.

Clara Clemens, the celebrated mezzo-soprano, will be the soloist at the fourth Boston Symphony concert, the last but one of the Providence season, at Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, Feb. 27. She is a daughter of the late Mark Twain and wife of the pianist Gabrilowitsch and last summer extended the course of her tours to Europe, where she gave an historical cycle of seven song recitals in Munich, winning immediate attention. She will sing the aria from Wagner's "Rienzi," "My Life Fades in Its Bosom," and the two songs, "Phidyle," by Duparc, and "Hopak," by Moussorgsky.

Pierre Monteux will open the concert with the symphony of Cesar Franck, the Belgian master, declared to be the greatest symphonic achievement of the French school of music and often called the finest of modern symphonies. Another work bearing national characterictics is the symphonic poem, "The Moldau," by Smetana, the Czech composer, which is inspired by the river which is bound up with every Bohemian's pride for his country.

The evening will close with two numbers from the music dramas of Wagner—the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and the Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

NEWS, FEB 17 1923
Providence, R. I.

CLARA CLEMENS WITH SYMPHONY HERE FEBRUARY 27

The fourth Boston Symphony concert, and last but one of the Providence season, is to be given in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, Feb. 27. The soloist for this concert will be Clara Clemens, the celebrated mezzo-soprano, who is likewise known as the daughter of Mark Twain and husband of the pianist Gabrilowitsch. Clara Clemens will sing with the orchestra the aria from Wagner's "Rienzi," "My Life Fades in Its Blossom," and the two songs, "Phidyle" by Duparc and "Hopak" by Moussorgsky.

Pierre Monteux will open the concert with the symphony of Cesar Franck, the Belgian master, which is acknowledged to be the greatest symphonic achievement of the French school of music and is often called the finest of modern symphonies.

Another work bearing national characteritics is the symphonic poem, "The Moldau" by Smetana, the Czech composer, which is inspired by the river bound up with every Bohemian's pride for his country.

This evening will close with two numbers from the music dramas of Wagner—the prelude to "Lohengrin" and the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

FROM

NEW YORK CITY

The Boston Orchestra played an orchestral suite by Edward Ballantine of Cambridge, Mass., entitled "From the Garden of Hellas," in four movements, some being transcriptions of songs with piano accompaniment. The composer is an instructor in the musical department of Harvard College. At the same concert was played Turina's two "Fantastic Dances," Turina being one of the latest contributions of Spain to modern music. According to Philip Hale in The Boston Herald, certain Frenchmen have been more successful in giving us Spain in music. "Hearing Turina's music, we kept wishing that the orchestra were playing Chabrier's 'Espana' or Debussy's 'Iberia.'"

N. Y.
HERALD

FEB 18 1923

"American and Barbarian."

Germans have been coming to this country for many years and saturating themselves with knowledge of how things musical are done here, but when they have returned to their own land they have found it convenient to keep their information to themselves and to disseminate only misinformation. When Mr. Gericke, for instance, went home to live in Vienna he speedily learned that if he did not wish his neighbors to classify him with Ananias he would do well to keep quiet about the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was useless for him to tell the Viennese that it was a great organization. They knew better. It was American and therefore barbarian.

The writer is not in possession of facts about what Arthur Nikisch did, but it is perfectly safe to say that his views about the Boston Symphony Orchestra had to be aired with great discretion. All this was at a time when the Boston orchestra was without any question the best in the world. But to the German mind this was simply inconceivable. It could not be the best because it was not German and Germany was the only country which knew how to play symphonies.

From
EVENING MAIL FEB 22 1923
New York City

Boston Ensemble.

Of exceeding interest is the announcement that the second of the series of interpretative concerts, under the auspices of the Simmons College Endowment Fund, will be broadcasted from Jordan Hall this evening. These are given by the Boston Symphony Ensemble, the well-known organization of prominent members from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of able Augusto Vannini, conductor, who has been associated with the parent organization for over twenty years, and Henry Gideon, who will comment on the specially chosen programme, treating the subject, "Formal Beauty in Music."

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
FEB 24 1923

CLARA CLEMENS SOLOIST AT NEXT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Principal Number to Be Cesar Franck's Masterpiece.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its next concert here next Tuesday evening in Infantry Hall at 8:15. The soloist will be Clara Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain and wife of Gabrilowitsch. Pierre Monteux has made the feature of the programme Cesar Franck's masterpiece.

Musical Bohemia will be represented by the symphonic poem of Smetana, "Vltava" ("The Moldau"). Two Wagnerian numbers, preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg," will conclude the concert.

Clara Clemens will sing the aria, "My Life Fades at Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienzi," and the songs, "Phydile," by Duparc, and "HoPpak," by Moussorgsky.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
FEB 24 1923

CLARA CLEMENS
Soloist with
BOSTON SYMPHONY
At INFANTRY HALL Tuesday Ever

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 24 1923

CLARA CLEMENS SOLOIST AT NEXT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Principal Number to Be Cesar Franck's Masterpiece.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its next concert here next Tuesday evening in Infantry Hall at 8:15. The soloist will be Clara Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain and wife of Gabrilowitsch. Pierre Monteux has made the feature of the programme Cesar Franck's masterpiece.

Musical Bohemia will be represented by the symphonic poem of Smetana, "Vltava" ("The Moldau"). Two Wagnerian numbers, preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg," will conclude the concert.

Clara Clemens will sing the aria, "My Life Fades at Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienzi," and the songs, "Phydile," by Duparc, and "HoPpak," by Moussorgsky.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 25 1923

• • •

Boston Symphony Here Tuesday

Next Tuesday night's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Infantry Hall will be the next to the last of the present season. It will start at 8:15 o'clock.

Mr. Monteux will give the first hearing in Providence in a number of seasons of the famous symphony in D-minor, by Cesar Franck, one of the most popular and likewise considered one of the most inspired masterpieces of the French school. He will also conduct Smetana's symphonic poem, "The Moldau," and two Wagnerian numbers, the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

The soloist is Clara Clemens, mezzo-soprano, daughter of Mark Twain and wife of Gabrilowitsch, who will sing the aria, "My Life Fades at Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienzi," and songs "Phydile," by Duparc, and "Hopac," by Moussorgsky.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL

FEB 25 1923

Franck [illegible] Symphony Heads Boston Orchestra Programme

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH
Of the Faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music.

At the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Infantry Hall on Dec. 12 Mr. Monteux and his forces played as tribute to Cesar Franck (born at Liege, Belgium, Dec. 10, 1822), that composer's symphonic poem, "The Wild Huntsman." The Franck centenary concert in Boston brought performances not only of this piece and of another symphonic poem, "Les Aeolides," but also of the greatest of all Franck's compositions in any form, the Symphony in D minor, last played in Providence under M. Rabaud in April, 1919. This monumental composition heads the programme that Mr. Monteux has set for the concert in Infantry Hall next Tuesday evening, and although a little late to serve as memorial exercise in the strictest sense, yet any music by Franck is heard this season with a peculiar interest.

Composed in 1888, this Symphony in D minor was first publicly performed in February of the following year, at a concert of the Paris Conservatory. Vincent d'Indy, dean of the composers of modern France and chief among the many notable pupils of Franck, tells us that the subscribers to these concerts could "make neither head nor tail" of the symphony and that the "musical authorities" were in much the same case. Nor is this altogether a matter for wonder. Clear and beautiful as the symphony sounds to-day, it may well have seemed strange, anarchistic and inchoate to the conservative French musicians of the late '80s. Indeed, when the piece was first played in Boston a decade later it aroused a storm of protest—and one of the outraged even claimed that the music was "immoral."

But it is of such disturbing stuff that the works of genius are oftenest made. Had Franck's Symphony proved wholly acceptable to the learned professors at the Conservatoire in 1889 it would probably have had but little interest for us today. As it is, this music is surprisingly modern in treatment and effect. In Franck's orchestration there is a richness and variety of color that stimulates ears sated and jaded by the vivid, splurging tonal masses of contemporary music, while the great Belgian's harmony—though it be no longer daring and dissonant as such things are now measured—is still satisfying in its lushness and fascinating in its kaleidoscopic profusions.

A pregnant phrase of three notes (a phrase used with slight modification by both Beethoven and Wagner) begins the slow and mystical introduction of the first movement, and this phrase in quickened tempo becomes the kernel of the main body of the movement. Two other motives are here prominent—a vigorous, determined phrase, triumphantly asserted by the first trumpet and called by Mr. d'Indy the "motive of Faith," and a lovely lyric phrase that is the second theme (properly speaking, of the movement. An almost religious melody for English horn, accompanied by the harp, begins the ensuing allegretto and this and the music that follows has the atmosphere of a solemn festival, perhaps less Christian than pagan. A mysterious and ghostly passage in the middle of this movement takes the place of the traditional scherzo, which is missing from the symphony.

In the third and last movement Franck's muse soars aloft. A spiritually confident theme, such as he alone could have written, is heard at the outset, and in this movement comes again the motive of faith, as also, in majestic guise, comes the English horn theme of the allegreto. The close, following a marvellously built-up crescendo, is a paean of joy. In dark questioning the symphony begins; it ends in apocalyptic exaltation.

In the rest of Tuesday evening's programme the name of Wagner figures prominently. From Clara Clemens, the soloist, will be heard the exciting scene, "Gerechter Gott," and the aria, "In seine Bluthe bleicht mein Leben," from Wagner's youthful and often crude, often powerful opera, "Rienzi."

At the end of the concert will come the magnificent prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," music-drama of the composer's ripe maturity, revealing his powers of invention and his surpassing technical skill at their fullest, and in singularly happy combination. As answer to his critics, who claimed that in building the new he destroyed or disregarded the old, did Wagner write his glorious comic opera of mediaeval Nuremberg, and in this amazing score he achieved feats of contrapuntal mastery that might have been envied even by Bach. It was last played in Providence by the Boston orchestra in 1915.

And between the young Wagner of "Rienzi" and the mature Wagner of "The Mastersingers" comes the Wagner of the prelude to "Lohengrin." In this introduction, in which is suggested the descent to earth of angels bearing the Holy Grail, Wagner wrote one of the most nearly perfect, one of the most truly beautiful of his purely orchestral pages. Here for the first time he revealed, in something approaching their full splendor, his well-nigh miraculous powers of orchestration. The prelude was given here by Mr. Monteux two seasons ago.

The other music of the evening may be more briefly dealt with here. The remaining orchestral number is the tone-poem, "The Moldau," from the cycle of six symphonic poems, "My Country," by Friedrich Smetana. In "The Moldau," best known of his symphonic pieces, this greatest of the Czech composers would celebrate the lordly stream that rises in the Bohemian forest, winds its way through Bohemian meadows, and flows on toward Prague. "The Moldau" was written in 1874, 10 years before Smetana, who had long been afflicted with deafness, ended his unhappy life in a madhouse. "The Moldau" has not been given by the orchestra in Providence since 1911.

Besides the aria from "Rienzi," Mme. Clemens sings two of the most widely and justly famed of modern songs—Duparc's "Phidyle" and a "Hopak" by Musorgsky. In his recently published book on the appreciation of music, Walter Spaulding, head of the music department at Harvard University, calls "Phidyle" the most beautiful of all songs—and mani would sustain this judgment. In the first three decades of his life Duparc, born in 1848 and the favorite pupil of Cesar Franck, composed 16 songs that need yield place to no music in this form from the hand of any composer now living. In 1885 a nervous affection made it necessary for Duparc to renounce his creative activity that promised so much and now, in his 76th year, he is still living in retirement in Switzerland, regretting the work that he was never able to perform. * * * Musorgsky's "Hopak," a wild Cossack dance, shows in characteristic vein the irregular genius of the most gifted, if not the most skilfull, of Russian composers.

FEB 25 192
TRIBUNE

Providence

The last appearance in Providence but one this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place in Infantry Hall next Tuesday evening, Feb. 27th, at 8:15.

Pierre Monteux will present at this concert the great symphony of Cesar Franck, which has not been heard here for some time, but which is regarded by many as the foremost achievement of the French school of music. When the Belgian master wrote this symphony in the early '90's, it was received with incredulity, but "Father Franck" was confident after hearing his score for the first time, and indeed it is now generally recognized as his masterpiece. Beginning in a mystery of sombre colors, it rised gradualy to a triumphant outburst of joyous exaltation.

Musical Bohemia will be represented on this program by the symphonic poem of Smetana "Vltava" ("The Moldau") This beautiful river, which runs through the heart of Bohemia and reflects its many and lovely landscapes, is intimately bound with every true Bohemian's national sentiments, and indeed here embodies the foremost aspirations of the composer, who has attained real importance.

Two Wagnerian numbers will close the concert, the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Maestersingers of Nuremberg."

The soloist will be Clara Clemens, mezzo-soprano, who is the daughter of Mark Twain and the wife of Gabrilowitsch, and who has attracted considerable attention by the rare intelligence of her interpretative powers in numerous recent recitals, notably in New York a few weeks ago. She will sing with the orchestra the aria "My Life Fades At Its Blosson" from Wagner's "Rienzi," and the songs "Phydile" by Duparc and "Hopak" by Moussorgsky.

NEW YORK
TIMES
FEB 25 1923

Of the performance of Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, W. S. S. in The Boston Transcript says:

"It is almost a pity that Mr. Monteux did not give Bostonians an opportunity to pass upon the merits of Mr. Stock's version of the piece. Admitting the possible tastelessness of such revision, agreeing in general with the estimable Ebenezer Prout that in the matter of scoring we should take the classic as men take their wives 'for better or for worse,' the fact remains that the Third Symphony according to Schumann is sufficiently familiar here and that this music according to Stock might prove an interesting revelation."

But he continues: All the fault in this symphony does not lie in its instrumental presentation. "The sweep and impetus, the sheer elation of the theme of the opening Vivace are not to be denied, but its characteristic rhythm is too insistently pursued throughout the movement, and the resultant effect is that of a careless, headlong improvisation, not of a well-balanced, well-contrasted symphonic structure. Schumann seldom succeeded in developing his themes; he merely 'worried' them, and the ineptitude of this process distresses, though the theme itself, even on its thousandth reappearance, still makes its appeal."

Alfredo Casella will be much favored at the next Boston Symphony concert in Boston. He will play his arrangement of Albeniz's Spanish Rhapsody for piano and orchestra and will conduct his own "Pupazzetti" for orchestra, five pieces for marionettes and his orchestral rhapsody, "Italia."

Alfred Cortot played in Boston for the benefit of the Municipal School of Music at Rheims, under the auspices of the Boston branch of the American Friends of Musicians in France. At the same performance Walter Damrosch spoke describing a visit he paid last summer to the school at Rheims.

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
FEB 26 1923

THE MARVEL OF AMERICA

The unending popularity of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, who are scheduled for an appearance here in City Hall auditorium, under the auspices of the music commission, Wednesday evening, March 7, is not to be wondered at. The fame of this organization during the 40 years of its history has risen to pre-eminence. The perfection of the Boston Symphony performances have become the marvel of America, and even of the musical world at large. Nothing comparable is to be heard elsewhere. The genius of Pierre Monteux as conductor has added new qualities of beauty to the famous organization, and never have the concerts been more highly praised or evidently enjoyed than under his direction. Seats for the local concert are now selling at the City Hall box office, open daily from 10.30 to 11.30 a. m. Mail orders will be given prompt attention.

PORTLAND
ME.
PRESS HERALD
FEB 26 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The only appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra east of Boston this Winter, will be in Portland on March 7, which is to be the ninth concert in the Portland Municipal Music Commission's series. Many people in many cities and towns are planning to attend this concert. School musical associations are giving concerts for funds that they may go en masse and musical societies are negotiating for whole blocks of seats.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has one hundred and one players. It has long ranked ahead of all other organizations of its kind in America, and is, by virtue of its supreme qualities known throughout the world. The fforty-first season of the Orchestra is proving successful in every respect. After the opening concerts the ensemble was acclaimed as sounding finer than ever before. As large a schedule as possible is being undertaken, including more than fifty concerts in Boston, fifteen in Greater New York, and others in the larger cities of the East.

Pierre Monteux, the conductor, has prepared for Portland a program of special interest, and the concert promises to be the largest event socially, as well as musically which Portland has known thus far this year. Although this is the first formal announcement of this concert, mail orders from many points in Northern New England have already been received. The Music Commission is prepared to give these orders prompt attention. They should be addressed to Room 59, City Hall, Portland

---

PORTLAND
ME.
TELEGRAM
FEB 25 1923

ONLY APPEARANCE OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA EAST OF HUB TO BE IN PORTLAND

Ninth Concert in Municipal Course Is Scheduled For March 7 at City Hall—Many Orders For Tickets Are Received—School Musical Clubs to Attend

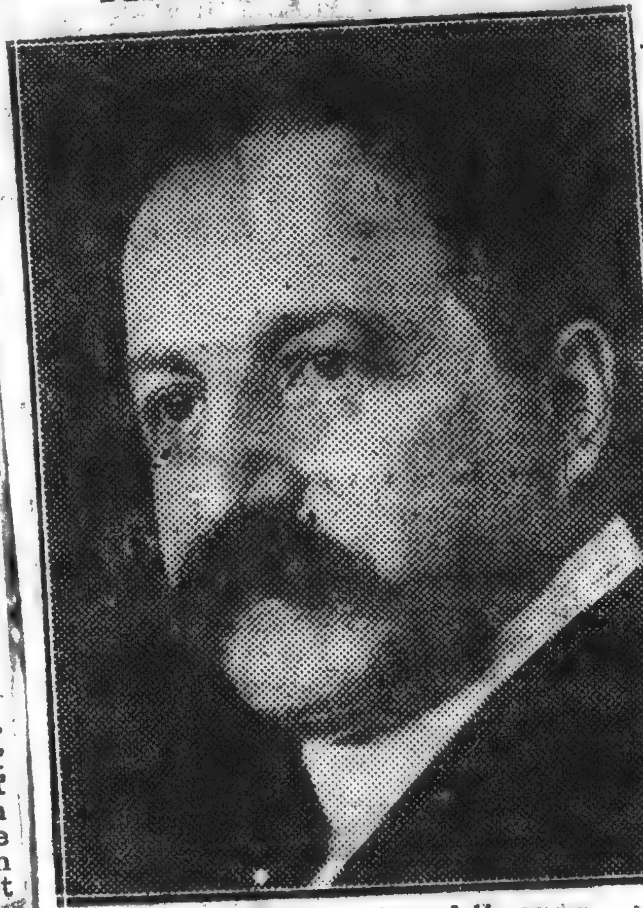


Photo by Brown, Brookline
PIERRE MONTEUX

The only appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra east of Boston this Winter will be in Portland City Hall Auditorium on March 7, which is to be the ninth concert in the Portland municipal music commission's series. Many people in neighboring cities and towns are planning to attend this concert. School musical associations are giving concerts for funds that they may attend en masse and musical societies are negotiating for whole blocks of seats.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has 101 players. It has long ranked ahead of all other organizations of its kind in America, and is, by virtue of its supreme qualities known throughout the world. Its supremacy has been achieved through 40 years of endeavor in which wealth has been extended, high ideals maintained and the genius of one after another of the world's greatest conductors devoted to the gradual improvement of the ensemble. The most skillful musicians which Europe afforded were induced to join the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There is a minimum of change from season to season in its personnel, which enables the orchestra by long association and practice to play with marvelous unanimity.

To hear a Boston Symphony concert is a doubly rare experience in that it brings before the auditor the fine wealth of symphonic music in an ideally perfect presentation. It is now evident in this, the third season, Pierre Monteux, the present conductor, is one of the most gifted the Boston Symphony Orchestra ever had. Never have the symphony programs and their performance by the orchestra been more evidently enjoyed and generally praised than under his direction.

The present 41st season of the orchestra is proving successful in every respect. After the opening concerts the ensemble was acclaimed as sounding finer than ever before. As large a schedule as possible is being undertaken, including more than 50 concerts in Boston, 15 in Greater New York and others in the larger cities of the East.

Pierre Monteux has prepared for Portland a program of special interest, and the concert promises to be the largest event socially, as well as musically which Portland has known thus far this year. Although this is the first formal announcement of this concert, mail orders from many points in Northern New England have already been received. The Music Commission is prepared to give these orders prompt attention. They should be addressed to Room 59, City Hall, Portland, Me.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
FEB 28 1923

Mengelberg Conducts

The program of the Philharmonic last night at the Metropolitan Opera House contained little that was new, but was planned with Mr. Mengelberg's usual feeling for contrast. The one novelty was a little pastoral, dreamy and tranquil in spirit, by Henri Rabaud, remembered here particularly for his year as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and for his Oriental opera "Marouf." Last night's composition was called "Eclogue: Virgilian Poem for Orchestra," and was inspired by lines from the first Eclogue, the spirit of which it faithfully translated into musical language. One could easily imagine Tityrus "stretched at ease, singing his happy loves" in pleasant and entirely undisturbing tonalities. It was as far removed from the classic grace and wealth of fancy of Weber's overture to "Der Freischütz," which preceded it, as it was from Ravel's "The Waltz," which followed. The second half of the evening was devoted to Strauss's "Hero's Life."

NEW YORK
N. Y. Brook
WORLD
ISSUE OF
MAR 4 1923

CALVE AT THE ACADEMY

Will Be Soloist at the Symphony Concert.

The fourth concert this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Academy of Music the evening of March 16, with Emma Calve as soloist. Pierre Monteux will give Schubert's masterpiece, the Unfinished Symphony in B Minor, and he will conduct the humorous and fantastic tone poem of Richard Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." American music will be represented by a performance of Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles." The viola d'amore solo will be played by Richard Burgin.

The concert will close with the brilliant and colorful Roumanian rhapsody of Enesco.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
CITIZEN
ISSUE OF
MAR [illegible] 1923

Two Boston Symphony concerts remain of the Brooklyn season, and the first of these will take place Friday evening, March 16, in the Academy of Music. The soloist will be Emma Calve, the celebrated French soprano. She will sing with the orchestra arias by Gluck and Handel.

Pierre Monteux will open the evening with a performance of Schubert's masterpiece of melodic beauty, the "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, and will also conduct Strauss' tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," a humorous and highly brilliant score based upon the medieval legend.

"La Mort de Tintagiles," the dramatic poem of Loeffler, in which the viola d'amore solo will be played by Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra, is also on the program, and, to close, the "Rumanian Rhapsody" of Enesco, the distinguished composer now visiting America. This score, based upon the folk tunes of his own people, is regarded as one of his most characteristic works.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
MAR 4 1923

But two Boston Symphony concerts remain of the Brooklyn season, and the first of these will take place a week from Friday evening, March 16, in the Academy of Music. The soloist will be Emma Calve, the celebrated French soprano, known the world over as the creator of the role of Carmen. This celebrity has in her concert tours of America in the last two seasons made a wonderfully vivid impression upon our public, and indeed her compelling dramatic power and the scarcely equalled beauty of her voice are said to be at their very finest. She will sing with the orchestra arias by Gluck and Handel.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL

FEB 25 1923

Franck [illegible] Symphony Heads Boston Orchestra Programme

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH
Of the Faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music.

At the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Infantry Hall on Dec. 12 Mr. Monteux and his forces played as tribute to Cesar Franck (born at Liege, Belgium, Dec. 10, 1822), that composer's symphonic poem, "The Wild Huntsman." The Franck centenary concert in Boston brought performances not only of this piece and of another symphonic poem, "Les Aeolides," but also of the greatest of all Franck's compositions in any form, the Symphony in D minor, last played in Providence under M. Rabaud in April, 1919. This monumental composition heads the programme that Mr. Monteux has set for the concert in Infantry Hall next Tuesday evening, and although a little late to serve as memorial exercise in the strictest sense, yet any music by Franck is heard this season with a peculiar interest.

Composed in 1888, this Symphony in D minor was first publicly performed in February of the following year, at a concert of the Paris Conservatory. Vincent d'Indy, dean of the composers of modern France and chief among the many notable pupils of Franck, tells us that the subscribers to these concerts could "make neither head nor tail" of the symphony and that the "musical authorities" were in much the same case. Nor is this altogether a matter for wonder. Clear and beautiful as the symphony sounds to-day, it may well have seemed strange, anarchistic and inchoate to the conservative French musicians of the late '80s. Indeed, when the piece was first played in Boston a decade later it aroused a storm of protest—and one of the outraged even claimed that the music was "immoral."

But it is of such disturbing stuff that the works of genius are oftenest made. Had Franck's Symphony proved wholly acceptable to the learned professors at the Conservatoire in 1889 it would probably have had but little interest for us today. As it is, this music is surprisingly modern in treatment and effect. In Franck's orchestration there is a richness and variety of color that stimulates ears sated and jaded by the vivid, splurging tonal masses of contemporary music, while the great Belgian's harmony—though it be no longer daring and dissonant as such things are now measured—is still satisfying in its lushness and fascinating in its kaleidoscopic profusions.

A pregnant phrase of three notes (a phrase used with slight modification by both Beethoven and Wagner) begins the [illegible] and mystical introduction of the first movement, and this phrase in quickened tempo becomes the kernel of the main body of the movement. Two other motives are here prominent—a vigorous, determined phrase, triumphantly asserted by the first trumpet and called by Mr. d'Indy the "motive of Faith," and a lovely lyric phrase that is the second theme (properly speaking, of the movement. An almost religious melody for English horn, accompanied by the harp, begins the ensuing allegretto and this and the music that follows has the atmosphere of a solemn festival, perhaps less Christian than pagan. A mysterious and ghostly passage in the middle of this movement takes the place of the traditional scherzo, which is missing from the symphony.

In the third and last movement Franck's muse soars aloft. A spiritually confident theme, such as he alone could have written, is heard at the outset, and in this movement comes again the motive of faith, as also, in majestic guise, comes the English horn theme of the allegreto. The close, following a marvellously built-up crescendo, is a paean of joy. In dark questioning the symphony begins; it ends in apocalyptic exaltation.

In the rest of Tuesday evening's programme the name of Wagner figures prominently. From Clara Clemens, the soloist, will be heard the exciting scene, "Gerechter Gott," and the aria, "In seine Bluthe bleicht mein Leben," from Wagner's youthful and often crude, often powerful opera, "Rienzi."

At the end of the concert will come the magnificent prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," music-drama of the composer's ripe maturity, revealing his powers of invention and his surpassing technical skill at their fullest, and in singularly happy combination. As answer to his critics, who claimed that in building the new he destroyed or disregarded the old. did Wagner write his glorious comic opera of mediaeval Nuremberg, and in this amazing score he achieved feats of contrapuntal mastery that might have been envied even by Bach. It was last played in Providence by the Boston orchestra in 1915.

And between the young Wagner of "Rienzi" and the mature Wagner of "The Mastersingers" comes the Wagner of the prelude to "Lohengrin." In this introduction, in which is suggested the descent to earth of angels bearing the Holy Grail, Wagner wrote one of the most truly most nearly perfect, one of the most truly beautiful of his purely orchestral pages. Here for the first time he revealed, in something approaching their full splendor, his well-nigh miraculous powers of orchestration. The prelude was given here by Mr. Monteux two seasons ago.

The other music of the evening may be more briefly dealt with here. The remaining orchestral number is the tone-poem, "The Moldau," from the cycle of six symphonic poems, "My Country," by Friedrich Smetana. In "The Moldau," best known of his symphonic pieces, this greatest of the Czech composers would celebrate the lordly stream that rises n the Bohemian forest, winds its way through Bohemian meadows, and flows on toward Prague. "The Moldau" was written in 1874, 10 years before Smetana, who had long been afflicted with deafness ended his unhappy life in a madhouse. "The Moldau" has not been given by the orchestra in Providence since 1911.

Besides the aria from "Rienzi," Mme. Clemens sings two of the most widely and justly famed of modern songs—Duparc's "Phidyle" and a "Hopak" by Musorgsky. In his recently published book on the appreciation of music, Walter Spaulding, head of the music department at Harvard University, calls "Phidyle" the most beautiful of all songs—and mani would sustain this judgment. In the first three decades of his life Duparc, born in 1848 and the favorite pupil of Cesar Franck, composed 16 songs that need yield place to no music in this form from the hand of any composer now living. In 1885 a nervous affection made it necessary for Duparc to renounce his creative activity that promised so much and now, in his 76th year, he is still living in retirement in Switzerland, regretting the work that he was never able to perform. * * * Musorgsky's "Hopak," a wild Cossack dance, shows in characteristic vein the irregular genius of the most gifted, if not the most skilfull, of Russian composers.

FROM
FEB 25
TRIBUNE

Providence

The last appearance in Providence but one this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place in Infantry Hall next Tuesday evening, Feb. 27th, at 8:15.

Pierre Monteux will present at this concert the great symphony of Cesar Franck, which has not been heard here for some time, but which is regarded by many as the foremost achievement of the French school of music. When the Belgian master wrote this symphony in the early '90's, it was received with incredulity, but "Father Franck" was confident after hearing his score for the first time, and indeed it is now generally recognized as his masterpiece. Beginning in a mystery of sombre colors, it rised gradualy to a triumphant outburst of joyous exaltation.

Musical Bohemia will be represented on this program by the symphonic poem of Smetana "Vltava" ("The Moldau") This beautiful river, which runs through the heart of Bohemia and reflects its many and lovely landscapes, is intimately bound with every true Bohemian's national sentiments, and indeed here embodies the foremost aspirations of the composer, who has attained real importance.

Two Wagnerian numbers will close the concert, the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Maestersingers of Nuremberg."

The soloist will be Clara Clemens, mezzo-soprano, who is the daughter of Mark Twain and the wife of Gabrilowitsch, and who has attracted considerable attention by the rare intelligence of her interpretative powers in numerous recent recitals, notably in New York a few weeks ago. She will sing with the orchestra the aria "My Life Fades At Its Blosson" from Wagner's "Rienzi," and the songs "Phydile" by Duparc and "Hopak" by Moussorgsky.

NEW YORK
TIMES

FEB 25 1923

Of the performance of Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, W. S. S. in The Boston Transcript says:

"It is almost a pity that Mr. Monteux did not give Bostonians an opportunity to pass upon the merits of Mr. Stock's version of the piece. Admitting the possible tastelessness of such revision, agreeing in general with the estimable Ebenezer Prout that in the matter of scoring we should take the classic as men take their wives 'for better or for worse,' the fact remains that the Third Symphony according to Schumann is sufficiently familiar here and that this music according to Stock might prove an interesting revelation."

But he continues: All the fault in this symphony does not lie in its instrumental presentation. "The sweep and impetus, the sheer elation of the theme of the opening Vivace are not to be denied, but its characteristic rhythm is too insistently pursued throughout the movement, and the resultant effect is that of a careless, headlong improvisation, not of a well-balanced, well - contrasted symphonic structure. Schumann seldom succeeded in developing his themes; he merely 'worried' them, and the ineptitude of this process distresses, though the theme itself, even on its thousandth reappearance, still makes its appeal."

Alfredo Casella will be much favored at the next Boston Symphony concert in Boston. He will play his arrangement of Albeniz's Spanish Rhapsody for piano and orchestra and will conduct his own "Pupazzetti" for orchestra, five pieces for marionettes and his orchestral rhapsody, "Italia."

Alfred Cortot played in Boston for the benefit of the Municipal School of Music at Rheims, under the auspices of the Boston branch of the American Friends of Musicians in France. At the same performance Walter Damrosch spoke describing a visit he paid last summer to the school at Rheims.

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
FEB 26 1923

THE MARVEL OF AMERICA

The unending popularity of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, who are scheduled for an appearance here in City Hall auditorium under the auspices of the music commission, Wednesday evening, March 7, is not to be wondered at. The fame of this organization during the 40 years of its history has risen to pre-eminence. The perfection of the Boston Symphony performances have become the marvel of America, and even of the musical world at large. Nothing comparable is to be heard elsewhere. The genius of Pierre Monteux as conductor has added new qualities of beauty to the famous organization, and never have the concerts been more highly praised or evidently enjoyed than under his direction. Seats for the local concert are now selling at the City Hall box office, open daily from 10.30 to 11.30 a. m. Mail orders will be given prompt attention.

PORTLAND
ME.
PRESS HERALD
FEB 26 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The only appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra east of Boston this Winter, will be in Portland on March 7, which is to be the ninth concert in the Portland Municipal Music Commission's series. Many people in many cities and towns are planning to attend this concert. School musical associations are giving concerts for funds that they may go en masse and musical societies are negotiating for whole blocks of seats.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has one hundred and one players. It has long ranked ahead of all other organizations of its kind in America, and is, by virtue of its supreme qualities known throughout the world. The fforty-first season of the Orchestra is proving successful in every respect. After the opening concerts the ensemble was acclaimed as sounding finer than ever before. As large a schedule as possible is being undertaken, including more than fifty concerts in Boston, fifteen in Greater New York, and others in the larger cities of the East.

Pierre Monteux, the conductor, has prepared for Portland a program of special interest, and the concert promises to be the largest event socially, as well as musically which Portland has known thus far this year. Although this is the first formal announcement of this concert, mail orders from many points in Northern New England have already been received. The Music Commission is prepared to give these orders prompt attention. They should be addressed to Room 59 City Hall, Portland.

PORTLAND
ME.
TELEGRAM
FEB 25 1923

ONLY APPEARANCE OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA EAST OF HUB TO BE IN PORTLAND

Ninth Concert in Municipal Course Is Scheduled For March 7 at City Hall—Many Orders For Tickets Are Received—School Musical Clubs to Attend

Photo by Brown, Brookline
PIERRE MONTEUX

The only appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra east of Boston this Winter will be in Portland City Hall Auditorium on March 7, which is to be the ninth concert in the Portland municipal music commission's series. Many people in neighboring cities and towns are planning to attend this concert. School musical associations are giving concerts for funds that they may attend en masse and musical societies are negotiating for whole blocks of seats.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has 101 players. It has long ranked ahead of all other organizations of its kind in America, and is, by virtue of its supreme qualities known throughout the world. Its supremacy has been achieved through 40 years of endeavor in which wealth has been extended, high ideals maintained and the genius of one after another of the world's greatest conductors devoted to the gradual improvement of the ensemble. The most skillful musicians which Europe afforded were induced to join the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There is a minimum of change from season to season in its personnel, which enables the orchestra by long association and practice to play with marvelous unanimity.

To hear a Boston Symphony concert is a doubly rare experience in that it brings before the auditor the fine wealth of symphonic music in an ideally perfect presentation. It is now evident in this, the third season, Pierre Monteux, the present conductor, is one of the most gifted the Boston Symphony Orchestra ever had. Never have the symphony programs and their performance by the orchestra been more evidently enjoyed and generally praised than under his direction.

The present 41st season of the orchestra is proving successful in every respect. After the opening concerts the ensemble was acclaimed as sounding finer than ever before. As large a schedule as possible is being undertaken, including more than 50 concerts in Boston, 15 in Greater New York and others in the larger cities of the East.

Pierre Monteux has prepared for Portland a program of special interest, and the concert promises to be the largest event socially, as well as musically which Portland has known thus far this year. Although this is the first formal announcement of this concert, mail orders from many points in Northern New England have already been received. The Music Commission is prepared to give these orders prompt attention. They should be addressed to Room 59, City Hall, Portland, Me.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
FEB 28 1923

Mengelberg Conducts

The program of the Philharmonic last night at the Metropolitan Opera House contained little that was new, but was planned with Mr. Mengelberg's usual feeling for contrast. The one novelty was a little pastoral, dreamy and tranquil in spirit, by Henri Rabaud, remembered here particularly for his year as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and for his Oriental opera "Marouf." Last night's composition was called "Eclogue: Virgilian Poem for Orchestra," and was inspired by lines from the first Eclogue, the spirit of which it faithfully translated into musical language. One could easily imagine Tityrus "stretched at ease, singing his happy loves" in pleasant and entirely undisturbing tonalities. It was as far removed from the classic grace and wealth of fancy of Weber's overture to "Der Freischütz," which preceded it, as it was from Ravel's "The Waltz," which followed. The second half of the evening was devoted to Strauss's "Hero's Life."

NEW YORK
N. Y. Brook
WORLD
ISSUE OF
MAR 4 1923

CALVE AT THE ACADEMY

Will Be Soloist at the Symphony Concert.

The fourth concert this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Academy of Music the evening of March 16, with Emma Calve as soloist. Pierre Monteux will give Schubert's masterpiece, the Unfinished Symphony in B Minor, and he will conduct the humorous and fantastic tone poem of Richard Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." American music will be represented by a performance of Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles." The viola d'amore solo will be played by Richard Burgin.

The concert will close with the brilliant and colorful Roumanian rhapsody of Enesco.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
CITIZEN ISSUE
MAR 1923

Two Boston Symphony concerts remain of the Brooklyn season, and the first of these will take place Friday evening, March 16, in the Academy of Music. The soloist will be Emma Calve, the celebrated French soprano. She will sing with the orchestra arias by Gluck and Handel.

Pierre Monteux will open the evening with a performance of Schubert's masterpiece of melodic beauty, the "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, and will also conduct Strauss' tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," a humorous and highly brilliant score based upon the medieval legend.

"La Mort de Tintagiles," the dramatic poem of Loeffler, in which the viola d'amore solo will be played by Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra, is also on the program, and, to close, the "Rumanian Rhapsody" of Enesco, the distinguished composer now visiting America. This score, based upon the folk tunes of his own people, is regarded as one of his most characteristic works.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
MAR 4 1923

But two Boston Symphony concerts remain of the Brooklyn season, and the first of these will take place a week from Friday evening, March 16, in the Academy of Music. The soloist will be Emma Calve, the celebrated French soprano, known the world over as the creator of the role of Carmen. This celebrity has in her concert tours of America in the last two seasons made a wonderfully vivid impression upon our public, and indeed her compelling dramatic power and the scarcely equalled beauty of her voice are said to be at their very finest. She will sing with the orchestra arias by Gluck and Handel.

TIMES MAR 4 1923
BROOKLYN, N. Y.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The fourth and last concert but one of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, March 16, with Emma Calve appearing as soloist. Pierre Monteux will open the program with Schubert's immortal, melodious masterpiece, the "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, and will also conduct the humorous and fantastic tone poem of Richard Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." American music will be represented by a performance of Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," which has become as celebrated as the poem of Maeterlinck that inspired the music.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAR 4 1923

Concerts in Brooklyn

Sergei Rachmaninoff will give a piano recital to-morrow evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences, while the last New York Symphony concert of the season in this series will be given next Saturday afternoon. The fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, the 16th, will present Emma Calve as soloist in Gluck and Handel numbers, while a joint sonata recital will be given at the Academy, under Institute auspices, by Germaine Schnitzer, the pianist, and Olga Fonaroff, violinist.

PORTLAND
ME.
TELEGRAM
MAR 11 1923

The appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Portland for the ninth concert in the Winter's Municipal Course was a memorable event. The audience on Thursday evening was late in arriving on account of the Winter blizzard which had raged through the day. Taxis found their way with difficulty and all cars were late. Had the suburban lines been running, the capacity of the hall would have been taxed.

One of the orchestra's standard programs was given a—tribute to Portland's musical discernment and to the prestige of the municipal course and some very rare and unusual works were performed.

PORTLAND
ME.
TELEGRAM
MAR 11 1923

Pierre Monteux, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the guest of Edwin H. Lemare, municipal organist, and Mrs. Lemare, at the Lafayette Hotel during his stay in town last week. Mr. Monteux remained over night, but the orchestral players all returned by special car to Boston directly after the concert Thursday evening.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
NEWS
ISSUE OF
Mar 14 19/23

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Monteaux's Musicians Play Caesar Franck's D Minor Symphony

By LOTTE B. PORTERFIELD

One of the pioneer musical organizations of America, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared at Poli's yesterday afternoon, under the local management of Mrs. Wilson Greene.

After many vicissitudes, including several changes of directors, they have settled down under Pierre Monteux and play with a verve and passionate abandon that is truly remarkable.

The orchestra is not large, though well registered, and the tone is not always perfect, but its dramatic effects are thrilling.

The symphony was the beautiful one in D Minor by Caesar Franck. In this the themes were particularly well worked out, never being covered by the accompaniment. The remainder of the numbers were entirely from the works of Wagner, following the lead of the other orchestras this season. Too much praise cannot be given to Monteaux and his musicians for their reading of these scores.

N. Y.
HERALD
MAR 14 1923

Philadelphia Men Play New Music on Oriental Themes

Henry Eicheim's Cmposition Written for Mrs. Coolidge's Festival Heard Here.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

Despite the wind and weather and rumors that New York would next season have three new orchestras and a permanent German opera, the eighth concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra was accomplished last evening in Carnegie Hall in the presence of many auditors and to the accompaniment of sonorous applause. The program evolved by Mr. Stokowski consisted of Schubert's C Major symphony, Henry Eicheim's "Oriental Impressions" and Strauss's "Til Eulenspiegel."

Mr. Eicheim's composition—or as much of it as was heard—was a novelty. This musician was once upon a time a member of the Boston Orchestra, which he left to conduct the orchestra of Winchester, Mass. For a few years he has bent himself wholly to composition. When Mrs. Coolidge asked him to write something for her Pittsfield chamber music festival he created his "Oriental Impressions" in their original shape for a group of instruments about as large, but not of the same character, as a Chinese orchestra. It was performed at the Pittsfield festival of 1921.

Just as Deems Taylor did with his "Through the Looking Glass" Mr. Eicheim developed his work for a large orchestra and the Boston organization gave it a hearing on March 24, 1922. There are five movements or sketches in the suite, but only four were on the program last evening, namely, the Korean Sketch, the Siamese Sketch, the Chinese Sketch and Japanese Nocturne.

The nature of the suite suggests the imperative call of the inquiring mind for learned disquisition on the music of Japan, Korea, China and other Oriental countries. But if the inquiring mind will consult the "Encyclopedie de la Musique" fathered by the Paris Conservatoire it will find information in solid masses furnished by some of the foremost savants of France.

Mr. Stokowski must have looked at his watch in the intermission, for to the astonishment of the knowing after delivering two of the sketches he plunged into the first phrase of "Til Eulenspiegel," which may have sounded Chinese to some listeners, but had a familiar tang of the Paradeplatz to the writer, who glided swiftly to the street, for he knew that "Til Eulenspiegel" will be performed not less than three more times within the next five days.

There is no profit in comment on Mr. Eicheim's sketches. They are mere successions of fragmentary national themes, orchestrated with all the paraphernalia of gong, harps, triangles, [illegible] endeavor to [illegible]. But the singularity of the music greatly delighted the audience.

No doubt President Harding has done what he could to restore us to normalcy, but he has no influence in the world of art, where the Venus of Milo has been supplanted by the head of Medusa and the angels of Perugino by the gargoyles of Notre Dame.

Meanwhile the record of the day may close with the declaration that Schubert could have learned much from Mr. Stokowski's reading of the familiar symphony. It used to be a simple, lyrical, tuneful composition without passionate outbursts or periods of stormy emotion. But the process of the Americanization of Leopold Stokowski has brought with it revelations of priceless value. Last night was a grand one for trumpets, trombones and tympani, and the players of these instruments must now be sure that the C major smyphony of Schubert is one of the greatest works not written by Strauss.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
HERALD
ISSUE OF
MAR 14 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN RETURN CONCERT

Monteux Baton Elicits Pallid Wagner Program at Poli's Theater.

FRANCK RENDITION IS GEM

Orchestra Responds With Exquisite Delineation of D Minor Number.

By JESSIE MacBRIDE.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in an all-orchestral program, returned for a single concert under its conductor, Pierre Monteux, at Poli's Theater yesterday afternoon. Anticipation was high when Monteux announced the great Caesar Franck symphony in D minor, and then Wagner in five great excerpts from the music-dramas.

It was doomed to disappointment in the latter part of the program. But of the pallid Wagner we shall speak later.

"MELODRAMATIC" RENDITION.

M. Monteux gave a reading of the great Franck symphony that made it a thing of palpitant mystery and exquisite melody. The great orchestra responded with an exquisite delineation that made this indeed a "melodrama" in the true sense of the word. It was at all times vital and alive. There were resonant plucked strings with fine woodwind themes, a spirit of the East in the allegretto with the violas rich against the winds.

Again one heard that forecast of the modern French school in the pastoral of the opening movement, and over it all melody and melody, soaring or interlaced with other themes in delicate balance. As a whole it was not as fluid as we have heard it, nor so big in climax or in rhythmic curve, but it was finely executed and finely delineated.

PALLID WAGNER.

It was a puzzling thing to discover just why it was that the Wagner program lacked what the Franck contained. The reception accorded the Wagner was increasingly cold. For the first time within memory the playing of the Tristan and Isolde "Love-Death" gave the writer no thrill. And why?

Wagner, in his iconoclastic "melos" surges ever on and on. There is ever the urge that vital emotion feels, there is ever a sort of breathless expectation—created with the change of tempi, and above all with that illusive suspended cadence that never seems to close.

M. Monteux was too orthodox, too fettered with form. His phrases closed in inelastic logic, his passion was weighted, his fatality did not awe.

IN ARIA FORM.

Instead of the rich textured orchestra of Wagner, there seemed something—not Wagner—that sang arias against impetuous backgrounds. But here were none of the dramatic people Wagner created in his score. Even the Siegfried horn lacked heroism. The return of the Rhine Maidens at the close was delicately lovely; but when the fire music returned, there was no flame.

The storm of "The Flying Dutchman" began with the glory of Wagner, but there was no virility in the speech of the Dutchman and considerable blare and indecision in the wind choirs. M. Monteux does not feel the pulse of the master. Dynamically, he was not dramatic. One wished he had played triplets sometimes, instead of three notes. Regrettably, this fine program lagged. It lacked accent, it did not pulsate, and that great [illegible] musical [illegible]

WASHINGTON
D. C.
~~HERALD~~ Star
ISSUE OF
MAR 14 1923

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

That traditionally famous American musical organization, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave a program of exacting compositions before a house filled to capacity at Poli's Theater yesterday afternoon. This was the first appearance of the Boston organization in Washington this year, although its 135th performance in the capital city.

The first half of the program was devoted to three movements of Cesar Franck's "Symphony in D Minor" which excited adverse comment upon the occasion of its first performance at the Conservatory in Paris. Even questions as to its being a real symphony has been raised by more than one music authority. It is a beautiful work. The opening movement (lento allegro non troppo) emphasizes the haunting, simple motive of the symphony in a mood that is as persistent as an elusive, recurring dream. The loveliest of the three movements is the second, (allegretto), which is opened with exquisite pizzicato notes by the strings. The third movement (allegro non troppo) returns to the elusive, nebulous effect so painstakingly brought out in the first movement and the whole symphony leaves an impression that is pastoral in its peacefulness.

Undoubtedly the stringed instruments were the leading division of the orchestra, under the guidance of Pierre Monteux. The brasses seemed somewhat weak and uncertain in the brilliant Wagnerian numbers on the second half of the program. The drums, however, were excellent and the reeds were good. The fire of Wagner, as exemplified under the leadership of Stokowski with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra when it recently gave Wagner's "Prelude and Liebestod," from "Tristan and Isolde," one of the group given yesterday by the Boston aggregation, was noticeably absent, but the religious solemnity of Wagner's masterpieces was in evidence and seemed particularly fitting to the Lenten season. Monteux's reading of the great German's work seems to bring out the great spiritual qualities of the composition rather than the throbbing emotional qualities.

The overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the two selections from "Tristan and Isolde," "Siegfried's Funeral Music," from "Dusk of the Gods," and "Siegfried's Ascent to Bruennhilde's Rock," "Morning Dawn," "Siegfried's Journey Up the Rhine" and "Dusk of the Gods—Prologue" were the selections chosen for the Wagnerian part of the program. M. Monteux's treatment of these numbers was the subject of much discussion after the concert.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
TIMES
ISSUE OF
MAR 14 1923

WAGNER FAILS TO AROUSE AUDIENCE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert Redeemed Only by Franck's Numbers.

By WILLIAM MOORE.

The only appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington this season was a distinct disappointment.

A large and expectant gathering of music lovers assembled in Poli's Theater to hear the much press-agented "Wagner program" Pierre Monteux planned for the edification of his auditors.

Whether Monteux's nationality is a handicap in his interpretation of the great German composer's work, or whether the elements dampened the ardour of the celebrated orchestra, we do not know. It was apparent, however, that Monteux and his musicians failed to thrill the audience as a gathering of Wagner enthusiasts should have been thrilled by the rendition of a program chosen from the best efforts of the master.

The one redeeming feature of the lengthy concert was Cesar Franck's delightful symphony in D Minor. Here the strings—the Boston Symphony has one of the best string choirs in this country—had ample opportunity for technical display and tonic perfection. Here Monteux rose to his true stature as a conductor; he was "at home."

The Franck symphony, which was presented once before this season, is in three movements—lent: allegro non troppo, allegretto and allegro non troppo. The symphony opens with a placid passage played by the stringed instruments, gradually increasing in fervor and bursting into the allegro.

The symphony pulsates with French imagery. Franck is firm, but not bombastic. He creates the most amazing melodies, which skip and prance from the instruments most delightfully and astonishingly.

The period following the intermission was given over exclusively to Wagner. The opening number was the prelude to "The Flying Dutchman." This failed to excite [illegible] Funeral Music [illegible] the [illegible] Bruennhilde's Rock were extremely drab.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
WORLD
ISSUE OF
MAR 14 1923

MUSIC

By Deems Taylor

THE PHILADELPHIANS.

Mahler's music has some use, after all. With a soul still seared by memories of the Mahler seventh symphony, one went apprehensively to Carnegie Hall last night to hear the Philadelphia Orchestra play Schubert's seventh—the "heavenly length" one in C major.

And, behold, a miracle. The symphony came and went, and had never sounded so short. For after Mahler's hour-and-a-half of bloated small talk, Schubert, with real ideas and a mere forty-five minutes in which to utter them, sounded almost curt by comparison. It was the Gettysburg address after the Congressional Record.

Not that the Schubert seventh is without redundancy. Some vandal with a black heart and a blue pencil could easily cut whole chapters out of the second and third movements without leaving a preceptible scar. Last night, however, one did not mind. Even after a third reiteration of a passage, one had only to think of Mahler, and be comforted. The Schubert seventh is too long, yes; but it is all music.

Mr. Stokowski gave it a gorgeously colored, eloquent reading, particularly in the second and last movements. In the first he indulged the brass just a bit too much, so that they flared rather than glowed in the orchestral fabric. The scherzo, we thought heretically enough, had less crispness than one would expect of the Philadelphians.

There were only two other numbers on the program, "Til Eulenspiegel," which gave the D clarinet a chance to close the evening, and Henry Eichheim's "Oriental Impressions"—the latter a first performance.

Mr. Eichheim, a violinist and conductor from Boston, wrote the sketches originally for the Pittsfield Festival of 1921, scoring them for a small combination of stringed, wind and percussion instruments with piano. Eva Gautier produced four of them at Aeolian Hall in November of the same year.

His revised score for full orchestra, first played by the Boston Orchestra in the spring of 1922, employs numerous Oriental percussion instruments, including temple bells, tuned cymbals and a huge Chinese gong of such appalling sonority that whenever it spoke last night the rest of the orchestra labored unheard.

Mr. Strokowski played only two of the sketches last night, although four were announced on the house program. They were admirably brief, as impressions ought to be, and obviously caught the fancy of the audience with their piquant orchestral coloring and quaint pipings and twitterings.

The first, a "Chinese Sketch," begins with a sort of orchestral war in which the aforementioned tam-tam speaks its mind thunderously. Follows much discourse in Chinese dialect by assorted wood-winds, punctuated by the tam-tam and ending on a frightened squeak by the piccolo.

The second, a "Japanese Nocturne," is, naturally, couched in more lyric vein, with temple bells clinking, the oboe musing charmingly (M. Tabuteau earned a week's salary in the course of the two sketches) and the muted strings taking dreamy flights in bizarre harmonics.

The composer has disarmed the most obvious criticism of these pieces by calling them "impressions." They suffer from too much material (all the themes are authentic) and from a lack of continuity in presenting it. They do convey an unmistakable impression of the colors and sounds of the Orient.

What they do not convey is any sense of its meaning.

Mr. Eichheim has made some delightful notes. It remains now for him to turn them into music.

TIMES MAR 4 1923
BROOKLYN, N. Y.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The fourth and last concert but one of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, March 16, with Emma Calve appearing as soloist. Pierre Monteux will open the program with Schubert's immortal, melodious masterpiece, the "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, and will also conduct the humorous and fantastic tone poem of Richard Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." American music will be represented by a performance of Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," which has become as celebrated as the poem of Maeterlinck that inspired the music.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAR 4 1923

Concerts in Brooklyn

Sergei Rachmaninoff will give a piano recital to-morrow evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences, while the last New York Symphony concert of the season in this series will be given next Saturday afternoon. The fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, the 16th, will present Emma Calve as soloist in Gluck and Handel numbers, while a joint sonata recital will be given at the Academy, under Institute auspices, by Germaine Schnitzer, the pianist, and Olga Fonaroff, violinist.

PORTLAND
ME.
TELEGRAM
MAR 11 1923

The appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Portland for its ninth concert in the Winter's Municipal Course was a memorable event. The audience on Thursday evening was late in arriving on account of the Winter blizzard which had raged through the day. Taxis found their way with difficulty and all cars were late. Had the suburban lines been running, the capacity of the hall would have been taxed.

One of the orchestra's standard programs was given a—tribute to Portland's musical discernment and to the prestige of the municipal course, and some very rare and unusual works were performed.

PORTLAND
ME.
TELEGRAM
MAR 11 1923

Pierre Monteux, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the guest of Edwin H. Lemare, municipal organist, and Mrs. Lemare, at the Lafayette Hotel during his stay in town last week. Mr. Monteux remained over night, but the orchestral players all returned by special car to Boston directly after the concert Thursday evening.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
NEWS
ISSUE OF
Mar 14 1/23

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Monteaux's Musicians Play Caesar Franck's D Minor Symphony

By LOTTE B. PORTERFIELD

One of the pioneer musical organizations of America, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appeared at Poli's yesterday afternoon, under the local management of Mrs. Wilson Greene.

After many vicissitudes, including several changes of directors, they have settled down under Pierre Monteux and play with a verve and passionate abandon that is truly remarkable.

The orchestra is not large, though well registered, and the tone is not always perfect, but its dramatic effects are thrilling.

The symphony was the beautiful one in D Minor by Caesar Franck. In this the themes were particularly well worked out, never being covered by the accompaniment. The remainder of the numbers were entirely from the works of Wagner, following the lead of the other orchestras this season. Too much praise cannot be given to Monteaux and his musicians for their reading of these scores.

N. Y.
HERALD
MAR 14 1923

Philadelphia Men Play New Music on Oriental Themes

Henry Eicheim's Cmposition Written for Mrs. Coolidge's Festival Heard Here.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

Despite the wind and weather and rumors that New York would next season have three new orchestras and a permanent German opera, the eighth concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra was accomplished last evening in Carnegie Hall in the presence of many auditors and to the accompaniment of sonorous applause. The program evolved by Mr. Stokowski consisted of Schubert's C Major symphony, Henry Eicheim's "Oriental Impressions" and Strauss's "Til Eulenspiegel."

Mr. Eicheim's composition—or as much of it as was heard—was a novelty. This musician was once upon a time a member of the Boston Orchestra, which he left to conduct the orchestra of Winchester, Mass. For a few years he has bent himself wholly to composition. When Mrs. Coolidge asked him to write something for her Pittsfield chamber music festival he created his "Oriental Impressions" in their original shape for a group of instruments about as large, but not of the same character, as a Chinese orchestra. It was performed at the Pittsfield festival of 1921.

Just as Deems Taylor did with his "Through the Looking Glass" Mr. Eicheim developed his work for a large orchestra and the Boston organization gave it a hearing on March 24, 1922. There are five movements or sketches in the suite, but only four were on the program last evening, namely, the Korean Sketch, the Siamese Sketch, the Chinese Sketch and Japanese Nocturne.

The nature of the suite suggests the imperative call of the inquiring mind for learned disquisition on the music of Japan, Korea, China and other Oriental countries. But if the inquiring mind will consult the "Encyclopedie de la Musique" fathered by the Paris Conservatoire it will find information in solid masses furnished by some of the foremost savants of France.

Mr. Stokowski must have looked at his watch in the intermission, for to the astonishment of the knowing after delivering two of the sketches he plunged into the first phrase of "Til Eulenspiegel," which may have sounded Chinese to some listeners, but had a familiar tang of the Paradeplatz to the writer, who glided swiftly to the street, for he knew that "Til Eulenspiegel" will be performed not less than three more times within the next five days.

There is no profit in comment on Mr. Eicheim's sketches. They are mere successions of fragmentary national themes, orchestrated with all the paraphernalia of gong, harps, triangles, [illegible] scenes, while struggling [illegible] piring flutes endeavor to [illegible] outlines. But the singularity of the music greatly delighted the audience.

No doubt President Harding has done what he could to restore us to normalcy, but he has no influence in the world of art, where the Venus of Milo has been supplanted by the head of Medusa and the angels of Perugino by the gargoyles of Notre Dame.

Meanwhile the record of the day may close with the declaration that Schubert could have learned much from Mr. Stokowski's reading of the familiar symphony. It used to be a simple, lyrical, tuneful composition without passionate outbursts or periods of stormy emotion. But the process of the Americanization of Leopold Stokowski has brought with it revelations of priceless value. Last night was a grand one for trumpets, trombones and tympani, and the players of these instruments must now be sure that the C major smyphony of Schubert is one of the greatest works not written by Strauss.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
HERALD
ISSUE OF
MAR 14 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN RETURN CONCERT

Monteux Baton Elicits Pallid Wagner Program at Poli's Theater.

FRANCK RENDITION IS GEM

Orchestra Responds With Exquisite Delineation of D Minor Number.

By JESSIE MacBRIDE.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in an all-orchestral program, returned for a single concert under its conductor, Pierre Monteux, at Poli's Theater yesterday afternoon. Anticipation was high when Monteux announced the great Caesar Franck symphony in D minor, and then Wagner in five great excerpts from the music-dramas.

It was doomed to disappointment in the latter part of the program. But of the pallid Wagner we shall speak later.

"MELODRAMATIC" RENDITION.

M. Monteux gave a reading of the great Franck symphony that made it a thing of palpitant mystery and exquisite melody. The great orchestra responded with an exquisite delineation that made this indeed a "melodrama" in the true sense of the word. It was at all times vital and alive. There were resonant plucked strings with fine woodwind themes, a spirit of the East in the allegretto with the violas rich against the winds.

Again one heard that forecast of the modern French school in the pastoral of the opening movement, and over it all melody and melody, soaring or interlaced with other themes in delicate balance. As a whole it was not as fluid as we have heard it, nor so big in climax or in rhythmic curve, but it was finely executed and finely delineated.

PALLID WAGNER.

It was a puzzling thing to discover just why it was that the Wagner program lacked what the Franck contained. The reception accorded the Wagner was increasingly cold. For the first time within memory the playing of the Tristan and Isolde "Love-Death" gave the writer no thrill. And why?

Wagner, in his iconoclastic "melos" surges ever on and on. There is ever the urge that vital emotion feels, there is ever a sort of breathless expectation—created with the change of tempi, and above all with that illusive suspended cadence that never seems to close.

M. Monteux was too orthodox, too fettered with form. His phrases closed in inelastic logic, his passion was weighted, his fatality did not awe.

IN ARIA FORM.

Instead of the rich textured orchestra of Wagner, there seemed something—not Wagner—that sang arias against impetuous backgrounds. But here were none of the dramatic people Wagner created in his score. Even the Siegfried horn lacked heroism. The return of the Rhine Maidens at the close was delicately lovely; but when the fire music returned, there was no flame.

The storm of "The Flying Dutchman" began with the glory of Wagner, but there was no virility in the speech of the Dutchman and considerable blare and indecision in the wind choirs. M. Monteux does not feel the pulse of the master. Dynamically, he was not dramatic. One wished he had played triplets sometimes, instead of three notes. Regrettably, this fine program lagged. It lacked accent, it did not pulsate, and that great harmonic web of eloquent musical speech that [illegible] Wagner was missed.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
~~HERALD~~ Star
ISSUE OF
MAR 14 1923

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

That traditionally famous American musical organization, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave a program of exacting compositions before a house filled to capacity at Poli's Theater yesterday afternoon. This was the first appearance of the Boston organization in Washington this year, although its 135th performance in the capital city.

The first half of the program was devoted to three movements of Cesar Franck's "Symphony in D Minor" which excited adverse comment upon the occasion of its first performance at the Conservatory in Paris. Even questions as to its being a real symphony has been raised by more than one music authority. It is a beautiful work. The opening movement (lento, allegro non troppo) emphasizes the haunting, simple motive of the symphony in a mood that is as persistent as an elusive, recurring dream. The loveliest of the three movements is the second, (allegretto), which is opened with exquisite pizzicato notes by the strings. The third movement (allegro non troppo) returns to the elusive, nebulous effect so painstakingly brought out in the first movement and the whole symphony leaves an impression that is pastoral in its peacefulness.

Undoubtedly the stringed instruments were the leading division of the orchestra, under the guidance of Pierre Monteux. The brasses seemed somewhat weak and uncertain in the brilliant Wagnerian numbers on the second half of the program. The drums, however, were excellent and the reeds were good. The fire of Wagner, as exemplified under the leadership of Stokowski with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra when it recently gave Wagner's "Prelude and Liebestod," from "Tristan and Isolde," one of the group given yesterday by the Boston aggregation, was noticeably absent, but the religious solemnity of Wagner's masterpieces was in evidence and seemed particularly fitting to the Lenten season. Monteux's reading of the great German's work seems to bring out the great spiritual qualities of the composition rather than the throbbing emotional qualities.

The overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the two selections from "Tristan and Isolde," "Siegfried's Funeral Music," from "Dusk of the Gods," and "Siegfried's Ascent to Bruennhilde's Rock," "Morning Dawn," "Siegfried's Journey Up the Rhine" and "Dusk of the Gods—Prologue" were the selections chosen for the Wagnerian part of the program. M. Monteux's treatment of these numbers was the subject of much discussion after the concert.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
TIMES
ISSUE OF
MAR 14 1923

WAGNER FAILS TO AROUSE AUDIENCE

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert Redeemed Only by Franck's Numbers.

By WILLIAM MOORE.

The only appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington this season was a distinct disappointment.

A large and expectant gathering of music lovers assembled in Poli's Theater to hear the much press-agented "Wagner program" Pierre Monteux planned for the edification of his auditors.

Whether Monteux's nationality is a handicap in his interpretation of the great German composer's work, or whether the elements dampened the ardour of the celebrated orchestra, we do not know. It was apparent, however, that Monteux and his musicians failed to thrill the audience as a gathering of Wagner enthusiasts should have been thrilled by the rendition of a program chosen from the best efforts of the master.

The one redeeming feature of the lengthy concert was Cesar Franck's delightful symphony in D Minor. Here the strings—the Boston Symphony has one of the best string choirs in this country—had ample opportunity for technical display and tonic perfection. Here Monteux rose to his true stature as a conductor; he was "at home."

The Franck symphony, which was presented once before this season, is in three movements—lent: allegro non troppo, allegretto and allegro non troppo. The symphony opens with a placid passage played by the stringed instruments, gradually increasing in fervor and bursting into the allegro.

The symphony pulsates with French imagery. Franck is firm, but not bombastic. He creates the most amazing melodies, which skip and prance from the instruments most delightfully and astonishingly.

The period following the intermission was given over exclusively to Wagner. The opening number was the prelude to "The Flying Dutchman." This failed to excite [illegible] in its rendition, and Siegfried's Funeral March and the Ascent to Brunnhilde's Rock were extremely drab.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
WORLD
ISSUE OF
MAR 14 1923

MUSIC
By Deems Taylor

THE PHILADELPHIANS.

Mahler's music has some use, after all. With a soul still seared by memories of the Mahler seventh symphony, one went apprehensively to Carnegie Hall last night to hear the Philadelphia Orchestra play Schubert's seventh—the "heavenly length" one in C major.

And, behold, a miracle. The symphony came and went, and had never sounded so short. For after Mahler's hour-and-a-half of bloated small talk, Schubert, with real ideas and a mere forty-five minutes in which to utter them, sounded almost curt by comparison. It was the Gettysburg address after the Congressional Record.

Not that the Schubert seventh is without redundancy. Some vandal with a black heart and a blue pencil could easily cut whole chapters out of the second and third movements without leaving a preceptible scar. Last night, however, one did not mind. Even after a third reiteration of a passage, one had only to think of Mahler, and be comforted. The Schubert seventh is too long, yes; but it is all music.

Mr. Stokowski gave it a gorgeously colored, eloquent reading, particularly in the second and last movements. In the first he indulged the brass just a bit too much, so that they flared rather than glowed in the orchestral fabric. The scherzo, we thought heretically enough, had less crispness than one would expect of the Philadelphians.

There were only two other numbers on the program, "Til Eulenspiegel," which gave the D clarinet a chance to close the evening, and Henry Eichheim's "Oriental Impressions"—the latter a first performance.

Mr. Eichheim, a violinist and conductor from Boston, wrote the sketches originally for the Pittsfield Festival of 1921, scoring them for a small combination of stringed, wind and percussion instruments with piano. Eva Gautier produced four of them at Aeolian Hall in November of the same year.

His revised score for full orchestra, first played by the Boston Orchestra in the spring of 1922, employs numerous Oriental percussion instruments, including temple bells, tuned cymbals and a huge Chinese gong of such appalling sonority that whenever it spoke last night the rest of the orchestra labored unheard.

Mr. Strokowski played only two of the sketches last night, although four were announced on the house program. They were admirably brief, as impressions ought to be, and obviously caught the fancy of the audience with their piquant orchestral coloring and quaint pipings and twitterings.

The first, a "Chinese Sketch," begins with a sort of orchestral war in which the aforementioned tam-tam speaks its mind thunderously. Follows much discourse in Chinese dialect by assorted wood-winds, punctuated by the tam-tam and ending on a frightened squeak by the piccolo.

The second, a "Japanese Nocturne," is, naturally, couched in more lyric vein, with temple bells clinking, the oboe musing charmingly (M. Tabuteau earned a week's salary in the course of the two sketches) and the muted strings taking dreamy flights in bizarre harmonies.

The composer has disarmed the most obvious criticism of these pieces by calling them "impressions." They suffer from too much material (all the themes are authentic) and from a lack of continuity in presenting it. They do convey an unmistakable impression of the colors and sounds of the Orient.

What they do not convey is any sense of its meaning.

Mr. Eichheim has made some delightful notes. It remains now for him to turn them into music.

[76]

From MAR 16 1923
EVENING WORLD
New York City

Boston Symphony Orchestra Plays Program of Familiar Numbers.

By Frank H. Warren.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, for its Thursday concert in Carnegie Hall, offered a program whose contents had marks of more or less familiarity. Chausson's B flat major Symphony reappears annually in some orchestra's repertoire, C. M. Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" makes occasional visits, while no commentator would be so bold as to classify as strangers either the "Tannhauser" overture or Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." The latter was played only last Tuesday by the Philadelphia band and the overture very naturally preceded the "Tannhauser" program last night in the Lexington Theatre.

Walter Damrosch, we believe, is the one who introduced Chausson's Symphony to New York and he occasionally repeats it. The work is claimed to show Wagner influence yet it has individuality of its own. It is romantic and poetic, is skilfully orchestrated and it seems to hold its own in the face of the modern onrush.

Mr. Loeffler stands close to the top among American composers. He is a tone painter and his "Tintagiles" shows an adept hand in building up orchestral effects.

The orchestra, under Pierre Monteux's guidance, flashed now and then in old time Boston manner. It seems to be coming back.

From MAR 16 1923
EVENING MAIL
New York City

CONCERT

By KATHAR

BOSTON SYMPHONY

INTENSITY is a quality even more necessary to the expression of mischief than to the emphasizing of a heavy climax. The latter can sometimes cloak itself in noise, at least to the point of decency, but when mischief isn't spry it is just soggy, and that's all there is to it.

Last night "Til Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" as played by the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall made us sympathize with the farmer who told his wife that he liked his pie with more insides and not so much dough. We woke up once, though the first time they smacked the cymbals; every one else in the neighborhood jumped, too. It is a difficult thing to get used to, even when you know it is coming.

"La Mort de Tintagiles" is becoming quite an old friend by now, and yet it is hard to refrain from once more mentioning the viole d'amour which it employs. This instrument, a large fiddle, with extra strings and a great spiky head, is spoken of as obsolete. Why?

Its tone seems to us particularly pleasing, rather plaintively sweet and silky in its quality, differing from the ordinary violin about as the marimba does from the xylophone. It seems a shame to relegate such a beautiful instrument to the museums. For our part we would suggest more viole d'amour in the future.

The "Tannhauser" overture was perhaps the most successful event of all going at is did with fine precision and a magnificent sweep to the climaxes.

From SUN

Address New York City

Date MAR 16 1923

Boston Sympony's Concert

Mr. Monteux Leads Glowing Chausson; Ernest Knoch Joins Germans as Conductor.

Last night, in Carnegie Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played the fourth of its season's five Thursday evening concerts under Conductor Monteux. Though the program wore the flash of no actual novelty, all of it was of music of the day and generation, the Tannhauser [illegible] its only parent member.

"Till Eulenspiegel" was on the program—a Boston "Till" in contradistinction to a Philadelphia "Till" which Mr. Stokowski had brought us only two evenings before. This is a weeek of "Tills," as last week was all of Fauns. New York is running over with fantastic characters out of music—another of those ill effects of too much symphony. For our own part, we like Mr. Monteux's lyric little Till the best of the lot, even if his pranks were not quite so nimble-footed or impish.

Charles Martin Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," with its maeterlinckian drama, colored with such grim elaboration, had likewise been heard here this season before last night. The reading it now had was large—immense for a subject inspired by Marionette and voiced by a poem more wistful than lurid. Mr. Burgin, the concert master of the orchestra, upheld the viol d'amore solo, and the tone which the whole orchestra brought to it was highly dramatic.

The chief course of the evening, however, was Chausson's Symphony in B flat, a work which finds Mr. Monteux wholly at home and exultant. The beauties of it, Wagnerian though they frankly be, grow into fuller consciousness the more they are heard, and the fine quality of the orchestra, instrument for instrument, helped to the realization of them all. It was a glowing performance, one of the year's most memorable. It augured well for the "Faust" symphony on Saturday.

N. Y.
AMERICAN
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1923

NEW YORK FACES LOSS OF BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Many Vacant Seats Greet the Symphony Organization in Its Fourth Concert Here Under Monteux's Direction

By MAX SMITH.

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra was in town last night to give its fourth and penultimate concert in Carnegie Hall.

More than a few seats downstairs stood vacant. That was a pity. Rumor has it that the famous organization may stay away from New York next year, believing that the supply of symphonic music in this city already has outstripped the demand. That would be regrettable.

Thanks largely, no doubt, to the efforts of Pierre Monteux, who had to meet difficult problems, the Boston Orchestra is now again one of the best in this country—a finely sonorous, euphoneous and flexible instrument.

It is true, that Monsieur Monteux cannot be ranked as a great conductor. What he lacks is magnetism, authority, compelling power.

But he is a genuine musician, an excellent musician—an intelligent, sympathetic, cultured—something that cannot be said of every wielder of the baton. He commands respect, even when he does not arouse enthusiasm.

Moreover, the Boston Orchestra is an institution. Its absence from New York would mean a distinct loss.

Chausson's Symphony in B flat major, opus 20, and Loeffler's "Mort de Tintagiles" revealed orchestra and conductor last night at their best. Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," played only the other night by the Quakers, lacked vigor and rhythmical precision. Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" overture brought the programme to a close.

N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN INTERESTING PROGRAM

Muriel Tindal and Clara Clemens Sing a Lot of Songs of All Nations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned to Carnegie Hall last evening with another program which displayed the happily progressive ideas of Conductor Monteux in that he offered the Chausson B flat major symphony for tthe "big works" and Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" for the viola d'amore with orchestra, Richard Burgin, a capital artist, being the soloist for this sweet departure from an overworked orchestral season. The orchestra played Strauss's "Till Eugenspiegel" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

Muriel Tindal's song recital at Aeolian Hall in the evening was really a concert because she enlisted violin, 'cello and piano features, but it was an interesting vocal list that she offered, with numbers by Astorgis, Bach, Wolf, Brahms, Beethoven, Fourdrain, Eisler and Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Clara Clemens's song recital at Town Hall in the evening was the most cosmopolitan lyric offering of the season, her third recital, and another proof of her talent for lyric research. Russian, French, German, Italian, Swedish, Scotch, Welsh, Irish and English songs punctuated a program that was more remarkable for its diversity than for its disti[illegible]oice or utterance.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAR 16 1923

Vintage of '90s Marks Boston Symphony List

Monteux Curbs His Liking for Novelty in First of Orchestra's Fourth Pair of Season's Concerts Here

Soprano Gives Recital

Tokatyan Adds New Gayety to 'Anima Allegra'; Germans Give 'Tannhauser'

Mr. Monteux laid a curb to his liking for novelty in planning the program for last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first of its fourth pair for the season. With but one exception, and that by only a few years, it was all of the vintage of the '90s. That is to say, it was free from the extreme wickednesses of some of the terrible children of to-day, and also lacked some of the sturdy graces of earlier periods.

Chausson's Symphony in B flat, Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" and Wagner's Overture to Tannhauser made up the list, all of it sufficiently familiar. It was all, except for the firmly built harmonies surviving in the Wagner Overture, music in which there was the spirit of innovation, though for the most part less conscious and less daring than that spirit has since become.

The evening was well begun with the Chausson Symphony, the product of a modern but not extremist school of composition. It is a work of musical substance reflecting intensity of feeling individually expressed. Mr. Monteux gave it an excellent and understanding performance. In this, as in the other numbers, there was careful attention to detail and if not always a thoroughly satisfactory building of climaxes, sufficient stress and [illegible] give character to the music.

The evening would have had a greater variety of interest had more widely differing schools of composition been represented. As it was there was a sertain monotony of musical expression which not even the waggishess of "Till" could relieve. The audience was of fair size and appreciative.

N. Y.
EVENING GLOBE
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1923

OPERA AND O

By PITTS S

Pierre Monteux Conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall.

The programme chosen by Pierre Monteux for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening consisted of Chausson's B flat symphony, Richard Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," Charles Martin Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," and Wagner's "Tannhäuser" overture. The symphony was played in the same hall earlier this season by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Strauss's orchestral rondo was played there last Tuesday night by the Philadelphians; it will be played there again Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of next week by the New York Philharmonic. As to the "Tannhäuser" overture, it has not only figured here in other concert programmes this season, but with the visiting Germans giving "Tannhäuser" frequently according to the original Dresden version, we have been hearing it likewise in the opera house. There can be no possible doubt that orchestral conductors have great minds, they stick so insistently to the same channels.

Mr. Monteux gave an amiable reading of the first two movements of Chausson's symphonic recollections of Wagner and César Franck. But the last movement he conducted like a different Monteux. Indeed, I do not remember hearing this movement, which has a curious prevision in it of the second act of Montemezzi's opera "L'Amore dei Tre Re," so stirringly and so well played on any other occasion.

In contrast to the study in velocity which Mr. Stokowski made of "Till Eulenspiegel" Tuesday night, Mr. Monteux emphasized the sheer sensuous richness of Strauss's tonal fabric. The performance under his guidance was exceedingly euphonious.

It was interesting to hear again Mr. Loeffler's orchestral poem. The introductory pages now sound suavely commonplace, but from the first silvery wail of the viole d'amour there is music of a haunting, an unearthly, beauty. Only, the entire piece, according to our present tastes, is written in too big and thunderous a speech and is too steadily fully scored to be quite in keeping with Maeterlinck's peculiar terrorism, the one quality which has survived untarnished from the slump in the Belgian author's fame, perhaps the one quality in which he surpasses all other competitors. The performance was painstaking and finished. It might have been freer, less saccharine. The audience, which was of moderate size, applauded the work warmly. Mr. Burgin, concert-master of the orchestra, shared in the favor of the audience, and Mr. Loeffler himself bowed acknowledgments from a box.

A rather deliberate and tonally very beautiful performance of the more than familiar overture also won a great deal of applause. But applause was the order of the evening. After "Till Eulenspiegel" Mr. Monteux summoned his men to rise in token of the general appreciation of this cordiality.

An evening of mellow orchestral pleasure.

P. S.

From MAR 16 1923
Telegram
New York City

Monteux Conducts Chausson Symphony

Chausson's B flat symphony, which was overlooked by American conductors for a good many years, has been gaining in popularity in recent seasons. In fact, as it was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night it sounded like a really fine, sonorous work. In form it is somewhat too wandering. Its themes are not of great distinction, but as Pierre Monteux directed it last night it was effective. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is rapidly regaining the position it lost when the war disrupted its personnel. The performance was superb. In addition to the Chausson symphony Mr. Monteux led his men through Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" and Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" overture.

N. Y.
HERALD
MAR 16 1923

Loeffler Hears Boston Symphony Play His Music

Concert Here Shows Tone of Orchestra Is Still Beautiful.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

The fourth evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place last night in Carnegie Hall. The program consisted of Chausson's familiar B flat symphony, Strauss's "Til Eulenspiegel," Charles Martin Loeffler's "Le Mort de Tintagiles" and Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" overture. This program provided promising musical entertainment for an attentive audience, but it does not invite critical reflections of wide dimensions. Perhaps there might be ponderings upon the rapidity with which different performances of "Til Eulenspiegel" come before New York music lovers, but what is the use of discussing this matter?

There might also be some repetition of early comment on the fine composition of Mr. Loeffler. Perhaps the most pregnant utterance would be that after twenty-five years no commentator who praised the work when it was first given is compelled to take anything back. The composition retains its first force. It still breathes the atmosphere of dread and mystery that is found in Maeterlinck's intense little marionette play. The work was heard last night apparently with great interest and the composer, who was present, received his due meed of applause.

As for the rest of the program, it is necessary only to say that the Boston orchestra shone through it as an instrument upon which a conductor of intellectual power and poetic imagination should be glad to play. The tone of the organization is still beautiful. There is an aristocratic quality about the utterance that neither time nor personal changes has taken away. The strings are yet admirable. The brass is not to be surpassed. The wood winds are even now worthy of the early fame of this body.

But the old balance and clarity are wanting. There is altogether too much blurring of lines, too much muddiness in phraseology, too little illumination of what should be high lights. It is unnecessary to say where the fault lies. Mr. Monteux, who conducts this orchestra, appears to be deeply averse to anything looking toward the exhibition of virtuosity and for that he is to b epraised. But it is possible to make music less soothing and more stimulating than he made it last evening. Certainly a duller performance of "Til Eulenspiegel" could not easily be given.

PORTLAND
ME.
PRESS HERALD
FEB 27 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

There are two ways of obtaining seats in advance for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert under municipal auspices, in City Hall auditorium, Wednesday evening, March 7, namely, by mail and by personal application at the box office, City Hall, open daily from 10.30 to 11.30 a. m. There is much interest in the program, which is announced as follows: Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Op. 72; Franck, Symphony in D minor, I, Lento; Allegro non troppo; II, Allegretto; III, Allegro non troppo. Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, after the old-fashioned, Roguish Manner, in Rondo Form," for full orchestra, Op. 28; Vaughan Williams, Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis for Double Stringed Orchestra; Enesco, Roumanian Rhapsody in A major, Op. 11, No. 1. There will be an intermission of ten minutes after the symphony.

From MAR 16 1923
EVENING WORLD
New York City

Boston Symphony Orchestra Plays Program of Familiar Numbers.

By Frank H. Warren.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, for its Thursday concert in Carnegie Hall, offered a program whose contents had marks of more or less familiarity. Chausson's B flat major Symphony reappears annually in some orchestra's repertoire, C. M. Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" makes occasional visits, while no commentator would be so bold as to classify as strangers either the "Tannhauser" overture or Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." The latter was played only last Tuesday by the Philadelphia band and the overture very naturally preceded the "Tannhauser" program last night in the Lexington Theatre.

Walter Damrosch, we believe, is the one who introduced Chausson's Symphony to New York and he occasionally repeats it. The work is claimed to show Wagner influence yet it has individuality of its own. It is romantic and poetic, is skilfully orchestrated and it seems to hold its own in the face of the modern onrush.

Mr. Loeffler stands close to the top among American composers. He is a tone painter and his "Tintagiles" shows an adept hand in building up orchestral effects.

The orchestra, under Pierre Monteux's guidance, flashed now and then in old time Boston manner. It seems to be coming back.

From MAR 16 1923
EVENING MAIL
New York City

CONCERT

By KATHAR

BOSTON SYMPHONY

INTENSITY is a quality even more necessary to the expression of mischief than to the emphasizing of a heavy climax. The latter can sometimes cloak itself in noise, at least to the point of decency, but when mischief isn't spry it is just soggy, and that's all there is to it.

Last night "Til Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" as played by the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall made us sympathize with the farmer who told his wife that he liked his pie with more insides and not so much dough. We woke up once, though the first time they smacked the cymbals; every one else in the neighborhood jumped, too. It is a difficult thing to get used to, even when you know it is coming.

"La Mort de Tintagiles" is becoming quite an old friend by now, and yet it is hard to refrain from once more mentioning the viole d'amour which it employs. This instrument, a large fiddle, with extra strings and a great spiky head, is spoken of as obsolete. Why?

Its tone seems to us particularly pleasing, rather plaintively sweet and silky in its quality, differing from the ordinary violin about as the marimba does from the xylophone. It seems a shame to relegate such a beautiful instrument to the museums. For our part we would suggest more viole d'amour in the future.

The "Tannhauser" overture was perhaps the most successful event of all, going at is did with fine precision and a magnificent sweep to the climaxes.

From SUN

Address New York City

Date MAR 16 1923

Boston Sympony's Concert

Mr. Monteux Leads Glowing Chausson; Ernest Knoch Joins Germans as Conductor.

Last night, in Carnegie Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played the fourth of its season's five Thursday evening concerts under Conductor Monteux. Though the program wore the flash of no actual novelty, all of it was of music of the day and generation, the Tannhauser overture its only parent member.

"Till Eulenspiegel" was on the program—a Boston "Till" in contradistinction to a Philadelphia "Till" which Mr. Stokowski had brought us only two evenings before. This is a weeek of "Tills," as last week was all of Fauns. New York is running over with fantastic characters out of music—another of those ill effects of too much symphony. For our own part, we like Mr. Monteux's lyric little Till the best of the lot, even if his pranks were not quite so nimble-footed or impish.

Charles Martin Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," with its maeterlinckian drama, colored with such grim elaboration, had likewise been heard here this season before last night. The reading it now had was large—immense for a subject inspired by Marionette and voiced by a poem more wistful than lurid. Mr. Burgin, the concert master of the orchestra, upheld the viol d'amore solo, and the tone which the whole orchestra brought to it was highly dramatic.

The chief course of the evening, however, was Chausson's Symphony in B flat, a work which finds Mr. Monteux wholly at home and exultant. The beauties of it, Wagnerian though they frankly be, grow into fuller consciousness the more they are heard, and the fine quality of the orchestra, instrument for instrument, helped to the realization of them all. It was a glowing performance, one of the year's most memorable. It augured well for the "Faust" symphony on Saturday.

N. Y.
AMERICAN
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1923

NEW YORK FACES LOSS OF BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Many Vacant Seats Greet the Symphony Organization in Its Fourth Concert Here Under Monteux's Direction

By MAX SMITH.

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra was in town last night to give its fourth and penultimate concert in Carnegie Hall.

More than a few seats downstairs stood vacant. That was a pity. Rumor has it that the famous organization may stay away from New York next year, believing that the supply of symphonic music in this city already has outstripped the demand. That would be regrettable.

Thanks largely, no doubt, to the efforts of Pierre Monteux, who had to meet difficult problems, the Boston Orchestra is now again one of the best in this country—a finely sonorous, euphoneous and flexible instrument.

It is true, that Monsieur Monteux cannot be ranked as a great conductor. What he lacks is magnetism, authority, compelling power.

But he is a genuine musician, an excellent musician—an intelligent, sympathetic, cultured—something that cannot be said of every wielder of the baton. He commands respect, even when he does not arouse enthusiasm.

Moreover, the Boston Orchestra is an institution. Its absence from New York would mean a distinct loss.

Chausson's Symphony in B flat major, opus 20, and Loeffler's "Mort de Tintagiles" revealed orchestra and conductor last night at their best. Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," played only the other night by the Quakers, lacked vigor and rhythmical precision. Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" overture brought the programme to a close.

N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN INTERESTING PROGRAM

Muriel Tindal and Clara Clemens Sing a Lot of Songs of All Nations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned to Carnegie Hall last evening with another program which displayed the happily progressive ideas of Conductor Monteux in that he offered the Chausson B flat major symphony for tthe "big works" and Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" for the viola d'amore with orchestra, Richard Burgin, a capital artist, being the soloist for this sweet departure from an overworked orchestral season. The orchestra played Strauss's "Till Eugenspiegel" and the overture to "Tannhauser."

Muriel Tindal's song recital at Aeolian Hall in the evening was really a concert because she enlisted violin, 'cello and piano features, but it was an interesting vocal list that she offered, with numbers by Astorgis, Bach, Wolf, Brahms, Beethoven, Fourdrain, Eisler and Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Clara Clemens's song recital at Town Hall in the evening was the most cosmopolitan lyric offering of the season, her third recital, and another proof of her talent for lyric research. Russian, French, German, Italian, Swedish, Scotch, Welsh, Irish and English songs punctuated a program that was more remarkable for its diversity than for its distinction of choice or utterance.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAR 16 1923

Vintage of '90s Marks Boston Symphony List

Monteux Curbs His Liking for Novelty in First of Orchestra's Fourth Pair of Season's Concerts Here

Soprano Gives Recital

Tokatyan Adds New Gayety to 'Anima Allegra'; Germans Give 'Tannhauser'

Mr. Monteux laid a curb to his liking for novelty in planning the program for last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first of its fourth pair for the season. With but one exception, and that by only a few years, it was all of the vintage of the '90s. That is to say, it was free from the extreme wickednesses of some of the terrible children of to-day, and also lacked some of the sturdy graces of earlier periods.

Chausson's Symphony in B flat, Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" and Wagner's Overture to Tannhauser made up the list, all of it sufficiently familiar. It was all, except for the firmly built harmonies surviving in the Wagner Overture, music in which there was the spirit of innovation, though for the most part less conscious and less daring than that spirit has since become.

The evening was well begun with the Chausson Symphony, the product of a modern but not extremist school of composition. It is a work of musical substance reflecting intensity of feeling individually expressed. Mr. Monteux gave it an excellent and understanding performance. In this, as in the other numbers, there was careful attention to detail and if not always a thoroughly satisfactory building of climaxes, sufficient stress and accent to give character to the music.

The evening would have had a greater variety of interest had more widely differing schools of composition been represented. As it was there was a sertain monotony of musical expression which not even the waggishess of "Till" could relieve. The audience was of fair size and appreciative.

N. Y.
EVENING GLOBE
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1923

OPERA AND O

By PITTS S.

Pierre Monteux Conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall.

The programme chosen by Pierre Monteux for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening consisted of Chausson's B flat symphony, Richard Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," Charles Martin Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," and Wagner's "Tannhäuser" overture. The symphony was played in the same hall earlier this season by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Strauss's orchestral rondo was played there last Tuesday night by the Philadelphians; it will be played there again Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of next week by the New York Philharmonic. As to the "Tannhäuser" overture, it has not only figured here in other concert programmes this season, but with the visiting Germans giving "Tannhäuser" frequently according to the original Dresden version, we have been hearing it likewise in the opera house. There can be no possible doubt that orchestral conductors have great minds, they stick so insistently to the same channels.

Mr. Monteux gave an amiable reading of the first two movements of Chausson's symphonic recollections of Wagner and César Franck. But the last movement he conducted like a different Monteux. Indeed, I do not remember hearing this movement, which has a curious prevision in it of the second act of Montemezzi's opera "L'Amore dei Tre Re," so stirringly and so well played on any other occasion.

In contrast to the study in velocity which Mr. Stokowski made of "Till Eulenspiegel" Tuesday night, Mr. Monteux emphasized the sheer sensuous richness of Strauss's tonal fabric. The performance under his guidance was exceedingly euphonious.

It was interesting to hear again Mr. Loeffler's orchestral poem. The introductory pages now sound suavely commonplace, but from the first silvery wail of the viole d'amour there is music of a haunting, an unearthly, beauty. Only, the entire piece, according to our present tastes, is written in too big and thunderous a speech and is too steadily fully scored to be quite in keeping with Maeterlinck's peculiar terrorism, the one quality which has survived untarnished from the slump in the Belgian author's fame, perhaps the one quality in which he surpasses all other competitors. The performance was painstaking and finished. It might have been freer, less saccharine. The audience, which was of moderate size, applauded the work warmly. Mr. Burgin, concert-master of the orchestra, shared in the favor of the audience, and Mr. Loeffler himself bowed acknowledgments from a box.

A rather deliberate and tonally very beautiful performance of the more than familiar overture also won a great deal of applause. But applause was the order of the evening. After "Till Eulenspiegel" Mr. Monteux summoned his men to rise in token of the general appreciation of this cordiality.

An evening of mellow orchestral pleasure. P. S.

From MAR 16 1923
Telegram
New York City

Monteux Conducts Chausson Symphony

Chausson's B flat symphony, which was overlooked by American conductors for a good many years, has been gaining in popularity in recent seasons. In fact, as it was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night it sounded like a really fine, sonorous work. In form it is somewhat too wandering. Its themes are not of great distinction, but as Pierre Monteux directed it last night it was effective. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is rapidly regaining the position it lost when the war disrupted its personnel. The performance was superb. In addition to the Chausson symphony Mr. Monteux led his men through Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" and Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" overture.

N. Y.
HERALD
MAR 16 1923

Loeffler Hears Boston Symphony Play His Music

Concert Here Shows Tone of Orchestra Is Still Beautiful.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

The fourth evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place last night in Carnegie Hall. The program consisted of Chausson's familiar B flat symphony, Strauss's "Til Eulenspiegel," Charles Martin Loeffler's "Le Mort de Tintagiles" and Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" overture. This program provided promising musical entertainment for an attentive audience, but it does not invite critical reflections of wide dimensions. Perhaps there might be ponderings upon the rapidity with which different performances of "Til Eulenspiegel" come before New York music lovers, but what is the use of discussing this matter?

There might also be some repetition of early comment on the fine composition of Mr. Loeffler. Perhaps the most pregnant utterance would be that after twenty-five years no commentator who praised the work when it was first given is compelled to take anything back. The composition retains its first force. It still breathes the atmosphere of dread and mystery that is found in Maeterlinck's intense little marionette play. The work was heard last night apparently with great interest and the composer, who was present, received his due meed of applause.

As for the rest of the program, it is necessary only to say that the Boston orchestra shone through it as an instrument upon which a conductor of intellectual power and poetic imagination should be glad to play. The tone of the organization is still beautiful. There is an aristocratic quality about the utterance that neither time nor personal changes has taken away. The strings are yet admirable. The brass is not to be surpassed. The wood winds are even now worthy of the early fame of this body.

But the old balance and clarity are wanting. There is altogether too much blurring of lines, too much muddiness in phraseology, too little illumination of what should be high lights. It is unnecessary to say where the fault lies. Mr. Monteux, who conducts this orchestra, appears to be deeply averse to anything looking toward the exhibition of virtuosity and for that he is to b epraised. But it is possible to make music less soothing and more stimulating than he made it last evening. Certainly a duller performance of "Til Eulenspiegel" could not easily be given.

PORTLAND
ME.
PRESS HERALD
FEB 27 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

There are two ways of obtaining seats in advance for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert under municipal auspices, in City Hall auditorium, Wednesday evening, March 7, namely, by mail and by personal application at the box office, City Hall, open daily from 10.30 to 11.30 a. m. There is much interest in the program, which is announced as follows: Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Op. 72; Franck, Symphony in D minor, I, Lento; Allegro non troppo; II, Allegretta; III, Allegro non troppo. Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, after the old-fashioned, Roguish Manner, in Rondo Form," for full orchestra, Op. 28; Vaughan Williams, Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis for Double Stringed Orchestra; Enesco, Roumanian Rhapsody in A major, Op. 11, No. 1. There will be an intermission of ten minutes after the symphony.

FROM FEB 2 7 1923

TRIBUNE

Providence

Fourth Symphony Concert To-night

The last appearance but one of the season in Providence by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place in Infantry Hall to-night at 8:15. The soloist will be Clara Clemens, who is known in private life as Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, and who is the daughter of Mark Twain. She is a mezzo-soprano and her voice and interpretations are reputed to be very beautiful. Pierre Monteux will present Franck's Symphony in D minor and will also conduct the symphonic poem, "Vltava" ("The Moldau") by Smetana, and two Wagner numbers, the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
FEB 2 7 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY PROGRAM

There are two ways of obtaining seats in advance for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, under Municipal auspices, in City Hall auditorium, Wednesday evening, March 7, [illegible] by mail, and by personal application at the box office, City Hall, open daily from 10.30 to 11.30 a. m. There is much interest in the program which is announced as follows:

Beethoven, Overture to Leonore, No. 3, Op. 72. Franck, Symphony in D minor, I. Lento; Allegro non troppo; II. Allegretto; III. Allegro non troppo. Strauss, Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, after the old-fashioned, Roguish Manner, in Rondo Form, for full orchestra, Op. 28. Vaughan Williams, Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis for rouble stringed orchestra. Enesco, Roumanian Rhapsody in A major, Op. 11, No.1. There will be an intermission of 10 minutes after the symphony.

NEWS, FEB 2 7 1923
Providence, R. I.

FOURTH SYMPHONY CONCERT TONIGHT

The last appearance but one of the season in Providence by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place in Infantry Hall tonight at 8:15.

The soloist will be Clara Clemens, who is known in private life as Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, and who is the daughter of Mark Twain. She is a mezzo-soprano and her voice and interpretations are reputed to be very beautiful. She will sing with the orchestra the aria "My Life Fades in its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienzi," and two songs, "Phydile," by Duparc and 'Hopak" by Moussorgsky.

Pierre Monteux will present Franck's Symphony in D minor and will also conduct the symphonic poem "Vltava" ("The Moldau") by Smetana, and two Wagner numbers, the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
FEB 2 7 1923

FOURTH SYMPHONY CONCERT TO-NIGHT IN INFANTRY HALL

Clara Clemens Soloist.—Programme Includes Franck's Symphony.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert at Infantry Hall to-night, beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The soloist will be Clara Clemens, who is known in private life as Mrs Ossip Gabrilowitsch, and who is the daughter of Mark Twain. She is a mezzo-soprano and will sing, with the orchestra, the aria, "My Life Fades in Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienz," and two songs, "Phydile," by Duparc, and "Hopak," by Moussorgsky.

Pierre Monteux will offer Franck's symphony in D-minor, and will also conduct the symphonic poem, "Vltava" ("The Moldau"), by Smetana, and two Wagnerian numbers, the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 2 7 1923

Clara Clemens

Daughter of Late Mark Twain Will Sing at Boston Symphony Concert in Infantry Hall To-night.

FOURTH SYMPHONY CONCERT TO-NIGHT IN INFANTRY HALL

Clara Clemens Soloist.—Programme Includes Franck's Symphony.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert at Infantry Hall to-night, beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The soloist will be Clara Clemens, who is known in private life as Mrs. Ossop Gabrilovitsch, and who is the daughter of Mark Twain. She is a mezzo-soprano and will sing, with the orchestra, the aria, "My Life Fades in Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienz," and two songs, "Phydile," by Duparc and "Hopak," by Moussorgsky.

Pierre Monteux will offer Franck's symphony in D-minor, and will also conduct the symphonic poem, "Vltava" ("The Moldau"), by Smetana, and two Wagnerian numbers, the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

FROM MAR 2 8 1923

TRIBUNE

Providence

Boston Symphony Gives Fourth Concert

Franck's Coloring of Harmony and Melody Included in Fine Program

The Boston Symphony gave its fourth concert of the season last night at Infantry Hall, Pierre Monteux conducting. The program included Cesar Franck's symphony in D-minor, three movements; Smetana's symphonic poem, "The Moldau," from "Ma Vlast" (My Country), Wagner's prelude to "Lohengrin," and the prelude to the "Mastersingers." Clara Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain, and wife of Ossip Gabrilowitz, was the soloist, singing a scene and an aria from Wagner's "Rienzi," Duparc's "Phydile," and Moussorgsky's "Hopak."

Franck's symphony is rich and beautiful in its conception, with sustained passages of compelling loveliness, written not only for the technical ear of the musical erudite, but also for the glorification of the emotions of the musical illiterate who cannot tell a crescendo from an allegro and who, as Dulcy says, know what they like. They could not help liking Franck's coloring of harmony and melody. Mr. Monteux squeezed all the beauty from this symphony of the Belgian.

Smetna's Moldu varies in mood from a rhythmical swing with full accompaniment of violins and horns to a deep melancholy dirge, then back into the full blare and fast movement of the dance tempo. It was read by Mr. Monteux with life and vigor. Wagner's prelude to "Lohengrin," one of the most beautiful pieces ever written despite the castigations of the critics that it is sloppy sentimentalism over Pilsner beer, was easily the most popular piece of the night. The sheer loveliness of the opening violins, soothing, rich, quiet, transports one from the ugly surroundings of an ugly hall to a plane that Wagner peopled with all the symbols of beauty. Then the entrance of the horns deepens the effect of the violins, and finally the entire orchestra combine to make ineffable music. The Mastersingers prelude ended a most delightful night of music.

Clara Clemens, the soloist, undertook a difficult scene and aria from Wagner. [illegible] least she gave the appea[illegible] so. She has a voice that is limited in range and is not effective above contralto. Her battle with some of the difficult Wagerian passages were not altogether successful. Parts of the Duparc piece were more suited to her voice, but when she strove to go beyond her limitations, she was sometimes a bit off. The Moussorgsky dance number was her most successful song, and even then she failed to satisfy an audience that was probably more curious than enthusiastic, thinking maybe of Miss. Clemens's distinguished father and of her talented husband rather than of her voice.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 2 8 1923

FRANCK SYMPHONY BRILLIANTLY PLAYED

Fourth Concert by Monteux Artists Given Before Diminished Audience.

CLARA CLEMENS SOLOIST

Smetana Symphonic Poem Flood of Easily Comprehensible Harmony. Players Afford Leader Utmost in Response

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, gave the fourth concert of its series in Infantry hall last evening. Cesar Franck's symphony in D-minor was the evening's chief work with Smetana's symphonic poem, "The Moldau" and two Wagner preludes rounding out the orchestra portion of the programme.

Clara Clemens, mezzo soprano, was the soloist. The attendance while large, was not equal to that noted at the earlier concerts.

In the main it was a brilliant programme that M. Monteux presented. The numbers were given in the following order:

Symphony in D-minor.................Franck
  Lento, Allegro non troppo.
  Allegretto.
  Allegro non troppo.
Scene, "Just God!" and aria, "My Life Fades in Its Blossom," from "Rienzi," Act III, No. 9.................Wagner
Symphonic poem ("The Moldau") from "Ma Vlast" ("My Country"), No. 2.....Smetana
Songs with orchestra:
  "Phydile" ....Duparc
  "Hopak" ....Moussorgsky
Prelude to "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" ....Wagner

Like many great orchestral works which later came to their own in public appreciation and favor, the Franck symphony received scant recognition at its first performance. The musical elect were not in sympathy with innovations in orchestral voicing such as were introduced by the composer in this score and it was some little time before the symphony's full worth was realized. To-day it stands as a monument to Franck's genius. The work is familiar to patrons of these concerts and last evening's performance was made thoroughly enjoyable under M. Monteux's artistic and sympathetic baton.

While this cultured and versatile leader is satisfying in his conceptions of the writings of various schools, it has always seemed that he possessed a deeper understanding, a more delicate appreciation, perhaps, of the modern French composers. At all events, his readings of their works, by seemingly intuitive sense, reveals the beauty, the refinement and grace which so enrich them.

The performance of the D-minor showed the players at their best, which is but another way of saying they responded with splendid precision and sympathy to their leader's wishes. The symphony's second and final movements are remarkable for their haunting thematic beauty, effective instrumentation and individuality.

TONE POEM MELODIOUS

The Smetana tone poem is more obvious music. It is music that may be easily assimilated at first hearing. Pleasing melodies are entwined in fairy-like fashion in the opening measures and one scarcely needs a programme book to follow the composer in his imaginative flights. "The Moldau" is one of a cycle of tone poems which are descriptive of the beauties of Bohemia. The river Moldau is the inspiration of this delightful piece of programme music. In this flowing tide of harmony the composer has painted the ever-changing scenes of his beloved stream. Again M. Monteux and his men gave a pleasing exhibition of expressive and finished ensemble. At the close the audience showed full appreciation of the players' efforts.

Mme. Clemens chose a fine aria in "My Life Fades in Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienzi." It is a song of great dramatic possibilities, and the orchestra furnishes a goodly portion of the effect. Mme. Clemens entered whole-heartedly into the spirit of the text and received much applause. The song "Phydile" is one that gives the singer opportunities for varied tone coloring and expressive use of the voice. Its restful character is enhanced by charming melody.

SOPRANO IS RECALLED

In contrast to this is the Russian song, "Hopak," of forceful style and brilliant throughout. Mme. Clemens's voice is smooth in quality and she uses it with considerable skill. That she found favor with her hearers was shown by several recalls after each appearance.

The two [illegible] were well [illegible]

The fo[illegible] real lightness an[illegible] in the strings and again at the end vanishing with the same delightful effect. That of "The Meistersingers" is of rugged power. Very brilliant, it concludes with energy and fire. A vigorous but smooth rendition of this number brought an end to a varied and interesting programme.

A. R. P.

From SUN

Address New York City

Date FEB 28

The next Saturday afternoon concert here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 17 promises the "Faust" symphony of Liszt. Mr. Monteux will have the aid for this occasion of the Harvard Glee Club, and Arthur Hackett, who sang the solo part when the same orchestra played the famous work here last under Dr. Muck, will sing it again.

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
MAR 1 1923

NEW PLAN FOR SEAT SALE

In order to facilitate the handling of the large number of applications for seats for the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in City Hall auditorium, Wednesday evening, March 7, the Music Commission has found it necessary to arrange a seat sale for the entire five days remaining before the concert. The announcement is therefore made that City Hall box office will be open for the accommodation of patrons from now until the evening of the concert, daily from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. On Saturday the box office will be open until noon only. Mail orders are being given attention in order of receipt. Applications by phone will be received until further notice. Patrons are advised not to delay in making reservations.

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
MAR 2 [illegible]

SYMPHONY SEATS

The box office, City Hall, is now open daily, from 9 until 4 p. m. for the accommodation of purchasers of tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, which will take place in City Hall auditorium, under Music Commission auspices, Wednesday evening, March 7. Not only has it been decided to keep the box office at City Hall open daily for the remainder of the time before the big concert, but seats will also be sold at Steinert's next Tuesday and Wednesday, an up-town and a down-town box office for the two final days being thought necessary in view of the volume of patronage which is indicated by the advance demand for tickets and the large number of mail orders being received. Orders by telephone (78072) will be received until further notice. Local patrons should not delay in making their reservations.

PORTLAND
ME.
PRESS HERALD
MAR 3 1923

SEATS UNTIL NOON ONLY

The box office, City Hall, will be open today until noon only for accommodation of purchasers of tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, which will take place in City Hall auditorium, Wednesday evening, March 7. Orders by telephone, 78072 will be received until further notice. Local patrons should not delay in making reservations.

To hear a Boston Symphony concert is a rare experience, in that it brings before the auditor the fine wealth of symphonic music in a perfect presentation. It is now evident in this, his third season, Pierre Monteux, the present conductor, is one of the most gifted the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ever had. Never have the symphony programs and their performance by the orchestra been more enjoyed and generally praised than under his direction.—Advt.

N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 3 1923

Symphony Orchestra

Liszt's "Faust" symphony for chorus and orchestra will be presented by Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall Saturday, March 17, with the Harvard Glee Club, and Arthur Hackett as tenor soloist. Handel's string concerto in D major will also be played.

For the Thursday evening concert Chausson's symphony, Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," and the "Tannhäuser" overture.

New York City

Some Unusual Programs

Liszt's choral "Faust" [illegible] will be performed at the Bos[illegible] phony concert in Carnegie Ha[illegible] from Saturday, March 17. The [illegible] Glee Club is to assist, with [illegible] Hackett, tenor.

Handel's string concerto in D [illegible] will be played at the same co[illegible] while Pierre Monteux's program [illegible] Thursday, March 15, will include Chausson's symphony, Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel" and the "Tannhaeuser" overture.

POST

ress: Washington, D. C.

MAR 4 1923

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

By special arrangement the Boston Symphony orchestra of 100 players is to visit here and give a concert in Poli's theater Tuesday week at 4:30 under the management of Mrs. Wilson-Greene.

This historical organization has long ranked ahead of all others in America, and is, by virtue of its supreme qualities, known throughout the musical world. The supremacy has been achieved through 40 years of endeavor, in which wealth has been expended, high ideals maintained, and the genius of one after another of the world's greatest conductors devoted to the gradual improvement of the ensemble. The most skillful musicians which Europe afforded were induced to cross the ocean and join its ranks, and a minimum of change in the personnel from season to season has enabled them by long association and practice to play together with marvelous unanimity.

To hear a Boston Symphony concert is a doubly-rare experience, in that it brings before the auditor the fine wealth of symphonic music in an ideally perfect presentation. It is now evident in this, his third season, Pierre Monteux, the present conductor, is one of the most gifted the Boston Symphony orchestra has ever had. Never have the symphony programs and their performance by the orchestra been more evidently enjoyed and generally praised than under his direction.

From American MAR 4 192
Baltimore, Md.

Boston Symphony To Play March 14

Famous Orchestra Will Make Its Only Appearance Of Season At Lyric.

THE sole visit to Baltimore of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season for a concert to be given in the Lyric Theatre on Wednesday evening, March 14, will be marked by a program of brilliance and interesting variety. Pierre Monteux, the illustrious conductor of the orchestra, will open it with the symphony of Franck in D minor, which is regarded by many as the foremost achievement of the French School of Music. When the Belgian master wrote this symphony it was received with incredulity, but "Father Franck" was confident of its success after hearing his score for the first time, and, indeed, it is now generally recognized as his maste[illegible] Beginning in a mystery [illegible] colors, it rises gradually to a [illegible] phant outburst of joyous exalta[illegible]

"La Mort de Tintagiles," the dr[illegible] matic poem of C. M. Loeffler, t[illegible] noted American composer, will a[illegible] be played, the viola d'amore part [illegible] be taken by Richard Burgin, the concertmaster of the orchestra. The closing number on the program will be Wagner's Overture to "Tannhauser."

The soloist at this concert will be Emma Calve, the celebrated French soprano, known the world over as the creator of the role of Carmen. This celebrity has in her concert tours of America in the last two seasons made a wonderfully vivid impression upon our public, and indeed her compelling dramatic power and the scarcely equalled beauty of her voice are said to be at their very finest. She will sing with the orchestra arias by Gluck and Handel.

FROM FEB 2 7 1923

TRIBUNE

Providence

Fourth Symphony Concert To-night

The last appearance but one of the season in Providence by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place in Infantry Hall to-night at 8:15. The soloist will be Clara Clemens, who is known in private life as Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, and who is the daughter of Mark Twain. She is a mezzo-soprano and her voice and interpretations are reputed to be very beautiful. Pierre Monteux will present Franck's Symphony in D minor and will also conduct the symphonic poem, "Vltava" ("The Moldau") by Smetana, and two Wagner numbers, the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
FEB 2 7 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY PROGRAM

There are two ways of obtaining seats in advance for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, under Municipal auspices, in City Hall auditorium, Wednesday evening, March 7, namely, by mail, and by personal application at the box office, City Hall, open daily from 10.30 to 11.30 a. m. There is much interest in the program which is announced as follows:

Beethoven, Overture to Leonore, No. 3, Op 72. Franck, Symphony in D minor, I. Lento; Allegro non troppo; II. Allegretto; III. Allegro non troppo. Strauss, Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, after the old-fashioned, Roguish Manner, in Rondo Form, for full orchestra, Op. 28. Vaughan Williams, Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis for rouble stringed orchestra. Enesco, Roumanian Rhapsody in A major, Op. 11, No.1. There will be an intermission of 10 minutes after the symphony.

NEWS, FEB 2 7 1923
Providence, R. I.

FOURTH SYMPHONY CONCERT TONIGHT

The last appearance but one of the season in Providence by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place in Infantry Hall tonight at 8:15.

The soloist will be Clara Clemens, who is known in private life as Mrs. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, and who is the daughter of Mark Twain. She is a mezzo-soprano and her voice and interpretations are reputed to be very beautiful. She will sing with the orchestra the aria "My Life Fades in its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienzi,' and two songs, "Phydile," by Duparc and 'Hopak" by Moussorgsky.

Pierre Monteux will present Franck's Symphony in D minor and will also conduct the symphonic poem "Vltava" ("The Moldau") by Smetana, and two Wagner numbers, the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
FEB 2 7 1923

FOURTH SYMPHONY CONCERT TO-NIGHT IN INFANTRY HALL

Clara Clemens Soloist.—Programme Includes Franck's Symphony.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert at Infantry Hall to-night, beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The soloist will be Clara Clemens, who is known in private life as Mrs Ossip Gabrilowitsch, and who is the daughter of Mark Twain. She is a mezzo-soprano and will sing, with the orchestra, the aria, "My Life Fades in Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienz," and two songs, "Phydile," by Duparc, and "Hopak," by Moussorgsky.

Pierre Monteux will offer Franck's symphony in D-minor, and will also conduct the symphonic poem, "Vltava" ("The Moldau"), by Smetana, and two Wagnerian numbers, the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 2 7 1923

Clara Clemens

Daughter of Late Mark Twain Will Sing at Boston Symphony Concert In Infantry Hall To-night.

FOURTH SYMPHONY CONCERT TO-NIGHT IN INFANTRY HALL

Clara Clemens Soloist.—Programme Includes Franck's Symphony.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert at Infantry Hall to-night, beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The soloist will be Clara Clemens, who is known in private life as Mrs. Ossop Gabrilovitsch, and who is the daughter of Mark Twain. She is a mezzo-soprano and will sing, with the orchestra, the aria, "My Life Fades in Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienz," and two songs, "Phydile," by Duparc and "Hopak," by Moussorgsky.

Pierre Monteux will offer Franck's symphony in D-minor, and will also conduct the symphonic poem, "Vltava" ("The Moldau"), by Smetana, and two Wagnerian numbers, the preludes to "Lohengrin" and "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

FROM MAR 2 8 1923

TRIBUNE

Providence

Boston Symphony Gives Fourth Concert

Franck's Coloring of Harmony and Melody Included in Fine Program

The Boston Symphony gave its fourth concert of the season last night at Infantry Hall, Pierre Monteux conducting. The program included Cesar Franck's symphony in D-minor, three movements; Smetana's symphonic poem, "The Moldau," from "Ma Vlast" (My Country), Wagner's prelude to "Lohengrin," and the prelude to the "Mastersingers." Clara Clemens daughter of Mark Twain, and wife of Ossip Gabrilowitz, was the soloist singing a scene and an aria from [illegible] "Rienzi," Duparc's "Phydile," and Moussorgsky's "Hopak."

Franck's symphony is rich and beautiful in its conception, with sustained passages of compelling loveliness, written not only for the technical ear of the musical erudite, but also for the glorification of the emotions of the musical illiterate who cannot tell a crescendo from an allegro and who, as Dulcy says, know what they like. They could not help liking Franck's coloring of harmony and melody. Mr. Monteux squeezed all the beauty from this symphony of the Belgian.

Smetna's Moldu varies in mood from a rhythmical swing with full accompaniment of violins and horns to deep melancholy dirge, then back into the full blare and fast movement of the dance tempo. It was read by Mr. Monteux with life and vigor. Wagner's prelude to "Lohengrin," one of the most beautiful pieces ever written despite the castigations of the criticasters that it is sloppy sentimentalism over Pilsner beer, was easily the most popular piece of the night. The sheer loveliness of the opening violins, soothing, rich, quiet, transport one from the ugly surroundings of an ugly hall to a plane that Wagner peopled with all the symbols of beauty. Then the entrance of the horn deepens the effect of the violins, and finally the entire orchestra combine to make ineffable music. The Mastersingers prelude ended a most delightful night of music.

Clara Clemens, the soloist, undertook a difficult scene and aria from Wagner. Now there are very few people who ca[illegible] [illegible] appealing. C[illegible] struggled valiantly with the [illegible] least she gave the appearance of doing so. She has a voice that is limited in range and is not effective above contralto. Her battle with some of the difficult Wagerian passages were not altogether successful. Parts of the Duparc piece were more suited to her voice, but when she strove to go beyond her limitations, she was sometimes a bit off. The Moussorgsky dance number was her most successful song, and even then she failed to satisfy an audience that was probably more curious than enthusiastic, thinking maybe of Miss Clemens's distinguished father and of her talented husband rather than of her voice.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 2 8 1923

FRANCK SYMPHONY BRILLIANTLY PLAYED

Fourth Concert by Monteux Artists Given Before Diminished Audience.

CLARA CLEMENS SOLOIST

Smetana Symphonic Poem Flood of Easily Comprehensible Harmony. Players Afford Leader Utmost in Response

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, gave the fourth concert of its series in Infantry hall last evening. Cesar Franck's symphony in D-minor was the evening's chief work with Smetana's symphonic poem, "The Moldau" and two Wagner preludes rounding out the orchestra portion of the programme.

Clara Clemens, mezzo soprano, was the soloist. The attendance while large, was not equal to that noted at the earlier concerts.

In the main it was a brilliant programme that M. Monteux presented. The numbers were given in the following order:

Symphony in D-minor..................Franck
  Lento, Allegro non troppo.
  Allegretto.
  Allegro non troppo.
Scene, "Just God!" and aria, "My Life Fades in Its Blossom," from "Rienzi," Act III, No. 9..............................Wagner
Symphonic poem ("The Moldau") from "Ma Vlast" ("My Country"), No. 2.....Smetana
Songs with orchestra:
  "Phydile" ....Duparc
  "Hopak" ....Moussorgsky
Prelude to "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" ....Wagner

Like many great orchestral works which later came to their own in public appreciation and favor, the Franck symphony received scant recognition at its first performance. The musical elect were not in sympathy with innovations in orchestral voicing such as were introduced by the composer in this score and it was some little time before the symphony's full worth was realized. To-day it stands as a monument to Franck's genius. The work is familiar to patrons of these concerts and last evening's performance was made thoroughly enjoyable under M. Monteux's artistic and sympathetic baton.

While this cultured and versatile leader is satisfying in his conceptions of the writings of various schools, it has always seemed that he possessed a deeper understanding, a more delicate appreciation, perhaps, of the modern French composers. At all events, his readings of their works, by seemingly intuitive sense, reveals the beauty, the refinement and grace which so enrich them.

The performance of the D-minor showed the players at their best, which is but another way of saying they responded with splendid precision and sympathy to their leader's wishes. The symphony's second and final movements are remarkable for their haunting thematic beauty, effective instrumentation and individuality.

TONE POEM MELODIOUS

The Smetana tone poem is more obvious music. It is music that may be easily assimilated at first hearing. Pleasing melodies are entwined in fairy-like fashion in the opening measures and one scarcely needs a programme book to follow the composer in his imaginative flights. "The Moldau" is one of a cycle of tone poems which are descriptive of the beauties of Bohemia. The river Moldau is the inspiration of this delightful piece of programme music. In this flowing tide of harmony the composer has painted the ever-changing scenes of his beloved stream. Again M. Monteux and his men gave a pleasing exhibition of expressive and finished ensemble. At the close the audience showed full appreciation of the players' efforts.

Mme. Clemens chose a fine aria in "My Life Fades in Its Blossom," from Wagner's "Rienzi." It is a song of great dramatic possibilities, and the orchestra furnishes a goodly portion of the effect. Mme. Clemens entered whole-heartedly into the spirit of the text and received much applause. The song "Phydile" is one that gives the singer opportunities for varied tone coloring and expressive use of the voice. Its restful character is enhanced by charming melody.

SOPRANO IS RECALLED

In contrast to this is the Russian song, "Hopak," of forceful style and brilliant throughout. Mme. Clemens's voice is smooth in quality and she uses it with considerable skill. That she found favor with her hearers was shown by several recalls after each appearance.

The two Wagner preludes were well played and [illegible] numbers. [illegible] contrasted with [illegible] the Meistersinger. The former is for the most part of ethereal lightness and delicacy beginning softly in the strings and again at the end vanishing with the same delightful effect. That of "The Meistersingers" is of rugged power. Very brilliant, it concludes with energy and fire. A vigorous but smooth rendition of this number brought an end to a varied and interesting programme.

A. F. P.

From SUN

Address New York City

Date FEB 28

The next Saturday afternoon concert here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 17 promises the "Faust" symphony of Liszt. Mr. Monteux will have the aid for this occasion of the Harvard Glee Club, and Arthur Hackett, who sang the solo part when the same orchestra played the famous work here last under Dr. Muck, will sing it again.

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
MAR 1 1923

NEW PLAN FOR SEAT SALE

In order to facilitate the handling of the large number of applications for seats for the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in City Hall auditorium, Wednesday evening, March 7, the Music Commission has found it necessary to arrange a seat sale for the entire five days remaining before the concert. The announcement is therefore made that City Hall box office will be open for the accommodation of patrons from now until the evening of the concert, daily from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. On Saturday the box office will be open until noon only. Mail orders are being given attention in order of receipt. Applications by phone will be received until further notice. Patrons are advised not to delay in making reservations.—Ad

---

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
MAR 2 1923

SYMPHONY SEATS

The box office, City Hall, is now open daily, from 9 until 4 p. m. for the accommodation of purchasers of tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, which will take place in City Hall auditorium, under Music Commission auspices, Wednesday evening, March 7. Not only has it been decided to keep the box office at City Hall open daily for the remainder of the time before the big concert, but seats will also be sold at Steinert's next Tuesday and Wednesday, an uptown and a down-town box office for the two final days being thought necessary in view of the volume of patronage which is indicated by the advance demand for tickets and the large number of mail orders being received. Orders by telephone (78072) will be received until further notice. Local patrons should not delay in making their reservations.—Advertisement.

PORTLAND
ME.
PRESS HERALD
MAR 3 1923

SEATS UNTIL NOON ONLY

The box office, City Hall, will be open today, until noon only for accommodation of purchasers of tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, which will take place in City Hall auditorium, Wednesday evening, March 7. Orders by telephone, 78072, will be received until further notice. Local patrons should not delay in making reservations.

To hear a Boston Symphony concert is a rare experience, in that it brings before the auditor the fine wealth of symphonic music in a perfect presentation. It is now evident in this, his third season, Pierre Monteux, the present conductor, is one of the most gifted the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ever had. Never have the symphony programs and their performance by the orchestra been more enjoyed and generally praised than under his direction.—Advt.

N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 3 1923

Symphony Orchestra

Liszt's "Faust" symphony for chorus and orchestra will be presented by Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall Saturday, March 17, with the Harvard Glee Club, and Arthur Hackett as tenor soloist. Handel's string concerto in D major will also be played.

For the Thursday evening concert Chausson's symphony, Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," and the "Tannhäuser" overture.

SUN MAR 3 1923

New York City

Some Unusual Programs.

Lizst's choral "Faust" symphony will be performed at the Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall a week from Saturday, March 17. The Harvard Glee Club is to assist, with Arthur Hackett, tenor.

Handel's string concerto in D [illegible] will be played at the same concert while Pierre Monteux's program for Thursday, March 15, will include Chausson's symphony, Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel" and the "Tannhaueser" overture.

POST

Address: Washington, D. C.

MAR 4 1923

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

By special arrangement the Boston Symphony orchestra of 100 players is to visit here and give a concert in Poli's theater Tuesday week at 4:30 under the management of Mrs. Wilson-Greene.

This historical organization has long ranked ahead of all others in America, and is, by virtue of its supreme qualities, known throughout the musical world. The supremacy has been achieved through 40 years of endeavor, in which wealth has been expended, high ideals maintained, and the genius of one after another of the world's greatest conductors devoted to the gradual improvement of the ensemble. The most skillful musicians which Europe afforded were induced to cross the ocean and join its ranks, and a minimum of change in the personnel from season to season has enabled them by long association and practice to play together with marvelous unanimity.

To hear a Boston Symphony concert is a doubly-rare experience, in that it brings before the auditor the fine wealth of symphonic music in an ideally perfect presentation. It is now evident in this, his third season, Pierre Monteux, the present conductor, is one of the most gifted the Boston Symphony orchestra has ever had. Never have the symphony programs and their performance by the orchestra been more evidently enjoyed and generally praised than under his direction.

From American MAR 4 192

Baltimore, Md.

Boston Symphony To Play March 14

Famous Orchestra Will Make Its Only Appearance Of Season At Lyric.

THE sole visit to Baltimore of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season for a concert to be given in the Lyric Theatre on Wednesday evening, March 14, will be marked by a program of brilliance and interesting variety. Pierre Monteux, the illustrious conductor of the orchestra, will open it with the symphony of Franck in D minor, which is regarded by many as the foremost achievement of the French School of Music. When the Belgian master wrote this symphony it was received with incredulity, but "Father Franck" was confident of its success after hearing his score for the first time, and, indeed, it is now generally recognized as his masterpiece. Beginning in a mystery of somber colors, it rises gradually to a triumphant outburst of joyous exaltation.

"La Mort de Tintagiles," the dramatic poem of C. M. Loeffler, the noted American composer, will also be played, the viola d'amore part to be taken by Richard Burgin, the concertmaster of the orchestra. The closing number on the program will be Wagner's Overture to "Tannhauser."

The soloist at this concert will be Emma Calve, the celebrated French soprano, known the world over as the creator of the role of Carmen. This celebrity has in her concert tours of America in the last two seasons made a wonderfully vivid impression upon our public, and indeed her compelling dramatic power and the scarcely equalled beauty of her voice are said to be at their very finest. She will sing with the orchestra arias by Gluck and Handel.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
TIMES HERALD
MAR 4 1928

Boston Symphony in Single Concert

A SPLENDID concert is anticipated for the visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when that famous organization gives its single concert here this season, on Tuesday afternoon, March 13, in Poli's Theater, under the management of Mrs. Wilson-Greene.

The present season of the orchestra has been extraordinarily successful. As many concerts as the requirements of rehearsals allow have been undertaken, increasing the number to the maximum. In Boston sixty-nine concerts will be given, while the tour has included Canada and the Middle West.

Pierre Monteux has made a vivid impression. He is now in his fourth season as the conductor, receiving expressions of higher esteem than ever before.

Seats are on sale at Mrs. Wilson-Greene's concert bureau, at Droop's, Thirteenth and G streets.

ESTABLISHED 1861 MAR 4 192
From American
Baltimore, Md.

Noted Conductor

Pierre Monteux will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert at the Lyric on March 14.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAR 4 1928

Coming Concerts Of New York and Boston Orchestras

Albert Spalding, the violinist, is announced as soloist for the New York Symphony Orchestra's concert, next Sunday afternoon, in Aeolian Hall, playing the D minor concerto, Op. 27, by Erno Dohnanyi. Mr. Damrosch and the orchestra will play a new suite, by Deems Taylor, entitled "Through the Looking Glass"—also to be played in Brooklyn on the 10th—besides Brahms's Academic Festival Overture and numbers by Johann and Josef Strauss. The novelty of this afternoon's New York Symphony concert at Aeolian Hall is Ernest Toch's "Fantastic Music of the Night," announced as having its first performance in America, which is dedicated to Frank Damrosch. The composer was born in Vienna in 1887 and, a self-taught musician, has won various prizes, including the Austrian state prize for composition, for four successive years. His compositions, all instrumental, include chamber music and orchestral works.

The Mahler Symphony, his seventh, on the programs of the Philharmonic Society next Thursday evening and Friday afternoon, is also announced as a first performance in New York. Alexander Siloti will be the soloist next Sunday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, playing Liszt's "Todtentanz," for piano and orchestra, which he will repeat on the following Sunday at the Metropolitan Opera House. Other numbers on Mr. Mengelberg's program for next Sunday will be Henry Hadley's Third Symphony, played in Brooklyn earlier in the season; "Piet Hein," a Dutch rhapsody, by Van Anrooy, and numbers by Weber and Johann Strauss. A symphony by Lazare Saminsky is announced for the next Philharmonic concert at the Metropolitan Opera House on the afternoon of the 18th.

Philharmonic subscriptions for next season may be made now at the society's offices in the Fisk Building, Fifty-seventh Street and Broadway. The Thursday evening concerts next year will be increased to eighteen, and conducted in pairs with the Friday afternoon series.

The next concerts here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be at Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, March 15 and 17. The Chausson B flat major Symphony will begin Mr. Monteux's program on Thursday, followed by Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" and the "Tannhauser" overture. On Saturday, Mr. Monteux will lead Liszt's "Faust" Symphony, with the closing chorus given by the Harvard Glee Club, with Arthur Hackett, tenor, as soloist. Handel's Concerto Grosso, in D major, for strings, is the first part of the program.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 4 1928

are seating capacity.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played the overture to Rossini's opera of "Semiramide," which Philip Hale in The Boston Herald spoke of as "still an old and dear friend, known to us from boyhood days in our little village, when we played it in a four-hand piano arrangement with a maiden aunt. It is a good thing for the younger generation in the symphony audience to learn what delighted their fathers and their grandfathers. Nor need these younger listeners, who grow enthusiastic over the music of Milhaud and other ultra-modern composers turn up their noses at the great Rossini, who once ruled the musical world. Old-fashioned as it is, this overture is in the grand style, melodious, pompous, with the irresistible crescendos attributed to Rossini, but used more sparingly by a few composers before him."

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD
MAR 4 1928

PLAY "FAUST SYMPHONY."

Liszt's largest orchestral work, the "Faust Symphony," will be performed by Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall, New York, a week from Saturday, March 17.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 16 1928

MUSIC

By RICHARD ALDRICH.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At every visit the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes to New York in these days it seems a finer orchestra; it played more beautiful tone, which now, in its lusciousness, transparency and delicate graduation of color, brings forth memories of the tone it had in the years of glory and true approximates thereto. So it played last evening in Carnegie Hall, when it came for the fourth visit of the season.

The program was a singularly attractive one, even though it did offer one of the numerous repetitions of Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," that are to be showered upon New York within so short a period. But it was a remarkably fine repetition; perhaps not one of such sweeping bravura as has been heard here but of a peculiarly mordant character, in which every voice, every phrase and every ironical and drastic turn was to be heard in its true significance; in which the line was unerringly preserved, and there was something of the balanced and open quality of chamber music, on a larger scale. And yet there was no dearth of the dazzling color. The piece seems, even under the strain of constant repetition, to be the one of Strauss's symphonic poems that shows least wear and tear.

Chausson's symphony, with which the program began, had also been heard here this season before; and also well-endured repetition. Few works of its school are so beautifully scored with such transparent, warm and glowing instrumentation. It was played with formance created a deep impression upon the audience, which bestowed applause enough upon it for the orchestra to share.

The interest was maintained and increased by Charles Martin Loeffler's dramatic poem, "La Mort de Tintagiles." The composition has established its place as one of the finest products of American art. It is twenty-six years old, and there is not too much music produced within that time that has held its own so well as this has, that maintains its poignancy and intensity of emotional expressiveness through the changes of style and method that have supervened, and that is shown thereby to be something profoundly felt and uttered, and not merely a new fashion of utterance that new music will so often turn out to be.

It was thought to be the last word in "modernity" at its first production. It is still modern in that its appeal to listeners of today is unshaken. It now seems clear, direct, spontaneous and its manner of expression something inevitable as well as personal. It rises above the limitations of program music in its specially musical power and expressiveness, its suggestion of mood and foreboding, its denotement of impending fate and impotent tenderness. There is nothing new in all this; and yet it was all brought back again as new in the fervid and impassioned performance that Mr. Monteux gave it last evening. Mr. Burgin, the concert master of the orchestra, played the obbligato part for the viola d'amore with an exquisite and silvery beauty of tone; a part written with such masterly skill into its place in the score, with such restraint and yet with such full and precise expression of what is given it to express.

The performance aroused much enthusiasm among the listeners; and Mr. Monteux directed it toward Mr. Loefres, who had come from Medfield to hear it, and rose to bow in the box where he sat. The program was brought to an end with the overture of "Tannhäuser."

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1928

Music

By Henry T. Finck

Operas and Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will offer its patrons a treat in Carnegie Hall to-morrow afternoon when Liszt's superb "Faust" symphony will be done, with the now famous Harvard Glee Club in the choral finale. Last night's concert of this orchestra had a familiar programme, including Chausson's B flat symphony, Loeffler's colorful "Mort de Tintagiles," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," and the "Tannhäuser" overture. In Aeolian Hall a song recital was given by Muriel Tindal, a member of the Metroplitan Opera Company.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1928

CONCERTS AND OPERAS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert at Carnegie Hall last night, opening with the Symphony in B flat of Ernest Chausson—a symphony which does not rank among the great ones, but is very enjoyable nevertheless. It has been called "Wagner and water," but "Wagner and maple syrup" would characterize it better. The themes are interesting, and it is orchestrated in a clever manner after the Wagnerian style. It was very well played under the baton of Pierre Monteux. The Till Eulenspiegel was not so well done, it lacked incisiveness of rhythm. On the other hand, the "Dramatic Poem" of Charles Martin Loeffler was played with a fine insight into its poetic qualities. "The Death of Tintagiles" has now taken its merited place in the repertoire of several of our best orchestras. The overture to "Tannhaeuser" closed the concert.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1928

Music In Manhattan

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, at Carnegie Hall last night played Chausson's B-flat major symphony, Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" and Wagner's "Tannhauser" overture. The Boston organization comes to the Brooklyn Academy of Music this evening.

BALTIMORE,
MD.
NEWS
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1928

Boston Symphony Concert

Pierre Monteux Directs Veteran Organization In Excellent Recital At Lyric, With Emma Calve As The Soloist

By W. G. O.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under its conductor, Pierre Monteux, appeared last evening at the Lyric, bringing with it as soloist the renowned Emma Calve. This organization, most famous in the annals of American orchestral history, was the first, and at one time, the only prominent orchestral body that visited Baltimore. In those days—and it is not many years ago—their visits numbered five a year. Now, unfortunately, they are reduced to one annual visit. It is through the medium of this organization that local musicians and music lovers obtained their first acquaintance with orchestral playing of a high order and with orchestral compositions of the classics. It is, therefore, with all sincerity we welcome the appearance of the organization, more especially as, despite possible comparison with other visiting orchestras, the Boston is still one of the great musical features of the country.

In volume of tone, in the tone quality of each of the instrumental families, in general blend and in authoritative reading of the works presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra is second to none. The conductor, in a quiet manner, is perfect master of the orchestra, obtaining all the requisite colorful effects and dynamic shading and making known to his players his every intention with absolute ease but also with absolute certainty.

Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor received a most interesting interpretation and one can rest assured the conception was thoroughly in accordance with the French traditional reading, as the conductor himself is French. The performance of the "Tannhauser" Overture was delightful and exceedingly smooth, but almost too smooth. The somewhat rugged character, noticeable in a German presentation, being absent. Loeffer's "La Mort de Tintagiles" was an interesting work from a constructive and orchestral point of view, but failed to impress the hearer as being the result of deep inspiration. It was splendidly presented.

Calve sang the Aria "Divinites du Styx" from Gluck's "Alceste" and Beethoven's "In Questa Tomba." The names of Calve and Carmen are almost synonymous. Calve, the opera singer, has been long associated in the minds of operagoers with the title role of the opera "Carmen"—a role she might be said to have created, through her characteristic impersonation. It was, consequently, a novel sensation to listen to her as a concert singer. As a matter of fact, her singing, in former times, had been so overshadowed by her dramatic work, that her powers as a vocalist had not received foremost attention. Last evening her vocal work produced the impression of surprise at its excellent quality. It must be remembered, she has not been heard for some years, and then, surrounded by operatic requirements. Her voice is always true in intonation, of excellent quality, especially in the higher register, and her tones were produced with remarkable ease. Nevertheless, her strong dramatic instincts and her intense musical temperament were powerful aids in her singing and enabled her to make her interpretations strikingly interesting.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
MAR 17 1928

The Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played last evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music for the fourth time this season. Conductor Pierre Monteux again showed his skill as a programme worker as well as a conductor.

Among the less familiar music was Charles Martin Loeffler's dramatic poem, "La Mort de Tintagiles," after one of Maurice Maeterlinck's self-styled little dramas for marionettes. Mr. Loeffler, who sat at the inner side of the first desk of the first violin's of this orchestra for twenty-five years, has, in recent years, devoted himself largely to composition in what may be termed a modern vein. Always a thorough musician, he never publishes any but the best of his compositions. Some of his music is distinctly of the future in the same sense that Wagner's music was of the future at the time he wrote it. Yet the present generation finds it to be sane and enjoyable. By writing his dramatic poem for full orchestra, Mr. Loeffler has lifted his work out of the "little drama" class, but the listener overlooks this detail. Mr. Monteux's reading was colorful and not over dramatic. Concert Master Richard Burgin played the incidental solos on the viole d'amour, an old instrument of the viol class, with seven bowed strings and seven steel strings that vibrate sympathetically.

Mme. Emma Calve sand the aria, "Divinites du Styx," from Gluck's "Alceste," and Beethoven's "In Questa Tomba Oscura." The Schubert's unfinished symphony, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody in A major (opus 11, No. 2). The audience filled the opera house and registered great appreciation.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
MAR 17 1928

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

Calve Its Soloist at the Academy Last Night.

The fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Brooklyn series was of unusual interest, in part because Mr. Monteux had selected a finely varied program, but chiefly because its soloist was Emma Calve, some years ago the idol of the town as Carmen. Time has dealt very kindly with Mme. Calve. Her figure has broadened but her art has broadened even more notably and delightfully. She was the ideal Carmen and still is in the memories of older operagoers, in large part because she was a superb actress, but even more because of the caressing, seductive tone which she imparted to Bizet's music, a feat in which none of her successors has rivaled her. Well, today she puts a totally different sympathy into the music of Gluck and Beethoven. The contrast in styles could not be greater but the perfection of art, the exquisite diction and the complete absorption of the singer in the music are as fine as at the height of the singer's glory. Time has been very kind to the singer's voice, also. The lower part of it is the most serviceable for the expression of emotion, but the higher notes of the Gluck air has an unexpected fullness and lack of rasp. It is many a day since the Beethoven "In Questa Tomba" has been so well sung in Brooklyn.

The orchestral program included the ever welcome "unfinished" symphony of Schubert, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," which has been played with less finish but more "punch" by some of the earlier German conductors; Loeffler's "Mort de Tintagiles" and Enesco's "Rumanian Rhapsody." Into the last two Mr. Monteux threw himself with enthusiasm and the men enjoyed the music with him and gave exquisite delicacy and finish. The enjoyment of the spirited "Rumanian Rhapsody," made from telling Rumanian folk songs, was heightened by remembering that the composer is the same Enesco who at the last of these concerts played the long and difficult Brahms violin concerto. The man is a fine artist, whether as composer or interpreter.

[79]

WASHINGTON
D. C.
TIMES HERALD
MAR 4 1928

Boston Symphony in Single Concert

A SPLENDID concert is anticipated for the visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when that famous organization gives its single concert here this season, on Tuesday afternoon, March 13, in Poli's Theater, under the management of Mrs. Wilson-Greene.

The present season of the orchestra has been extraordinarily successful. As many concerts as the requirements of rehearsals allow have been undertaken, increasing the number to the maximum. In Boston sixty-nine concerts will be given, while the tour has included Canada and the Middle West.

Pierre Monteux has made a vivid impression. He is now in his fourth season as the conductor, receiving expressions of higher esteem than ever before.

Seats are on sale at Mrs. Wilson-Greene's concert bureau, at Droop's, Thirteenth and G streets.

ESTABLISHED 1881 MAR 4 192

From American
Baltimore, Md.

Noted Conductor

Pierre Monteux will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert at the Lyric on March 14.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 4 1928

tire seating capacity.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra played the overture to Rossini's opera of "Semiramide," which Philip Hale in The Boston Herald spoke of as "still an old and dear friend, known to us from boyhood days in our little village, when we played it in a four-hand piano arrangement with a maiden aunt. It is a good thing for the younger generation in the symphony audience to learn what delighted their fathers and their grandfathers. Nor need these younger listeners, who grow enthusiastic over the music of Milhaud and other ultra-modern composers turn up their noses at the great Rossini, who once ruled the musical world. Old-fashioned as it is, this overture is in the grand style, melodious, pompous, with the irresistible crescendos attributed to Rossini, but used more sparingly by a few composers before him."

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD
MAR 4 1928

PLAY "FAUST SYMPHONY."

Liszt's largest orchestral work, the "Faust Symphony," will be performed by Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall, New York, a week from Saturday, March 17.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAR 4 1928

Coming Concerts Of New York and Boston Orchestras

Albert Spalding, the violinist, is announced as soloist for the New York Symphony Orchestra's concert, next Sunday afternoon, in Aeolian Hall, playing the D minor concerto, Op. 27, by Erno Dohnanyi. Mr. Damrosch and the orchestra will play a new suite, by Deems Taylor, entitled "Through the Looking Glass"—also to be played in Brooklyn on the 10th—besides Brahms's Academic Festival Overture and numbers by Johann and Josef Strauss. The novelty of this afternoon's New York Symphony concert at Aeolian Hall is Ernest Toch's "Fantastic Music of the Night," announced as having its first performance in America, which is dedicated to Frank Damrosch. The composer was born in Vienna in 1887 and, a self-taught musician, has won various prizes, including the Austrian state prize for composition, for four successive years. His compositions, all instrumental, include chamber music and orchestral works.

The Mahler Symphony, his seventh, on the programs of the Philharmonic Society next Thursday evening and Friday afternoon, is also announced as a first performance in New York. Alexander Siloti will be the soloist next Sunday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, playing Liszt's "Todtentanz," for piano and orchestra, which he will repeat on the following Sunday at the Metropolitan Opera House. Other numbers on Mr. Mengelberg's program for next Sunday will be Henry Hadley's Third Symphony, played in Brooklyn earlier in the season; "Piet Hein," a Dutch rhapsody, by Van Anrooy, and numbers by Weber and Johann Strauss. A symphony by Lazare Saminsky is announced for the next Philharmonic concert at the Metropolitan Opera House on the afternoon of the 18th.

Philharmonic subscriptions for next season may be made now at the society's offices in the Fisk Building, Fifty-seventh Street and Broadway. The Thursday evening concerts next year will be increased to eighteen, and conducted in pairs with the Friday afternoon series.

The next concerts here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be at Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, March 15 and 17. The Chausson B flat major Symphony will begin Mr. Monteux's program on Thursday, followed by Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" and the "Tannhauser" overture. On Saturday, Mr. Monteux will lead Liszt's "Faust" Symphony, with the closing chorus given by the Harvard Glee Club, with Arthur Hackett, tenor, as soloist. Handel's Concerto Grosso, in D major, for strings, is the first part of the program.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 16 1928

MUSIC

By RICHARD ALDRICH.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At every visit the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes to New York in these days it seems a finer orchestra; it played more beautifully, and especially with a more beautiful tone, which now, in its lusciousness, transparency and delicate graduation of color, brings forth memories of the tone it had in the years of glory and true approximates thereto. So it played last evening in Carnegie Hall, when it came for the fourth visit of the season.

The program was a singularly attractive one, even though it did offer one of the numerous repetitions of Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," that are to be showered upon New York within so short a period. But it was a remarkably fine repetition; perhaps not one of such sweeping bravura as has been heard here but of a peculiarly mordant character, in which every voice, every phrase and every ironical and drastic turn was to be heard in its true significance; in which the line was unerringly preserved, and there was something of the balanced and open quality of chamber music, on a larger scale. And yet there was no dearth of the dazzling color. The piece seems, even under the strain of constant repetition, to be the one of Strauss's symphonic poems that shows least wear and tear.

Chausson's symphony, with which the program began, had also been heard here this season before; and also well-endured repetition. Few works of its school are so beautifully scored with such transparent, warm and glowing instrumentation. It was played with real fervor and intensity; and the performance created a deep impression upon the audience, which bestowed applause enough upon it for the orchestra to share.

The interest was maintained and increased by Charles Martin Loeffler's dramatic poem, "La Mort de Tintogiles." The composition has established its place as one of the finest products of American art. It is twenty-six years old, and there is not too much music produced within that time that has held its own so well as this has, that maintains its poignancy and intensity of emotional expressiveness through the changes of style and method that have supervened, and that is shown thereby to be something profoundly felt and uttered, and not merely a new fashion of utterance that new music will so often turn out to be.

It was thought to be the last word in "modernity" at its first production. It is still modern in that its appeal to listeners of today is unshaken. It now seems clear, direct, spontaneous and its manner of expression something inevitable as well as personal. It rises above the limitations of program music in its specially musical power and expressiveness, its suggestion of mood and foreboding, its denotement of impending fate and impotent tenderness. There is nothing new in all this; and yet it was all brought back again as new in the fervid and impassioned performance that Mr. Monteux gave it last evening. Mr. Burgin, the concert master of the orchestra, played the obbligato part for the viola d'amore with an exquisite and silvery beauty of tone; a part written with such masterly skill into its place in the score, with such restraint and yet with such full and precise expression of what is given it to express.

The performance aroused much enthusiasm among the listeners; and Mr. Monteux directed it toward Mr. Loefres, who had come from Medfield to hear it, and rose to bow in the box where he sat. The program was brought to an end with the overture of "Tannhäuser."

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1928

Music

By Henry T. Finck

Operas and Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will offer its patrons a treat in Carnegie Hall to-morrow afternoon when Liszt's superb "Faust" symphony will be done, with the now famous Harvard Glee Club in the choral finale. Last night's concert of this orchestra had a familiar programme, including Chausson's B flat symphony, Loeffler's colorful "Mort de Tintagiles," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," and the "Tannhäuser" overture. In Aeolian Hall a song recital was given by Muriel Tindal, a member of the Metroplitan Opera Company.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1928

CONCERTS AND OPERAS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert at Carnegie Hall last night, opening with the Symphony in B flat of Ernest Chausson—a symphony which does not rank among the great ones, but is very enjoyable nevertheless. It has been called "Wagner and water," but "Wagner and maple syrup" would characterize it better. The themes are interesting, and it is orchestrated in a clever manner after the Wagnerian style. It was very well played under the baton of Pierre Monteux. The Till Eulenspiegel was not so well done, it lacked incisiveness of rhythm. On the other hand, the "Dramatic Poem" of Charles Martin Loeffler was played with a fine insight into its poetic qualities. "The Death of Tintagiles" has now taken its merited place in the repertoire of several of our best orchestras. The overture to "Tannhaeuser" closed the concert.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1928

Music In Manhattan

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, at Carnegie Hall last night played Chausson's B-flat major symphony, Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles" and Wagner's "Tannhauser" overture. The Boston organization comes to the Brooklyn Academy of Music this evening.

BALTIMORE,
MD.
NEWS
ISSUE OF
MAR 16 1928

Boston Symphony Concert

Pierre Monteux Directs Veteran Organization In Excellent Recital At Lyric, With Emma Calve As The Soloist

By W. G. O.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under its conductor, Pierre Monteux, appeared last evening at the Lyric, bringing with it as soloist the renowned Emma Calve. This organization, most famous in the annals of American orchestral history, was the first, and at one time, the only prominent orchestral body that visited Baltimore. In those days—and it is not many years ago—their visits numbered five a year. Now, unfortunately, they are reduced to one annual visit. It is through the medium of this organization that local musicians and music lovers obtained their first acquaintance with orchestral playing of a high order and with orchestral compositions of the classics. It is, therefore, with all sincerity we welcome the appearance of the organization, more especially as, despite possible comparison with other visiting orchestras, the Boston is still one of the great musical features of the country.

In volume of tone, in the tone quality of each of the instrumental families, in general blend and in authoritative reading of the works presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra is second to none. The conductor, in a quiet manner, is perfect master of the orchestra, obtaining all the requisite colorful effects and dynamic shading and making known to his players his every intention with absolute ease but also with absolute certainty.

Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor received a most interesting interpretation and one can rest assured the conception was thoroughly in accordance with the French traditional reading, as the conductor himself is French. The performance of the "Tannhauser" Overture was delightful and exceedingly smooth, but almost too smooth. The somewhat rugged character, noticeable in a German presentation, being absent. Loeffer's "La Mort de Tintagiles" was an interesting work from a constructive and orchestral point of view, but failed to impress the hearer as being the result of deep inspiration. It was splendidly presented.

Calve sang the Aria "Divinites du Styx" from Gluck's "Alceste" and Beethoven's "In Questa Tomba." The names of Calve and Carmen are almost synonymous. Calve, the opera singer, has been long associated in the minds of operagoers with the title role of the opera "Carmen"—a role she might be said to have created, through her characteristic impersonation. It was, consequently, a novel sensation to listen to her as a concert singer. As a matter of fact, her singing, in former times, had been so overshadowed by her dramatic work, that her powers as a vocalist had not received foremost attention. Last evening her vocal work produced the impression of surprise at its excellent quality. It must be remembered, she has not been heard for some years, and then, surrounded by operatic requirements. Her voice is always true in intonation, of excellent quality, especially in the higher register, and her tones were produced with remarkable ease. Nevertheless, her strong dramatic instincts and her intense musical temperament were powerful aids in her singing and enabled her to make her interpretations strikingly interesting.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
MAR 17 1928

The Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played last evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music for the fourth time this season. Conductor Pierre Monteux again showed his skill as a programme worker as well as a conductor.

Among the less familiar music was Charles Martin Loeffler's dramatic poem, "La Mort de Tintagiles," after one of Maurice Maeterlinck's self-styled little dramas for marionettes. Mr. Loeffler, who sat at the inner side of the first desk of the first violin's of this orchestra for twenty-five years, has, in recent years, devoted himself largely to composition in what may be termed a modern vein. Always a thorough musician, he never publishes any but the best of his compositions. Some of his music is distinctly of the future in the same sense that Wagner's music was of the future at the time he wrote it. Yet the present generation finds it to be sane and enjoyable. By writing his dramatic poem for full orchestra, Mr. Loeffler has lifted his work out of the "little drama" class, but the listener overlooks this detail. Mr. Monteux's reading was colorful and not over dramatic. Concert Master Richard Burgin played the incidental solos on the viole d'amour, an old instrument of the viol class, with seven bowed strings and seven steel strings that vibrate sympathetically.

Mme. Emma Calve sand the aria, "Divinites du Styx," from Gluck's "Alceste," and Beethoven's "In Questa Tomba Oscura." The Schubert's unfinished symphony, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody in A major (opus 11, No. 2). The audience filled the opera house and registered great appreciation.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
MAR 17 1928

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

Calve Its Soloist at the Academy Last Night.

The fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Brooklyn series was of unusual interest, in part because Mr. Monteux had selected a finely varied program, but chiefly because its soloist was Emma Calve, some years ago the idol of the town as Carmen. Time has dealt very kindly with Mme. Calve. Her figure has broadened but her art has broadened even more notably and delightfully. She was the ideal Carmen and still is in the memories of older operagoers, in large part because she was a superb actress, but even more because of the caressing, seductive tone which she imparted to Bizet's music, a feat in which none of her successors has rivaled her. Well, today she puts a totally different sympathy into the music of Gluck and Beethoven. The contrast in styles could not be greater but the perfection of art, the exquisite diction and the complete absorption of the singer in the music are as fine as at the height of the singer's glory. Time has been very kind to the singer's voice, also. The lower part of it is the most serviceable for the expression of emotion, but the higher notes of the Gluck air has an unexpected fullness and lack of rasp. It is many a day since the Beethoven "In Questa Tomba" has been so well sung in Brooklyn.

The orchestral program included the ever welcome "unfinished" symphony of Schubert, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," which has been played with less finish but more "punch" by some of the earlier German conductors; Loeffler's "Mort de Tintagiles" and Enesco's "Rumanian Rhapsody." Into the last two Mr. Monteux threw himself with enthusiasm and the men enjoyed the music with him and gave exquisite delicacy and finish. The enjoyment of the spirited "Rumanian Rhapsody," made from telling Rumanian folk songs, was heightened by remembering that the composer is the same Enesco who at the last of these concerts played the long and difficult Brahms violin concerto. The man is a fine artist, whether as composer or interpreter.

[79]

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
CITIZEN
ISSUE OF
MAR 17 1928

MME CALVE HERE WITH THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Pierre Monteaux, with Mme. Calve as assisting artist, played at the Academy of Music last evening. Mme. Calve sang Gluck's "Divinities du Styx" from Alceste," and Beethoven "In Inesta Tomba Oscivia." This able artist needs no introduction to the music lovers of this borough. Her singing last evening was in keeping with her past excellent offerings. She was generously applauded.

For the rest of the program Mr. Monteaux selected Shubert's unfinished symphony; "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," Strauss; Rumanian Rhapsody No. 2, Enesco, and "La Mart de Tintagiles," Loeffler, with Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra, playing the "Viole d'Amour" solo in the last number. All of these works except the "Rumanian Rhapsody" have been heard frequently during the current season. The latter was very pleasing to the ear.

Mr. Monteaux and his excellent organization delighted a large audience with their beauty of tone and delicacy of shading. From the tricky pranks of "Till Eulenspiegel" to the intensely dramatic passages of the "La Mort de Tintagiles" they displayed skill and brilliancy and left little to be desired.

MAR 17 1928
TIMES
BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Music Events

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert last night at the Academy of Music which was good in spots. But, unfortunately, those spots did not occur frequently.

Some of the good spots occurred in the woodwind passages of Strauss' "Till Eulenspeigel's Pranks, after the old-fashioned, roguish manner, in Rondo Form." There is, indeed, a good bit of delightfully broad humor in this absurd composition, which calls forth the spectacle of a pantomimic clown grotesquely disporting himself. There were here and there good spots in Schubert's unfinished Symphony in B minor, too. But the crudities and rough edges of the orchestra's rendition of this sublime composition obliterated the finer passages. There was very little of the rich organ quality and all too much harshness and mechanical intensity.

Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, Op. 11, No. 2, gave evidence of being quite beyond the complete grasp of the orchestra which, more than once, in its desire to give a spirited, fiery rendition, skipped entirely out of the control of the conductor. The result were a few discords and momentary losses of unison.

Also on the program was Loeffler's "La Morte de Tintagiles," a dramatic poem after the drama of Maurice Maeterlinck, for orchestra and Viole d'Amour. The Viole d'Amour was played without any distinction by Richard Burgin, who seemed to have difficulty in keeping the strings in tune.

Emma Calve was the soloist. She sang Gluck's aria, "Divinities du Styx" from "Alceste," and BeethoVen's "In Questa Tomba Oscura," with a voice which in the upper registers was metallic and without color.

Pierre Monteux conducted.

STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
MAR 18 1928

Liszt's "Faust" symphony, with the final chorus sung by the Harvard Glee Club, and Arthur Hackett, tenor, was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, Pierre Monteux conducting. The programme's first half was devoted to a performance of Handel's D major concerto grosso for string orchestra, Messrs. Burgin, Theodorowicz, Fourel and Bedetti playing the solo violin, viola and violoncello parts.

Herman Menth, heard in matinee Aeolian Hall piano recital yesterday, played compositions by Scarlatti, Gluck-Brahms, Couperin, Liszt, Debussy and Brahms.

Scheduled for appearance last evening were the Paulist Choristers at Town Hall, and Anna Meitschik, contralto, and Michael Press, violinist, in joint recital at Carnegie

---

N. Y.
AMERICAN
ISSUE OF
MAR 18 1928

Record Crowd Hears Boston Symphony in Attractive Programme

By GRENA BENNETT.

YESTERDAY afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall drew one of the largest audiences credited to the Hub band in several seasons. This might have been due to a particularly alluring programme or to the published rumor that the Bostonians may not visit New York next season.

Mr. Monteaux, with fine intelligence and understanding, directed his men through the gentle melodies of Haydn's Concerto Grosso, and after a brief pause presented Liszt's "Faust" Symphony, introducing Arthur Hackett, American tenor and the Harvard Glee Club in the charming final chorus.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 18 1928

HARVARD GLEE CLUB SINGS WITH ORCHESTRA

Appears With the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall—Arthur Hackett Tenor Soloist.

Carnegie Hall was filled yesterday for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last matinee but one this season, the big and socially brilliant audience being attracted perhaps not so much by a hunger to hear the rare "Faust" symphony of Liszt as it was by the further fact that Mr. Monteux had enlisted for the occasion fifty singers of the Harvard Glee Club. Both Monteux himself and Dr. Archibald T. Davison, the club's regular conductor, shared with the tenor soloist, Arthur Hackett, an enthusiastic recall to the stage at the close of the Symphony's hour and a half of performance.

Mr. Hackett sang admirably above chorus and orchestra, with crystal tone and diction, the "Ewig Weibliche," quotation from Goethe, which is equally Liszt's homage to the poet and his symphony's chief mark of distinction. The men of the glee club, singing over the players from a high platform at back of the stage, were responsive to Conductor Monteux's every nuance. Their tone, manful and meaningful, lent wings to words while adding a human "instrument" to the fine blend of orchestral harmony.

By way of preface, there was but one other work in the program, Handel's concerto grosso in D major for string orchestra only, with solo "leads" for Burgin and Theodorowicz among the violins, as well as Fourel, viola, and Bedetti, 'cello. The serene classic proved a graceful foil to Liszt's romance on the Faust, Gretchen and Mephisto themes.

HERALD
MAR 18 1928

HARVARD MEN SING IN SYMPHONY CONCERT

Boston Orchestra Gives Matinee Program.

The fourth matinee concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, was given yesterday at Carnegie Hall. The program comprised Handel's "Concerto Grosso" in D major, No. 5, for string orchestra and string quartet—Messrs. Burgin, Theodorowicz, Fourel and Bedetti—edited by Kogel, and "A Faust Symphony," in three character pictures (after Goethe), by Franz Liszt. In the symphony the final chorus was sung by the Harvard Glee Club, Archibald T. Davison leader, with Arthur Hackett, tenor, as the soloist.

Mr. Monteux's players did beautiful work in Handel's imposing and splendid Concerto Grosso. Their feeling for the music was especially charged with sympathetic understanding and their virtuosity as instrumentalists excellently displayed. The number was rewarded with liberal applause.

Liszt's "Faust Symphony," as played by the orchestra, was a highly finished one in suite of no few soporific movements. Amid the splendid passages of the long score many hollow and barren spots as left by the composer stood forth in a broad and glaring light. The manifold melodic beauties of the "Gretchen" movement came as a relief. The Harvard Glee Club showed masterly skill in the choral passages, which with Arthur Hackett's fine voice and admirable delivery in the solo work, made an artistic feature in the imposing and thrilling ensemble. The warm applause at the close of the performance was shared by Mr. Monteaux, Mr. Davison and Mr. Hackett.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAR 18 1928

Local Orchestras Approaching End Of Their Seasons

The orchestral season is gradually drawing to an end. The City Symphony Orchestra already has ended its first season and is talking of plans for the next, while the New York Symphony Orchestra is ending its Carnegie Hall series with the concerts this Thursday afternoon and Friday evening, which will bring Artur Schnabel together with the usually paired pianists, Guy Maier and Lee Pittison, in the Bach concerto for three pianos. The last concert in the children's series will be next Saturday morning at Aeolian Hall, while the final concert of the season will be the regular Aeolian Hall afternoon concert next Sunday, when John Barclay, barytone, will be the soloist in an aria from "Don Giovanni" and a Duparc number. Mr. Damrosch will lead Mozart's Symphony in C (B. & H. No. 28) and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," and give a first performance of the Second "Stevensoniana" Suite by Edward Burlingame Hill, assistant professor of music at Harvard University. Mr. Hill's suite, completed last September, is like the first suite of the same title, based on poems from Stevenson's "Child's Garden of Verses." It has three movements, referring to the poems "Armies in the Fire," "The Dumb Soldier" and "Pirate Story."

The New York Symphony will be heard this afternoon at the Jolson Fifty-ninth Street Theater in a benefit concert for the Rheims School of Music, and at Montclair in the final concert of the Young People's series next Tuesday afternoon.

Three pianists will also be heard, but at different times, during the week as soloists with the Philharmonic—Alexander Siloti this afternoon at the Metropolitan Opera House, repeating the Liszt arrangement of Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasy; Mieczyslaw Munz at the popular-priced "educational" concert on Wednesday evening at Carnegie Hall, and Wilhelm Bachaus in the regular concerts there next Thursday evening and Friday afternoon. Lazar Saminsky's "Symphony of the Summits" will have what is announced as its first American performance this afternoon, while a first New York hearing of Pick-Mangiagalli's "Sortilege," a symphonic poem for piano and orchestra, is announced for Thursday and Friday. Mr. Mengelberg will conduct a program of Wagner and Strauss numbers at Carnegie Hall next Sunday afternoon, the 25th. Including this one, the Philharmonic season has three more weeks to run, the last concert being at the Metropolitan Opera House on April 8.

There are still two concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra and one pair by the Boston Symphony to be heard during the present season.

BALTIMORE
MD.
EVENING SUN
MAR 15 1928

MUSIC

By J. O. L. (JO L

Boston Orchestra And Emma Calve.

The Boston Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, appeared at the Lyric last evening after a twelve months' absence, ~~the assisting artist being Emma Calve, the famous French contralto.~~

The Boston Orchestra is today, just as it was before the war, a perfect instrument, the tone of which is now characterized by a perfectly wonderful richness and mellowness. It is moreover, a peculiarly sensitive instrument that responds in a living and extremely subtle way to the finely spiritual and inherently elevated moods of its present director, so that its performance throughout the evening was marked by the most exquisite dynamic variety, brilliance and richness. The extremely golden quality of the brass choir, which is so insistent but never obtrusive, the pure clarity of the wind instruments and the vibrant beauty of the strings are all things that combine to place this band in the very highest rank of orchestra organizations, so that from the point of view of pure musical efficiency and beauty the concert last evening must be regarded as one of the outstanding events of the winter.

It is surely a sad commentary on the musical understanding and appreciation of our Baltimore amateurs that so diminutive an audience assembled to hear this concert and that our own particular "golden horseshoe" of music lovers [illegible] conspicuous [illegible] absence.

[illegible] the suppressed interest aroused by [illegible] Calve's reappearance after an absence of so many years in the musical world.

As a matter of fact the concert last evening was one of the most beautiful that has been given here in recent years. The orchestra played first the lovely D minor symphony of Cesar Franck, a musical tapestry that has been woven with a peculiar richness of harmonic device, a work that, while somewhat sombre in intent, is, nevertheless, characterized by a fine exhaltation and stirring beauty. Of special interest, too, was the Loeffler tone poem, a work inspired by Maeterlinck's "Mort de Tintagiles," and in which the solo voice is the insinuating and rarely heard viole d'amour, an antique instrument that was beautifully played by Richard Burgin. Loeffler's work is a little lacking in the mystic quality that Debussy gives to his "translations" of "Maeterlinck, and it seems at times a little too attenuated in its rare modernity, but it is a fine musical expression of a spiritual mood, and it was exquisitely played. Mr. Monteux's men also gave a superb reading of the "Thannhaeuser" overture.

Mme. Calve received an ovation. A commanding figure, she sings with a superb dignity and with that wonderful artistry that has always marked her performances, giving the great "Divinities du Styx" aria of Gluck in the broad, expansive, classic manner that alone makes works of this type interesting. If her upper register has lost something of its brilliance, it has lost little, if anything, of its round purity of tone, and her middle voice is still quite glorious.

Her mezza voce is exquisite, her singing of the beautiful "In questa tomba oscura" song of Beethoven (which she substituted for the Handelaria), and which she gave in this vibrant half voice, was one of those entirely beautiful exhibitions that make particular concerts memorable. It was the kind of thing that makes one all the more eager to hear this great artist in recital, in which she should still be supreme.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 18 1928

Liszt's "Faust Symphony" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club, and H. T. P., in The Transcript, is vastly amused by the people who do not like it. "No performance of the 'Faust Symphony' will convert the unconvertible among those who hear. Of old, they defended themselves by saying that they yielded to Dr. Muck; but neither to Liszt nor to the music. Yesterday, of course, they were surer than ever of his and its demerits. Their grievance is easily discoverable and, at bottom, it is amusing. They cannot be content wth Liszt as he was; as in his music he remains; always they would have him something different—and that he could not be. Liszt was a romantic temperament; he lived and worked through a romantic period. Few romantics have taste—possibly an overexcited quality; few abound in self criticism—a useful virtue in the practice of the arts. By very nature a romantic is not likely to be choice of expressive means."

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAR 18 1928

Hackett and Harvard Club Heard With Orchestra

Collaborate With Boston Musicians in Splendid Performance of 'Faust Symphony'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra continued its fourth pair of concerts of the season yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall with a program that contained nothing new, but which was one of unusual quality and interest none the less. Prefaced by Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 5 in D, its principal item was Liszt's "Faust Symphony," in which Arthur Hackett, tenor, and the Harvard Glee Club collaborated.

The concerto was given a performance of finish and vigorous beauty that rightly received warm commendation, but there was perhaps greater interest in the symphony, which, because it requires the assistance of chorus and soloist in its last movement, is more difficult of performance and is infrequently heard. It repays effort, however, for while it is not without some theatricality and overelaboration, it is one of the things in which Liszt, the composer of ideas and the ability to give them plastic expression, survives, while the Liszt of the showy pieces by which he is more commonly known in the concert rooms is to a degree outmoded.

Mr. Monteux gave it yesterday a performance of flowing beauty. The virtuosity of the orchestra's various choirs was continually made evident, but without loss of balance. In the closing section the choral singing blended into the orchestral fabric almost imperceptibly, and gave its rather theatrical finale a quality of serene beauty. To this effect Mr. Hackett's intelligent singing of the solo part also contributed much. The large audience present was properly enthusiastic.

Record ... Boston ... Attractive Programme

By GRENA BENNETT.

YESTERDAY afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall drew one of the largest audiences credited to the Hub band in several seasons. This might have been due to a particularly alluring programme or to the published rumor that the Bostonians may not visit New York next season.

Mr. Monteaux, with fine intelligence and understanding, directed his men through the gentle melodies of Haydn's Concerto Grosso, and after a brief pause presented Liszt's "Faust" Symphony, introducing Arthur Hackett, American tenor and the Harvard Glee Club in the charming final chorus.

N.Y. AMER. MAR. 18.

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY

The seventh concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, will take place on Thursday evening, March 22, at 8 o'clock. Beethoven, overture to "Coriolanus"; Glazounov, Symphony No. 4, E flat; Handel-Kogel, Concerto Grosso No. 5, D major; Ravel, Spanish Rhapsody. Mme. Ferrabini-Jacchia, soprano, will sing Leonora's aria from Godard's "Tasso," and "Ritorna Vincitor," from Verdi's "Aida."

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

At the 19th pair of Symphony concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the soloist will be Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra. He will play Beethoven's concerto. This will be preceded by Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolanus." Mr. Monteux will present two works hitherto unknown to Boston—Koechlin's "Three Chorales" and the Scherzo "Tam O'Shanter," by Eugene Goosens. The closing number will be Debussy's suite "Printemps."

MONDAY SYMPHONY

Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," will be the feature of the fourth Boston Symphony concert of the extra Monday evening series to be given on March 26 in Symphony hall. The soloist will be Mme. Esther Ferrabini-Jacchia, the soprano of operatic fame, who has appeared with much success as soloist with the orchestra. Mme. Jacchia will sing arias from Godard's "Tasso" and Verdi's "Aida." The celebrated "Scheherazade," based upon tales from the Arabian Nights, is looked upon as one of the most gorgeous, colorful and pictorial of modern Russian scores. It is replete with beautiful solo passages. Mr. Monteux will also present Bach's Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte arranged for strings by Bachrich, and a notable novelty, "Ballad of the Gnomides," by Respighi, the celebrated Italian composer, which will have its first performance in Boston.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
MAR 19 1928

Other Events.

John Powell, the talented pianist and composer, gave an all-Chopin program—augmented by a half-a-dozen encores—at Aeolian Hall Saturday afternoon. He has an agreeable touch, fluent mechanism, and he is always a serious musician. His interpretative powers were perhaps at their best in the Barcarolle and the B minor Sonata.

Albert Spalding, another sterling American artist, gave a violin recital at Carnegie Hall Sunday afternoon, giving pleasure to a large audience by his splendid playing of an attractive program, which included works of Mozart and Franck and a number of arrangements by himself. Also, there were encores, to the number of seven. John Charles Thomas gave a song recital at Aeolian Hall, singing a varied program in his smooth and flowing style, beginning with a Handel aria and ending with a trashy song of Mana-Zucca. There was also a benefit concert by the New York Symphony Orchestra, which enlisted the services of Lucrezia Bori and Reinald Werrenrath.

Saturday afternoon Mr. Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a splendid performance of Liszt's greatest work, the "Faust" symphony. W. H. HUMISTON.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
CITIZEN
ISSUE OF
MAR 17 1928

MME CALVE HERE WITH THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Pierre Monteaux, with Mme. Calve as assisting artist, played at the Academy of Music last evening. Mme. Calve sang Gluck's "Divinities du Styx" from Alceste," and Beethoven "In Inesta Tomba Oscivia." This able artist needs no introduction to the music lovers of this borough. Her singing last evening was in keeping with her past excellent offerings. She was generously applauded.

For the rest of the program Mr. Monteaux selected Shubert's unfinished symphony; "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," Strauss; Rumanian Rhapsody No. 2, Enesco, and "La Mart de Tintagiles," Loeffler, with Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra, playing the "Viole d'Amour" solo in the last number. All of these works except the "Rumanian Rhapsody" have been heard frequently during the current season. The latter was very pleasing to the ear.

Mr. Monteaux and his excellent organization delighted a large audience with their beauty of tone and delicacy of shading. From the tricky pranks of "Till Eulenspiegel" to the intensely dramatic passages of the "La Mort de Tintagiles" they displayed skill and brilliancy and left little to be desired.

MAR 17 1928
TIMES
BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Music Events

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Under the auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert last night at the Academy of Music which was good in spots. But, unfortunately, those spots did not occur frequently.

Some of the good spots occurred in the woodwind passages of Strauss' "Till Eulenspeigel's Pranks, after the old-fashioned, roguish manner, in Rondo Form." There is, indeed, a good bit of delightfully broad humor in this absurd composition, which calls forth the spectacle of a pantomimic clown grotesquely disporting himself. There were here and there good spots in Schubert's unfinished Symphony in B minor, too. But the crudities and rough edges of the orchestra's rendition of this sublime composition obliterated the finer passages. There was very little of the rich organ quality and all too much harshness and mechanical intensity.

Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, Op. 11, No. 2, gave evidence of being quite beyond the complete grasp of the orchestra which, more than once, in its desire to give a spirited, fiery rendition, skipped entirely out of the control of the conductor. The result were a few discords and momentary losses of unison.

Also on the program was Loeffler's "La Morte de Tintagiles," a dramatic poem after the drama of Maurice Maeterlinck, for orchestra and Viole d'Amour. The Viole d'Amour was played without any distinction by Richard Burgin, who seemed to have difficulty in keeping the strings in tune.

Emma Calve was the soloist. She sang Gluck's aria, "Divinities du Styx" from "Alceste," and BeethoVen's "In Questa Tomba Oscura," with a voice which in the upper registers was metallic and without color.

Pierre Monteux conducted.

STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
MAR 18 1928

Liszt's "Faust" symphony, with the final chorus sung by the Harvard Glee Club, and Arthur Hackett, tenor, was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, Pierre Monteux conducting. The programme's first half was devoted to a performance of Handel's D major concerto grosso for string orchestra, Messrs. Burgin, Theodorowicz, Fourel and Bedetti playing the solo violin, viola and violoncello parts.

Herman Menth, heard in matinee Aeolian Hall piano recital yesterday, played compositions by Scarlatti, Gluck-Brahms, Couperin, Liszt, Debussy and Brahms.

Scheduled for appearance last evening were the Paulist Choristers at Town Hall, and Anna Meitschik, contralto, and Michael Press, violinist, in joint recital at Carnegie Hall.

N. Y.
AMERICAN
ISSUE OF
MAR 18 1928

Record Crowd Hears Boston Symphony in Attractive Programme

By GRENA BENNETT.

YESTERDAY afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall drew one of the largest audiences credited to the Hub band in several seasons. This might have been due to a particularly alluring programme or to the published rumor that the Bostonians may not visit New York next season.

Mr. Monteaux, with fine intelligence and understanding, directed his men through the gentle melodies of Haydn's Concerto Grosso, and after a brief pause presented Liszt's "Faust" Symphony, introducing Arthur Hackett, American tenor and the Harvard Glee Club in the charming final chorus.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 18 1928

HARVARD GLEE CLUB SINGS WITH ORCHESTRA

Appears With the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall—Arthur Hackett Tenor Soloist.

Carnegie Hall was filled yesterday for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last matinee but one this season, the big and socially brilliant audience being attracted perhaps not so much by a hunger to hear the rare "Faust" symphony of Liszt as it was by the further fact that Mr. Monteux had enlisted for the occasion fifty singers of the Harvard Glee Club. Both Monteux himself and Dr. Archibald T. Davison, the club's regular conductor, shared with the tenor soloist, Arthur Hackett, an enthusiastic recall to the stage at the close of the Symphony's hour and a half of performance.

Mr. Hackett sang admirably above chorus and orchestra, with crystal tone and diction, the "Ewig Weibliche," quotation from Goethe, which is equally Liszt's homage to the poet and his symphony's chief mark of distinction. The men of the glee club, singing over the players from a high platform at back of the stage, were responsive to Conductor Monteux's every nuance. Their tone, manful and meaningful, lent wings to words while adding a human "instrument" to the fine blend of orchestral harmony.

By way of preface, there was but one other work in the program, Handel's concerto grosso in D major for string orchestra only, with solo "leads" for Burgin and Theodorowicz among the violins, as well as Fourel, viola, and Bedetti, 'cello. The serene classic proved a graceful foil to Liszt's romance on the Faust, Gretchen and Mephisto themes.

HERALD
MAR 18 1928

HARVARD MEN SING IN SYMPHONY CONCERT

Boston Orchestra Gives Matinee Program.

The fourth matinee concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, was given yesterday at Carnegie Hall. The program comprised Handel's "Concerto Grosso" in D major, No. 5, for string orchestra and string quartet—Messrs. Burgin, Theodorowicz, Fourel and Bedetti—edited by Kogel, and "A Faust Symphony," in three character pictures (after Goethe), by Franz Liszt. In the symphony the final chorus was sung by the Harvard Glee Club, Archibald T. Davison leader, with Arthur Hackett, tenor, as the soloist.

Mr. Monteux's players did beautiful work in Handel's imposing and splendid Concerto Grosso. Their feeling for the music was especially charged with sympathetic understanding and their virtuosity as instrumentalists excellently displayed. The number was rewarded with liberal applause.

Liszt's "Faust Symphony," as played by the orchestra, was a highly finished one in suite of no few soporific movements. Amid the splendid passages of the long score many hollow and barren spots as left by the composer stood forth in a broad and glaring light. The manifold melodic beauties of the "Gretchen" movement came as a relief. The Harvard Glee Club showed masterly skill in the choral passages, which with Arthur Hackett's fine voice and admirable delivery in the solo work, made an artistic feature in the imposing and thrilling ensemble. The warm applause at the close of the performance was shared by Mr. Monteux, Mr. Davison and Mr. Hackett.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAR 18 1928

Local Orchestras Approaching End Of Their Seasons

The orchestral season is gradually drawing to an end. The City Symphony Orchestra already has ended its first season and is talking of plans for the next, while the New York Symphony Orchestra is ending its Carnegie Hall series with the concerts this Thursday afternoon and Friday evening, which will bring Artur Schnabel together with the usually paired pianists, Guy Maier and Lee Pittison, in the Bach concerto for three pianos. The last concert in the children's series will be next Saturday morning at Aeolian Hall, while the final concert of the season will be the regular Aeolian Hall afternoon concert next Sunday, when John Barclay, barytone, will be the soloist in an aria from "Don Giovanni" and a Duparc number. Mr. Damrosch will lead Mozart's Symphony in C (B. & H. No. 28) and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," and give a first performance of the Second "Stevensoniana" Suite by Edward Burlingame Hill, assistant professor of music at Harvard University. Mr. Hill's suite, completed last September, is like the first suite of the same title, based on poems from Stevenson's "Child's Garden of Verses." It has three movements, referring to the poems "Armies in the Fire," "The Dumb Soldier" and "Pirate Story."

The New York Symphony will be heard this afternoon at the Jolson Fifty-ninth Street Theater in a benefit concert for the Rheims School of Music, and at Montclair in the final concert of the Young People's series next Tuesday afternoon.

Three pianists will also be heard, but at different times, during the week as soloists with the Philharmonic—Alexander Siloti this afternoon at the Metropolitan Opera House, repeating the Liszt arrangement of Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasy; Mieczyslaw Munz at the popular-priced "educational" concert on Wednesday evening at Carnegie Hall, and Wilhelm Bachaus in the regular concerts there next Thursday evening and Friday afternoon. Lazar Saminsky's "Symphony of the Summits" will have what is announced as its first American performance this afternoon, while a first New York hearing of Pick-Mangiagalli's "Sortilege," a symphonic poem for piano and orchestra, is announced for Thursday and Friday. Mr. Mengelberg will conduct a program of Wagner and Strauss numbers at Carnegie Hall next Sunday afternoon, the 25th. Including this one, the Philharmonic season has three more weeks to run, the last concert being at the Metropolitan Opera House on April 8.

There are still two concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra and one pair by the Boston Symphony to be heard during the present season.

BALTIMORE
MD.
EVENING SUN
MAR 15 1928

MUSIC

By J. O. L.

Boston Orchestra And Emma Calve.

The Boston Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting, appeared at the Lyric last evening after a twelve months' absence, the assisting artist being Emma Calve, the famous French contralto.

The Boston Orchestra is today, just as it was before the war, a perfect instrument, the tone of which is now characterized by a perfectly wonderful richness and mellowness. It is moreover, a peculiarly sensitive instrument that responds in a living and extremely subtle way to the finely spiritual and inherently eleavted moods of its present director, so that its performance throughout the evening was marked by the most exquisite dynamic variety, brilliance and richness. The extremely golden quality of the brass choir, which is so insistent but never obtrustive, the pure clarity of the wind instruments and the vibrant beauty of the strings are all things that combine to place this band in the very highest rank of orchestra organizations, so that from the point of view of pure musical efficiency and beauty the concert last evening must be regarded as one of the outstanding events of the winter.

It is surely a sad commentary on the musical understanding and appreciation of our Baltimore amateurs that so diminutive an audience assembled to hear this concert and that our own particular "golden horseshoe" of music lovers was entirely conspicuous by its absence.

was all the more surprising because of the supposed interest aroused by Mme. Calve's reappearance after an absence of so many years in the musical world.

As a matter of fact the concert last evening was one of the most beautiful that has been given here in recent years. The orchestra played first the lovely D minor symphony of Cesar Franck, a musical tapestry that has been woven with a peculiar richness of harmonic device, a work that, while somewhat sombre in intent, is, nevertheless, characterized by a fine exhaltation and stirring beauty. Of special interest, too, was the Loeffler tone poem, a work inspired by Maeterlinck's "Mort de Tintagiles," and in which the solo voice is the insinuating and rarely heard viole d'amour, an antique instrument that was beautifully played by Richard Burgin. Loeffler's work is a little lacking in the mystic quality that Debussy gives to his "translations" of "Maeterlinck, and it seems at times a little too attenuated in its rare modernity, but it is a fine musical expression of a spiritual mood, and it was exquisitely played. Mr. Monteux's men also gave a superb reading of the "Thannhaeuser" overture.

Mme. Calve received an ovation. A commanding figure, she sings with a superb dignity and with that wonderful artistry that has always marked her performances, giving the great "Divinities du Styx" aria of Gluck in the broad, expansive, classic manner that alone makes works of this type interesting. If her upper register has lost something of its brilliance, it has lost little, if anything, of its round purity of tone, and her middle voice is still quite glorious.

Her mezza voce is exquisite, her singing of the beautiful "In questa tomba oscura" song of Beethoven (which she substituted for the Handelaria), and which she gave in this vibrant half voice, was one of those entirely beautiful exhibitions that make particular concerts memorable. It was the kind of thing that makes one all the more eager to hear this great artist in recital, in which she should still be supreme.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 18 1928

Liszt's "Faust Symphony" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club, and H. T. P., in The Transcript, is vastly amused by the people who do not like it. "No performance of the 'Faust Symphony' will convert the unconvertible among those who hear. Of old, they defended themselves by saying that they yielded to Dr. Muck; but neither to Liszt nor to the music. Yesterday, of course, they were surer than ever of his and its demerits. Their grievance is easily discoverable and, at bottom, it is amusing. They cannot be content wth Liszt as he was; as in his music he remains; always they would have him something different—and that he could not be. Liszt was a romantic temperament; he lived and worked through a romantic period. Few romantics have taste—possibly an over-exalted quality; few abound in self criticism—a useful virtue in the practice of the arts. By very nature a romantic is not likely to be choice of expressive means."

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAR 18 1928

Hackett and Harvard Club Heard With Orchestra

Collaborate With Boston Musicians in Splendid Performance of 'Faust Symphony'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra continued its fourth pair of concerts of the season yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall with a program that contained nothing new, but which was one of unusual quality and interest none the less. Prefaced by Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 5 in D, its principal item was Liszt's "Faust Symphony," in which Arthur Hackett, tenor, and the Harvard Glee Club collaborated.

The concerto was given a performance of finish and vigorous beauty that rightly received warm commendation, but there was perhaps greater interest in the symphony, which, because it requires the assistance of chorus and soloist in its last movement, is more difficult of performance and is infrequently heard. It repays effort, however, for while it is not without some theatricality and overelaboration, it is one of the things in which Liszt, the composer of ideas and the ability to give them plastic expression, survives, while the Liszt of the showy pieces by which he is more commonly known in the concert rooms is to a degree outmoded.

Mr. Monteux gave it yesterday a performance of flowing beauty. The virtuosity of the orchestra's various choirs was continually made evident, but without loss of balance. In the closing section the choral singing blended into the orchestral fabric almost imperceptibly, and gave its rather theatrical finale a quality of serene beauty. To this effect Mr. Hackett's intelligent singing of the solo part also contributed much. The large audience present was properly enthusiastic.

Record Crowd Hears Boston Symphony in Attractive Programme

By GRENA BENNETT.

YESTERDAY afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall drew one of the largest audiences credited to the Hub band in several seasons. This might have been due to a particularly alluring programme or to the published rumor that the Bostonians may not visit New York next season.

Mr. Monteaux, with fine intelligence and understanding, directed his men through the gentle melodies of Haydn's Concerto Grosso, and after a brief pause presented Liszt's "Faust" Symphony, introducing Arthur Hackett, American tenor and the Harvard Glee Club in the charming final chorus.

N.Y. AMER. MAR. 18.

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY

The seventh concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, will take place on Thursday evening, March 22, at 8 o'clock. Beethoven, overture to "Coriolanus"; Glazounov, Symphony No. 4, E flat; Handel-Kogel, Concerto Grosso No. 5, D major; Ravel, Spanish Rhapsody. Mme. Ferrabini-Jacchia, soprano, will sing Leonora's aria from Godard's "Tasso," and "Ritorna Vincitor," from Verdi's "Aida."

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

At the 19th pair of Symphony concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the soloist will be Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra. He will play Beethoven's concerto. This will be preceded by Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolanus." Mr. Monteux will present two works hitherto unknown to Boston—Koechlin's "Three Chorales" and the Scherzo "Tam O'Shanter," by Eugene Goosens. The closing number will be Debussy's suite "Printemps."

MONDAY SYMPHONY

Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," will be the feature of the fourth Boston Symphony concert of the extra Monday evening series to be given on March 26 in Symphony hall. The soloist will be Mme. Esther Ferrabini-Jacchia, the soprano of operatic fame, who has appeared with much success as soloist with the orchestra. Mme. Jacchia will sing arias from Godard's "Tasso" and Verdi's "Aida." The celebrated "Scheherazade," based upon tales from the Arabian Nights, is looked upon as one of the most gorgeous, colorful and pictorial of modern Russian scores. It is replete with beautiful solo passages. Mr. Monteux will also present Bach's Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte arranged for strings by Bachrich, and a notable novelty, "Ballad of the Gnomides," by Respighi, the celebrated Italian composer, which will have its first performance in Boston.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
MAR 19 1928

Other Events.

John Powell, the talented pianist and composer, gave an all-Chopin program—augmented by a half-a-dozen encores—at Aeolian Hall Saturday afternoon. He has an agreeable touch, fluent mechanism, and he is always a serious musician. His interpretative powers were perhaps at their best in the Barcarolle and the B minor Sonata.

Albert Spalding, another sterling American artist, gave a violin recital at Carnegie Hall Sunday afternoon, giving pleasure to a large audience by his splendid playing of an attractive program, which included works of Mozart and Franck and a number of arrangements by himelf. Also, there were encores, to the number of seven. John Charles Thomas gave a song recital at Aeolian Hall, singing a varied program in his smooth and flowing style, beginning with a Handel aria and ending with a trashy song of Mana-Zucca. There was also a benefit concert by the New York Symphony Orchestra, which enlisted the services of Lucrezia Bori and Reinald Werrenrath.

Saturday afternoon Mr. Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a splendid performance of Liszt's greatest work, the "Faust" symphony.

W. H. HUMISTON.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 19

Bostonians Play Liszt

Had it not been for the second part of the Boston Symphony's Saturday afternoon concert, the present writer would have gone home before the middle of Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 5, which opened the concert. Handel wrote twelve grand concertos for strings between September 29 and October 30, 1739. He shook them out of his sleeves, and he would have been the most surprised ghost in the world if he could have assisted at the concert on Saturday afternoon, and have seen dozens of people standing waiting till the end of his concerto before they could be seated, twenty-five long minutes—almost as long as the composer took to write it—during which time it is safe to guess that these many standees heard little of what was going on in the orchestra. Like all other cyclical works of that day, these movements are simply separate beads, hung on one string, so there is no earthly reason why they could not be separated at least long enough to let people reach their seats. It is simply a ridiculous fad of some conductors to make no breaks.

Mercifully Mr. Monteux did not proceed in the same way with Liszt's glorious "Faust" symphony, although this is a coherent work in which the same ideas are used in different forms in all three movements. He and his orchestra gave an emotional performance of this work. To the Harvard Glee Club and the tenor Arthur Hackett fell the task of bringing it to its climax of emotional beauty, and they, as well as the orchestra, rose splendidly to the occasion. How thrilling is the contrast of this marvellous chorus with the preceding characterization of the spirit of evil and mockery! And they sang it with a feeling for its singular beauty, which has rarely been equalled in New York. So we forgave Monteux for his unreasonable attitude about Handel's concerto.

A. H. C. F.

BALTIMORE
MD.
EVENING SUN
MAR 20 1928

The THREE ARTS

Mrs. Matie Leitch-Jones To Give Recital In Associate Congregational Church — Schubert's Seventh Symphony—Plea Is Made For Restoring Boston Orchestra.

AND apropos of orchestras. Isn't it about time that some definite steps were taken to restore the Boston Orchestra to our musical season?

It must be evident to even the most casual listener that the Boston Orchestra is today, just as it was in the pre-war days of its more universally recognized glory, the most perfect instrument that is brought to Baltimore to "play before us."

The superb coordination that again marks its performance, the mellow richness of this instrument's tone, the golden softness of the brasses and the superb warmth of the strings are all features of this great organization that combine to place it on the very highest pinnacle of artistic achievement.

It gave a perfectly glorious concert here last week before empty benches, and it does seem too absurd that a mere twist of fortune's wheel, a mere quirk of fashion, has diverted great audiences to the other orchestras of the first class that visit Baltimore monthly, while the most distinguished group of players of all has to perform here in an empty hall!

ONCE upon a time an attempt was made to organize a group of enthusiasts here into the "Friends of Music," but nothing came of it. Were such an organization in existence today something might be done to arouse proper interest in Pierre Monteux's exquisite orchestra and to corral an audience for it.

But has not the time arrived to face facts and to put them before the public?

No orchestra, no matter how thrilling, that plays in Baltimore possesses quite the same fine qualities as those which distinguish the Boston Orchestra as it now obtains.

Why then are we overlooking it?

The Boston Orchestra must be made an integral part of Baltimore's music season and committees working to that end ought to be immediately formed, and the question of bringing it back here gone into from every angle. For in the final analysis it is only a question of money. The Boston Orchestra would doubtless come back here if we [illegible] worth its while to do so.

[illegible] might really dispense with [illegible] were the [illegible]

If we are to have visiting orchestras in Baltimore it is a pity not to have the best the country affords, and after hearing the Boston Orchestra last week it would indeed be difficult to "prove" that it isn't, after all, quite the best of all, so exquisitely and fluently did the men play and so rich and mellow was the tone they produced.

It is time that musical Baltimore awakened to the fact that it made a vicious error of judgment when it turned its back on the Boston Orchestra.

If it is not too late, something must be done to rectify this error.

J. O. L.

From SUN
Address New York City
Date MAR 19 1928

[81]

Week-End of Noveltles and Revivals, Opera and Concert

Memorable Giving of 'Faust' Symphony by Bostonians and Harvard Glee Club; Saminsky's 'Summit' Symphony.

The week end ran over with music and music news of interest and importance. The announcement of the forming of still another orchestra—the tenth to which New York is destined to listen regularly next season—lost its equilibrium on an avalanche of novelties like Saminsky's 'Summit' Symphony and revivals as historic as "Fidelio" and the "Faust" Symphony of Liszt.

Liszt being somewhat out of tune with the wise men, it is no small esthetic risk to give the prime ribs of attention to a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Harvard Glee Club of one of his rarer but greater works in Carnegie Hall so long ago as Saturday afternoon. Six years had passed, almost to the day, since the same orchestra, in the same place, with the aid of the same soloist, gave us the last previous performance of the "Faust" symphony. Memory had marked that other down as one of the most glowing of a short career as listener, one of the feasts preceding the lean years.

Many musicians have wrestled with the Faustus legend—Hiller, Rubinstein, Schumann, Spohr, Zoellner, down to and beyond Coleridge-Taylor's accompaniments to the Stephen Phillips version—and failed to make it captive. Wagner's overture, Berlioz's "Damnation" tell the tale occasionally in their own fashion, which certainly was not Goethe's. Grant that Liszt's symphony is long and tinged with theatricality. It certainly puts the legend to no such trivial uses as Gounod's opera does. It is certainly more fluent, keen, poetic than Boito's austere oratorio in tights.

But Liszt's conception—particularly his plan of three movements devoted separately to "Faust," "Gretchen" and "Mephistopheles"—is said to have come not so much from Goethe as from the more immediate suggestion of his friend Ary Scheffer's paintings. Mr. Philip Hale in his present program notes is only partly right in believing that Scheffer did not portray Mephistopheles. Heinrich Heine, reviewing the salon of 1831, fell upon Scheffer's paintings at rhapsodic length. He is describing the "Faust": "In the background, scarcely visible, and of a repellent green, the head of Mephistopheles is recognizable, the wicked spirit, the father of lies, the Evil One, the God of the green soap."

Liszt himself does no more than this, nor less, with Mephistopheles: Takes the themes of the "Faust" and "Gretchen" and spits upon the heroism, tenderness, humanity of them in great green, derisive jets. He is the mocker of the background, doomed to leer eternally behind his own dupes' portraits. Only a conjecture, necessarily, but might not this very trick of Scheffer's on the devil have helped to be responsible for Liszt's applying the same ruse?

The "Faust" movement is a gorgeous piece of writing, those who quarrel with its size must admit. It is prodigal of descriptiveness, but it does describe its man as not even a "Don Juan" can. And a far more difficult man to describe, besides—"a beautiful human ruin," says Scheffer via Heine; "in the furrow over these weather beaten eyebrows brood owls learned in mystic lore and behind that forehead lurk wicked ghosts; at midnight the graves of dead desires reopen, pale shadows throng therefrom and through the desolate cells of the brain glides Marguerite in disarray."

As for the particular performance of the symphony yesterday, it was brave, with affecting virtues, tonal and dramatic. In the "Gretchen" movement the colors of the playing attained a lyric delicacy which proved again the quality of every instrument involved; and the shrieking travestry of the "Mephistopheles" brought burning sulphur to the nostrils.

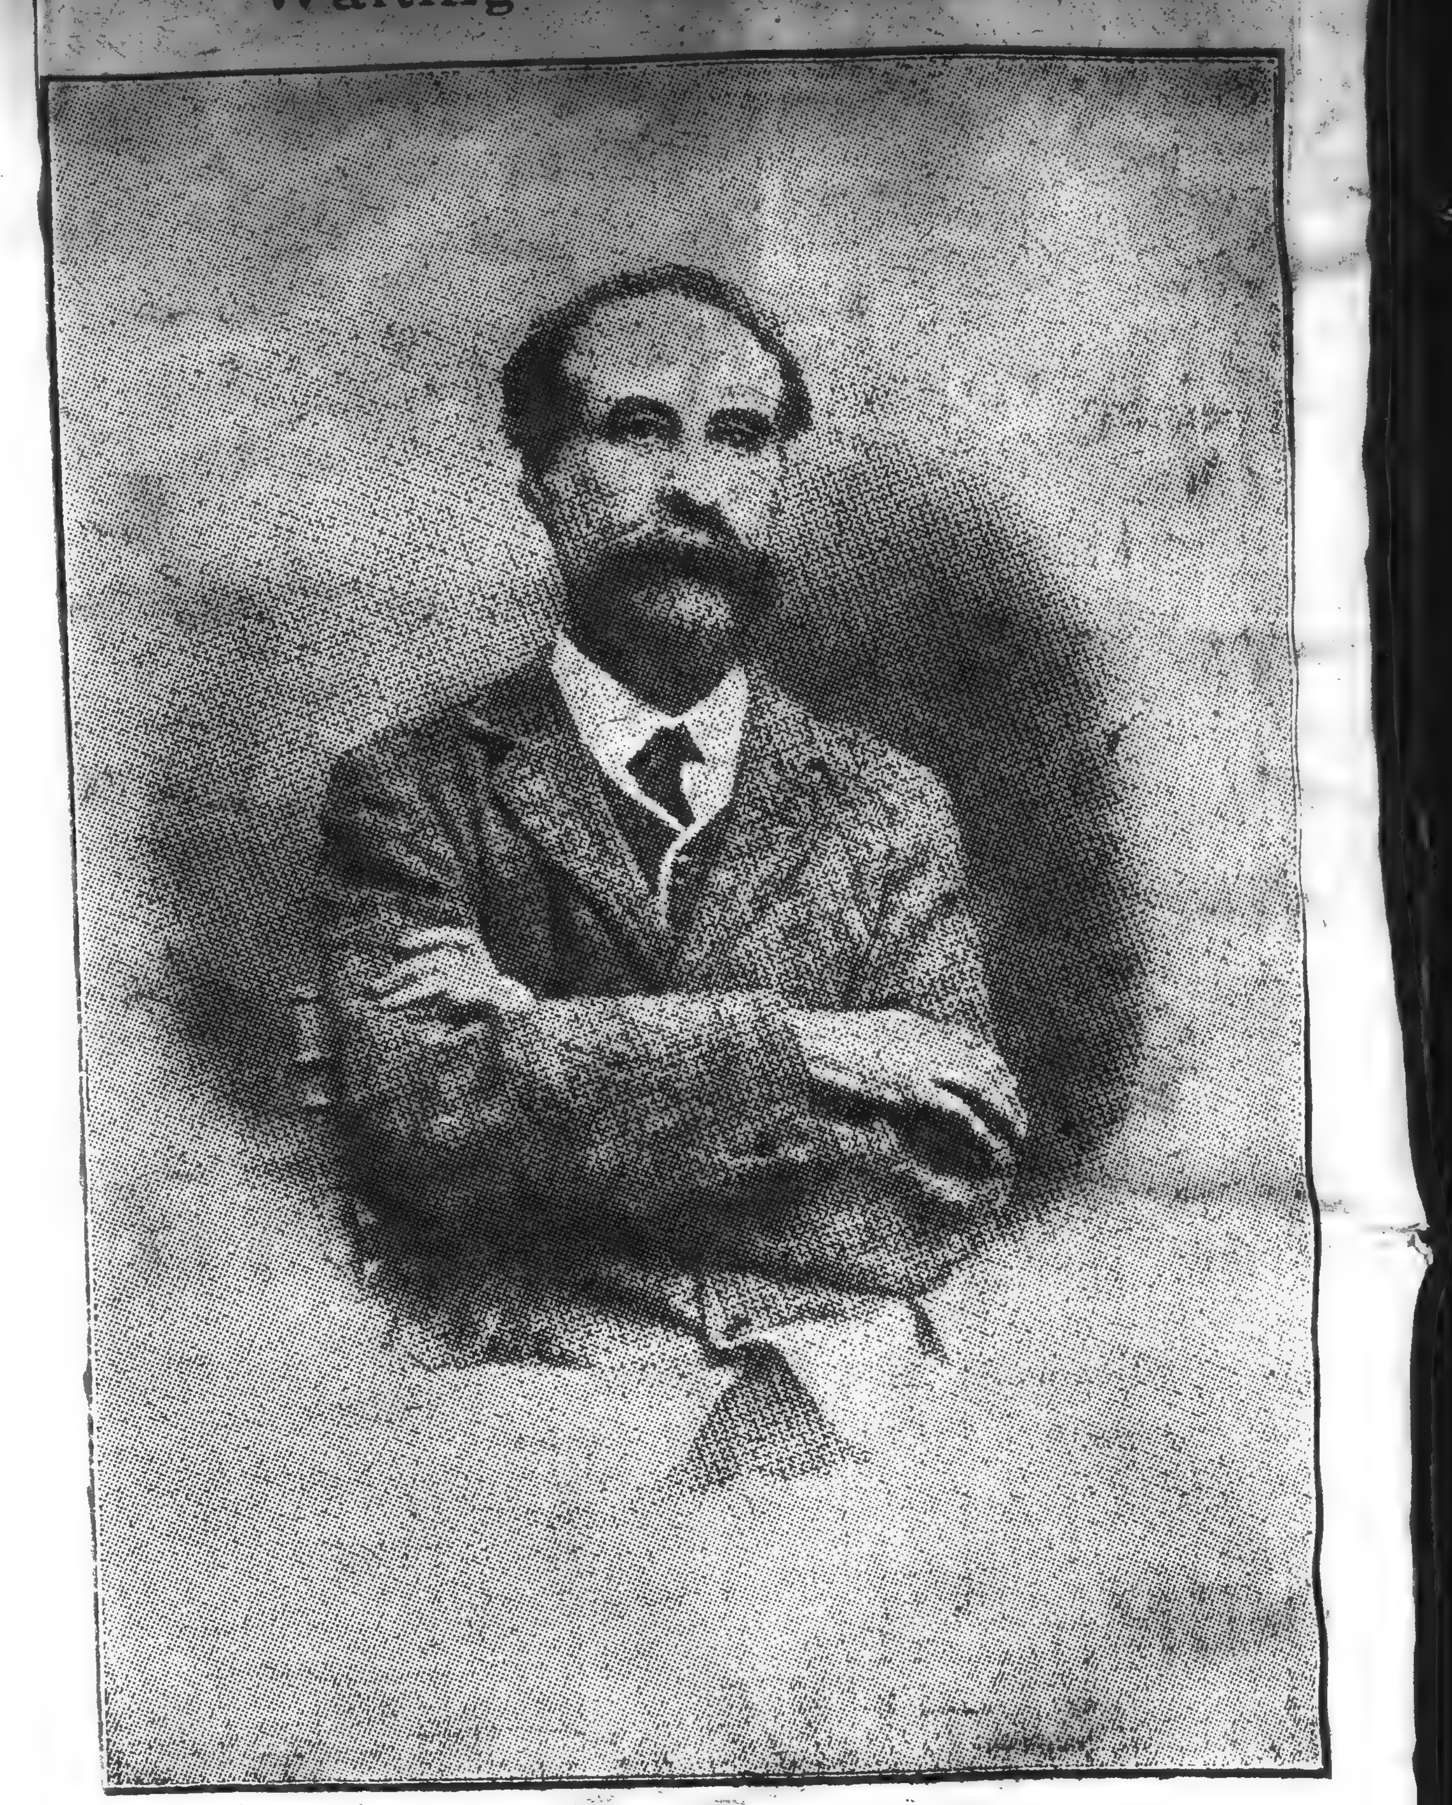
To Mr. Arthur Hackett fell the solo pronouncement on "Das ewig Weibliche," which he sang in that same style and with as radiant a voice as he used upon it half a dozen years ago. He and the Harvard Glee Club chorus, in their excellently practiced benedictory passages, contributed largely to the success of Mr. Monteux's afternoon. The soloist, the conductor and Mr. Davison, the leader of the glee club, were singled out for much of the final applause.

LITTLE KNOWN KOECHLIN

ROOM FOR A NEGLECTED FRENCH COMPOSER

His Chorales for the Symphony Concerts Tomorrow—The Many Sides of a Matured Musician, Harking Back to Bach, Keeping Touch With Faure—Enter Also Eugene Goossens

Waiting---and Watchful



Charles Koechlin

French Composer, Newcomer to the Symphony Concerts

THE reason why some composers get their music performed, published and noticed forthwith, whereas others work for many years without recognition of any kind, is unfathomable." Thus Mr. Calvocoressi, writing in The Musical Times of the music of Charles Koechlin, a composer now well in middle life, to whom has come but lately the recognition long deserved. Several years ago, to be sure, one aspect of Koechlin's music became known through the publication of his "Rondels" to poems of Théodore de Banville—charming songs, written with a certain mastery, but slight in content, lacking in distinctiveness, Perhaps the most striking of these pieces is "L'Hiver," easily identified by the curious glissandi in the accompaniment and frequently heard in concert-halls. Koechlin, however, has written much besides these little songs, though as yet not many musicians or writers on music seem to be aware either of the extent or of the significance of his contribution to the music of present France.

From the latest accessible information the published compositions of Koechlin may be summarized as follows: Three sets of "Rondels"; three books of songs; five Sonatinas for piano; twelve "Landscapes and Marines," likewise for piano; ten piano-pieces for children and a Sonata for flute and piano. In preparation, if not already issued, are a fourth set of songs and "L'Abbaye," a piece of large dimensions for chorus and orchestra. Truly formidable is the list of Koechlin's unpublished compositions. Here are to be found symphonic poems—"En Mer, la Nuit," "Nuit de Walpurgis Classique," "Vers la Plage Lointaine" and "Soleil et Danses dans la Foret"; symphonic suites—"La Foret," two "Etudes Antiques" and "Les Saisons"; a Ballad for Piano and Orchestra; three Chorales for Organ and Orchestra; three Chorales for Orchestra "without organ," much chamber-music; many songs and piano-pieces; and for the stage choreographic poems—"Danses Antiques," "Suite Légendaire," and a Biblical pastoral, "Jacob chez Laban." Enumerating these items in a review of the Sonatinas and "Landscapes and Marines" printed in the Parisian newspaper, Le Temps, of Jan. 14, 1921, Monsieur Vuillermoz characterizes the whole as a "evritable library of manuscripts, disconcerting in importance and variety."

Beyond a suggestion that Koechlin does not haunt the anterooms of publishers, Monsieur Vuillermoz gives no reasons why so much of this music has remained unprinted. By many signs, however, there is now a spreading interest in Koechlin and perhaps the next few years may see the bulk of his work not only brought to performance, but honored with publication.

Classic and Modern

Only at second hand may the qualities of Koechlin's more characteristic music be here discussed. But as set forth in the two articles to which reference has been made, and in sundry short notices appearing from time to time in other French publications, these qualities seem in general to be those of his master, Fauré. Although when occasion demands he does not hesitate to avail himself of the resources of contemporary music—polytony, absence of bar-lines, omission of time-signatures, and the like—Koechlin is yet fundamentally a classicist. A devout student of Bach, he is, according to Monsieur Vuillermoz, the restorer of counterpoint in our own day: "His theory of 'passing notes' should constitute the basis of official teaching of fugue. His ideal is the logical continuation of that of Bach, a return to the forgotten great tradition of 'polymelody' as exemplified by the Cantor, after too long a period of dryly academic pastimes, of puzzles and musical acrostics, shorn of every characteristic of art." And of Koechlin's harmony Monsieur Vuillermoz adds: "This theorist does not seek to discredit the delicious harmonic style of a Fauré, a Debussy or a Ravel, as is to often the case with the contrapuntal specialists. He himself does not hesitate to use, beside chords formed of superimposed thirds, those harmonic aggregations, so rich and so troubling, that are obtained by the superimposing of fourths or of fifths. No one has gone so far as he along this path, but no one has made more judicious or more reasoned use of these neologisms."

Koechlin was, again according to Monsieur Vuillermoz, among the forerunners of the writers of polytony, but he has always used it from a sense of sheer artistic necessity, never as a "vehicle for publicity." When he has need "of the vocabulary of the eighteenth century, he makes use of it; when he feels the need for that of the twentieth he employs it with the same ease, but he does not believe it necessary to announce that he is about to execute an incredible 'four de force,' as do certain of the adolescents of today. . . ." As example of Koechlin's discerning use of this now abused device Monsieur Vuillermoz instances his "Song of the Goatherd":

> When he accompanies his "Chant du Chevrier" with harmonies drawn from a tonality far removed from that of the melody, he does it, not with the puerile objective of astonishing us, but with the scrupulousness of the artist. He is led to its use by the exigencies of perspective. To convey a feeling of distance he could not put the arabesque of the goatherd in tones allied to those that depict the landscape; he must needs dissociate the harmonic planes to gain the effect of depth, to make his character pass in the distance, at the very back of the stage. Make an experiment, and try over the melody in the main tonality: you will see that all the relief disappears and that the balance is destroyed. You thus becomet aware that polytony is not always a vain diversion of irreverent students but may be, on the contrary, a precious resource in the hands of an inspired composer.

Rhythmically, too, Koechlin goes his own way, but again never through mere perversity or simply with the desire to appear at any cost, free and untrammelled: "Th first Sonatina will bring revelation. Listen to the Allegro, in which is unrolled, on a chain of thirds, a melody impregnated with the memories of popular rondels. There i no exact quotation, but an atmosphere, a childish dance so amazingly light and free that the arabesque has burst the bound of measure-bars. The phrase is so elas tic, so agile, so resilient . . . that i may not be enclosed within a symmetrica lattice-work. In that long phrase of forty four notes you will find no occasion t place a strong or a weak accent. Th melody, swollen with sap, bursts forth i a single jet, like a blossoming branch whic does not concern itself with knowing whether the sum of leaves and petals is divisable by three or by four." Again: "Take, too, the extraordinary 'Poëme Virgilien' . . . There is an Adagio of three pages in which the melody unfolds with such fullness and such suppleness that its steps are never retraced, but instead it creates for itself, even to the last note, new curves and new inflections. No symmetry, and yet perfect unity. It is like a well-composed landscape, in which the trees need no artificial harmony of the quinconx to give the impression of fine balance."

For all his breadth of scholarship and the complexity of much of his music, in his Sonatinas Koechlin has accomplished a veritable "tour de force" in his depiction of the true and essential spirit of childhood. Here he has "drunk for a moment at the Fountain of Youth, forgotten the beauty, the ugliness and the tragedy of life," to return to that age in which childhood "frolics, carefree, on the threshold of its unseen destiny":

> The themes which pass, smiling, through these charming pages are those which children sing to themselves when they believe that they are unobserved. Charles Koechlin could have heard them had he hidden in a garden filled with birds and tiny children, but he might easily find them within himself. . . . No work could paint more exactly that curious face of the austere and affectionate scholar, that anchorite with the rough gray beard and the tender eyes, that severe philosopher with a gentle and modulated voice.

Essayist Too

In addition to his writing of music, Koechlin has written much concerning the music of others. Recent issues of "La Revue Musicale" have contained stimulating and informative articles from his pen, on the "Case of Berlioz"—a discussion as rational as it is discerning; on Paul Dupin—warm tribute to a neglected talent; and on the stage-pieces of Fauré. In the last appears some discussion of absolute versus dramatic music, of which a part is worthy of quotation as throwing light on Koechlin's own theories of his art:

> I know well that it is said [of Fauré's "Penelope"] "that is very beautiful music, no doubt, but it is not of the theatre." It is not of the theatre! . . . the eternal reproach which masterpieces must endure. . . .
>
> How shall music of the theatre be defined? . . . Is it necessary to have great processions, many characters on the stage, ceaseless activity . . . sword-thrusts, poisonings, fusillades? On the contrary, in the realm of music, which should be above all else the expression of emotions, is it not a matter of the inner life of the personages, of the thousand conflicts of the heart? . . . It is that which is true human drama. . . . And it is one of the glories of our modern lyric theatre to have proved ipso facto the correctness of this conception of drama, which was that of Monteverdi, of Mozart, of Gluck, of Wagner and of all the great masters. One happy day, let us say it clearly, there will be no longer two musics, one of the symphony and the other of the theatre. There will be simply music. If it lives, it is because it is expressive; and living it animates the scene. In turn, in spite of the most ingenious libretto, no matter how beautiful the poem, any lyric piece will remain cold . . . if the music does not infuse it with the breath of life. That alone gives movement, emotion, beauty: it is by that alone that a work is truly dramatic.

In the same article comes this passage, giving clew to Koechlin's attitude towards the newest aspects of French music: "Note, too, that these youngsters, imitating the Russian Five and some modern Spaniards, wish to be of their own country. . . . But their nationalism has in it something a trifle superficial, factitious, . . . in the love for fêtes and dancing. They, to seek the truth, . . . which is laudable; but . . . truth may be expressed in other ways than through the exterior aspect and agitation of the boulevard. Within the home are emotions that would never be suspected through watching the spectacle of the marketplace." Yet he says also: "Why not believe in the sincerity of these 'enfants terribles,' whose turbulence appears so far removed from the serenity of a Fauré? For it exists, and one may not say that they have not begun to give proof of it in their art, these youngsters 'scarcely out of their infancy.'"

Exempli Gratia

Surely here is matter to whet interest in Koechlin's three Chorales for Orchestra which Mr. Monteux has placed on the programme of the Symphony Concerts of tomorrow and Saturday. Naturally enough these pieces do not contain the whole of Koechlin—they may not represent him as "Till Eulenspiegel," for example, might represent Strauss or "The Afternoon of a Faun" might represent Debussy. But they will serve to disclose certain of his typical procedures, and they are rigorously contrapuntal. In them is to be heard Koechlin, the disciple of Bach. The first Chorale, taken from the second part of "L'Abbaye," is scored for wind-instruments alone—two bassoons and a contra-bassoon, four horns, three trumpets, three trombones and tuba. The second enlists the normal orchestral forces, with the omission of trumpets and trombones. Here the strings are muted, save for three solo-violas which bear a prominent part in the musical scheme. Drawn from the Finale of "The Seasons," the third Chorale is scored for full orchestra, but without harp and with kettle-drums as the only instruments of percussion. In form [illegible] i mod [illegible] of the [illegible] beloved of Bach and generally neglected since his time. They are freely made, with numerous changes of tempo in each piece. . . . Quite decidedly they may be accounted "serious" music.

Goossens Also

Besides Koechlin, Eugene Goossens of the younger Englishmen, will be heard for the first time at the Symphony Concerts—through his Scherzo, "Tam o' Shanter." But if Koechlin's music is deliberately severe, Goossens's is frankly light. Based on the familiar poem of Burns, this "Tam o' Shanter" has been thus succinctly described by Edwin Evans:

> The Scherzo, "Tam o' Shanter," which was introduced at a Hallé Concert at Manchester in the autumn of 1917, was a brilliant and exhilarating piece of work, which had only the one fault of over-elaboration in the development and in the scoring. It was recently played at a Philharmonic Concert in London in a considerably condensed version, which is to be its definite form. Goossens seems to have realized meanwhile that brevity—at all times a valuable quality—is indispensable to a good joke. . . . In his treatment of the subject he has been compared to Dukas, but the resemblance is a very superficial one; for the French composer in the "Sorcerer's Apprentice" combines an exquiste sense of humor with a grave sense of responsibility toward his musical material, whereas Gooseens indulges in fun of a more rollicking kind.

It may be added for the encouragement of those to whom "ultra-modern" music is disconcerting, if not actually annoying, that neither of the two novel scores now imminent is of the "extremist" type. No ears will be wracked as were some by the Second Suite of Milhaud and as were more by Hommegger's "Horatius." Yet neither the Chorales nor the "Tam o'Shanter" are for the heedless, the easy-going or the complacent. Both composers exact of their hearers a willingness to meet them half way.

W. S. S.

TRANS. MAR. 22

As wine maketh glad the heart of man, so do the wooden walls of Sanders Theatre rejoice an orchestra playing within them. In no other auditorium do Mr. Monteux and his band compass such sonority and incisiveness of tone, clarity of phrase and period, graphic play of rhythm, modulation and color. On grounds of pleasure, even of excitement, it is possible to wish that all the concerts of the Symphony Orchestra hereabouts befell in Cambridge. For there and only there do space and acoustics permit orchestra and audience to be intimately and stimulatingly at one. Conductor and band react to their environment; hearers reach to them; and through two hours high tension (as the electricians say) pervades the concert-room. Familiar music sounds with heightened vigor; inert music gains the passing life of a vitalizing performance; the virtues of leader, orchestra, assisting artist ring warm and clear. Too often the listener at Symphony Hall is only present at a concert. Willy-nilly in Sanders Theatre he shares in it.

Once more, last evening, music, players and hearers so profited and, as it seemed, even beyond the usual. Heard not long ago in Boston, Glazunov's Fourth Symphony seemed a barren, cluttered, repetitious music hard in these days to endure. Played at Cambridge, it still ploughed plentifully a sea of counterpoint and trod lengthily the waters of merely mechanical modulation. Yet in the luminous resonance of Sanders Theatre and in the tone to which it stirred the orchestra, Glazunov's "slow introductions" glowed into works of imagination; while his Scherzo sounded animated feat of fanciful matter and fertilizing skill. In lightness of rhythm and brightness of color, in zest of pace, in mutual exhilaration upon music and audience, the orchestra outdid itself. Similarly fared Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody," nearly escaping for once the familiar reproach of "cerebral patchwork." The "Prelude à la Nuit" became as stillness slithering into sound like the scarves and streamers of dawn upon the sky. The dissonances at the beginning of the Habanera pierced beyond even Ravel's loving expectation; chord smote chord and rhythm snapped upon rhythm through the Malaguena; while keen-edged as well as tumultuous went the music of the Fair. The concert-room animated the orchestra; the orchestra animated the music; a delectable dryness in the Rhapsody became as the dryness of biting wintry air.

Less aid from circumstance needed Beethoven's Overture, "Coriolanus" or Handel's Concerto String Choir. The Overture, with clear play of contrasting themes in opposing progress, invited both the sonorities of the orchestra and Mr. Monteux"s dramatizing instinct; while the Concerto sounded as in Symphony Hall, a fortnight ago, it could not sound. There it went remote and in measure blank and lifeless; whereas played "in the wood," as it were, every strand ran clear and vibrant, every figure had its passing moment, every transition bit; every variation of the mated or parted voices tingled. The pattern was alive; the tones that drew it were alive; alongside of Handel and the choir sat the audience basking. And that choir knew—and avoided—the peril that is often the price of pleasure. In a single breath and at every turn it held both plastic and precise, both unified and diverse. As full of zest, finally, is Sanders Theatre to the singer. Last evening she was Mme. [illegible] Jacchia of the wine-dark tones, of the operatic impulse irresistible. Even it, however, could not much propel the sticky nougat of an air from Godard's "Tasso," made in the Parisian candy-kitchen of the eighties. The soliloquy of Aida, tortured between loving loyalties, poulticing ironic fate with prayerful entreaty, was another music. Verdi kindled the flame; Mme. Jacchia heated it; not a dowager of Cambridge—to record a miracle—went unburnt.

H. T. P.

In clear departure from his usual custom Mr. Monteux has placed on the programme of a Symphony Concert in the "extra series"—that which takes place next Monday—a piece unknown to Boston. In [illegible] playing Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomes" he notably furthers our acquaintance with the new Italian school of symphonic composers. Hitherto Respighi has been heard in Boston, only through his orchestral suite, "The Fountains of Rome," his orchestral transcriptions of sundry airs and dances from the sixteenth century, the pages for voice and string-quartet sung by Mme. Gauthier at a concert of the Boston Musical Association, and a scattering of songs and piano-pieces.

Of, the four chief spokesmen of the doughty band who are restoring the music of Italy to ancient prestige, two—Casella and Malipiero—may be labelled "futurists," and two—Respighi and Pizzetti—are composers of a more conservative type. In the forthcoming "Ballad of the Gnomes," however, Respighi plunges far deeper into the tangled underbrush of modern dissonance than in any of the music by which hereabouts he is already known. And a reading of the appended poem by Carlo Clausetti, which serves as programme for the piece, makes plain the necessity for the drastic effects that dot the pages of a notably brilliant score:

> Dragging the raving gnome, the women go, abandoning their flimsy draperies to the wind. . . .
>
> The diminutive man gambols between those, his two brides, whom a single nuptial bed awaits.
>
> Oh! gnomides, let the race be brief, lest he weary fall when falls the Bear! . . .
>
> No torch was lighted at the distorted nuptials, but without hordes of gnomes were waiting, eager for the prey.
>
> And in the thick night a sharp cry resounded, so painful as to rout the darkness. Then silence. The new dawn was breaking; the mad wives drew their vain booty from the alcove
>
> And fled with it, followed by the cunning throng of manlings thickly swarming about
>
> And muttering prayers worthy only of the anathemas to be heard, in blaspheming jargon, in the depths infernal.
>
> By a rough path, they reached a broad hill whose sharp ridge overlooked a sea of blue.
>
> In a twinkling the filthy husband was downward hurled and the rite thus ended.
>
> Now on the summit of the hill, after their sleepless night, the two women dance in the morning breeze.
>
> And, while the day is breaking, the tiny people join in the dance of the cruel widows.
>
> One shrieks, another mocks, still another bites or laughs aloud; a wild frenzy possesses them all, as in a sabbath.

We have come to expect of these new Italians a rare degree of skill in the handling of the orchestra. In "The Fountains of Rome" Respighi revealed himself a colorist of the first order, and in "The Ballad of the Gnomes" he again mixes new tints on his tonal palette, although here, as befits the subject, he has found sharper and shriller hues. From four trumpets, playing in their highest register, he draws forth blood-curdling screams, stringed instruments are smitten with the wood of the bow, and a cymbal is struck with a bar of iron—in short, here may be found the whole armory of orchestral horrors. Yet, because Respighi is the composer that he is, he has contrived to make for all this a background of pure music. Safe within the border-line that divides art from perverse extravagance does he hold himself.

W. S. S.

TRANS. MAR 23.

SUN

ss New York City

MAR 24 1923

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will close its present New York season with concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, April 5 and 7. Pablo Casals will appear as soloist at the Thursday concert and at the Saturday concert Pierre Monteux will introduce a novelty by Respighi, the Ballad of the Gnomides.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 24 1923

Closing Boston Symphony Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will close its present New York season with concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, April 5 and 7.

Pablo Casals will appear as soloist at the Thursday concert, and at the Saturday concert Pierre Monteux will introduce a novelty by Respighi—the "Ballad of the Gnomides."

The remaining numbers for the evening concert will include Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Debussy's Suite "Printemps," Wagner's overture to "Rienzi." Casals will be heard in Schumann's concerto. For the Saturday concert Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and a suite from Gretry.

FROM MAR 24 1923
EVENING JOURNAL,
New York City

[illegible] thetique."

At the next visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening April 5, Pierre Monteux will play Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Debussy's "Printemps," Wagner's 'Rienzi" o erture and Pablo Casals will be the soloist in the Schumann concerto for violincello. The following Saturday afternoon's programme will consist of Beethoven's 'Eroica" symphony, Debussy's 'L'apres-midi d'un faune' [illegible] suite of Gretry's [illegible]

[illegible]URGIN WIT[illegible]

By ZOE FABER.

Symphony subscribers had reason to be proud of their concert master yesterday afternoon when Richard Burgin stepped on the stage to fill the place of soloist with the orchestra under Mr. Monteux.

Richard Burgin.

He played the Beethoven Concerto in D major for violin, and he played it so well that the audience recalled him six or seven times. He is an interesting violinist.

If his octave were not always absolutely true, there were so many other splendid things that he brought into play that they more than made up for this discrepancy. His fellow members of the orchestra were as unstinted in their appreciation of his work as the audience.

Two "First Time in America" numbers were on this, the nineteenth program; the Koechlin Three Chorales and the Goosens "Tam O'Shanter." The Chorales by the French composer proved unusually interesting and beautiful with most of the brass holding forth nobly in two of the three.

The "Tam O'Shanter" was delightful. It is bizarre, full of supernatural speed and filled with crowds of ghastly, ghostly figures riding on each other's heels. It was played right up to the hilt.

The Beethoven Overture to Coriolanus opened the program and the Debussy Orchestral Suite "Printemps" closed it. The weather suited itself to Mr. Monteux's closing number exactly.

AMER. MAR. 24.

WALTER TO CONDUCT

The European conductor, Bruno Walter, who is making his first visit to America, will appear as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next regular pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 30 and 31.

The program will include Weber's Overture to "Euryanthe," Mozart's Symphony in D major, opus No. 385, and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." As the soloist, Artur Schnabel, will appear in Beethoven's Fourth pianoforte concerto in G major.

AMER. MAR 24

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES 19TH CONCERT

Orchestra Has Richard Burgin, Concertmaster, for Soloist

By PHILIP HALE

The 19th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Richard Burgin, the concertmaster, was the soloist. The program was as follows: Beethoven, Overture to "Coriolanus" and Concerto for Violin; Koechlin, Three Chorales; Goossens, Sherzo, "Tam O'Shanter"; Debussy, "Printemps," Orchestral Suite.

Surely the overture to Collin's tragedy "Coriolanus" must be reckoned among Beethoven's greatest works. It matters not whether he wrote it with Collin or with Shakespeare in mind, there was Plutarch, who had sufficiently portrayed the stern and noble Roman. The music is Roman in its pride; its force, with the appeal of the Roman matron urging patriotism first of all to turn the son from his fell purpose. Compare for a moment the modern Honegger's treatment of a Roman subject, the fight between the Horatii and the Curiatii, with Beethoven's; the one with his swollen orchestra; the other not even employing trombones; the one diffuse in portrayal, the other with few strokes as short as the conquering Roman sword. Note the simplicity in the overture of the final wail, again Roman in its brevity and simplicity. Thus Beethoven, whose spirit was not unlike that of Corilanus, is Roman, as Gluck in his overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis" is Greek.

The "Coriolanus" overture is a greater work than the concerto that followed it. Not that one should object to the stately introduction that announces the coming of the virtuoso; we like the pomp and ceremony of these old-fashioned introductions; but there vie endless repetitions in the first movement that fritter away the general effect. The second movement is, indeed, beautiful, but the chief theme of the finale is Beethoven at his worst. Invented by another, it would be called vulgar, or what is even more damning, common. Mr. Burgin gave an admirable performance; musical, tasteful, euphonious, brilliant. The cadenzas—the first too long, perhaps too elaborate—were by Leopold Auer.

Charles Koechlin is known here chiefly, if not solely, by some charming songs, but he has written much for orchestra and chamber. The first Chorale—the three were performed for the first time in this country—of a solemn, impressive nature, served to display the efficiency of the brass choir and the bassoons. The second, which at times is Parsifalian in mood, has more obvious beauty. The third, for full orchestra, is of a rich nature. They are interesting to musicians rather than to the general public. Yesterday they were favorably received, although they have not the elements of immediate popularity.

We believe that Goossens's "Tam O'Shanter" was also played for the first time in this country. It was composed six years ago, and may be said to be in Goossens's earlier manner. At the beginning, rhythm and the figure for the bassoons lead one to think that "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" served the Londoner as a model, but Dukas is quickly forgotten. The Scherzo is short, apparently designed to picture only Tam's wild ride. There is little or no treatment of the details in the ballad; no church scene intended to reproduce the horrors seen by Tam or the delirious dance of "Cutty-sark." The scherzo

Though the composer of "The Eternal Rhythm" and the Sinfonitta may look upon it only as a diversion of his youth—possibly an early sin. It was played with the requisite vigor and dash.

When Debussy sent on his "Printemps" from Rome in 1887—it was written originally for orchestra, piano and chorus (without words)—the judges in Paris pronounced it too modern and shapeless. It would be interesting to compare the original with the orchestral version published in 1913 and played yesterday. The first section is the exquisite Debussyian manner and it was beautifully played. Here we have the freshness, the longings and the languors of spring. In the second section the composer in his joy and his hot blood dances to a tune—yes, a tune, not a melody—that would rejoice the frequenters of cabarets and the applauders of comic opera. It's all very gay and heel-inciting, but it is not easy to recognize Debussy.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Bruno Walter, recently of Munich, will conduct the concerts next week, by invitation of the trustees. The program will be as follows: Weber, Overture to "Euryanthe"; Mozart, Symphony in D major (K. 385); Beethoven, Concerto for piano, G major, No. 4 (Arthur Schnabel, pianist); Straus, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks."

HERALD-MAR. 24.

BRUNO WALTER TO CONDUCT

The celebrated European conductor, Bruno Walter, who is making his first visit to America, will appear as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony orchestra at the next regular pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 30 and 31.

The program will include Weber's Overture to "Euryanthe," Mozart's Symphony in D major, opus No. 385, and Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." As the soloist, Arthur Schnabel will appear in Beethoven's Fourth pianoforte Concerto in G major.

A native of Berlin, Bruno Walter was prominent for many seasons presiding over the opera houses of Hamburg, Breslau and other cities.

TRAV. MAR. 24

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
CITIZEN
ISSUE OF
MAR 25 1923

CASALS SOLOIST, WITH BOSTON ORCHESTRA

With Pablo Casals as soloist, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its last concert in Brooklyn this season in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, April 6.

The principal number on the program will be Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" Symphony No. 6. It has often been remarked that no other single musical work, nor, indeed, any artistic creation, voices the temperament and emotional characteristics of a great people as does this. The haunting quality of Tchaikovsky's melodies in this score, the charm of the movement in the rhythm of five beats, the "march" movement, in which ephemeral pomp sinks into dissolution, and the last movement, a penetrating lamen which probes into the lowest debts of the tonal register—these qualities make the "Pathetic" Symphony unique in the whole record of musical achievement.

Pablo Casals, who is looked upon as perhaps the finest master of the violoncello that has ever lived, will appear with the orchestra in the concerto for that instrument by Schumann.

Ottorino Respighi, the Italian composer who is attracting increased attention in the musical world, will be represented by a work which Pierre Monteux is introducing to our Eastern cities, namely, the Ballad of the Gnomides, a descriptive piece written in fantastic fashion for enlarged orchestra.

The closing number will be "Wag[illegible]

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 25 1923

An anonymous giver has made it possible for the new Providence Music League to offer a series of three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to residents of that Rhode Island city at 40 cents for the series, or 13 cents per concert. If the experiment proves successful the league will attempt to bring about the endowment of a foundation to make possible the indefinite continuation of the undertaking. The tickets are being distributed to officials of factories, mills and stores for sale to their employes and to social service groups. Every effort is being made to see to it that tickets for the concerts go only to those who would be unable to afford tickets if the usual concert rates were charged. At the inaugural concert of the series every seat in the Albee Theatre was filled and many were turned away.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
MAR 25 1923

Pablo Casals will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the last Thursday evening concert of the season, to be given in Carnegie Hall April 5. A novelty to be performed at the Saturday matinee concert will be Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides." The remainder of the Thursday program will include Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Debussy's suite "Printemps," Wagner's overture to "Rienzi"; Casals to play in Schumann's concerto. For the Saturday concert, Beethoven's "Eroica' symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and a suite from Gretry.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
MAR 25 1923

The closing concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, April 6, at which Pablo Casals, who is universally considered the greatest living master of the violoncello, will appear as soloist.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 25 1923

April 24.

The powers that be in the Boston Symphony Orchestra have departed for the first time from the policy that has prevailed for forty-two years, since the orchestra was founded, and have invited a conductor to conduct the orchestra who is not a composer conducting his own works. This is Bruno Walter, who will conduct on March 30 and 31.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 25 1923

Casals to Aid Bostonians.

Pablo Casals will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its final Thursday evening concert in Carnegie Hall on April 5. A novelty at the Saturday matinee, April 7, will be Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides."

The Thursday program will include Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Debussy's "Printemps," Wagner's overture to "Rienzi" and Schumann's 'cello concerto, played by Casals.

For the Saturday concert Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony is chosen, with Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and [illegible] from Gretry.

these [illegible] but a modernizing of the "figured chorale" beloved of Bach and generally neglected since his time. They are freely made, with numerous changes of tempo in each piece. . . . Quite decidedly they may be accounted "serious" music.

Goossens Also

Besides Koechlin, Eugene Goossens of the younger Englishmen, will be heard for the first time at the Symphony Concerts—through his Scherzo, "Tam o' Shanter." But if Koechlin's music is deliberately severe, Goossens's is frankly light. Based on the familiar poem of Burns, this "Tam o' Shanter" has been thus succinctly described by Edwin Evans:

> The Scherzo, "Tam o' Shanter," which was introduced at a Hallé Concert at Manchester in the autumn of 1917, was a brilliant and exhilarating piece of work, which had only the one fault of over-elaboration in the development and in the scoring. It was recently played at a Philharmonic Concert in London in a considerably condensed version, which is to be its definite form. Goossens seems to have realized meanwhile that brevity—at all times a valuable quality—is indispensable to a good joke. . . . In his treatment of the subject he has been compared to Dukas, but the resemblance is a very superficial one; for the French composer in the "Sorcerer's Apprentice" combines an exquiste sense of humor with a grave sense of responsibility toward his musical material, whereas Gooseens indulges in fun of a more rollicking kind.

It may be added for the encouragement of thore to whom "ultra-modern" music is disconcerting, if not actually annoying, that neither of the two novel scores now imminent is of the "extremist" type. No ears will be wracked as were some by the Second Suite of Milhaud and as were more by Hommegger's "Horatius." Yet neithe the Chorales nor the "Tam o'Shanter" ar for the heedless, the easy-going or the complacent. Both composers exact of the hearers a willingness to meet them hal way.

W. S. S.

TRANS. MAR. 22.

AS wine maketh glad the heart of man, so do the wooden walls of Sanders Theatre rejoice an orchestra playing within them. In no other auditorium do Mr. Monteux and his band compass such sonority and incisiveness of tone clarity of phrase and period, graphic pla of rhythm, modulation and color. On groun of pleasure, even of excitement, it is possible to wish that all the concerts of th Symphony Orchestra hereabouts befell Cambridge. For there and only there d space and acoustics permit orchestra an audience to be intimately and stimulatingl at one. Conductor and band react to th environment; hearers reach to them; an through two hours high tension (as th electricians say) pervades the concert-roo

Fa liar music sounds with heightene vo; inert music gains the passing lif oitalizing performance; the virtues o ler, orchestra, assisting artist ring warm clear. Too often the listener at Sym- ony Hall is only present at a concert. illy-nilly in Sanders Theatre he shares it.

Once more, last evening, music, players and hearers so profited and, as it seemed, even beyond the usual. Heard not long ago in Boston, Glazunov's Fourth Symphony seemed a barren, cluttered, repetitious music hard in these days to endure. Played at Cambridge, it still ploughed plentifully a sea of counterpoint and trod lengthily the waters of merely mechanical modulation. Yet in the luminous resonance o Sanders Theatre and in the tone to whicl it stirred the orchestra, Glazunov's "slov introductions" glowed into works of imagination; while his Scherzo sounded a mated feat of fanciful matter and fertilizing skill. In lightness of rhythm an brightness of color, in zest of pace, i mutual exhilaration upon music and audience, the orchestra outdid itself. Similarl fared Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody," nearl escaping for once the familiar reproacl of "cerebral patchwork." The "Prelude a la Nuit" became as stillness slithering into sound like the scarves and streamers of dawn upon the sky. The dissonances at the beginning of the Habanera pierced beyond even Ravel's loving expectation; chord smote chord and rhythm snapped upon rhythm through the Malaguena; while keen-edged as well as tumultuous went the music of the Fair. The concert-room animated the orchestra; the orchestra animated the music; a delectable dryness in the Rhapsody became as the dryness of biting wintry air.

Less aid from circumstance needed Beethoven's Overture, "Coriolanus" or Handel's Concerto String Choir. The Overture, with clear play of contrasting themes in opposing progress, invited both the sonorities of the orchestra and Mr. Monteux"s dramatizing instinct; while the Concerto sounded as in Symphony Hall, a fortnight ago, it could not sound. There it went remote and in measure blank and lifeless; whereas played "in the wood," as it were, every strand ran clear and vibrant, every figure had its passing moment, every transition bit; every variation of the mated or parted voices tingled. The pattern was alive; the tones that drew it were alive; alongside of Handel and the choir sat the audience basking. And that choir knew—and avoided—the peril that is often the price of pleasure. In a single breath and at every turn it held both plastic and precise b h unified and diverse. As full of zest, finally, is Sanders Theatre to the singer. Last evening she was Mme. Ferr[illegible] Jacchia of the wine-dark tones, of the operatic impulse irresistible. Even it, however, could not much propel the sticky nougat of an air from Godard's "Tasso," made in the Parisian candy-kitchen of the eighties. The soliloquy of Aida, tortured between loving loyalties, poulticing ironic fate with prayerful entreaty, was anothe music. Verdi kindled the flame; Mme. Jacchia heated it; not a dowager of Cambridge—to record a miracle—went unburnt.

H. T. P.

In clear departure from his usual custom Mr. Monteux has placed on the programme of a Symphony Concert in the "extra series"—that which takes place next Monday—a piece unknown to Boston. In thus playing Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomes" he notably furthers our acquaintance with the new Italian school of symphonic composers. Hitherto Respighi has been heard in Boston only through his orchestral suite, "The Fountains of Rome," his orchestral transcriptions of sundry airs and dances from the sixteenth century, the pages for voice and string-quartet sung by Mme. Gauthier at a concert of the Boston Musical Association, and a scattering of songs and piano-pieces.

Of the four chief spokesmen of the doughty band who are restoring the music of Italy to ancient prestige, two—Casella and Malipiero—may be labelled "futurists," and two—Respighi and Pizzetti—are composers of a more conservative type. In the forthcoming "Ballad of the Gnomes," however, Respighi plunges far deeper into the tangled underbrush of modern dissonance than in any of the music by which hereabouts he is already known. And a reading of the appended poem by Carlo Clausetti, which serves as programme for the piece, makes plain the necessity for the drastic effects that dot the pages of a notably brilliant score:

Dragging the raving gnome, the women go, abandoning their flimsy draperies to the wind. . . .

The diminutive man gambols between those, his two brides, whom a single nuptial bed awaits.

Oh! gnomides, let the race be brief, lest he weary fall when falls the Bear! . . .

No torch was lighted at the distorted nuptials, but without hordes of gnomes were waiting, eager for the prey.

And in the thick night a sharp cry resounded, so painful as to rout the darkness. Then silence. The new dawn was breaking; the mad wives drew their vain booty from the alcove

And fled with it, followed by the cunning throng of manlings thickly swarming about

And muttering prayers worthy only of the anathemas to be heard, in blaspheming jargon, in the depths infernal.

By a rough path, they reached a broad hill whose sharp ridge overlooked a sea of blue.

In a twinkling the filthy husband was downward hurled and the rite thus ended.

Now on the summit of the hill, after their sleepless night, the two women dance in the morning breeze.

And, while the day is breaking, the tiny people join in the dance of the cruel widows.

One shrieks, another mocks, still another bites or laughs aloud; a wild frenzy possesses them all, as in a sabbath.

We have come to expect of these new Italians a rare degree of skill in the handling of the orchestra. In "The Fountains of Rome" Respighi revealed himself a colorist of the first order, and in "The Ballad of the Gnomes" he again mixes new tints on his tonal palette, although here, as befits the subject, he has found sharper and shriller hues. From four trumpets, playing in their highest register, he draws forth blood-curdling screams, stringed instruments are smitten with the wood of the bow, and a cymbal is struck with a bar of iron—in short, here may be found the whole armory of orchestral horrors. Yet, because Respighi is the composer that he is, he has contrived to mak for all this a background of pure music Safe within the border-line that divides ar from perverse extravagance does he hol himself.

W. S. S.

TRANS. MAR 23.

SUN

ss New York City

MAR 24 1923

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will close its present New York season with concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, April 5 and 7. Pablo Casals will appear as soloist at the Thursday concert and at the Saturday concert Pierre Monteux will introduce a novelty by Respighi, the Ballad of the Gnomides.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 24 1923

Closing Boston Symphony Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will close its present New York season with concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, April 5 and 7.

Pablo Casals will appear as soloist at the Thursday concert, and at the Saturday concert Pierre Monteux will introduce a novelty by Respighi—the "Ballad of the Gnomides."

The remaining numbers for the evening concert will include Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Debussy's Suite "Printemps," Wagner's overture to "Rienzi." Casals will be heard in Schumann's concerto. For the Saturday concert Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and a suite from Gretry.

MAR 24 1923
FROM
EVENING JOURNAL,
New York City

thetique."

At the next visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, April 5, Pierre Monteux will play Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Debussy's "Printemps," Wagner's 'Rienzi" o erture and Pablo Casals will be the soloist in the Schumann concerto for violincello. The following Saturday afternoon's programme will consist of Beethoven's 'Eroica" symphony, Debussy's 'L'apres-midi d'un faune" and a suite of Gretry's music, as

---

BURGIN WITH SYMPHONY

By ZOE FABER.

Symphony subscribers had reason to be proud of their concert master yesterday afternoon when Richard Burgin stepped on the stage to fill the place of soloist with the orchestra under Mr. Monteux.

Richard Burgin.

He played the Beethoven Concerto in D major for violin, and he played it so well that the audience recalled him six or seven times. He is an interesting violinist.

If his octave were not always absolutely true, there were so many other splendid things that he brought into play that they more than made up for this discrepancy. His fellow members of the orchestra were as unstinted in their appreciation of his work as the audience.

Two "First Time in America" numbers were on this, the nineteenth program; the Koechlin Three Chorales and the Goosens "Tam O'Shanter." The Chorales by the French composer proved unusually interesting and beautiful with most of the brass holding forth nobly in two of the three.

The "Tam O'Shanter" was delightful. It is bizarre, full of supernatural speed and filled with crowds of ghastly, ghostly figures riding on each other's heels. It was played right up to the hilt.

The Beethoven Overture to Coriolanus opened the program and the Debussy Orchestral Suite "Printemps" closed it. The weather suited itself to Mr. Monteux's closing number exactly.

AMER. MAR 24.

WALTER TO CONDUCT

The European conductor, Bruno Walter, who is making his first visit to America, will appear as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next regular pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 30 and 31.

The program will include Weber's Overture to "Euryanthe," Mozart's Symphony in D major, opus No. 385, and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." As the soloist, Artur Schnabel, will appear in Beethoven's Fourth pianoforte concerto in G major.

AMER. MAR 24

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES 19TH CONCERT

Orchestra Has Richard Burgin, Concertmaster, for Soloist

By PHILIP HALE

The 19th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Richard Burgin, the concertmaster, was the soloist. The program was as follows: Beethoven, Overture to "Coriolanus" and Concerto for Violin; Koechlin, Three Chorales; Goossens, Sherzo, "Tam O'Shanter"; Debussy, "Printemps," Orchestral Suite.

Surely the overture to Collin's tragedy "Coriolanus" must be reckoned among Beethoven's greatest works. It matters not whether he wrote it with Collin or with Shakespeare in mind, there was Plutarch, who had sufficiently portrayed the stern and noble Roman. The music is Roman in its pride; its force, with the appeal of the Roman matron urging patriotism first of all to turn the son from his fell purpose. Compare for a moment the modern Honegger's treatment of a Roman subject, the fight between the Horatii and the Curiatii, with Beethoven's; the one with his swollen orchestra; the other not even employing trombones; the one diffuse in portrayal, the other with few strokes as short as the conquering Roman sword. Note the simplicity in the overture of the final wall, again Roman in its brevity and simplicity. Thus Beethoven, whose spirit was not unlike that of Corilanus, is Roman, as Gluck in his overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis" is Greek.

The "Coriolanus" overture is a greater work than the concerto that followed it. Not that one should object to the stately introduction that announces the coming of the virtuoso; we like the pomp and ceremony of these old-fashioned introductions; but there vie endless repetitions in the first movement that fritter away the general effect. The second movement is, indeed, beautiful, but the chief theme of the finale is Beethoven at his worst. Invented by another, it would be called vulgar, or what is even more damning, common. Mr. Burgin gave an admirable performance; musical, tasteful, euphonious, brilliant. The cadenzas—the first too long, perhaps too elaborate—were by Leopold Auer.

Charles Koechlin is known here chiefly, if not solely, by some charming songs, but he has written much for orchestra and chamber. The first Chorale—the three were performed for the first time in this country—of a solemn, impressive nature, served to display the efficiency of the brass choir and the bassoons. The second, which at times is Parsifalian in mood, has more obvious beauty. The third, for full orchestra, is of a rich nature. They are interesting to musicians rather than to the general public. Yesterday they were favorably received, although they have not the elements of immediate popularity.

We believe that Goossens's "Tam O'Shanter" was also played for the first time in this country. It was composed six years ago, and may be said to be in Goossens's earlier manner. At the beginning, rhythm and the figure for the bassoons lead one to think that "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" served the Londoner as a model, but Dukas is quickly forgotten. The Scherzo is short, apparently designed to picture only Tam's wild ride. There is little or no treatment of the details in the ballad; no church scene intended to reproduce the horrors seen by Tam or the delirious dance of "Cutty-sark." The scherzo

Though the composer of "The Eternal Rhythm" and the Sinfonitta may look upon it only as a diversion of his youth—possibly an early sin. It was played with the requisite vigor and dash.

When Debussy sent on his "Printemps" from Rome in 1887—it was written originally for orchestra, piano and chorus (without words)—the judges in Paris pronounced it too modern and shapeless. It would be interesting to compare the original with the orchestral version published in 1913 and played yesterday. The first section is the exquisite Debussyian manner and it was beautifully played. Here we have the freshness, the longings and the languors of spring. In the second section the composer in his joy and his hot blood dances to a tune—yes, a tune, not a melody—that would rejoice the frequenters of cabarets and the applauders of comic opera. It's all very gay and heel-inciting, but it is not easy to recognize Debussy.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Bruno Walter, recently of Munich, will conduct the concerts next week, by invitation of the trustees. The program will be as follows: Weber, Overture to "Euryanthe"; Mozart, Symphony in D major (K. 385); Beethoven, Concerto for piano, G major, No. 4 (Arthur Schnabel, pianist); Straus "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks."

HERALD-MAR. 24.

BRUNO WALTER TO CONDUCT

The celebrated European conductor, Bruno Walter, who is making his first visit to America, will appear as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony orchestra at the next regular pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 30 and 31.

The program will include Weber's Overture to "Euryanthe," Mozart's Symphony in D major, opus No. 385, and Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." As the soloist, Arthur Schnabel will appear in Beetheoven's Fourth pianoforte Concerto in G major.

A native of Berlin, Bruno Walter was prominent for many seasons presiding over the opera houses of Hamburg, Breslau and other cities.

TRAV. MAR 24

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
CITIZEN
ISSUE OF
MAR 25 1923

CASALS SOLOIST, WITH BOSTON ORCHESTRA

With Pablo Casals as soloist, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its last concert in Brooklyn this season in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, April 6.

The principal number on the program will be Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" Symphony No. 6. It has often been remarked that no other single musical work, nor, indeed, any artistic creation, voices the temperament and emotional characteristics of a great people as does this. The haunting quality of Tchaikovsky's melodies in this score, the charm of the movement in the rhythm of five beats, the "march" movement, in which ephemeral pomp sinks into dissolution, and the last movement, a penetrating lamen which probes into the lowest debts of the tonal register—these qualities make the "Pathetic" Symphony unique in the whole record of musical achievement.

Pablo Casals, who is looked upon as perhaps the finest master of the violoncello that has ever lived, will appear with the orchestra in the concerto for that instrument by Schumann.

Ottorino Respighi, the Italian composer who is attracting increased attention in the musical wordd, will be represented by a work which Pierre Monteux is introducing to our Eastern cities, namely, the Ballad of the Gnomides, a descriptive piece written in fantastic fashion for enlarged orchestra.

The closing number will be "Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 25 1923

An anonymous giver has made it possible for the new Providence Music League to offer a series of three concents by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to residents of that Rhode Island city at 40 cents for the series, or 13 cents per concert. If the experiment proves successful the league will attempt to bring about the endowment of a foundation to make possible the indefinite continuation of the undertaking. The tickets are being distributed to officials of factories, mills and stores for sale to their employes and to social service groups. Every effort is being made to see to it that tickets for the concerts go only to those who would be unable to afford tickets if the usual concert rates were charged. At the inaugural concert of the series every seat in the Albee Theatre was filled and many were turned away.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
MAR 25 1923

Pablo Casals will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the last Thursday evening concert of the season, to be given in Carnegie Hall April 5. A novelty to be performed at the Saturday matinee concert will be Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides." The remainder of the Thursday program will include Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Debussy's suite "Printemps," Wagner's overture to "Rienzi"; Casals to play in Schumann's concerto. For the Saturday concert, Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and a suite from Gretry.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
MAR 25 1923

The closing concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, April 6, at which Pablo Casals, who is universally considered the greatest living master of the violoncello, will appear as soloist.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 25 1923

April 24.

The powers that be in the Boston Symphony Orchestra have departed for the first time from the policy that has prevailed for forty-two years, since the orchestra was founded, and have invited a conductor to conduct the orchestra who is not a composer conducting his own works. This is Bruno Walter, who will conduct on March 30 and 31.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 25 1923

Casals to Aid Bostonians.

Pablo Casals will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its final Thursday evening concert in Carnegie Hall on April 5. A novelty at the Saturday matinee, April 7, will be Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides."

The Thursday program will include Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Debussy's "Printemps," Wagner's overture to "Rienzi" and Schumann's 'cello concerto, played by Casals.

For the Saturday concert Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony is chosen, with Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and a suite from Gretry.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
MAR 2 5 1923

The closing concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, April 6, at which Pablo Casals will appear as soloist.

Pierre Monteux will present on this occasion Tschaikovsky's famous "Pathetic" Symphony No. 6, which has not been presented by this orchestra in Brooklyn for a considerable period.

A notable novelty will be Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," a piece of descriptive music by the Italian composer, who is attracting increased attention in the world of music.

Casals will appear with the orchestra in Schumann's 'cello concerto. The closing number of this last concert of the season will be Wagner's "Overture to Rienzi."

Next Sunday afternoon at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn the Philharmonic Orchestra, under Willem Mengelberg, will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, "Liszt's "The Preludes," Rabaud's "Eclogue," and the overture to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." Artur Schnabel, soloist, will play Brahms' piano concerto No. 1 in D minor.

Paderewski will appear in a second recital in Brooklyn in the Academy of Music, Wednesday evening, May 2, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Bruno Walter, the noted European conductor who is paying his first visit to America, will come to Boston, and appear as guest conductor at the Symphony concerts next Friday atfernoon and Saturday evening. The program will include Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Mozart's Symphony in D major, and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel." Arthur Schnabel will appear as soloist in Beethoven's Fourth Pianoforte Concerto in G major.

MONDAY SYMPHONY

Tomorrow evening at Symphony Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the fourth Monday concert, with Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, operatic soprano, as soloist. Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," the "Ballad of the Gnomides," a novelty by Respighi and a Bach suite for strings, are the orchestral numbers. Mrs. Jacchia will sing arias by Godard and Verdi.

ADVTSR. MAR 25

Mr. Monteux has risked the experiment of a piece by a modernist composer on his Monday program, for an audience obviously much more conservative than the regular ones, or at least less hardened to piercing dissonances. But Respighi's "Fountains of Rome" proved so popular that there is a good chance his new "Ballad of the Gnomes," or "Gnomides," as the press notices put it, will prove enjoyable to all.

Bruno Walter will conduct at the regular Symphony conerets Friday and Saturday a symphony by Mozart not previously heard here, which has been cordially received in other American cities this season under his baton. He has just been conducting the Minneapolis Symphony, now without a regular leader, and has been very warmly praised by the papers there.

GLOBE. MAR. 25.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Bruno Walter, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week, was born at Berlin, on Sept. 15, 1876. He studied music at the Stern Conservatory of that city, a pupil of Heinrich Ehrlich, Ludwig Bussler and Robert Radecke. He conducted opera in Cologne, Hamburg, Breslau, Presburg, Riga, until in 1897 he became first conductor of the Vienna Imperial Opera. In 1914 he resigned that position to succeed Felix Mottl as general music director of the Bavarian State theatres, having authority over the opera and the Concertverein Orchestra in Munich. He was renowned there for his interpretation of the classics in opera house and concert hall. He left Munich last year and came to the United tSates. His first appearance as a conductor was as guest conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra in New York on Feb. 15, 1923. His last concert in New York was on Feb. [illegible] He has acted as guest conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, and as guest conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra he has given concerts in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Mr. Walter has made out the following program:

Weber—Overture to "Euryanthe."
Mozart—Symphony in D-major (K. [illegible]).
Beethoven—Piano Concerto, G-major, No. 4.
Strauss—"Till Eulenspiegel."

Arthur Schnabel, who will play the concerto, will be heard here for the [illegible] time.

EXTRA SYMPHONY

Tomorrow evening at 8:15, in Symphony hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the fourth of the extra [illegible] with Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, soprano, appearing [illegible] will conduct [illegible]

[illegible] achievements of the Russian school of music. The composer, mastercolorist and painter of musical fairy tales, has nowhere else equalled this setting of various episodes from the "Arabian Nights." The full resources of the modern orchestra are utilized, and virtually every species of instrument has its important solo. A notable novelty will be the "Ballad of the Gnomides," a descriptive fantasy by the Italian Ottorino Respighi. Mme. Jacchia will sing arias from Godard's "Tasso" and Verdi's "Aida." The remaining number will be a suite of Bach arranged for string orchestra by Bachrich.

HERALD-MAR. 25

BOSTON SYMPHONY HERE NEXT TUESDAY

Good Friday Music from Parsifal to to Be Included in Brilliant Program—Alice Nielsen, Renowned Prima Donna as Soloist—Trip to Lowell and Return to Be Made by Special Train.

A program of popular appeal, which nevertheless comprises the finest achievements in all symphonic music, has been made by Pierre Monteux for the return concert to be given in the Memorial Auditorium by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Tuesday evening, March 27.

It will include Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, Schubert's immortally melodius "Unfinished symphony," Chabrier's rhapsody "Espana," a brilliant compilation of characteristic Spanish dance rhythms, of melodies arranged for full symphony orchestra in splendid fashion.

There will be three excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner—the prelude to the third act of "Lohengrin," "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal" and the "Ride of the Valkyries from "The Valkyrie."

The concert will end with the rousing battle piece of Tchaikovsky, the 1812 Overture, written in commemoration of the Russian victory over Napoleon that year. The climax of the piece consists in a mighty struggle between the Russian national anthem and the French Marseillais. The former is, of course, ultimately victorious.

This program will be additionally notable in the appearance, as soloist, of Alice Nielsen, the celebrated American soprano of opera and concert fame.

Miss Nielsen will sing arias of Mozart, which she also sang with this orchestra at the regular Boston concerts. On that occasion she was generally praised as one of the finest living interpreters of this great composer's melodies.

There has been a steady call for tickets all the week and the Auditorium, doubtless, will be crowded to greet America's most wonderful orchestra in a program that will be even more popular than the program given here last fall.

Traveling by Special Train

The orchestra and soloist will make the trip to Lowell and return to Boston by special train, ensuring prompt arrival here and permitting all the latitude desired in the matter of time. Relieved of the necessity of making connections with a regular train, the orchestra and soloist will be in a position to give "full measure, running over" in the presentation of the prepared program.

Tickets will be on sale at Steinert's up to 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, after which they may be procured at the Auditorium box office.

LOWELL-TELE. MAR25.

BRUNO WALTER (LEFT) WILL CONDUCT THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS THIS WEEK.
ESTER FERRABINI-JACCHIA, SOPRANO, SINGS AT THE EXTRA SYMPHONY CONCERT TOMORROW NIGHT.

HERALD - MAR. 26.

FOURTH SYMPHONY MONDAY CONCERT

Mr. Monteux Presents a Curious Program

For the fourth Symphony concert of the Monday series last night in Symphony hall, Mr. Monteux planned a curious program. He began with the Rimsky-Korsakov Suite, "Scherazade," to which he brought next three Bach movements, a prelude, an adagio and a gvotte in rondo form for violin alone, arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich. In turn came Mme. Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, soprano, to sing an air from Godard's dramatic Symphony, "L Tasse," and also, of all things, the aria, "Ritorna Vincitor," from "Aida." To close, Mr. Monteux played, for the first time in Boston, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides."

Old Respighi one day, wearying of his flashing fountains, Gregorian modes, clouds and mists, and stately ancient dances, feel the need of a change? If so, he made a marked one, when he took it into his head to dabble in diabolism. Not to put too fine a point upon it, he seems scarcely the man for the experiment. He had everything to do with, to be sure, a "poem" by Carlo Clausetti of quite sufficient wildness to inspire him to sounds of darkness, and, it goes without saying, amazing skill in orchestration. But what of it? Of what avail are snarls and growls and thumps on drums if they only make a noise? A din alone, even though clamor be now the fashion, is scarcely competent to stir terror; imagination, for that, must direct the din, and power must propel it. A respectable aim, though hardly the loftiest, it has always been in art, to try to make people shiver. But if the attempt goes awry, if people fail to thrill and shudder, of the effort what is left to commend it? Little enough. Some people, to be sure, may have reacted as they should to this "Ballad" last night. If so, they were in a minority, to judge from their behavior. It is not everybody, after all, who can deal convincingly with the devilish. Let Respighi, pray, go back to his Roman fountains.

The rest of the concert needs few words. Mme. Jacchia, more at home in the opera house than the concert hall, might have found more grateful and less taxing music to sing than the airs she chose. The very large audience applauded the Russian suite with a heartiness that resulted in the orchestra's standing to acknowledge the acclaim. They also showed themselves mightily pleased with the Bach suite.

R. R. G.

HERALD MAR 27.

MME. JACCHIA IS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Mar 26

By ZOE FABER

In a gown that was as radiant as the morning sun, Mme. Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, soprano, made her appearance last night with the Symphony under the direction of Mr. Monteux. She sang the air of Lenora from "Tasso," by Godard, and the "Ritorna Vincitor" from "Aida," by Verdi.

Mme. Jacchia's voice is one that contains some tones that are lovely in quality, but there are others that are not so agreeable to the ear. It is a voice that is not even in range; the high tones and the low ones are much sweeter in quality than the middle register. This is particularly true in the heavier passages.

Once more we saw twinkling toes, gold anklets, flowing draperies of pastel shades, and all the rest of the local color that makes up the fascination of the street scenes of the Orient. The Scheherazade of Rinsky-Korsakov presents one fleeting picture after another, each one a bit more brilliant than the last. Especially did Mr. Burgin's solo work contribute to the effectiveness of the whole.

Pixies and Nixies and all the rest of the wee folk that inhabit hill and dale were romping through the ballad of the Gnomides by Respighi. The Bach number was delightful and very well played.

AMER. MAR. 27.

SYMPHONY IN NOVELTY FROM ITALY

Respighi's "Ballad" Played, Mme. Jacchia Soloist

BY OLIN DOWNES

The fourth of the series of five Monday night concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, took place last evening in Symphony Hall. The audience was immediately fascinated and engrossed by the opening composition on the programme, the familiar but always marvelous "Thousand and One Nights" suite by Rimsky-Korsakoff.

MUSIC OF MAGIC

The glittering, flashing orchestration, the exotic melodies, and at the end the mighty exorcism of the spirit of the deep, are tales never too often told. The hearer, too, sails, with Sinbad, the mountain seas and hears the wind crooning its strange song in the rigging; he is in the streets of Bagdad, listening to the narrative of the one-eyed porter, or to the din or oriental festivity, or he hears the song of the amorous prince, or he is in the ship which hurtles to destruction against the rock surmounted by the Bronze Warrior. It is all of magic, and the Golden Horn, and the scents of Arabia.

Let us add that this music is composed so masterfully, and that instrumentation is so incredibly ingenious and effective, that even a poor performance would make a wonderful sound. The performance last night was not poor, neither was it in the last movement for example, of the most sensitive and finished quality. A pianissimo was mezzo-piano, there was a tendency to excessive haste and noise as well as brilliancy.

Mme. Jacchia Sings

The delightful Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, arranged strings by Bachrich, followed the Russian music. It was a well received contrast and it showed the strings to advantage.

Mme. Jacchia sang the air of Leonora from Godard's "Le Tasse," an air with a certain facile charm of its own, and the aria, "Ritorna vincitor," from "Aida." It was in this latter air that her instinct for dramatic effect and her experience of the musical stage was shown to advantage—this despite the fact that the voice was not heard at its best, and that Mme. Jacchia is essentially a singer for the theatre rather than the concert room.

Respighi in Roguish Mood

A novelty was Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," a piece of grotesque, malicious humor, and a little unholy, a little infernal. There is the sound of a Sabbat, there is the thought of dark and evil forests, in which things occur not mentioned at breakfast Sunday morning. The piece is effective, at times really bold and original, yet many of us will prefer to this bizarre Respighi of the "Ballad of the Gnomides" the Respighi of the classic line and the noble beauty of the "Fountains of Rome."

This piece brought a brilliant end of the concert.

POST. MAR. 27.

WALTER AS AUDIENCE OBSERVER

Boston Post
Mar. 28

Noted Conductor Says Good Music Liked in America

[83]

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
MAR 25 1923

The closing concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, April 6, at which Pablo Casals will appear as soloist.

Pierre Monteux will present on this occasion Tschaikovsky's famous "Pathetic" Symphony No. 6, which has not been presented by this orchestra in Brooklyn for a considerable period.

A notable novelty will be Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," a piece of descriptive music by the Italian composer, who is attracting increased attention in the world of music.

Casals will appear with the orchestra in Schumann's 'cello concerto. The closing number of this last concert of the season will be Wagner's "Overture to Rienzi."

Next Sunday afternoon at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn the Philharmonic Orchestra, under Willem Mengelberg, will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, "Liszt's "The Preludes," Rabaud's "Eclogue," and the overture to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." Artur Schnabel, soloist, will play Brahms' piano concerto No. 1 in D minor.

Paderewski will appear in a second recital in Brooklyn in the Academy of Music, Wednesday evening, May 2, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Bruno Walter, the noted European conductor who is paying his first visit to America, will come to Boston, and appear as guest conductor at the Symphony concerts next Friday atfernoon and Saturday evening. The program will include Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Mozart's Symphony in D major, and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel." Arthur Schnabel will appear as soloist in Beethoven's Fourth Pianoforte Concerto in G major.

MONDAY SYMPHONY

Tomorrow evening at Symphony Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the fourth Monday concert, with Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, operatic soprano, as soloist. Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," the "Ballad of the Gnomides," a novelty by Respighi and a Bach suite for strings, are the orchestral numbers. Mrs. Jacchia will sing arias by Godard and Verdi.

ADVTSR-MAR 25

Mr Monteux has risked the experiment of a piece by a modernist composer on his Monday program, for an audience obviously much more conservative than the regular ones, or at least less hardened to piercing dissonances. But Respighi's "Fountains of Rome" proved so popular that there is a good chance his new "Ballad of the Gnomes," or "Gnomides," as the press notices put it, will prove enjoyable to all.

Bruno Walter will conduct at the regular Symphony concrets Friday and Saturday a symphony by Mozart not previously heard here, which has been cordially received in other American cities this season under his baton. He has just been conducting the Minneapolis Symphony, now without a regular leader, and has been very warmly praised by the papers there.

GLOBE. MAR. 25.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Bruno Walter, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week, was born at Berlin, on Sept. 15, 1876. He studied music at the Stern Conservatory of that city, a pupil of Heinrich Ehrlich, Ludwig Bussler and Robert Radecke. He conducted opera in Cologne, Hamburg, Breslau, Presburg, Riga, until in 1897 he became first conductor of the Vienna Imperial Opera. In 1914 he resigned that position to succeed Felix Mottl as general music director of the Bavarian State theatres, having authority over the opera and the Concertverein Orchestra in Munich. He was renowned there for his interpretation of the classics in opera house and concert hall. He left Munich last year and came to the United tSates. His first appearance as a conductor was as guest conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra in New York on Feb. 15, 1923. His last concert in New York was on Feb. 18. He has acted as guest conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, and as guest conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra he has given concerts in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Mr. Walter has made out the following program:

Weber—Overture to "Euryanthe,"
Mozart—Symphony in D-major (K. 385).
Beethoven—Piano Concerto, G-major, No. 4.
Strauss—"Till Eulenspiegel."

Arthur Schnabel, who will play the concerto, will be heard here for the first time.

EXTRA SYMPHONY

Tomorrow evening at 8:15, in Symphony hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the fourth of the extra series, with Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, [illegible] operatic soprano, appearing [illegible] Monteux will conduct [illegible] symphonic suite, [illegible]

[illegible]ficent achievements of the Russian school of music. The composer, master-colorist and painter of musical fairy tales, has nowhere else equalled this setting of various episodes from the "Arabian Nights." The full resources of the modern orchestra are utilized, and virtually every species of instrument has its important solo. A notable novelty will be the "Ballad of the Gnomides," a descriptive fantasy by the Italian Ottorino Respighi. Mme. Jacchia will sing arias from Godard's "Tasso" and Verdi's "Aida." The remaining number will be a suite of Bach arranged for string orchestra by Bachrich.

HERALD-MAR 25.

BOSTON SYMPHONY HERE NEXT TUESDAY

Good Friday Music from Parsifal to to Be Included in Brilliant Program—Alice Nielsen, Renowned Prima Donna as Soloist—Trip to Lowell and Return to Be Made by Special Train.

A program of popular appeal, which nevertheless comprises the finest achievements in all symphonic music, has been made by Pierre Monteux for the return concert to be given in the Memorial Auditorium by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Tuesday evening, March 27.

It will include Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, Schubert's immortally melodius "Unfinished Symphony," Chabrier's rhapsody "Espana," a brilliant compilation of characteristic Spanish dance rhythms, of melodies arranged for full symphony orchestra in splendid fashion.

There will be three excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner—the prelude to the third act of "Lohengrin," "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal" and the "Ride of the Valkyries from "The Valkyrie."

The concert will end with the rousing battle piece of Tchaikovsky, the 1812 Overture, written in commemoration of the Russian victory over Napoleon that year. The climax of the piece consists in a mighty struggle between the Russian national anthem and the French Marseillais. The former is, of course, ultimately victorious.

This program will be additionally notable in the appearance, as soloist, of Alice Nielsen, the celebrated American soprano of opera and concert fame.

Miss Nielsen will sing arias of Mozart, which she also sang with this orchestra at the regular Boston concerts. On that occasion she was generally praised as one of the finest living interpreters of this great composer's melodies.

There has been a steady call for tickets all the week and the Auditorium, doubtless, will be crowded to greet America's most wonderful orchestra in a program that will be even more popular than the program given here last fall.

Traveling by Special Train

The orchestra and soloist will make the trip to Lowell and return to Boston by special train, ensuring prompt arrival here and permitting all the latitude desired in the matter of time. Relieved of the necessity of making connections with a regular train, the orchestra and soloist will be in a position to give "full measure, running over" in the presentation of the prepared program.

Tickets will be on sale at Steinert's up to 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, after which they may be procured at the Auditorium box office.

LOWELL-TELE. MAR 25

BRUNO WALTER (LEFT) WILL CONDUCT THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS THIS WEEK.
ESTER FERRABINI-JACCHIA, SOPRANO, SINGS AT THE EXTRA SYMPHONY CONCERT TOMORROW NIGHT.

HERALD-MAR. 26.

FOURTH SYMPHONY MONDAY CONCERT

Mr. Monteux Presents a Curious Program

For the fourth Symphony concert of the Monday series last night in Symphony hall, Mr. Monteux planned a curious program. He began with the Rimsky-Korsakov Suite, "Scherazade," to which he brought next three Bach movements, a prelude, an adagio and a gvotte in rondo form for violin alone, arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich. In turn came Mme. Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, soprano, to sing an air from Godard's dramatic Symphony, "L Tasse," and also, of all things, the aria, "Ritorna Vincitor," from "Aida." To close, Mr. Monteux played, for the first time in Boston, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides."

Old Respighi one day, wearying of his flashing fountains, Gregorian modes, clouds and mists, and stately ancient dances, feel the need of a change? If so, he made a marked one, when he took it into his head to dabble in diabolism. Not to put too fine a point upon it, he seems scarcely the man for the experiment. He had everything to do with, to be sure, a "poem" by Carlo Clausetti of quite sufficient wildness to inspire him to sounds of darkness, and, it goes without saying, amazing skill in orchestration. But what of it? Of what avail are snarls and growls and thumps on drums if they only make a noise? A din alone, even though clamor be now the fashion, is scarcely competent to stir terror; imagination, for that, must direct the din, and power must propel it. A respectable aim, though hardly the loftiest, it has always been in art, to try to make people shiver. But if the attempt goes awry, if people fail to thrill and shudder, of the effort what is left to commend it? Little enough. Some people, to be sure, may have reacted as they should to this "Ballad" last night. If so, they were in a minority, to judge from their behavior. It is not everybody, after all, who can deal convincingly with the devilish. Let Respighi, pray, go back to his Roman fountains.

The rest of the concert needs few words. Mme. Jacchia, more at home in the opera house than the concert hall, might have found more grateful and less taxing music to sing than the airs she chose. The very large audience applauded the Russian suite with a heartiness that resulted in the orchestra's standing to acknowledge the acclaim. They also showed themselves mightily pleased with the Bach suite.

R. R. G.

HERALD MAR 27.

MME. JACCHIA IS SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Mar 27

By ZOE FABER

In a gown that was as radiant as the morning sun, Mme. Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, soprano, made her appearance last night with the Symphony under the direction of Mr. Monteux. She sang the air of Lenora from "Tasso," by Godard, and the "Ritorna Vincitor" from "Aida," by Verdi.

Mme. Jacchia's voice is one that contains some tones that are lovely in quality, but there are others that are not so agreeable to the ear. It is a voice that is not even in range; the high tones and the low ones are much sweeter in quality than the middle register. This is particularly true in the heavier passages.

Once more we saw twinkling toes, gold anklets, flowing draperies of pastel shades, and all the rest of the local color that makes up the fascination of the street scenes of the Orient. The Scheherazade of Rinsky-Korsakov presents one fleeting picture after another, each one a bit more brilliant than the last. Especially did Mr. Burgin's solo work contribute to the effectiveness of the whole.

Pixies and Nixies and all the rest of the wee folk that inhabit hill and dale were romping through the ballad of the Gnomides by Respighi. The Bach number was delightful and very well played.

AMER. MAR. 27.

SYMPHONY IN NOVELTY FROM ITALY

Respighi's "Ballad" Played, Mme. Jacchia Soloist

BY OLIN DOWNES

The fourth of the series of five Monday night concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, took place last evening in Symphony Hall. The audience was immediately fascinated and engrossed by the opening composition on the programme, the familiar but always marvelous "Thousand and One Nights" suite by Rimsky-Korsakoff.

MUSIC OF MAGIC

The glittering, flashing orchestration, the exotic melodies, and at the end the mighty exorcism of the spirit of the deep, are tales never too often told. The hearer, too, sails, with Sinbad, the mountain seas and hears the wind crooning its strange song in the rigging; he is in the streets of Bagdad, listening to the narrative of the one-eyed porter, or to the din or oriental festivity, or he hears the song of the amorous prince, or he is in the ship which hurtles to destruction against the rock surmounted by the Bronze Warrior. It is all of magic, and the Golden Horn, and the scents of Arabia.

Let us add that this music is composed so masterfully, and that instrumentation is so incredibly ingenious and effective, that even a poor performance would make a wonderful sound. The performance last night was not poor, neither was it in the last movement for example, of the most sensitive and finished quality. A pianissimo was mezzo-piano, there was a tendency to excessive haste and noise as well as brilliancy.

Mme. Jacchia Sings

The delightful Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, arranged strings by Bachrich, followed the Russian music. It was a well received contrast and it showed the strings to advantage.

Mme. Jacchia sang the air of Leonora from Godard's "Le Tasse," an air with a certain facile charm of its own, and the aria, "Ritorna vincitor," from "Aida." It was in this latter air that her instinct for dramatic effect and her experience of the musical stage was shown to advantage—this despite the fact that the voice was not heard at its best, and that Mme. Jacchia is essentially a singer for the theatre rather than the concert room.

Respighi in Roguish Mood

A novelty was Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," a piece of grotesque, malicious humor, and a little unholy, a little infernal. There is the sound of a Sabbat, there is the thought of dark and evil forests, in which things occur not mentioned at breakfast Sunday morning. The piece is effective, at times really bold and original, yet many of us will prefer to this bizarre Respighi of the "Ballad of the Gnomides" the Respighi of the classic line and the noble beauty of the "Fountains of Rome."

This piece brought a brilliant end of the concert.

P.-T. MAR. 27.

WALTER AS AUDIENCE OBSERVER

Boston Post
Mar. 28

Noted Conductor Says Good Music Liked in America

BRUNO WALTER
Noted German artist who will be "guest" conductor of Symphony Orchestra this week.

BY OLIN DOWNES

Bruno Walter, the distinguished conductor of the Munich music festival and director in leading opera houses of Europe and Russia, arrived in Boston yesterday. As "guest" conductor he will lead the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

OBSERVES AUDIENCES

Remarking that his head was plentifully covered, which is true, he stood hatless in the March wind, being photographed, and then launched into an enthusiastic recitation of his experiences as guest conductor with other American orchestras and his impressions of his audiences.

"I don't wish," he said, "to appear to curry favor by complimenting this public, yet it is true that your orchestras are of astonishingly fine quality, as I can testify after having personally led three of them, and hearing others. I have conducted the Minneapolis, Detroit and New York Symphony Orchestras, and have listened to the Philadelphia Orchestra and other musical organizations. I have also had occasion to observe the audiences.

"The excellence of the American symphony orchestras, which would astonish European musicians who have not heard them, is readily explained. You have here, as it seems to me, great enthusiasm for symphonic music, and you have the financial resources to assemble splendid players and give them full opportunities for rehearsal.

"What is not the least matter for congratulation, you seem to have not a few men of wealth whose sincere purpose it is to improve the orchestras in which they are interested as much as possible. And these men are not isolated figures. They seem to express and represent a very great popular curiosity for good music.

"Before coming here I had always been told that music was only an accompaniment of a gay and brilliant social life in America, that it was not taken seriously for itself, but principally as a fad, or a show. This seems to me ridiculously wide of the mark. As I say, I have watched your audiences, and am quite sure that there are no more appreciative and enthusiastic listeners in the world."

Mr. Bruno Walter, who will, as guest, conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, is said to be sane; thinking more of the composer than of his own glory; not a poseur with wild gestures, wishing first of all to be seen. From his program we should say that he is conservative in his taste: Weber, Overture to "Euryanthe"; Mozart, Symphony in D major (K. 385); Beethoven, piano concerto in G major No. 4 (Arthur Schnabel, pianist); Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel." Mr. Schnabel, born in 1882, educated in Vienna, came to this country late in 1921, and gave his first recital in New York on Dec. 27 of that year.

The orchestra will be away next week. The program for the concerts of April 13, 14, is as follows: Mozart, Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"; Foote, A Night Piece for flute and string orchestra; D. S. Smith, Fete Galant for orchestra with flute obbligato; Block, "Schelomo" ("Solomon"), a Jewish Rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra, and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. The soloists will be George Laurent, flute, and Jean Bedetti, violoncellist.

HERALD-MAR. 29.

At last a piece by Ernest Bloch, already played elsewhere in Europe and America, is to be heard at the Symphony Concerts—his Rhapsody for Violoncello and Orchestra, "King Solomon," music deeply impregnated with the composer's Jewish spirit. It is announced for the Symphony Concerts of April 13 and 14, with Mr. Bedetti in the solo part. Mr. Laurent, the first flutist of the orchestra, will also be incidental soloist at these concerts—in a "Night-Piece" by Mr. Foote and a trifle by Professor Smith of Yale, entitled "Fête Galante." Mozart's Overture to his opera, "Figaro's Wedding," begins, and the Second Symphony of Brahms ends, the programme.

Brahms's Symphony will likewise be played at the concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Cambridge on Thursday evening, April 12. Along with it stand Beethoven's third "Leonora" Overture, the Good-Friday music from Wagner's "Parsifal" and Liszt's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in D major—the second and less often heard of the pair. Miss Church will take the solo part.

TRANS-MAR. 30.

An all-Chopin program lends additional interest and importance to the only appearance in Boston this season of Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist, who will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 8.

The next regular pair of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will take place a week from next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 13 and 14, with two soloists, Jean Bedetti and Georges Laurent, the leading 'cellist and flute respectively.

AMER-MAR. 31.

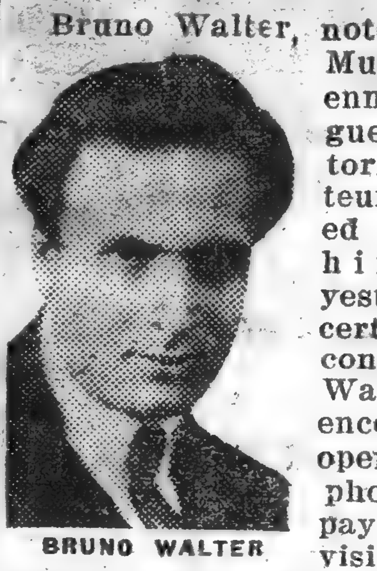
Advertiser Mar. 31

PAGE EIGHTEEN

GERMAN WEEK AT SYMPHONY

By E. F. HARKINS

This is German week at the Symphony concerts, contrasting with some of the French weeks.



BRUNO WALTER

Bruno Walter, noted in Berlin, Munich and Vienna, appears as guest conductor. Mr. Monteux, who yielded the baton to him, enjoyed yesterday's concert from a balcony seat. Mr. Walter, experienced both in opera and symphony affairs, is paying his first visit to the United States. New York and Detroit have also welcomed him as guest conductor. The greeting he got yesterday at Symphony Hall was hearty in the extreme. No audience could have been more courteous, even friendly. A similar welcome was extended to Arthus Schnabel pupil of the almost fabulous Leschetizky, who is making his Boston debut. Among Continental pianists he is especially noted as an interpreter of Brahms.

Mr. Walter chose a largely classic program, embracing Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, the Mozart symphony in D major and Richard Strauss' monumental rondo, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." Mr. Schnabel's choice of works was the Beethoven concerto in G major, opus 58, one of the most beautiful compositions in the Beethoven catalogue.

Although celebrated at home for his readings of the classics, Mr. Walter's least impressive efforts were made in the Mozart symphony. No one has been quite so successful with Mozart masterpieces in Boston in recent years as the Italian Toscanini and the French Monteux. The German manner is too brusque for Mozart; and Mr. Walter is emphatically brusque in his style of conducting and in his readings. Weber's intensely heroic overture and Strauss' fantastic piece—"an hour of new music at the madhouse," as Debussy termed it—are better suited to the vigorous Walter methods. Yet, under the distinguished guest's direction, the orchestra fairly vied with the soloist in the Beethoven number. It was a noble performance, quite worthy of the high reputation of the two visitors.

Post Mar. 31

BO

WALTER CONDUCTS SYMPHONY

Most Gifted of Leaders of the German School

BY OLIN DOWNES

Bruno Walter, a musical personality, who made himself immediately felt, both by the orchestra and the audience, appeared as "guest" conductor at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. This was in accordance with the policy of the orchestra, which on a few occasions has invited distinguished musicians to direct it for certain concerts. Mr. Walter as "guest" had already conducted performances by the New York, Detroit and Minneapolis Symphony orchestras. His reception yesterday must have pleased him. He was applauded to the echo, and repeatedly recalled—a welcome fully deserved.

FIERY AND ROMANTIC

Weber's "Euryanthe" overture [illegible] enthusiasm and [illegible] which were [illegible] his first performance of it. Everyone tingled to the head-long rush and flourish of the opening, and the strange middle episode for the strings—the episode imagined by the composer in connection with a supernatural scene in the opera—seemed wholly new and mysterious, and as poignant as the voice of Astarte in Byron's Manfred. A superbly fiery and romantic interpretation that not only revived, but recreated a well-worn composition.

Mr. Walter's rhythm very striking, very much a living, breathing thing. "Breathing" is the word. When a musical phrase is truly felt by the conductor, and when the orchestra feels it with him, the orchestra breathes, and this natural, deep rhythmical respiration of the instruments is one of the inalienable qualities of a good performance. Then the conductor has ceased to merely beat time. Then his baton is a pulse-beat which affects every part of the orchestral organism. So that in Mr. Walter's hand the Mozart symphony, wholly classic in form and style, was nevertheless full of a living, constantly changing beauty.

This symphony—the symphony in D major, number 35 (Kochel 385), was performed with an orchestra reduced to 48 players, an orchestra proportionate to Mozart's period and scoring. The effect was admirable. In brilliant passages the strings would play as brilliantly as they liked, without holding themselves in, and yet keeping a splendid clarity of effect, and balancing perfectly with the wind instruments. Then there was the conductor's excellent control of dynamics, and, even within the restricted range of sonorities, the wide distinction between his pianissimos and his fortes.

In the minuet Mr. Walter took the deliberate pace that this dance form demands—doubtless the pace of Mozart's day. It was slower than that taken by other conductors in our memory, and when the repeat came it did seem a little too deliberate. For times change, we think and feel more rapidly than we did a couple of centuries ago, and whether it is deplorable or not we can't help ourselves. But in its singing, sparkling character, always retained within the classic mold, this was a performance to be remembered.

Arthur Schnabel was the pianist in the playing of Beethoven's G major concerto. He played his scales and passage work evenly and well. The middle movement is the most poetic in the work, and here the pianist had a better tonal proportion than the conductor, since, despite the contrast that Beethoven indicates, the forte strokes of the orchestra, against the murmurs of the piano, were disproportionately loud. We have heard this concerto played in more poetic fashion.

8. Herald Mar. 31

SYMPHONY GIVES ITS 20TH CONCERT

Bruno Walter Is Conductor; Arthur Schnabel, Pianist

By PHILIP HALE

The 20th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Bruno Walter conducted as a guest. He arranged this program: Weber, Overture to "Euryanthe"; Mozart, Symphony, D major (K. 385); Beethoven, Piano Concerto, G major, No. 4; Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegels Merry Pranks." The pianist was Arthur Schnabel.

When Arthur Nikisch rehearsed for the first time the Boston Symphony orchestra, he marvelled at the perfection of the instrument which had been fashioned by Mr. Gericke, and he exclaimed: "All I have to do is to poetize."

Mr. Walter, coming to Boston, found the orchestra that had been created and moulded by Mr. Monteux into a plastic, euphonious, superb instrument, ready for him to play upon.

It was evident, before he arrived, from his programs arranged for New York, Detroit and Minneapolis, that he is not anxious to make a sensation by riding foaming battle-horses. He has not announced himself in trumpet tones as a "specialist." He has not declared Beethoven or Wagner, or Brahms, or Strauss, or Mahler to be the only god, nor pointed to himself as the prophet of this or that deity. He has an enviable reputation in Europe as an interpreter, not a perverter, of Mozart. Perhaps it is characteristic of the man that he chose for Boston a symphony of Mozart that is less familiar than the immortal three; that, looking at the works of Richard Strauss, he chose an early tone poem, not a later one of thunderous speech. Add a familiar overture by Weber, and for a concerto one that is lacking in pyrotechnical display.

There is little to be said concerning the program. And, fortunately, there is little to be said in discussion of Mr. Walter's interpretation of the various pieces, for his conducting was conspicuous for its sanity. He did not attempt to bring out "hidden voices" in order to make unexpected effects; he did not take surprising liberties with rhythm or with melodic figures. Nor did he fume and rage in fortissimo passages. He was thinking more about the music than about himself or what sort of an impression he was making. The memorable feature of the afternoon was the exquisitely fine performance of Mozart's beautiful symphony. The performance of "Till Eulenspiegel" revealed a lyrically and dramatically romantic Till, not the irreverent, cynical, Puckish, obscene jester.

Mr. Walter's personality is pleasing. He evidently enjoyed the music, also the orchestra. There were no extravagant semaphoric gestures; no bodily appeals to the audience; no suggestion of "Now I'll show you how this thing should go." The performance of the orchestra was brilliant throughout, but this orchestra has contracted the habit of being bril-

[illegible] and musical pianist.

The concert will be repeated tonight. There will be no concerts next week. The program for April 13 and 14 will be as follows: Mozart, Overture to the "The Marriage of Figaro"; Foote, A Night Piece," for flute and string orchestra; D. S. Smith, "Fete Galante," for orchestra with flute obbligato; Bloch, "Schelomo" (Solomon); Jewish Rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra. Brahms, Symphony, D major, No. 2. The soloists will be Mr. Laurent, flute; Mr. Bedetti, violoncello.

WALTER CONDUCTS SYMPHONY CONCERT

Arthur Schnabel Heard in Beethoven Concerto

Yesterday afternoon for the first time in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra a guest conductor, not also a composer, conducted an entire program. The precedent was broken for Bruno Walter, who has gained a great reputation by his work in opera and concert in Vienna, Berlin, and Munich. The invitation to conduct this week's concerts came from the trustees of the orchestra, with the concurrence of Mr Monteux, who yesterday afternoon was able to sit in the balcony and listen to the concert free from responsibility for it. His applause, like that of the audience in general, was cordial, both for Mr Walter and for the soloist, Arthur Schnabel, who also made his first Boston appearance.

Mr Walter's program included Weber's "Euryanthe" overture; Mozart's D major symphony, numbered 385 in Koechel's thematic index; Beethoven's fourth piano concerto, in G major; and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel." It tested his versatility, and proved him a conductor with far-reaching musical sympathies.

Clarity, elegance, and rhythmic energy seemed yesterday the distinctive qualities of Mr Walter's conducting. He has a musician's instinct for the structure of the music he interprets, whether it be Mozart or Strauss. Every theme is clearly enunciated if, and only if, it is part of pattern in sound the composer is weaving. Mr Walter's nuances, his elegances might come in time to seem stereotyped, because so many of them depend upon sudden, and rather obvious, contrasts of soft and loud. For his rhythmic subleties, however, there can be nothing but praise. Such dynamics are rare among public performers of music.

His Mozart brought out the finest qualities of the Boston orchestra. By a quiet and dignified exercise of personal authority he kept the audience from interrupting with applause between the movements, something in itself no small artistic triumph. The beautiful tone, subtle phrasing, and exquisite shadings of dynamic contrast in the performance of this symphony were memorable. The andante in particular had a beauty beyond words.

In Weber's overture the pianissimo middle section was too soft and subdued for so large a hall. The "allegro con molto fuoco" more than lived up to Weber's directions. Yet there was more brilliance than poetry about the whole overture.

Beethoven's beautiful concerto proved Arthur Schnabel to be an extraordinarily fine pianist, with virtuoso technique and musical imagination. Mr Walter and the orchestra supplied a finely wrought and deeply imaginative accompaniment.

Strauss' "Till" has never been given so gracefully roguish an interpretation at these concerts. There was warmth and sentiment in it, as well as the irony stressed by all conductors.

Mr Walter's unassuming bearing, his modesty in sharing applause with the orchestra, and his clean-cut use of the baton made a favorable impression. He obviously deserves his great reputation as a conductor.

GLOBE-MAR. 31

SYMPHONY PROGRAMME

The next regular pair of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will take place a week from next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 13 and 14, with two soloists, Jean Bedetti and Georges Laurent, the leading 'cellist and flute, respectively.

Pierre Monteux will also conduct Mozart's "Figaro" Overture and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

TRAV. MAR 31.

Monday evening, April 23, in Symphony Hall, the last of the supplementary series of Symphony Concerts, enlisting the full orchestra, led by Mr. Monteux and traversing a programme of familiar or semi-familiar pieces, with a "soloist," Miss Florence Macbeth, for gilding. So may those hear the Symphony Orchestra who care not for its long succession of "regular concerts" or for its excursions into untried music.

Friday afternoon, April 27, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-second of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Monteux conducting.

Saturday evening, April 28, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-second of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Monteux conducting.

Thursday evening, April 12, in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge, the eighth in the current series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Monteux conducting and Miss Marjorie Church for assisting pianist. Brahms's Second Symphony; Beethoven's third "Leonora" Overture; the Good-Friday Spell from Wagner's "Parsifal"; and Liszt's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in D major fill the programme.

Friday afternoon, April 13, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-first of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, with Mr Monteux conducting. The programme assembles Brahms's Second Symphony, the Overture to Mozart's opera, "Figaro's Wedding"; "King Solomon," Bloch's Jewish Rhapsody for Violoncello and Orchestra and two light numbers, Mr. Foote's [illegible]

[illegible] Galante," [illegible] Mr. Bedetti of the orchestra [illegible] violoncellist and Mr. Laurent the flutist.

TRANS MAR. 31

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BRUNO WALTER CONDUCTS AND CONQUERS

Assorted Gossip of a Lively Afternoon—The Man and the Leader—Romantic Ardors and Technical Felicities Through Weber's "Euryanthe"—New Vein for Strauss's "Till"—Mozart that Is Mozart

BLESSED be gossip! Deprived of it, the Symphony Orchestra might hardly flourish at home or abroad; while certainly the intermissions in its concerts would be dull, mute, intervals. Yesterday afternoon, in particular, Symphony Hall teemed with it. Why had Mr. Walter of Vienna and Munich been bidden thither as guest-conductor—incident unprecedented, since he is insignificant composer, in all the annals of the orchestra? As some said, because Mr. Gericke had once commended him to the late Mr. Higginson; whereupon the "founder and sustainer" issued edict that, were Mr. Walter ever to come to America, he should conduct at the Symphony Concerts. Others, however, averred that the invitation was first brave step in a new and liberalizing policy on the part of trustees and management. Henceforth—these voices ran—eminent conductors and eminent composers, happening to visit the United States, would be guests of the orchestra through a pair of concerts. So Mr. Enesco and Mr. Casella lately came; so now Mr. Walter was come. More were to be expected in future seasons; none would be overlooked as, by grievous error, was Strauss a year ago. May these prophetic tongues speak truly! Through long years, the Symphony Concerts have been too self-centred, self-sufficient, self-content, and so far too chary of distinguished and—what is more to the point—interesting guests. They deserve invitation; they diversify and enliven concerts that institutional routine ever threatens; not one as yet has failed to stir the public. After all, the Symphony Concerts occur in the great world, which has its customs in such things—as well as in Boston.

Therewith, however, gossip by no means paused. A year hence, Mr. Monteux's present term as conductor ends. As not a few believe, he will then prefer new work in new environment or for a while seek an agreeable leisure. There are those as well who count five years as "sufficiency" for any conductor, with any orchestra, before any continuing public. Therefore these voices predict change. By common consent Mr. Walter is a conductor of high ability and large prestige. By recorded fact, he is also a conductor "out of a job" and not indisposed, presumably, to new employment. On many a score these United States are accounted conductors' paradise. May there not—as an eminent statesman used to say—be anticipations at the back of Mr. Walter's head as he goes "a-guesting" up and down this broad land?

More bluntly went other tongues. Had the visitor—they asked—come to Boston "candidating" after the manner in old time of the reverend clergy? Was he—to cap climax—"under consideration" in high quarters as future conductor at Symphony Hall? Spokesmen for Mr. Walter were quick and earnest to acquit him of such ulterior purpose. Confidants of the august trustees were as sure that they nursed no semi-concealed intent. Indeed—the word went—they were not even pondering the future. If so, they lack common prudence, since within a year Mr. Monteux's contract expires; and conductors are neither tested, picked, engaged nor reengaged in a day, week or month. "Our present excellent conductor" was said to be their self-solacing word—smug tribute indeed to one who has so served the Symphony Orchestra in its hour of need as has Mr. Monteux, who has so restored it and so liberalized its concerts. But trustees in Boston and everywhere else are—trustees.

As man and as conductor, Mr. Walter is good to look upon. In truth, his comeliness seemed to fascinate the eyes and the tongues of elect ladies in parquet and balcony, surprised at such aspect in an "imperial and royal general music-director," aforetime in Vienna, more recently in Munich. To the eye, Mr. Walter denies his years, which are the later forties. No superfluous flesh encumbers or coarsens his well-knit figure. He moves alertly and without trace of self-consciousness or "manner." Like most illustrious executive musicians in these fortunate days, he bears himself as a man of the cultivated world, speaks in its tones, lives its usual life. Again to the eye, his head is well set upon firm shoulders. The brow is high underneath thick black hair; the eyes bright and clear; the contours both mobile and composed. By aspect, then, Mr. Walter is clearly man of mind, of will, of sensibility—all three essential qualities in a conductor. Yet more certainly, he is man of modesty. Not a hint of self-display mars his conducting. He is all for the music in hand; all for the composer; all, in such circumstances as those of Friday, for the orchestra, since to it he was quick to pass the applause lavished time and again upon him.

At rehearsal Mr. Walter is said to abound in physical tokens of the mood he would lay upon the band, of the accents and the shadings he would enjoin. Therewith, indeed, he was quick to win first the interest and next the seal of an orchestra, yesterday alert and generous to his will. Yet in public performance Mr. Walter's leading does not lack visible energy. His beat is so incisive that it almost swishes. He is as quick as Mahler, whose pupil he was, to signal entering instrument or entering choir as often as not turning directly [illegible] it. Now and again, his left arm [illegible] repose—in American fashion [illegible] "pants-pocket." Yet the [illegible]

BRUNO WALTER
Noted German artist who will be "guest" conductor of Symphony Orchestra this week.

BY OLIN DOWNES

Bruno Walter, the distinguished conductor of the Munich music festival and director in leading opera houses of Europe and Russia, arrived in Boston yesterday. As "guest" conductor he will lead the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

OBSERVES AUDIENCES

Remarking that his head was plentifully covered, which is true, he stood hatless in the March wind, being photographed, and then launched into an enthusiastic recitation of his experiences as guest conductor with other American orchestras and his impressions of his audiences.

"I don't wish," he said, "to appear to curry favor by complimenting this public, yet it is true that your orchestras are of astonishingly fine quality, as I can testify after having personally led three of them, and hearing others. I have conducted the Minneapolis, Detroit and New York Symphony Orchestras, and have listened to the Philadelphia Orchestra and other musical organizations. I have also had occasion to observe the audiences.

"The excellence of the American symphony orchestras, which would astonish European musicians who have not heard them, is readily explained. You have here, as it seems to me, great enthusiasm for symphonic music, and you have the financial resources to assemble splendid players and give them full opportunities for rehearsal.

"What is not the least matter for congratulation, you seem to have not a few men of wealth whose sincere purpose it is to improve the orchestras in which they are interested as much as possible. And these men are not isolated figures. They seem to express and represent a very great popular curiosity for good music.

"Before coming here I had always been told that music was only an accompaniment of a gay and brilliant social life in America, that it was not taken seriously for itself, but principally as a fad, or a show. This seems to me ridiculously wide of the mark. As I say, I have watched your audiences, and am quite sure that there are no more appreciative and enthusiastic listeners in the world."

Mr. Bruno Walter, who will, as guest, conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, is said to be sane; thinking more of the composer than of his own glory; not a poseur with wild gestures, wishing first of all to be seen. From his program we should say that he is conservative in his taste: Weber, Overture to "Euryanthe"; Mozart, Symphony in D major (K. 385); Beethoven, piano concerto in G major No. 4 (Arthur Schnabel, pianist); Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel." Mr. Schnabel, born in 1882, educated in Vienna, came to this country late in 1921, and gave his first recital in New York on Dec. 27 of that year.

The orchestra will be away next week. The program for the concerts of April 13, 14, is as follows: Mozart, Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"; Foote, A Night Piece for flute and string orchestra; D. S. Smith, Fete Galant for orchestra with flute obbligato; Block, "Schelomo" ("Solomon"), a Jewish Rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra, and Brahms' Symphony No. 2. The soloists will be George Laurent, flute, and Jean Bedetti, violoncellist.

HERALD-MAR. 29.

At last a piece by Ernest Bloch, already played elsewhere in Europe and America, is to be heard at the Symphony Concerts—his Rhapsody for Violoncello and Orchestra, "King Solomon," music deeply impregnated with the composer's Jewish spirit. It is announced for the Symphony Concerts of April 13 and 14, with Mr. Bedetti in the solo part. Mr. Laurent, the first flutist of the orchestra, will also be incidental soloist at these concerts—in a "Night-Piece" by Mr. Foote and a trifle by Professor Smith of Yale, entitled "Fête Galante." Mozart's Overture to his opera, "Figaro's Wedding," begins, and the Second Symphony of Brahms ends, the programme.

Brahms's Symphony will likewise be played at the concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Cambridge on Thursday evening, April 12. Along with it stand Beethoven's third "Leonora" Overture the Good-Friday music from Wagner's "Parsifal" and Liszt's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in D major—the second and less often heard of the pair. Miss Church will take the solo-part.

TRANS - MAR. 30.

An all-Chopin program lends additional interest and importance to the only appearance in Boston this season of Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist, who will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 8.

The next regular pair of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will take place a week from next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 13 and 14, with two soloists, Jean Bedetti and Georges Laurent, the leading 'cellist and flute respectively.

AMER - MAR. 31.

Advertiser Mar. 31

PAGE EIGHTEEN

GERMAN WEEK AT SYMPHONY

By E. F. HARKINS

This is German week at the Symphony concerts, contrasting with some of the French weeks.

BRUNO WALTER

Bruno Walter, noted in Berlin, Munich and Vienna, appears as guest conductor. Mr. Monteux, who yielded the baton to him, enjoyed yesterday's concert from a balcony seat. Mr. Walter, experienced both in opera and symphony affairs, is paying his first visit to the United States. New York and Detroit have also welcomed him as guest conductor. The greeting he got yesterday at Symphony Hall was hearty in the extreme. No audience could have been more courteous, even friendly. A similar welcome was extended to Arthus Schnabel pupil of the almost fabulous Leschetizky, who is making his Boston debut. Among Continental pianists he is especially noted as an interpreter of Brahms.

Mr. Walter chose a largely classic program, embracing Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, the Mozart symphony in D major and Richard Strauss' monumental rondo, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." Mr. Schnabel's choice of works was the Beethoven concerto in G major, opus 58, one of the most beautiful compositions in the Beethoven catalogue.

Although celebrated at home for his readings of the classics, Mr. Walter's least impressive efforts were made in the Mozart symphony. No one has been quite so successful with Mozart masterpieces in Boston in recent years as the Italian Toscanini and the French Monteux. The German manner is too brusque for Mozart; and Mr. Walter is emphatically brusque in his style of conducting and in his readings. Weber's intensely heroic overture and Strauss' fantastic piece—"an hour of new music at the madhouse," as Debussy termed it—are better suited to the vigorous Walter methods. Yet, under the distinguished guest's direction, the orchestra fairly vied with the soloist in the Beethoven number. It was a noble performance, quite worthy of the high reputation of the two visitors.

Post Mar. 31

BO

WALTER CONDUCTS SYMPHONY

Most Gifted of Leaders of the German School

BY OLIN DOWNES

Bruno Walter, a musical personality, who made himself immediately felt, both by the orchestra and the audience, appeared as "guest" conductor at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. This was in accordance with the policy of the orchestra, which on a few occasions has invited distinguished musicians to direct it for certain concerts. Mr. Walter as "guest" had already conducted performances by the New York, Detroit and Minneapolis Symphony orchestras. His reception yesterday must have pleased him. He was applauded to the echo, and repeatedly recalled—a welcome fully deserved.

FIERY AND ROMANTIC

Weber's Euryanthe overture sounded [illegible] and [illegible] young [illegible] overflowing with enthusiasm and conviction were leading his first performance of it. Everyone tingled to the head-long rush and flourish of the opening, and the strange middle episode for the strings—the episode imagined by the composer in connection with a supernatural scene in the opera—seemed wholly new and mysterious, and as poignant as the voice of Astarte in Byron's Manfred. A superbly fiery and romantic interpretation that not only revived, but recreated a well-worn composition.

Mr. Walter's rhythm very striking, very much a living, breathing thing. "Breathing" is the word. When a musical phrase is truly felt by the conductor, and when the orchestra feels it with him, the orchestra breathes, and this natural, deep rhythmical respiration of the instruments is one of the inalienable qualities of a good performance. Then the conductor has ceased to merely beat time. Then his baton is a pulse-beat which affects every part of the orchestral organism. So that in Mr. Walter's hand the Mozart symphony, wholly classic in form and style, was nevertheless full of a living, constantly changing beauty.

This symphony—the symphony in D major, number 35 (Kochel 385), was performed with an orchestra reduced to 48 players, an orchestra proportionate to Mozart's period and scoring. The effect was admirable. In brilliant passages the strings would play as brilliantly as they liked, without holding themselves in, and yet keeping a splendid clarity of effect, and balancing perfectly with the wind instruments. Then there was the conductor's excellent control of dynamics, and, even within the restricted range of sonorities, the wide distinction between his pianissimos and his fortes.

In the minuet Mr. Walter took the deliberate pace that this dance form demands—doubtless the pace of Mozart's day. It was slower than that taken by other conductors in our memory, and when the repeat came it did seem a little too deliberate. For times change, we think and feel more rapidly than we did a couple of centuries ago, and whether it is deplorable or not we can't help ourselves. But in its singing, sparkling character, always retained within the classic mold, this was a performance to be remembered.

Arthur Schnabel was the pianist in the playing of Beethoven's G major concerto. He played his scales and passage work evenly and well. The middle movement is the most poetic in the work, and here the pianist had a better tonal proportion than the conductor, since, despite the contrast that Beethoven indicates, the forte strokes of the orchestra, against the murmurs of the piano, were disproportionately loud. We have heard this concerto played in more poetic fashion.

---

8 [illegible] Mar. 31

SYMPHONY GIVES ITS 20TH CONCERT

Bruno Walter Is Conductor; Arthur Schnabel, Pianist

By PHILIP HALE

The 20th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Bruno Walter conducted as a guest. He arranged this program: Weber, Overture to "Euryanthe"; Mozart, Symphony, D major (K. 385); Beethoven, Piano Concerto, G major, No. 4; Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegels Merry Pranks." The pianist was Arthur Schnabel.

When Arthur Nikisch rehearsed for the first time the Boston Symphony orchestra, he marvelled at the perfection of the instrument which had been fashioned by Mr. Gericke, and he exclaimed: "All I have to do is to poetize."

Mr. Walter, coming to Boston, found the orchestra that had been created and moulded by Mr. Monteux into a plastic, euphonious, superb instrument, ready for him to play upon.

It was evident, before he arrived, from his programs arranged for New York, Detroit and Minneapolis, that he is not anxious to make a sensation by riding foaming battle-horses. He has not announced himself in trumpet tones as a "specialist." He has not declared Beethoven or Wagner, or Brahms, or Strauss, or Mahler to be the only god, nor pointed to himself as the prophet of this or that deity. He has an enviable reputation in Europe as an interpreter, not a perverter, of Mozart. Perhaps it is characteristic of the man that he chose for Boston a symphony of Mozart that is less familiar than the immortal three; that, looking at the works of Richard Strauss, he chose an early tone poem, not a later one of thunderous speech. Add a familiar overture by Weber, and for a concerto one that is lacking in pyrotechnical display.

There is little to be said concerning the program. And, fortunately, there is little to be said in discussion of Mr. Walter's interpretation of the various pieces, for his conducting was conspicuous for its sanity. He did not attempt to bring out "hidden voices" in order to make unexpected effects; he did not take surprising liberties with rhythm or with melodic figures. Nor did he fume and rage in fortissimo passages. He was thinking more about the music than about himself or what sort of an impression he was making. The memorable feature of the afternoon was the exquisitely fine performance of Mozart's beautiful symphony. The performance of "Till Eulenspiegel" revealed a lyrically and dramatically romantic Till, not the irreverent, cynical, Puckish, obscene jester.

Mr. Walter's personality is pleasing. He evidently enjoyed the music, also the orchestra. There were no extravagant semaphoric gestures; no bodily appeals to the audience; no suggestion of "Now I'll show you how this thing should go." The performance of the orchestra was brilliant throughout, but this orchestra has contracted the habit of being brilliant.

[illegible] first time, is evidently a well-equipped and musical pianist.

The concert will be repeated tonight. There will be no concerts next week. The program for April 13 and 14 will be as follows: Mozart, Overture to the "The Marriage of Figaro"); Foote, A Night Piece," for flute and string orchestra; D. S. Smith, "Fete Galante," for orchestra with flute obbligato; Bloch, "Schelomo" (Solomon); Jewish Rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra. Brahms, Symphony, D major, No. 2. The soloists will be Mr. Laurent, flute; Mr. Bedetti, violoncello.

WALTER CONDUCTS SYMPHONY CONCERT

Arthur Schnabel Heard in Beethoven Concerto

Yesterday afternoon for the first time in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra a guest conductor, not also a composer, conducted an entire program. The precedent was broken for Bruno Walter, who has gained a great reputation by his work in opera and concert in Vienna, Berlin, and Munich. The invitation to conduct this week's concerts came from the trustees of the orchestra, with the concurrence of Mr Monteux, who yesterday afternoon was able to sit in the balcony and listen to the concert free from responsibility for it. His applause, like that of the audience in general, was cordial, both for Mr Walter and for the soloist, Arthur Schnabel, who also made his first Boston appearance.

Mr Walter's program included Weber's "Euryanthe" overture; Mozart's D major symphony, numbered 385 in Koechel's thematic index: Beethoven's fourth piano concerto, in G major; and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel." It tested his versatility, and proved him a conductor with far-reaching musical sympathies.

Clarity, elegance, and rhythmic energy seemed yesterday the distinctive qualities of Mr Walter's conducting. He has a musician's instinct for the structure of the music he interprets, whether it be Mozart or Strauss. Every theme is clearly enunciated if, and only if, it is part of pattern in sound the composer is weaving. Mr Walter's nuances, his elegances might come in time to seem stereotyped, because so many of them depend upon sudden, and rather obvious, contrasts of soft and loud. For his rhythmic subleties, however, there can be nothing but praise. Such dynamics are rare among public performers of music.

His Mozart brought out the finest qualities of the Boston orchestra. By a quiet and dignified exercise of personal authority he kept the audience from interrupting with applause between the movements, something in itself no small artistic triumph. The beautiful tone, subtle phrasing, and exquisite shadings of dynamic contrast in the performance of this symphony were memorable. The andante in particular had a beauty beyond words.

In Weber's overture the pianissimo middle section was too soft and subdued for so large a hall. The "allegro con molto fuoco" more than lived up to Weber's directions. Yet there was more brilliance than poetry about the whole overture.

Beethoven's beautiful concerto proved Arthur Schnabel to be an extraordinarily fine pianist, with virtuoso technique and musical imagination. Mr Walter and the orchestra supplied a finely wrought and deeply imaginative accompaniment.

Strauss' "Till" has never been given so gracefully roguish an interpretation at these concerts. There was warmth and sentiment in it, as well as the irony stressed by all conductors.

Mr Walter's unassuming bearing, his modesty in sharing applause with the orchestra, and his clean-cut use of the baton made a favorable impression. He obviously deserves his great reputation as a conductor.

GLOBE-MAR. 31

SYMPHONY PROGRAMME

The next regular pair of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will take place a week from next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 13 and 14, with two soloists, Jean Bedetti and Georges Laurent, the leading 'cellist and flute, respectively.

Pierre Monteux will also conduct Mozart's "Figaro" Overture and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

TRAV. MAR 31.

Monday evening, April 23, in Symphony Hall, the last of the supplementary series of Symphony Concerts, enlisting the full orchestra, led by Mr. Monteux and traversing a programme of familiar or semi-familiar pieces, with a "soloist," Miss Florence Macbeth, for gilding. So may those hear the Symphony Orchestra who care not for its long succession of "regular concerts" or for its excursions into untried music.

Friday afternoon, April 27, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-second of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Monteux conducting.

Saturday evening, April 28, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-second of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Monteux conducting.

Thursday evening, April 12, in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge, the eighth in the current series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Monteux conducting and Miss Marjorie Church for assisting pianist. Brahms's Second Symphony; Beethoven's third "Leonora" Overture; the Good-Friday Spell from Wagner's "Parsifal"; and Liszt's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in D major fill the programme.

Friday afternoon, April 13, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-first of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra, with Mr Monteux conducting. The programme assembles Brahms's Second Symphony the Overture to Mozart's opera, "Figaro's Wedding"; "King Solomon," Bloch's Jewish Rhapsody for Violoncello and Orchestra; and two light numbers, Mr. Foote's "Night-Piece" and [illegible] Smith [illegible] "Fete Galante," each with solo part for flute. Mr. Bedetti of the orchestra will be the violoncellist and Mr. Laurent the flutist.

TRANS MAR. 31.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BRUNO WALTER CONDUCTS AND CONQUERS

Assorted Gossip of a Lively Afternoon—The Man and the Leader—Romantic Ardors and Technical Felicities Through Weber's "Euryanthe"—New Vein for Strauss's "Till"—Mozart that Is Mozart

BLESSED be gossip! Deprived of it, the Symphony Orchestra might hardly flourish at home or abroad; while certainly the intermissions in its concerts would be dull, mute, intervals. Yesterday afternoon, in particular, Symphony Hall teemed with it. Why had Mr. Walter of Vienna and Munich been bidden thither as guest-conductor—incident unprecedented, since he is insignificant composer, in all the annals of the orchestra? As some said, because Mr. Gericke had once commended him to the late Mr. Higginson; whereupon the "founder and sustainer" issued edict that, were Mr. Walter ever to come to America, he should conduct at the Symphony Concerts. Others, however, averred that the invitation was first brave step in a new and liberalizing policy on the part of trustees and management. Henceforth—these voices ran—eminent conductors and eminent composers, happening to visit the United States, would be guests of the orchestra through a pair of concerts. So Mr. Enesco and Mr. Casella lately came; so now Mr. Walter was come. More were to be expected in future seasons; none would be overlooked as, by grievous error, was Strauss a year ago. May these prophetic tongues speak truly! Through long years, the Symphony Concerts have been too self-centred, self-sufficient, self-content, and so far too chary of distinguished and—what is more to the point—interesting guests. They deserve invitation; they diversify and enliven concerts that institutional routine ever threatens; not one as yet has failed to stir the public. After all, the Symphony Concerts occur in the great world, which has its customs in such things—as well as in Boston.

Therewith, however, gossip by no means paused. A year hence, Mr. Monteux's present term as conductor ends. As not a few believe, he will then prefer new work in new environment or for a while seek an agreeable leisure. There are those as well who count five years as "sufficiency" for any conductor, with any orchestra, before any continuing public. Therefore these voices predict change. By common consent Mr. Walter is a conductor of high ability and large prestige. By recorded fact, he is also a conductor "out of a job" and not indisposed, presumably, to new employment. On many a score these United States are accounted conductors' paradise. May there not—as an eminent statesman used to say—be anticipations at the back of Mr. Walter's head as he goes "a-guesting" up and down this broad land?

More bluntly went other tongues. Had the visitor—they asked—come to Boston "candidating" after the manner in old time of the reverend clergy? Was he—to cap climax—"under consideration" in high quarters as future conductor at Symphony Hall? Spokesmen for Mr. Walter were quick and earnest to acquit him of such ulterior purpose. Confidants of the august trustees were as sure that they nursed no semi-concealed intent. Indeed—the word went—they were not even pondering the future. If so, they lack common prudence, since within a year Mr. Monteux's contract expires; and conductors are neither tested, picked, engaged nor reëngaged in a day, week or month. "Our present excellent conductor" was said to be their self-solacing word—smug tribute indeed to one who has so served the Symphony Orchestra in its hour of need as has Mr. Monteux, who has so restored it and so liberalized its concerts. But trustees in Boston and everywhere else are—trustees.

As man and as conductor, Mr. Walter is good to look upon. In truth, his comeliness seemed to fascinate the eyes and the tongues of elect ladies in parquet and balcony, surprised at such aspect in an "imperial and royal general music-director," aforetime in Vienna, more recently in Munich. To the eye, Mr. Walter denies his years, which are the later forties. No superfluous flesh encumbers or coarsens his well-knit figure. He moves alertly and without trace of self-consciousness or "manner." Like most illustrious executive musicians in these fortunate days, he bears himself as a man of the cultivated world, speaks in its tones, lives its usual life. Again to the eye, his head is well set upon firm shoudlers. The brow is high underneath thick black hair; the eyes bright and clear; the contours both mobile and composed. By aspect, then, Mr. Walter is clearly man of mind, of will, of sensibility—all three essential qualities in a conductor. Yet more certainly, he is man of modesty. Not a hint of self-display mars his conducting. He is all for the music in hand; all for the composer; all, in such circumstances as those of Friday, for the orchestra, since to it he was quick to pass the applause lavished time and again upon him.

At rehearsal Mr. Walter is said to abound in physical tokens of the mood he would lay upon the band, of the accents and the shadings he would enjoin. Therewith, indeed, he was quick to win first the interest and next the zeal of an orchestra, yesterday alert and generous to his will. Yet in public performance Mr. Walter's leading does not lack visible energy. His beat is so incisive that it almost swishes. He is as quick as Mahler, whose pupil he was, to signal entering instrument or entering cho[illegible] as often as not turning directly [illegible] it. Now and again, his left arm [illegible] repose—in American fashion [illegible] "pants-pocket." Yet the [illegible] is lifting arm and hand [illegible]

[illegible] and enfolding motion, as though he were suddenly gathering the music to himself and outpouring it upon the orchestra. Of the audience Mr. Walter, conducting, seems unaware. The reviewers of New York reported him as, bodily, a quiet leader. Yesterday, however, he abounded in visible energies.

By inclination, practice and prestige Mr. Walter is a "classicist" and so, yesterday, he chose and ordered his programme. It began with an Overture and an Overture of Weber—stock-piece and procedure, if ever there were such at a symphony concert. He proceeded with a Symphony—on this occasion "early" rather than conventional Mozart. Then ensued the Concerto—out of Beethoven, with Mr. Schnabel of Vienna, Berlin and now New York to play the solo-part. For ending, Strauss's tone-poem of "Till Eulenspiegel"—a quarter-century old and by this time also classic piece as "modern classics" go. For introduction to Mr. Walter's new abilities exercised upon these old pieces, his version of the Overture to "Euryanthe" abounded equally in romantic ardors and technical felicities. He was not literal with the music; yet every detail of form, progress, color, stood clear—not in detached revelation or separate emphasis, but as part of a recreated, changeful, cumulated design. He was vivid with rhythm; he was keen-eared for sensuous tonal quality and on both scores the orchestra was quick and sensitive. He courted contrasts, especially in the play, at the beginning, of the marching and the musing motiv; he softened to a whisper the celebrated Largo of the muted strings; then, through the final measures sent the whole orchestra racing and aflame. These are the vigors and the virtues of a romantic music such as the Overture to "Euryanthe" intrinsically is. They are also the means to the impetuous course, the florid accent and color, the emotional and tonal exuberance, which were Weber's brilliance. Here, then, from Mr. Walter was Weber full-panoplied in the qualities by which his music endures.

Like romantic energy and like technical finesse distinguished Mr. Walter's version of Strauss's "Till." Bostonian ears are accustomed to a sardonic or an ironic "reading" of the rogue's tune. Dr. Muck for example, was all for the sharpest incisiveness, the most mocking mood with Till's tonal pranks and fate. Eulenspiegel cheeped and grinned, teetered and pounced out of the music. With a leer he rollicked; a craven, he faced the hanging judges. To Dr. Muck, the whole music was an intellectual exercise in the ironies. Not quite so sharp has been the edge that Mr. Monteux laid upon the music; not quite so acid his notion of Till's tonal fleers and japes. Yet he has continued essentially ironic.

Differently minded seems Mr. Walter. For him Till is buoyant and bumptious figure of mediæval folk-tale, running course through comical, yet romantic, adventures. To Mr. Walter's thinking, warmth, gusto, are the essentials of the music. Loud, then, does he make the tumults of the market-place upset by Till; ardent is the fellow's tortuitous love-making; out thrust his tongue and his loud voice at the pedants; solemn and sonorous function of justice is the trial. So to regard Strauss's personage and so to treat Strauss's music is to give both a comic unction, a romantic warmth, a frolicsome voice new and strange upon ears hitherto circumscribed in the ironies. Yet Mr. Walter was as keen-edged as need be in Strauss's first tonal etching of the scamp; while he missed none of the folk-song flavor in the subtly simple measures of little prologue and little epilogue. At every turn, moreover, his technical clarity and sensibility were as fine as Strauss's own.

The Concerto—the fourth of Beethoven in G major—gave the conductor little opportunity. By this time there was full reason to expect that he would be limpid and pliant of melodic line, keen to rhythm, plastic with accent and modulation, fine-eared with euphonies, even-handed with running figures, sedulous of becoming tone, alert to the assisting pianist. All these things was Mr. Walter and, no more could he be in a music so withered and of its time—but of no other—as the first movement and the finale. Yet in the slow song his manifest liking for graphic contrasts tended to over-bear the pianist and to inflate the music. Mr. Walter would have it rumble ominously where Beethoven was content to let it murmur forbiddingly. Against it, the piano, though finally conquerer, could do no more—relatively—than whisper. More than the conductor, Mr. Schnabel as pianist, occupied the listening ear. He is sound and scholarly, he is able and artful in the routined German sense. He also commands in the treble of his instrument, and in running figures or ornament, a curiously crystalline, glittering, bell-like quality of tone. Otherwise his playing lacks individual flavor. No doubt he is excellent teacher. Mr. Schnabel's tribe, which is also the tribe of Bachaus, always is.

The reward was the little Symphony of Mozart in C major, piece favored of Dr. Muck, unheard here since his day. In it Mr. Walter was most the Walter of the operas of Mozart, as one or another listener had heard him and them in the summer festivals of Munich. The symphony is a light, simple, altogether charming music. The conductor who analyzed it before his hearers would break it as upon the wheel of his pedantry. The conductor who tried to invest it with energy and emphasis, with "feeling" and mood in the more modern sense of the words, would do violence equally to Mozart and to his own intelligence. Mr. Walter, being clear-sighted and sure-footed, stumbled into neither pitfall. He reduced the orchestra until it was neither heavy-paced nor clumsy in inflection; but as light of tone and as supple of incidence as the music itself. He chose a pace that animated and characterized each movement. With deft hand, quick sensibility and light fancy, he laid on every shading. Like lace-work in tones ran the little symphony and over it, like sunlight and breeze through the open door upon the lace-[illegible], played the infinite diversity, the [illegible] susceptibility, the exhaustless [illegible] the pure song for the pure [illegible] that is Mozart of the lasting [illegible] the substance, the [illegible] Mr. Walter all evoked. Mona Lisa herself smiles not more fascinatingly. H. T. P.

TRANS. MAR. 31

SUN

New York City

MAR 31 1923

Pablo Casals will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the evening concert of the last pair this season, which will take place next Thursday, April 5. He will play in Schumann's violincello concerto. Pierre Monteux will also present Schubert's "unfinished" symphony, Debussy's suite, "Printemps" and Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

On Saturday afternoon, April 7, the program will include three dance numbers by Gretry-Mottl, Debussy's prelude to the "Afternoon of a Faun," Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony.

FROM MAR 31 1923

Globe

NEW YORK CITY

Coming Concerts.

Boston, New York, and Philadelphia each will be represented by one or more symphony concerts here next week. Mr. Stokowski and the Philadelphians will present Schönberg's "Kammersymphonie" at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, besides Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony and Debussy's nocturnes "Nuages" and "Fêtes."

Pablo Casals will be the soloist at a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday evening at Carnegie Hall playing Schumann's violincello concerto. Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Debussy's suite "Printemps," and Wagner's "Rienzi" overture will complete the programme. Mr. Monteux will also conduct on Saturday afternoon at the same hall "Three Dance Numbers" by Gretry-Mottl, Debussy's prelude to the "Afternoon of a Faun," Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony.

At its last Friday afternoon concert in Carnegie Hall this season the Philharmonic Society, Mr. Mengelberg, conducting, will present Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, and Schelling's "A Victory Ball." Josef Lhevinne will be soloist at another concert under Mr. Mengelberg on Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall, playing Liszt's E flat piano concerto. Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, the "Leonore" overture, and Liszt's "Les Préludes" will comprise the orchestral selections.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 31 1923

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will close its present New York season with concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon.

Pablo Casals will appear as soloist at the Thursday concert, and at the Saturday concert Pierre Monteux will introduce a novelty by Respighi—the "Ballad of the Gnomides."

The remaining numbers for the evening concert will include Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Debussy's Suite "Printemps," Wagner's overture to "Rienzi." Casals will be heard in Schumann's concerto. For the Saturday concert Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and a suite from Gretry.

From APR 1 1923
JOURNAL
Providence, R. I.

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE FINAL CONCERT OF SEASON

Harold Bauer to be Soloist April 10 at Infantry Hall.

The final Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season will be given in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, April 10, at 8:15, with Harold Bauer, noted pianist, as soloist.

The symphony chosen by Pierre Monteux for the occasion will be the Sixth by Tchaikovsky, known as the "Pathetic," the masterpiece of the great Russian, which embodies the deep suffering of an oppressed nation.

Harold Bauer will appear to the finest advantage in the "Emperor" Concerto, No. 5, by Beethoven, the score of which in general scope and importance ranks with the nine symphonies of the great master. The closing number will be Enesco's brilliant score, the Roumanian Rhapsody.

From APR 1 1923
JOURNAL
Providence, R. I.

Last Symphony for Season

With Harold Bauer as soloist, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the last concert of its season here in Infantry Hall a week from this coming Tuesday.

Mr. Monteux has chosen for his principal number Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" symphony, his last symphony and perhaps his masterpiece. It is considered one of the most eloquent and characteristic artistic expressions of the Russian race. Idealism, disillusion and despair are all voiced in the melodies which Tschaikowski uses in this magnificent work.

Considered equal to a symphony in scope and importance is the so-called "Emperor" concerto of Beethoven, No. 5, in E-flat major, in which Mr. Bauer will play with the orchestra. The final number on the programme is Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, having a score based on the folk melodies of the Roumanian composer's own people.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
CITIZEN
ISSUE OF
APR 1 1923

PABLO CASALS WITH BOSTON ORCHESTRA

With Pablo Casals as soloist, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will end its season next Friday evening, April 6, in the Academy of Music. A notable symphonic program will be made additionally interesting by the appearance as soloist of Pablo Casals, the noted 'cellist.

The symphony will be the sixth of Tchaikovsky, the "Pathetic." This masterpiece of the great Russian, which embodies the age-long suffering of an oppressed nation, has probably done as much as any single work of art to bring the true Slavic temperament in touch with the Western world.

Casals will be heard in the solo part of Schumann's lovely concerto for the violoncello, which indeed should be transfigured by the unbelievable skill and unrivalled artistry of this great master of his beautiful instrument.

A novelty of considerable interest will be the Ballad of the Gnomides, a descriptive fantasy for full modern orchestra by Respighi, the noted living Italian composer who, by virtue of his "Fountains of Rome," is ranked in the forefront of the composers of the nation.

Pierre Monteux will close the evening and the season with Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

NEW YORK
TIMES
APR 1 1923

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, soon completing its forty-second year, will be heard for the last time this season in Carnegie Hall on Thursday and Saturday, as well as Friday in Brooklyn. Mr. Monteux's programs are as follows:

THURSDAY EVENING, CARNEGIE HALL.

Unfinished symphony	Schubert
Concerto for 'cello, op. 129 Pablo Casals.	Schumann
"Printemps" suite	Debussy
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner

FRIDAY EVENING, BKLYN. ACADEMY.

"Pathetic" symphony	Tschaikovsky
"Ballad of the Gnomides"	Respighi
Concerto for 'cello Mr. Casals.	Schumann
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner

SATURDAY EVENING, CARNEGIE HALL.

Dances, "Cephale et Procris"	Gretry
"Afternoon of a Faun"	Debussy
"Ballad of the Gnomides"	Respighi
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"	Beethoven

Next season's Boston Symphony concerts have already been definitely arranged in both boroughs, the dates being the three-day periods—Nov. 30-Dec. 2, 1923; Jan. 4-6, Feb. 1-3, March 14-16 and April 4-6, 1924.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD
APR 1 1923

Pablo Casals will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the last evening concert of the society's New York series, on Thursday evening in Carnegie Hall. He will play Schumann's cello concerto. Pierre Monteux will present Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Debussy's suite "Printemps," and Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi." The closing Saturday matinee program will consist of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," three dance numbers of Gretry-Mottl and Debussy's prelude to the "Afternoon of a Faun."

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
APR 1 1923

Next Friday evening, April 6, at 8:15, in the Academy of Music, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will end its present Brooklyn season with a splendid program in which Pablo Casals, the famous master of the cello, will appear as soloist. Pierre Monteux will conduct as the principal number on this program the "Pathetic" Symphony of Tschaikowsky.

A notable novelty at this concert will be the Ballad of the Gnomides by Ottorino Respighi, one of the most brilliant of the younger generation of Italian composers. This score, which is fantastic and descriptive in the highest degree, utilizes the full modern orchestra.

Casals will play with the orchestra in Schumann's concerto for his instrument. The evening will close with Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

PITTSBURG
PA.
GAZETTE TIMES
APR 1 1923

Boston Symphony Rumors.

Perhaps nowhere does rumor rise oftener or spread more rapidly than in the field of music. Recently it was whispered about that the Boston Symphony Orchestra would not give any New York concerts next season. Efforts to trace the source of this inaccurate piece of gossip were unsuccessful. One publication, however, was unfortunately led into publishing the report and that resulted in a deluge of inquiries—many emanating from people who had attended the Boston Symphonie's Carnegie Hall concerts for years and years.

While it is true that for several successsive seasons the old-time vogue for this series of orchestral programs has waned there still continues for them a large and enthusiastic body of supporters. The Philadelphia Orchestra has slipped into the seat of popularity formerly held, and for so long, by the Hub musicians. But the Bostonians are gradually coming back.

From APR 2 1923
EVENING MAIL
New York City

MUSIC NOTES

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will close its present New York season with concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon.

Pablo Casals will appear as soloist at the Thursday concert, and at the Saturday concert Pierre Monteux will introduce a novelty by Respighi—the "Ballad of the Gnomides."

The remaining numbers for the evening concert will include Schubert's "Unfinished symphony, Debussy's Suite "Printempts," Wagner's overture to "Rienzi." Casals will be heard in Schumann's concerto. For the Saturday concert, Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and a suite from Gretry.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

At the Symphony concerts on April 13 and 14, Jean Bedetti will be heard in Ernest Bloch's rhapsody, "Solomon," and Georges Laurent in "A Night Piece" by Arthur Foote and "Fete Galante" by David Stanley Smith. Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture and Brahms' second symphony are the other numbers.

ADVT'R. APR. 1.

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

MR. WALTER TIMELY BREAKS BAD CUSTOM

A Truce to Applause Between the Divisions of Symphonies—Again He Excels with Mozart and Strauss—The Handel and Haydn Society Wastes Its Virtues—John Steel in the Tracks of McCormack—Travellers

TWO audiences at Symphony Hall—the one on Friday afternoon; the other on Saturday evening—readily took hint from Mr. Walter conducting and stirred not a finger of applause between the movements of a Symphony by Mozart. If they will so refrain for a visiting conductor on special occasion, why should they not do likewise in the regular course of the Symphony Concerts and without restraining gesture from Mr. Monteux? Like every other conductor that sets music above self, like every listener of taste, sensibility and measured manners, he deprecates these interrupting and distracting plaudits at momentary pauses in a continuing music. In Germany, in Austria, in Central and Northern Europe generally, this custom [illegible] fluous clapping is [illegible] fast waning in London under example the Queen's Hall Concerts. No farther away than Cincinnati, it has disappeared America. Forthwith it should vanish Symphony Hall, long the seat—otherwise of the best of manners in orchestral concerts. A Symphony discerningly played may be as pauseless as Mr. Walter aptly made his Mozart. It may advisedly exact longer halts, as, say, in "The Eroica" of Beethoven or "The Pathetic" of Chaikovsky. Yet with no Symphony whatever, need or should these suspensive instants become the heyday of irrepressible clappers. When the music is rounded and done, the heartier the applause the better; while the keener is the conductor's and the players' sense of satisfaction. The habit is all—and the custom of engrossed silence is really the finer appreciation of music and performance. Mr. Walter has set it to evidently willing audiences. Maybe Mr. Monteux has now only to enjoin and continue it. Visiting conductors are tonic.

Again, on Saturday, to an absorbed and applauding company Mr. Walter outdid expectation with his little Symphony of Mozart and added new excitements to his version of Strauss's "Till." Since he seems to have found the golden mean between an orchestra so large that it is heavy-footed with Mozart and an orchestra so small that, in a spacious hall, it strips the music of sonority, it is worth while to tabulate his band choir by choir, viz.:

Twelve First Violins,
Eight Second Violins,
Six Violas,
Five Violoncellos,
Four Double-Basses,
Two Flutes,
Two Oboes,
Two Clarinets,
Two Bassoons,
Two Horns,
Two Trumpets,
Two Kettle-Drums.

With these forty-eight voices, Mr. Walter approximated the orchestra for which Mozart more or less consciously wrote. With them, moreover, he gained the fine clear, bright-edged sonorities which were body and glow to the little Symphony. With the forty-eight again, he could thread the orchestral tone into the gossamer of the Andante; into the filagree of the racing Finale. Since his band was the virtuosi of the Boston Orchestra he and it could run even-handed with Mozart's flying figures and supple modulations, lose not a grace of his inflections and accents, keep his tone pellucid and sun-flecked. A light and lambent fire gleams out of the first and the last movements of this little Symphony. Mr. Walter and such an orchestra rekindled it. The Minuet is courtliness itself and Mr. Walter and the forty-eight were stout enough to carry it with state and light enough to deck it with elegance. The Andante sighs now and then with the pensive Mozartian melancholy. Mr. Walter never forgot the charm of that mood and the grace of that gesture.

And an hour later, the conductor was whipping "Till Eulenspiegel" to a wildness that never before has the music known in Bostonian ears. For once the rogue romped and scuffled, preened, paraded, snapped and shouted in a robustious vigor that the persistent ironists have well nigh squeezed out of the tone-poem. The climax of the rascal shook the ceiling, yet was as clear and sharp as the electric lamps upon it. Now Strauss spent a wild youth. It flames out of "Don Juan." Why may it not also flare out of "Till?"

H. T. P.

Incidents and Prospects

The Symphony Orchestra departed today on its last journey of the season. This evening it will play in Albany with a rising young pianist, Edward Morris, as "assisting artist." Tomorrow evening it will be heard in Schenectady, and on Wednesday in Utica. Thereafter follow the last of its monthly concerts—for the season—in New York and Brooklyn. In two of them Mr. Casals will share, playing Schumann's Concerto for Violoncello. In both cities likewise Mr. Monteux has set on his programmes Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomes." For the rest repertory pieces fill them.

TRANS. APR. 2

PROCTOR'S HALL

The Franklin Concert.

All is in readiness for the long anticipated appearance of the Boston Symphony orchestra of over one hundred musicians, under the brilliant leadership of Pierre Monteux, and with the American pianist, Edward Morris, soloist of the occasion, at Harmanus Bleecker hall to-night. It will be a superb treat from every viewpoint and it is pleasing to know that Albanians have risen to the importance of the visit in a splendid manner. Members of the orchestra arrived in this city this afternoon, coming from Boston in special cars attached to the Twentieth Century, and their presence is already felt in places of interest that the members are visiting. The program of the concert, as published in the Journal of Saturday, meets with the finest sort of approval, the consensus of opinion being that the arrangement is flawless.

The program will begin at 8:20 precisely and those late in arriving will not be seated while the orchestra is playing. The seat sale continues at the Hall box office where the demand has met with every expectation of the management. The concert is given under the direction of Ben Franklin, and he will also present the orchestra at the state armory, Schenectady, tomorrow evening in an entirely different program.

ALBANY. APR. 2.

ping and enfolding motion, as though were suddenly gathering the music to mself and outpouring it upon the orchestra. Of the audience Mr. Walter, conducting, seems unaware. The reviewers of New York reported him as, bodily, a quiet leader. Yesterday, however, he abounded in visible energies.

By inclination, practice and prestige Mr. Walter is a "classicist" and so, yesterday, he chose and ordered his programme. It began with an Overture and an Overture of Weber—stock-piece and procedure, if ever there were such at a symphony concert. He proceeded with a Symphony—on this occasion "early" rather than conventional Mozart. Then ensued the Concerto—out of Beethoven, with Mr. Schnabel of Vienna, Berlin and now New York to play the solo-part. For ending, Strauss's tone-poem of "Till Eulenspiegel"—a quarter-century old and by this time also classic piece as "modern classics" go. For introduction to Mr. Walter's new abilities exercised upon these old pieces, his version of the Overture to "Euryanthe" abounded equally in romantic ardors and technical felicities. He was not literal with the music; yet every detail of form, progress, color, stood clear—not in detached revelation or separate emphasis, but as part of a recreated, changeful, cumulated design. He was vivid with rhythm; he was keen-eared for sensuous tonal quality and on both scores the orchestra was quick and sensitive. He courted contrasts, especially in the play, at the beginning, of the marching and the musing motiv; he softened to a whisper the celebrated Largo of the muted strings; then, through the final measures sent the whole orchestra racing and aflame. These are the vigors and the virtues of a romantic music such as the Overture to "Euryanthe" intrinsically is. They are also the means to the impetuous course, the florid accent and color, the emotional and tonal exuberance, which were Weber's brilliance. Here, then, from Mr. Walter was Weber full-panoplied in the qualities by which his music endures.

Like romantic energy and like technical finesse distinguished Mr. Walter's version of Strauss's "Till." Bostonian ears are accustomed to a sardonic or an ironic "reading" of the rogue's tune. Dr. Muck for example, was all for the sharpest incisiveness, the most mocking mood with Till's tonal pranks and fate. Eulenspiegel cheeped and grinned, teetered and pounced out of the music. With a leer he rollicked; a craven, he faced the hanging judges. To Dr. Muck, the whole music was an intellectual exercise in the ironies. Not quite so sharp has been the edge that Mr. Monteux laid upon the music; not quite so acid his notion of Till's tonal fleers and japes. Yet he has continued essentially ironic.

Differently minded seems Mr. Walter. For him Till is buoyant and bumptious figure of mediæval folk-tale, running course through comical, yet romantic, adventures. To Mr. Walter's thinking, warmth, gusto, are the essentials of the music. Loud, then, does he make the tumults of the market-place upset by Till; ardent is the fellow's fortuitous love-making; out thrust his tongue and his loud voice at the pedants; solemn and sonorous function of justice is the trial. So to regard Strauss's personage and so to treat Strauss's music is to give both a comic unction, a romantic warmth, a frolicsome voice new and strange upon ears hitherto circumscribed in the ironies. Yet Mr. Walter was as keen-edged as need be in Strauss's first tonal etching of the scamp; while he missed none of the folk-song flavor in the subtly simple measures of little prologue and little epilogue. At every turn, moreover, his technical clarity and sensibility were as fine as Strauss's own.

The Concerto—the fourth of Beethoven in G major—gave the conductor little opportunity. By this time there was full reason to expect that he would be limpid and pliant of melodic line, keen to rhythm, plastic with accent and modulation, fine-eared with euphonies, even-handed with running figures, sedulous of becoming tone, alert to the assisting pianist. All these things was Mr. Walter and no more could he be in a music so withered and of its time—but of no other—as the first movement and the finale. Yet in the slow song his manifest liking for graphic contrasts tended to over-bear the pianist and to inflate the music. Mr. Walter would have it rumble ominously where Beethoven was content to let it murmur forbiddingly. Against it, the piano, though finally conquerer, could do no more—relatively—than whisper. More than the conductor, Mr. Schnabel as pianist, occupied the listening ear. He is sound and scholarly, he is able and artful in the routined German sense. He also commands in the treble of his instrument, and in running figures or ornament, a curiously crystalline, glittering, bell-like quality of tone. Otherwise his playing lacks individual flavor. No doubt he is excellent teacher. Mr. Schnabel's tribe, which is also the tribe of Bachaus, always is.

The reward was the little Symphony of Mozart in C major, piece favored of Dr. Muck, unheard here since his day. In it Mr. Walter was most the Walter of the operas of Mozart, as one or another listener had heard him and them in the summer festivals of Munich. The symphony is a light, simple, altogether charming music. The conductor who analyzed it before his hearers would break it as upon the wheel of his pedantry. The conductor who tried to invest it with energy and emphasis, with "feeling" and mood in the more modern sense of the words, would do violence equally to Mozart and to his own intelligence. Mr. Walter, being clear-sighted and sure-footed, stumbled into neither pitfall. He reduced the orchestra until it was neither heavy-paced nor clumsy in inflection; but as light of tone and as supple of incidence as the music itself. He chose a pace that animated and characterized each movement. With deft hand, quick sensibility and light fancy, he laid on every shading. Like lace-work in tones ran the little symphony and over it, like sunlight and breeze through the open door upon the lace-maker, played the infinite diversity, the [illegible] susceptibility, the exhaustless [illegible] the pure song for the pure [illegible] that is Mozart of the lasting [illegible] surface, the substance, the [illegible] of the music. Mr. Walter all evoked. Mona Lisa herself smiles not more fascinatingly. H. T. P.

TRANS. MAR. 31

SUN

New York City

MAR 31 1923

Pablo Casals will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the evening concert of the last pair this season, which will take place next Thursday, April 5. He will play in Schumann's violincello concerto. Pierre Monteux will also present Schubert's "unfinished" symphony, Debussy's suite, "Printemps" and Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

On Saturday afternoon, April 7, the program will include three dance numbers by Gretry-Mottl, Debussy's prelude to the "Afternoon of a Faun." Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony.

FROM MAR 31 1923

Globe

NEW YORK CITY

Coming Concerts.

Boston, New York, and Philadelphia each will be represented by one or more symphony concerts here next week. Mr. Stokowski and the Philadelphians will present Schönberg's "Kammersymphonie" at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, besides Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony and Debussy's nocturnes "Nuages" and "Fêtes."

Pablo Casals will be the soloist at a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday evening at Carnegie Hall playing Schumann's violincello concerto. Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Debussy's suite "Printemps," and Wagner's "Rienzi" overture will complete the programme. Mr. Monteux will also conduct on Saturday afternoon at the same hall "Three Dance Numbers" by Gretry-Mottl, Debussy's prelude to the "Afternoon of a Faun," Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony.

At its last Friday afternoon concert in Carnegie Hall this season the Philharmonic Society, Mr. Mengelberg, conducting, will present Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, Beethoven's "Leonore" overture, and Schelling's "A Victory Ball." Josef Lhevinne will be soloist at another concert under Mr. Mengelberg on Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall, playing Liszt's E flat piano concerto. Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, the "Leonore" overture, and Liszt's "Les Préludes" will comprise the orchestral selections.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 31 1923

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will close its present New York season with concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon.

Pablo Casals will appear as soloist at the Thursday concert, and at the Saturday concert Pierre Monteux will introduce a novelty by Respighi—the "Ballad of the Gnomides."

The remaining numbers for the evening concert will include Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Debussy's Suite "Printemps," Wagner's overture to "Rienzi." Casals will be heard in Schumann's concerto. For the Saturday concert Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and a suite from Gretry.

From APR 1 1923
JOURNAL
Providence, R. I.

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE FINAL CONCERT OF SEASON

Harold Bauer to be Soloist April 10 at Infantry Hall.

The final Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season will be given in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, April 10, at 8:15, with Harold Bauer, noted pianist, as soloist.

The symphony chosen by Pierre Monteux for the occasion will be the Sixth by Tchaikovsky, known as the "Pathetic," the masterpiece of the great Russian, which embodies the deep suffering of an oppressed nation.

Harold Bauer will appear to the finest advantage in the "Emperor" Concerto, No. 5, by Beethoven, the score of which in general scope and importance ranks with the nine symphonies of the great master. The closing number will be Enesco's brilliant score, the Roumanian Rhapsody.

From APR 1 1923
JOURNAL
Providence, R. I.

Last Symphony for Season

With Harold Bauer as soloist, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the last concert of its season here in Infantry Hall a week from this coming Tuesday.

Mr. Monteux has chosen for his principal number Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" symphony, his last symphony and perhaps his masterpiece. It is considered one of the most eloquent and characteristic artistic expressions of the Russian race. Idealism, disillusion and despair are all voiced in the melodies which Tschaikowski uses in this magnificent work.

Considered equal to a symphony in scope and importance is the so-called "Emperor" concerto of Beethoven, No. 5, in E-flat major, in which Mr. Bauer will play with the orchestra. The final number on the programme is Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, having a score based on the folk melodies of the Roumanian composer's own people.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
CITIZEN
ISSUE OF
APR 1 1923

PABLO CASALS WITH BOSTON ORCHESTRA

With Pablo Casals as soloist, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will end its season next Friday evening, April 6, in the Academy of Music. A notable symphonic program will be made additionally interesting by the appearance as soloist of Pablo Casals, the noted 'cellist.

The symphony will be the sixth of Tchaikovsky, the "Pathetic." This masterpiece of the great Russian, which embodies the age-long suffering of an oppressed nation, has probably done as much as any single work of art to bring the true Slavic temperament in touch with the Western world.

Casals will be heard in the solo part of Schumann's lovely concerto for the violoncello, which indeed should be transfigured by the unbelievable skill and unrivalled artistry of this great master of his beautiful instrument.

A novelty of considerable interest will be the Ballad of the Gnomides, a descriptive fantasy for full modern orchestra by Respighi, the noted living Italian composer who, by virtue of his "Fountains of Rome," is ranked in the forefront of the composers of the nation.

Pierre Monteux will close the evening and the season with Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

NEW YORK
TIMES
APR 1 1923

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, soon completing its forty-second year, will be heard for the last time this season in Carnegie Hall on Thursday and Saturday, as well as Friday in Brooklyn. Mr. Monteux's programs are as follows:

THURSDAY EVENING, CARNEGIE HALL.
Unfinished symphony	Schubert
Concerto for 'cello, op. 129 Pablo Casals.	Schumann
"Printemps" suite	Debussy
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
FRIDAY EVENING, BKLYN. ACADEMY.
"Pathetic" symphony	Tschaikovsky
"Ballad of the Gnomides"	Respighi
Concerto for 'cello Mr. Casals.	Schumann
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
SATURDAY EVENING, CARNEGIE HALL.
Dances, "Cephale et Procris"	Gretry
"Afternoon of a Faun"	Debussy
"Ballad of the Gnomides"	Respighi
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"	Beethoven

Next season's Boston Symphony concerts have already been definitely arranged in both boroughs, the dates being the three-day periods—Nov. 30, Dec. 2, 1923; Jan. 4-6, Feb. 1-3, March 14-16 and April 4-6, 1924.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD
APR 1 1923

Pablo Casals will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the last evening concert of the society's New York series, on Thursday evening in Carnegie Hall. He will play Schumann's cello concerto. Pierre Monteux will present Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Debussy's suite "Printemps," and Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi." The closing Saturday matinee program will consist of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," three dance numbers of Gretry-Mottl and Debussy's prelude to the "Afternoon of a Faun."

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
APR 1 1923

Next Friday evening, April 6, at 8:15, in the Academy of Music, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will end its present Brooklyn season with a splendid program in which Pablo Casals, the famous master of the cello, will appear as soloist. Pierre Monteux will conduct as the principal number on this program the "Pathetic" Symphony of Tschaikowsky.

A notable novelty at this concert will be the Ballad of the Gnomides by Ottorino Respighi, one of the most brilliant of the younger generation of Italian composers. This score, which is fantastic and descriptive in the highest degree, utilizes the full modern orchestra.

Casals will play with the orchestra in Schumann's concerto for his instrument. The evening will close with Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

PITTSBURG
PA.
GAZETTE TIMES
APR 1 1923

Boston Symphony Rumors.

Perhaps nowhere does rumor rise oftener or spread more rapidly than in the field of music. Recently it was whispered about that the Boston Symphony Orchestra would not give any New York concerts next season. Efforts to trace the source of this inaccurate piece of gossip were unsuccessful. One publication, however, was unfortunately led into publishing the report and that resulted in a deluge of inquiries—many emanating from people who had attended the Boston Symphonie's Carnegie Hall concerts for years and years.

While it is true that for several successsive seasons the old-time vogue for this series of orchestral programs has waned there still continues for them a large and enthusiastic body of supporters. The Philadelphia Orchestra has slipped into the seat of popularity formerly held, and for so long, by the Hub musicians. But the Bostonians are gradually coming back

---

From APR 2 1923
EVENING MAIL
New York City

MUSIC NOTES

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will close its present New York season with concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon.

Pablo Casals will appear as soloist at the Thursday concert, and at the Saturday concert Pierre Monteux will introduce a novelty by Respighi—the "Ballad of the Gnomides."

The remaining numbers for the evening concert will include Schubert's "Unfinished symphony, Debussy's Suite "Printempts," Wagner's overture to "Rienzi." Casals will be heard in Schumann's concerto. For the Saturday concert, Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and a suite from Gretry.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

At the Symphony concerts on April 13 and 14, Jean Bedetti will be heard in Ernest Bloch's rhapsody, "Solomon," and Georges Laurent in "A Night Piece" by Arthur Foote and "Fete Galante" by David Stanley Smith. Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture and Brahms' second symphony are the other numbers.

AD[illegible] APR. 1

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

MR. WALTER TIMELY BREAKS BAD CUSTOM

A Truce to Applause Between the Divisions of Symphonies—Again He Excels with Mozart and Strauss—The Handel and Haydn Society Wastes Its Virtues—John Steel in the Tracks of McCormack—Travellers

TWO audiences at Symphony Hall—the one on Friday afternoon; the other on Saturday evening—readily took hint from Mr. Walter conducting and stirred not a finger of applause between the movements of a Symphony by Mozart. If they will so refrain for a visiting conductor on special occasion, why should they not do likewise in the regular course of the Symphony Concerts and without restraining gesture from Mr. Monteux? Like every other conductor that sets music above self, like every listener of taste, sensibility and measured manners, he deprecates these interrupting and distracting plaudits at momentary pauses in a continuing music. In Germany, in Austria, in Central and Northern Europe generally, this custom of superfluous clapping is already obsolete, last waning in London under example the Queen's Hall Concerts. No farther aw than Cincinnati, it has disappeared America. Forthwith it should vanish Symphony Hall, long the seat—otherwise—of the best of manners in orchestral concerts. A Symphony discerningly played may be as pauseless as Mr. Walter aptly made his Mozart. It may advisedly exact longer halts, as, say, in "The Eroica" of Beethoven or "The Pathetic" of Chaikovsky. Yet with no Symphony whatever, need or should these suspensive instants become the heyday of irrepressible clappers. When the music is rounded and done, the heartier the applause the better; while the keener is the conductor's and the players' sense of satisfaction. The habit is all—and the custom of engrossed silence is really the finer appreciation of music and performance. Mr. Walter has set it to evidently willing audiences. Maybe Mr. Monteux has now only to enjoin and continue it. Visiting conductors are tonic.

Again, on Saturday, to an absorbed and applauding company Mr. Walter outdid expectation with his little Symphony of Mozart and added new excitements to his version of Strauss's "Till." Since he seems to have found the golden mean between an orchestra so large that it is heavy-footed with Mozart and an orchestra so small that, in a spacious hall, it strips the music of sonority, it is worth while to tabulate his band choir by choir, viz.:

Twelve First Violins,
Eight Second Violins,
Six Violas,
Five Violoncellos,
Four Double-Basses,
Two Flutes,
Two Oboes,
Two Clarinets,
Two Bassoons,
Two Horns,
Two Trumpets,
Two Kettle-Drums.

With these forty-eight voices, Mr. Walter approximated the orchestra for which Mozart more or less consciously wrote With them, moreover, he gained the fine clear, bright-edged sonorities which wer body and glow to the little Symphony. With the forty-eight again, he could thread the orchestral tone into the gossamer of the Andante; into the filagree of the racing Finale. Since his band was the virtuosi of the Boston Orchestra he and it could run even-handed with Mozart's flying figures and supple modulations, lose not a grace of his inflections and accents, keep his tone pellucid and sun-flecked. A light and lambent fire gleams out of the first and the last movements of this little Symphony Mr. Walter and such an orchestra rekindled it. The Minuet is courtliness itself and Mr. Walter and the forty-eight were stout enough to carry it with state and light enough to deck it with elegance. The Andante sighs now and then with the pensive Mozartian melancholy. Mr. Walter never forgot the charm of that mood and the grace of that gesture.

And an hour later, the conductor was whipping "Till Eulenspiegel" to a wildness that never before has the music known in Bostonian ears. For once the rogue romped and scuffled, preened, paraded, snapped and shouted in a robustious vigor that the persistent ironists have well nigh squeezed out of the tone-poem. The climax of the rascal shook the ceiling, yet was as clear and sharp as the electric lamps upon it. Now Strauss spent a wild youth. It flames out of "Don Juan." Why may it not also flare out of "Till?"

H. T. P.

Incidents and Prospects

The Symphony Orchestra departed today on its last journey of the season. This evening it will play in Albany with a rising young pianist, Edward Morris, as "assisting artist." Tomorrow evening it will be heard in Schenectady, and on Wednesday in Utica. Thereafter follow the last of its monthly concerts—for the season—in New York and Brooklyn. In two of them Mr. Casals will share, playing Schumann's Concerto for Violoncello. In both cities likewise Mr. Monteux has set on his programmes Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomes." For the rest repertory pieces fill them.

TRANS[illegible]

PROCTOR'S HALL.

The Franklin Concert.

All is in readiness for the long anticipated appearance of the Boston Symphony orchestra of over one hundred musicians, under the brilliant leadership of Pierre Monteux, and with the American pianist, Edward Morris, soloist of the occasion, at Harmanus Bleecker hall to-night. It will be a superb treat from every viewpoint and it is pleasing to know that Albanians have risen to the importance of the visit in a splendid manner. Members of the orchestra arrived in this city this afternoon, coming from Boston in special cars attached to the Twentieth Century, and their presence is already felt in places of interest that the members are visiting. The program of the concert, as published in the Journal of Saturday, meets with the finest sort of approval, the consensus of opinion being that the arrangement is flawless.

The program will begin at 8:20 precisely and those late in arriving will not be seated while the orchestra is playing. The seat sale continues at the Hall box office where the demand has met with every expectation of the management. The concert is given under the direction of Ben Franklin, and he will also present the orchestra at the state armory, Schenectady, tomorrow evening in an entirely different program.

ALBANY. A[illegible]

Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

By GEORGE EDGAR OLIVER

After an absence of several years, the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the able leadership of Pierre Monteux, came to Albany yesterday and gave one of its glorious concerts last night in Harmanus Bleecker hall (under the direction of Ben Franklin) to a capacity audience representative of the musical taste and culture of this section of the state. In this broad land there are a few music critics of vitriolic and splenetic tendencies, given to splitting hairs and looking on certain matters musical with jaundiced eyes, who declare that M. Monteux does not measure up to some of the former conductors of this famous organization.

It may be that he does not pose as did Atur Mikisch, that he has not quite the complete visualization of some of the scores of the classic masters as Karl Muck, and he may be lacking in a very slight degree such mighty and unique powers as a drill master as Wilhelm Gericke, nevertheless those "in the know" must admit that he has done wonders with this orchestra when one considers its condition as it came from the hands of Henri Rabaud in 1819.

Interned as Enemy Alien.

During the World war Karl Muck (a great conductor), who was in charge of this organization, was arrested as an enemy alien, interned for over a year in a detention camp in Georgia and later banished from the country.

The orchestra was in a shattered condition and any member suspected of disloyalty to the country was dismissed. Rabaud, a most excellent musician, composer and conductor, did not possess quite the attributes necessary to re-create this organization, and so Pierre Monteux was engaged from the Metropolitan Opera house and installed as conductor.

His great success in this gigantic task has been the marvel of the musical world, and for his great industry, catholic taste and ripe scholarship he is considered by nearly all of the best critics as one of the foremost conductors of the present time.

At some time in the near future the writer hopes to be able to give to the public the authentic inside secret history of the arrest of Karl Muck, how his plans of disloyalty were brought to light and the contemptible German was fully exposed.

First Number.

Now for the concert. The first number was the Symphonic Suite opus 35, "Scheherazade," composed in 1888, by Nicholas Rimsky-Korsakov (1844-1908), one of the glorious figures in Russian music.

As those in attendance had the opportunity as well as the great privilege of reading the scholarly and complete analytical notes of Philip Hale (a former Albanian), it will not be necessary to go over the same ground so thoroughly and beautifully covered by the eminent music critic of Boston.

The work was given with a tonal splendor, melodic, opulence and oriental imagery with such mastery of nuance and detail that it was one of the greatest renditions ever given in Albany and clearly indicated that the Boston Symphony orchestra is at its very best and that it is one of the few really great organizations of its kind in the world.

Musical Joy.

The symphonic suite occupied just 35 minutes in its rendition and each minute, each second was one of musical joy and contentment to every one present.

At its termination the applause was thunderous and rapturous but as is the proper custom of this organization, no encore was allowed, much to the dismay of that persistent band of palm pounders, who are never satisfied with the menu prepared for them but always want more and more.

After a short intermission, that sterling artist, Edward Morris, rendered the highly poetic "Concerto for Piano, No. 1, in B flat minor, opus 23" by Peter Tschaikowsky (1840-1893), written in 1874, and first played in public in Boston in 1875 by Hans Von Bulow. The last time that this melodious and entrancingly beautiful work was heard in this city it was given by Olga Samaroff (a native of Texas, born in 1882) supported by the Philadelphia orchestra under the direction of her husband, Leopold Stokowski

Real Work of Art.

This concerto is a real work of art, teeming with luscious melodies and entrancing harmonies and is truly one of the greatest works of its class. The writer admits that he has heard every pianist of high rank who has come to these parts during the past half century, and he further admits that he is very fond of the artistic playing of Edward Morris.

His grasp of the work was masterly, his technique left nothing to be desired, and his conception and rendition of this great opus was simply perfect. The writer could hear this young artist every week and then would be inclined to call for more if he was not a member of the society for the suppression of the encore fiends.

By his artistic work Edward Morris delighted the audience and the sympathetic accompaniments given by the orchestra were flawless.

The final numbers of this unique program were the prelude to "Lohengrin" and overture to "Tannhauser" by Richard Wagner (1813-1883), two of the finest works ever written for orchestra and destined for immortality.

The prelude to "Lohengrin," one of the masterpieces of orchestration, was written in 1847, and has been a favorite concert number for over 60 years.

The works of Richard Wagner were maligned for years by the world's critics, but with the passing of time there grew a fuller and better appreciation of his operas so that to-day, in the gallery of immortals, he is placed side by side with Bach, Handel, Beethoven and Brahms.

Futile to Try.

It would be idle as well as futile to try to point out the true greatness of this work, the overture to "Tannhauser," to describe its wonderful orchestral beauties and the genius displayed in its composition for, after such a superb interpretation as was given it last night, criticism is dumb and every auditor was thankful that the good Lord permitted Richard Wagner to live and give the world such ever-living masterpieces. It was a great night for high class music and the writer hopes and prays that the Boston Symphony orchestra will make an annual visit to this city and make glad the hearts of women and men.

To-night the Boston Symphony orchestra will be heard in the state armory, Schenectady, with an entire change of program.

ALBANY JOURNL.-APR. 3.

Boston Symphony Crowds Armory

The Boston Symphony orchestra played to Schenectady last night in the armory and the only wish left to wish after the beautiful program is that Ben Franklin would bring the Boston musicians again, twice every season, so that they could play one grand program of the long established greatest things for the orchestra and another program with some of the new things. But that is said partly as an excuse for asking for more, because it is well known that the Boston Symphony orchestra practically never gives an entire program of novelties, knowing that that is not subject for its perfect work. Pierre Monteux, the gracious conductor, and Richard Burgin, concert master and last night's soloist, were very popular in the audience.

The concert began late by arrangement to allow persons to attend both the lecture at Union college and the armory program and lasted just about two hours. There is always a friendly appreciative demand for encores, especially in the case last night of Mr. Burgin, whose concerto was fine, but the Boston Symphony keeps to its rule of no encores. Not so long ago a program which included something Russian was sufficiently novel to be thought of as including the latest style of work. Now Tshaikowsky is taken as a matter of course like Beethoven, and only Saminsky or one of the young Italians could excite any sense of novelty.

The "Pathetic" symphony is very beautiful and was played most satisfactorily. The program notes by Philip Hale are always illuminating and whether one followed them or made ones own program for the piece, or better yet wandered with it in the realm of pure and abstract music it was a splendid experience. The conclusion of this richly human comparison could not be anything but pathetic, expressive of the suffering which an hour before Dr. Kirsopp Lake had so beauti[illegible] us the true means of salvation of a race or a people. We had two sermons from Boston last night, the same subject and curiously contrasting, one from the stern teaching of the Puritanically-minded teacher and the other through the most purely artistic medium of expression there is, the orchestra.

Mr. Burgin played his concerto admirably. The Mendelssohn work is pleasing, and brought out the ability of the soloist in technique and gave him much opportunity for displaying his artistic powers of interpretation, beauty of tone production and brilliance of style. There was much applause after his playing, but he returned to his conecrt-master's desk without giving an encore.

Such a piece as the Lohengrin prelude brings emphatically to the hearer's attention the perfection of ensemble work in this orchestra from its excellent various parts working well together. The strings seem to be given the first place in importance with their singing of the etheral coloring but the wood winds have to help out and then the lovely deep toned notes emphasize the grail motive and finally there is everything, the gorgeous trambones and the cymbals and all, in that burst of almost unbearable ecstacy. It is a wonderful thing to hear so well played as the Boston orchestra plays it.

Contrasting with the heavenly vision of the Lohengrin prelude was the overture to Rienzi, also Wagner. This is a splendid tone poem full of triumph and martial dances and melodious noise of drums and all the orchestra instruments speaking together in a most splendid manner. It was a delightful ending for a thoroughly enjoyable concert. They say Monteaux is too conservative, "opposed to virtuosity," was the expression of one of the wise men of New York, but last night he [illegible] a very fiery conductor, in a fine restrained French sort of way. He was also friendly and gracious in approving the soloist and responding to the applause.

SCHENECTADY-GAZETTE
APRIL-4.

R.2.

RARE PRO[illegible] GIVEN AT HALL BY ORCHESTRA

Boston Symphony Musicians Are Heard by Capacity Audience

Apr. 3

Albany greeted the Boston Symphony orchestra last night with a capacity audience at Harmanus Bleecker hall, with a heavy fringe of standees and with outward evidence of its distinction in a line of motors that reached more than a block east and west of the hall. It was a greeting worthy of a brilliant and entirely satisfying concert; one that combined the Russian and German genius for musical expression in a program that had every element of beauty and of appeal that did not demand the complexities of culture for appreciation. Pierre Monteux conducted for the first time in Albany; a leader of dynamic force whose readings translated to his more than one hundred men the beauties that came across the hall stage.

The "Scheherazade" symphonic suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff in four movements opened the program. This is a melodic picture of Oriental splendor, barbaric, sensuous, poetic and exotic in character; a weaving of a simple and loving theme into gorgeous tapestries of tone. It is easy to follow this theme in its building, for the violins are its basis in some exquisite passages that develop in a conclusion of wild grandeur. It is a suite familiar to concert goers, but never has it been played in Albany with such rhythmic grace or flourish as last night.

Tschaikovsky's B flat minor concerto for piano and orchestra introduced that excellent pianist, Edward Morris, who won an ovation for his brilliant execution as he played the piano parts of this tremenuous composition. There is the plaintive and mystic touch in the composition, and a superbly sustained finale with the smoothest possible musical surface as Monteux directed it.

The prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin" was another radiance of violin work, and the chaste beauty of this Holy Grail depiction was never given here with such beauty of tone and tempo.

The Wagner "Tannhauser" overture, which made the greatest common ground between the orchestra and its audience, was a climax that left the audience stunned for a moment with its majesty and then ready for a riotous tribute to Monteux and his men. Every element of the orchestra met in the crescendo end of the overture, registering an impression that will probably stand until Ben Franklin brings the Boston Symphony back again. Monteux is a master director, and his arms and fingers seem to paint in the air the melodies that follow his movements.—W. H. H.

ALBANY. APR. 3.

SUNDAY afternoon, April 15, in Symphony Hall, a second and final concert for the season, by Fedor Shalyápin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston whet a waiting public.

Monday evening, April 23, in Symphony Hall, the last of the supplementary series of Symphony Concerts, enlisting the full orchestra, led by Mr. Monteux and traversing a programme of familiar or semi-familiar pieces, with a "soloist," Miss Florence Macbeth, for gilding. So may those hear the Symphony Orchestra who care not for its long succession of "regular concerts" or for its excursions into untried music. The programme traverses the first Symphony of Sibelius; the Prelude to Wagner's opera, "Die Meistersinger"; Saint-Saëns's Septet for Piano, Trumpet and five String Voices, now expanded into the full string choir; two airs for the singer.

THE conspicuous and whetting piece upon the programme of the Symphony Concerts for Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next is "King Solomon," Mr. Bloch's Rhapsody for Violoncello and Orchestra, already heard through some years in many cities, yet hitherto overlooked in Boston by conductors well disposed toward the composer's intensely Jewish music. The programme also assembles Brahms's Second Symphony; the Overture to Mozart's opera, "Figaro's Wedding"; two light numbers, Mr. Foote's "Night-Piece" and Mr. David Stanley Smith's "Fête Galante," each with solo-part for flute. Mr. Bedetti of the orchestra will be the violoncellist and Mr. Laurent the flutist.

To Cambridge on Thursday evening journey Mr. Monteux and the Symphony Orchestra for the eighth in their current series of concerts at Sanders Theatre, with Miss Marjorie Church for assisting pianist. Brahms's Second Symphony; Beethoven's third "Leonora" Overture; the Good-Friday Spell from Wagner's "Parsifal"; and Liszt's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in D major fill the programme.

TRANS APR 7

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

At the 21st regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts, to take place in Symphony hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 13 and 14, there will be two soloists—Jean Bedetti, the leading 'cellist, and Georges Laurent, the leading flute of the orchestra.

Pierre Monteux will open the concert with Mozart's "Figaro" overture and close it with the Second Symphony of Brahms in D major.

TRAV. APR. 7.

SY[illegible] PROGRA[illegible]

At the Symphony concerts this week Pierre Monteux will open the program with Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," and close it with the Second Symphony of Brahms. Jean Bedetti, leading cellist of the orchestra, will be heard in the Chicago Opera Company as soloist, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its fifth and last Monday evening concert on April 23. Miss MacBeth will sing two arias of Mozart. The First Symphony of Sibelles, Wagner's "Meistersingers" prelude and the Saint-Saens' Septet for piano, trumpet and first performance here of Ernest Bloch's Jewish Rhapsody, "Solomon." Georges Laurent, flute, will take the solo part in Arthur Foote's "Night Piece," and David Stanley Smith's "Fete Galante."

MONDAY SYMPHONY

With Florence MacBeth, prima donna coloratura soprano of the string orchestra will complete the program.

AMER. APR. 7.

FOR FLUTE AND VIOLONCELLO

Mr. Foote's "Night Piece," Professor Smith's "Fete Galante" and Mr. Bloch's "Solomon" to Be Heard at the Symphony Concert Tomorrow

SOMEWHAT unusually the novel pieces at the Symphony Concerts of this week are not, in the strictest sense, compositions for orchestra, but, rather, vehicles for the two soloists, Mr. Laurent and Mr. Bedetti. Not before at these concerts has Mr. Laurent been soloist in the full meaning of the term, and he makes his bow in David Stanley Smith's Watteau-picture in tones. "Fête Galante," for flute and orchestra, and in Arthur Foote's "Night Piece," for flute and strings. Heard several months ago at a concert of the Flute Players' Club, the 'Night Piece"—played then as a composition for flute and string-quartet—proved a charming, urbane music. So clear is Mr. Foote's purpose here, so lucid his expression that the piece hardly calls for prefatory analysis. And although Mr. Smith's "Fête Galante" is of greater length and complexity and likewise more varied in mood, it, too, is plain sailing.

The third new piece, however, Ernest Bloch's "Schelome," for violoncello and orchestra, stands in greater need of introductory comment. In brief "Schelomo" is a musical portrait of King Solomon, a portrait painted on the large canvas of the full modern orchestra, and painted with the wealth of harmonic and orchesthral color that Bloch so conspicuously commands. To the question as to whether or not Bloch has used in his score Hebrew melodies, the composer's own words make the best answer. On the occasion of the first performance in New York of "Schelomo" Mr. Bloch declared that it was not his purpose "to attempt 'reconstitution' of Jewish music," or to base his work "on melodies more or less authentic." "I am not," he said, "an archæologist. I hold it of first importance to write good, genuine music. It is the Jewish soul that interests me, the complex, glowing, agitated soul that I feel vibrating throughout the Bible; the freshness and naiveté of the Patriarchs; the violence that is evident in the prophetic books; the Jew's savage love of justice; the despair of the Preacher in Jerusalem; the sorrow and the immensity of the Book of Job; the sensuality of the Song of Songs. All this is in us; all this is in me, and it is the better part of me. It is all this that I endeavor to hear in myself and to transcribe in my music; the venerable emotion of the race that slumbers deep down in our soul."

Last autumn "Schelomo" was played at a concert of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, with Hans Kindler as the soloist. At that time Lawrence Gilman wrote for the programme book the following discerning comments:

> The texture of the music, and especially the writing for the solo 'cello, is extraordinary in its richness of dramatic, poetical and pictorial suggestion—an imaginative projection of singular vividness and intensity. The 'cellist and the seconding orchestra are by turns lyrist and tragedian, poet and seer. The great king amid his gorgeousness, reflecting in disillusionment upon his silver and his gold, the treasure of his provinces, the abundance of his gardens and his orchards, the fulfilled desires of his heart and eyes; and the Preacher, sombre and mournful in his acrid wisdom, uttering bitter admonitions as he contemplates the vanishing mist that is all delight, the sorrowing echoes of beauty and splendor, "the shadows of a destiny unguessed and unascertainable," the rumor of the darkening Wings: these thoughts are implicit in the imaginings of the tone-poet—in the poignant chief subject for the 'cello, with its characteristic figure of a dotted eighth-note that is heard after the opening five bars of introduction . . . ; in the piercing outbursts of despair that invoke the full voicing of the orchestra; in the strange and impressive recitatives for the bassoon and other solo voices—ultimately, with mordant power, for two trumpets fortissimo—which are as the sombre exhortations of the Preacher; in the intervals of sensuous lyricism and imperial pageantry; in the final descent into the depths, the brooding of the 'cello filling the music with the darkness of shut doors and shadowed windows and resolving dusk.

W. S. S.

TRANS-APR. 12.

The program of the Symphony concerts tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening is in one respect unusual: There will be flute solos played by the excellent Mr. Laurent. Arthur Foote's "Night Piece" for flute and strings, written for the San Francisco Chamber Club, and first performed in San Francisco, has been played here at a concert of the Boston Flute Players' Club. Mr. Foote, with characteristic modesty, calls it a little piece. The "Fete Galante" for orchestra and flute by D. S. Smith of New Haven has been performed in New York. Mr. Smith, professor of music at Yale, writes that he has attempted to give a Watteau picture in music.

The Symphony program also comprises Mozart's overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Brahms's Symphony No. 2 and Ernest Bloch's "Solomon," a Jewish rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra. Mr. Bedetti, of course, will be the violoncellist. The rhapsody is said to sum up the grandeur, sensuousness and pessimism of the mighty Solomon: pessimism as shown in "Ecclesiastes," which, it is perhaps needless to say, was written long after Solomon died by some unknown Jew living in the post-exilic period, probably under the Persian rule.

Next week Margaret Matzenauer will sing Weber's "Ocean! Thou Mighty Monster" and Isolde's Narrative in the first act of "Tristan and Isolde." Weber's scena has not been sung at these concerts for many years. Some of us remember Pauline Cramer puffing through it. She was pretty and comparatively slight when we saw her carrying the Grail in "Parsifal" at Bayreuth in 1882. She tried to sing in Wagnerian operas, but the sly Wagner said: "She carries the Grail so beautifully, that she must always carry it." The devoted Carl Ambruster, who was here lecturing, with her as a singer of German lieder, used to tell in an awe-stricken voice, this speech of "the master" as if it were a compliment. Nay, nay, Pauline!

The orchestral numbers next week will be Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony; Resphigi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," performed here recently at an extra concert of the orchestra—it disturbed the conservatives in New York when Mr. Monteux performed it last week—and a Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera, "Legend of Tsar-Saltan, his Son, the Renowned and Mighty Paladin, the Prince Guidon Saltanovich, and the beautiful Tsarevna Lebed," produced at Moscow, in 1900.

HERALD APR. 12.

A GRAVE problem is that confronting the pianist or violinist who would be soloist at an orchestral concert. If he—or she—selects one of the few visible concertos, there is loud complaining that that particular piece is heard to satiety. If on the other hand, the chosen concerto be one of those generally, and perhaps rightfully, neglected, the grumblers will cry out—and often with justice—that the piece is not worth the playing. Soloist with the Symphony Orchestra in Sanders Theatre last evening, Marjorie Church elected to play Liszt's Concerto in A major, fancifully dubbed by Mr. Apthorp "The Life and Adventures of a Melody." Of Liszt's two concertos this is immeasurably the weaker. It is not entirely devoid of pleasing episode, but there is in it much music of a hollow nd tawdry sort, nor does it offer marked opportunity for the soloist—from the standpoint of technical display it falls far below the Concerto in E-flat major, and comparatively few are the passages calculated to reveal the pianist's musicianly and emotional qualities. Indeed it is a piece that may be genuinely persuasive only at the hands of a pianist who can play it, not merely for all that is in it, but who may, for the time, endow it with qualities not intrinsically its own. And such service Miss Church might hardly render it, though in her performance might be noted a certain crisp and clear-cut brilliance and a feeling for that elusive quality known as style, while she made much of the chances given her for songful and expressive playing.

Musically the chief interest of the Concerto in A major lies less in the adventures of the melody than in the melody itself, and less in the melody than in the changing harmonies of which that melody is, so to speak, the outer edge. The chromaticism of Wagner has definitely a polyphonic basis. It was Liszt who anticipated the characteristically modern feeling for the interplay of distantly related or unrelated chords as so much sensuous sensation. And never did he exhibit this gift more strikingly than in that still arresting, extraordinarily colorful progression on which this Concerto is based. For these harmonies, for certain details in the orchestration and for the truly appealing passage for solo 'cello, the Concerto may still be heard with pleasure. But it is, in truth, no show-piece for pianist. In it Liszt, always a prophetic composer, was foreshadowing the orchestral pieces with piano-obbligato of d'Indy, Loeffler and other moderns. That the greatest pianist of his age should have written so self-effacing a Concerto would perhaps seem surprising were it not for the fact that experiments in musical form and musical expression were, after all, Liszt's profoundest passion.

Was it by accident or by design that Mr. Monteux played the Overture "Leonora No. 3" forty-eight hours before Beethoven's opera was to be heard in Boston for the first time in so many years? In any event it was a pleasure to hear the Overture last evening, with the thought that the opera which it epitomizes was so soon to follow. After the Overture stood the "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," save for "Rienzi," the only opera of Wagner not to be heard in Boston during the present "Festival." With this music last evening, played by an orchestra large enough and skilled enough to reveal its beauties to the full, came the conviction that with Wagner the orchestra is, after all, the factor of chiefest importance. We should be grateful indeed for our present opportunity to renew—or to form—acquaintance with the operas that this Festival Company is so capably producing. Yet orchestrally these performances, even the best of them, often but hint at Wagner's true accomplishment. Wagner in the concert-room may be but half Wagner. But Wagner in the opera-house, with a too scanty orchestra, is likewise but half Wagner. Will the time ever come again, as it has on rare occasions in the past, when we of Boston will know once more the whole Wagner? In the meantime we may hear him with scene and action and supply in imagination the full effect of the orchestra, or we may hear him with adequate orchestra and imagine scene and action—and be grateful for both experiences in lieu of better.

W. S. S.

From the Symphony Concerts of Mondays to the Symphony Concerts of Friday and Saturday next week Mr. Monteux will carry Respighi's grewsome and gruelling grotesquerie, "The Ballad of the Gnomes." At these concerts of April 20 and 21 he and the orchestra will also play for the first times in Boston three colorful pieces assembled in Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera of Russian legend, "The Tale of Tsar Saltan." Haydn's neat little "Surprise Symphony" and fragments from Wagner's "Tristan" and Weber's "Oberon," to be sung by Mme. Matzenauer of the Metropolitan Opera House, fill the remainder of the programme. The piece from "Tristan"—Isolde's long narrative of love and humiliation in the first act—is unusual in concert-halls.

It is nearly unnecessary to say that the annual series of Pop Concerts by the Symphony Orchestra will begin at Symphony Hall on Monday evening, May 7, with Mr. Jacchia again conducting, and all things else according to recent custom and remembered pleasure.

TRANS. APR. 13.

TWO novel numbers grace Mr. Monteux's programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening—Respighi's exercise in a fantastic and sinister grotesquerie, "The Ballad of the Gnomes" and a Suite in three divisions from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera of Russian legend, "The Tale of Tsar Saltan." The Italian's grewsome and gruelling piece was lately played at a supplementary Symphony Concert to the mingled wonder and dismay of many that heard. The multi-colored and mood-tinctured Suite from the Muscovite opera has traversed other concert-rooms in America; but comes anew to Symphony Hall. Haydn's "Surprise Symphony" is the remaining orchestral item; but the band will join with Mme. Matzenauer in the air of the ocean from Weber's opera, "Oberon" and in Isolde's long narrative of dawning love and humiliation before Tristan in the first act of Wagner's opera. Seldom is this music and text detached as concert-piece.

Monday evening, April 23, in Symphony Hall, the last of the supplementary series of Symphony Concerts, enlisting the full orchestra, led by Mr. Monteux and traversing a programme of familiar or semi-familiar pieces, with a "soloist," Miss Florence Macbeth, for gilding. So may those hear the Symphony Orchestra who care not for its long succession of "regular concerts" or for its excursions into untried music. The programme traverses the first Symphony of Sibelius; the Prelude to Wagner's opera, "Die Meistersinger"; Saint-Saëns's Septet for Piano, Trumpet and five String Voices, now expanded into the full string choir; two airs from Mozart for the singer.

TRANS. APR

MATZENAUER SOLOIST

As soloist at the 22d pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 20 and 21, Margaret Matzenauer, mezzo soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing with the orchestra Isolde's Narrative from act 1 of Wagner's music drama and an aria from "Oberon." Pierre Monteux will conduct the "Surprise" symphony of Haydn, Resphighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and Rimsky-Korskoa's suite from the opera "Tsar Saltan."

TRAV. APR 14

Pierre Monteux, Rebuilder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

PIERRE MONTEUX has now been conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for four seasons, and under his contract will serve it one year more. Although a just estimate of a conductor's work can hardly be attempted until his régime has passed into musical history, yet it seems appropriate at this time to give some account of the progress of the orchestra under this French musician who undertook its direction when it was all but disintegrated by the passions of war.

However opinions may vary as to the relative position Mr. Monteux is likely to occupy in the list of distinguished leaders of the Boston orchestra, it is indisputable that he has achieved a remarkable success under most difficult conditions. Indeed, the bare fact that the orchestra still exists is a considerable tribute to him. The period before and after the armistice was the most critical the organization ever passed through. While Dr. Muck still held the baton, the reflection in the ranks of the orchestra of the hostilities in Europe threatened dissolution. The arrest of Dr. Muck as an enemy alien did not improve matters. Henri Rabaud, who succeeded him, was a profound musical scholar, but not the type of man to appeal to the admirers of Dr. Muck, nor to weld disputatious elements into a harmonious whole.

Inauspicious Conditions

Thus Mr. Monteux succeeded to the dais in the autumn of 1919, under the most inauspicious conditions. Unrest still prevailed among the players. The inevitable comparisons of a new conductor with his predecessors were more trying than in most cases because of the extraordinary popularity of Dr. Muck, only slightly impaired among patrons of the orchestra by his war record. And hardly had Mr. Monteux begun to rally his forces when, in March of 1920, the organization was dealt a staggering blow by labor trouble. The concert master, leader of the disaffected, conspicuously remained seated when the conductor at a Friday afternoon concert motioned to the players to share with him the applause for a performance of Berlioz's "Fantastic" symphony. The concert master was dismissed; and when the audience gathered for the Saturday evening concert, it was discovered that most of the men had walked out in sympathy with him, and a handful of players remained. The program was changed, and the concert was given to the pleasure of the audience.

Reconstruction

Then began the long, hard task of reconstruction. The trustees of the orchestra firmly refused recognition to the musicians' union. Some of the old players were taken back on the former terms, but many were replaced. The concerts continued uninterrupted, and soon it began to be evident to regular attendants that the reorganization had given new life to the orchestra. But recognition of merit from those who have a sort of personal and friendly interest in an organization is one thing; recognition from the wider musical public is another. Only in the present season has this wider public, as represented by the critics of New York, been won. These arbiters now concede that the Boston orchestra has at length achieved again something of the tonal glories of former days.

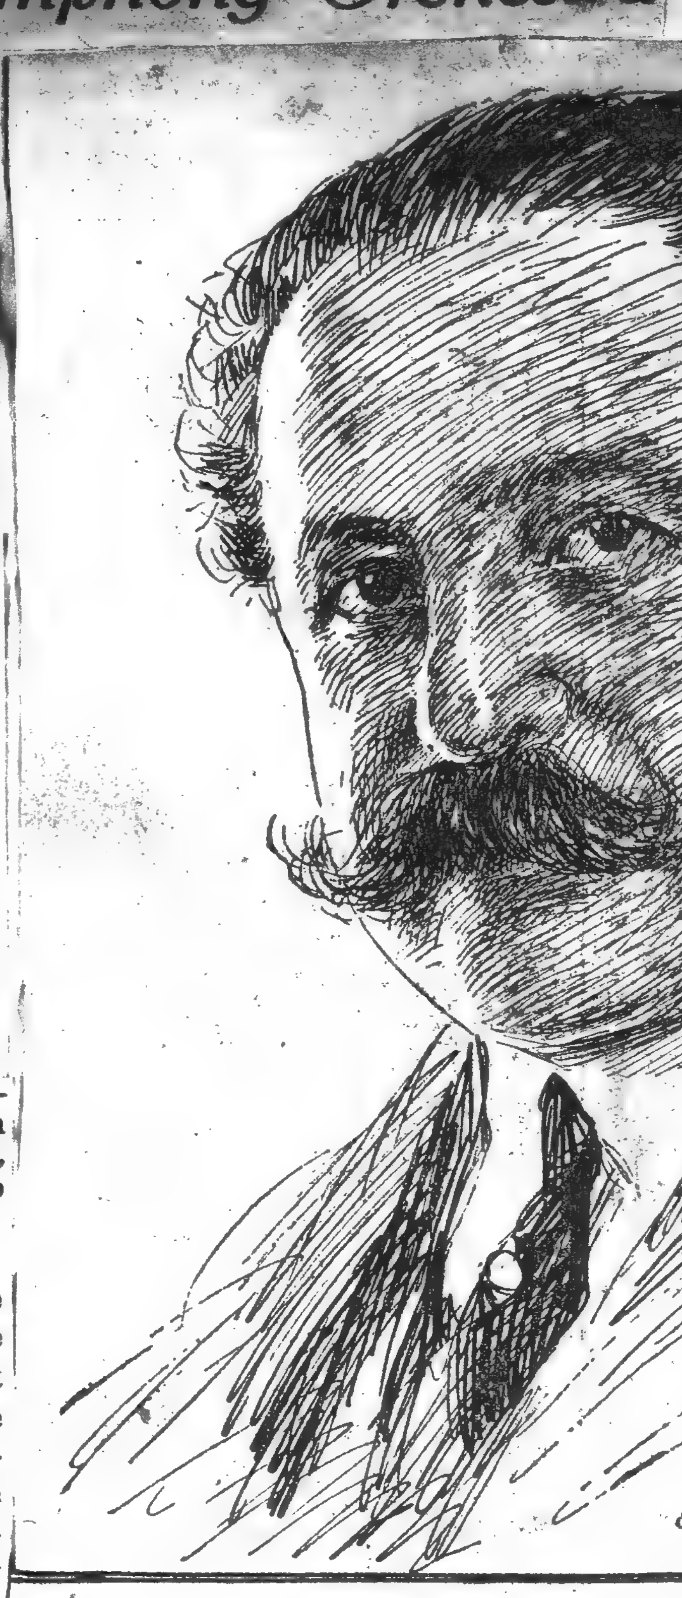
Monteux and Gericke

Throughout this period, Mr. Monteux has been unfailingly a modest, courteous, unassuming leader, unremitting in his labors but self-effacing in his achievement. His work is done, evidently, in rehearsal. On the stand he exhibits none of the traits of the "prima donna" conductor. He does not bear himself like the commander of an army corps; the tip of his baton does not describe arabesques; he does not distract attention from the music to himself by gyrations. With him, the music is the thing. Whether or not his name shall be acclaimed the greatest in the annals of the orchestra, he will attain whatever position may be assigned to him through musical merit, not by "stunts."

The secret of his success is probably to be found in his own training. He was thoroughly grounded in theory, and had had extensive experience as an orchestral player and conductor when he was called to Boston. He was solo viola player with Colonne's Orchestra, and later with the orchestra of the Opéra-Comique. He also played the solo viola in the Société de Musique Moderne, which he founded. He conducted at Paris, Covent Garden and Drury Lane, London, and in the opera houses at Berlin, Vienna and Budapest. He instituted the Concerts Monteux in Paris, toured Europe and America as conductor of the Ballet Russe, and was for two seasons French conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

Mr. Monteux's service inevitably recalls that of Wilhelm Gericke, for whose benefit he proposed and conducted a concert last winter. Both men took charge when, in the words of the older man, "there were some musicians, but it was hardly an orchestra." Both made it an orchestra, and both won for it the outside recognition that seems essential to its greatest growth and highest success. Mr. Gericke is known as the maker of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Monteux has earned the title of its rebuilder.

L. A. S.



Pierre Monteux

MONITOR-APR. 14

NEW MUSIC HEARD AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Pieces by Bloch, Foote and Smith Please

Globe Apr 14

Mr Monteux varied the arrangement of yesterday's Symphony program by putting his three novelties and a Mozart overture before the intermission, and saving Brahms' Second Symphony for the end. Bloch's Rhapsody for 'cello and orchestra, "Solomon," was more exacting than Brahms, but Arthur Foote's pretty "Night Piece" for flute and orchestra, and Prof Smith's carefully written but ineffective "Fete Galante" put no great tax upon the listener's power of concentration.

Mr Monteux also arranged to give two members of the orchestra opportunity to figure in large type on the programs as "soloists." Mr Bedetti's 'cello and Mr Laurent's flute figure in so many incidental solos during the year that it seems scarcely necessary to call the attention of the audience to their manifold excellences by letting them occupy the center of the front of the stage. Both artists were cordially applauded, as their musicianly playing entitled them to be.

Bloch's "Solomon" is music with a strong individuality, a rather bitter tang. It is much to be able to write so that the flavor of one's music can be remembered. There is nothing wilfully freakish about this rhapsody, though its idiom, despite traces of Wagnerian influence, is personal to the composer.

Mr Bloch, one assumes, felt both the splendor and the weariness of Solomon. This rhapsody is without joy, disillusioned but still impassioned. The title excuses a rather loosely written composition, but at times in the repetitious middle portions Solomon seemed to be maundering, not rhapsodizing. Mr Bedetti, Mr Monteux and the orchestra contrived to give a sympathetic but not heart-searching interpretation.

Mr Foote's "Night Piece" is agreeable, unpretentious music, with a flow of broken bits of tune which the fine sweetness of Mr Laurent's flute helped to make pleasant.

Prof Smith sought to reproduce the mood of such Watteau paintings as "The Embarkment for Cythera" of the 18th century "Fete Galante" as his title put it. His music yesterday seemed painstaking, but heavy-handed; correctly worked out, but not inspired.

Mr Monteux polished the surfaces of Mozart's overture and Brahms' symphony. There was a superficial energy, even brilliant, to the performance, yet one failed to feel underneath any deep sympathy with either composer. Few orchestral conductors can, however, attain real catholicity of taste and sympathy. Tempi and phrasing yesterday were often open to criticism. Dynamics lacked subtlety.

For next week Haydn's "Surprise" symphony, "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from Weber's "Oberon"; Isolde's narrative from Act 1 of "Tristan"; a suite from Rimsky Korsakov's "Tsar Saltan" and Respighi's "Gnomes" are the numbers announced. Mme Matzenauer is to be the assisting singer.

[87]

SYMPHONY GIVES ITS 21ST CONCERT

Flutist and 'Cellist Assist—Five Composers Represented

By PHILIP HALE

The 21st concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The program was as follows: Mozart, Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"; Foote, A Night Piece for flute and string orchestra; D. S. Smith, "Fete Galante" for orchestra with flute obbligato; Bloch, "Schelomo" ("Solomon"); Jewish Rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra; Brahms, Symphony, D major, No. 2. The pieces by Mr. Bloch and Mr. Smith were played for the first time in Boston; Mr. Foote's piece had been played at a concert of the Boston Flute Players' Club. The flutist yesterday was Mr. Laurent; the violoncellist, Mr. Bedetti.

Mr. Monteux and the orchestra after their last and successful trip to New York were heartily welcomed back. There was a spirited performance of Mozart's joyous overture, which makes a more servere demand on technical proficiency and plasticity than is made by many a pompous piece of thunderous speech. Too often the performance of this overture is a scramble, without contrasts of light and shade, without regard to the clarity and elegance in phrasing indispensable to an interpretation of Mozart's lively movements. Mozart would have applauded yesterday.

Mr. Foote, modest man, wrote to the editor of the program-book that his Night Piece is "a slight little thing." It may be slight in his opinion, but slight things are often beautiful, and this Night Piece is lovely music. "Lovely" is an adjective that has fallen into disrepute, but in this instance it is the word to characterize this composition, which is tenderly melodious, without a trace of sentimentalism, written for the flute, yet without a suggestion of tootle-tootle. Here strings and solo instrument at once establish a mood that justifies the title. Hazlitt said of melodies by Mozart, they come from the air and return there; this might be said of Mr. Foote's chief theme. There is no straining after effect, though in some passages there is what is loosely called modern harmonization. Nor is the hearer, while the music is playing, conscious of anything but charming sounds skilfully and logically succeeding one the other, so that there is a thing of beauty.

Mr. Smith's "Fete Galante" is more ambitiously planned. He writes that this music is meant "to reflect the spirit and color of the fete galante" after the manner of a picture by Watteau. We failed to find the Watteau "atmosphere" or any suggestion of the life depicted. In the first section there are measures in the earlier Debussyian manner; what follows is labored rather than spontaneous; neither vivid in musical portraiture, nor subtly impressionistic.

Messrs Foote and Smith were present at the concert and were obliged to bow in acknowledgment of the applause. Mr. Laurent displayed, as is his custom, his rare art and musical feeling.

Mr. Bloch once wrote us that his three psalms (two of them were sung by Mme. Povla Frijsh at a Symphony concert), his "three Jewish poems," (played in 1917 at a Symphony concert) and his "Solomon" came from "the passion and the violence believed to be the characteristics of his nature." In "Solomon," the mighty monarch is supposed to be depicted in all his glory, yet at the end sick at heart, for all is vanity. As a matter of fact, Solomon was not the author of "Ecclesiastes," a book that was written by some unknown Jew, possibly a scribe, long after Solomon had found the end of all desire. But this does not war against the pessimism of Mr. Bloch's music, eloquently expressed and relieved at times by superbly barbaric orchestral pomp, so that one has a vision of Solomon, magnificent upon his throne, to whom jinnee and afreet bowed down, or sees him in the temple at the gorgeous service, and hears the solemn chanting. One mood follows another; exultation, contemplation, worship, command, but there is the constant reminder that earthly wisdom is but folly and madness; that life is a vain shadow; that man "cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness."

An extraordinary composition, often overpowering in its savagery, its splendor, its black despair; a work of pronounced originality, the outburst of a master mind. After it the symphony of Brahms, genial, reassuring music, seemed almost Mendelssohnian.

Mr. Bedetti played with supreme authority, comprehending the various and shifting moods, and giving them full expression. Equally remarkable was the performance of the orchestra.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The orchestral pieces to be played next week will be Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and the suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera, "Tsar Saltan." Mme. Matzenauer will sing "Ocean! Thou Mighty Monster," from "Oberon," and Isolde's narrative from the first act of "Tristan and Isolde."

HERALD. APR. 14

Audience Honors Two Composers

Arthur Foote, the Boston composer, and Prof. David Stanley Smith, dean of the Yale music school, were especially honored at the Symphony concert yesterday Pierre Monteux included in his program, Mr. Foote's "Night Piece" for flute and string orchestra, and Prof. Smith's "Fete Galante," for orchestra and flute obligato. Georges Laurent, one of the Symphony soloists, played the flute part in both pieces. The audience applauded the composers and conductor enthusiastically.

Ernest Bloch's "Jewish Rhapsody" was another novel and striking feature. This work has a good part for 'cello, played by Jean Bedetti. The classic number on the program, which will be repeated tonight, is Brahms' second symphony.

ADVTSR. 14

TWO SOLOISTS PLAY WITH SYMPHONY

By ZOE FABER

In point of numbers, three out of five, the moderns held the stage of the twenty-first Symphony concert yesterday afternoon, but as a matter of fact, the absorbing part of the afternoon was the latter half of the program and that was devoted entirely to an old gentleman, long gone, Johannes Brahms.

It was his symphony in D major and after all the dissonances and troubled rhythms of the foregoing half of the program, it was joy to hear the clear expressions of the musical thoughts of a great genius. Mr. Monteux's reading, particularly of the first and the last two movements, was especially effective.

Georges Laurent, flautist from orchestra, played the solo part in two numbers, "A Night Piece," by Arthur Foote, and "Fete Galante," by D. S. Smith. Of the two, the former was very much more interesting than the latter. Mr. Foote acknowledged the repeated demands of the audience for the composer.

Ernest Bloch's Rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra (solo part by Jean Bedetti of the orchestra) also had a place in the program that Mr. Monteux assembled with what seemed like a view to bringing out all the latent beauties of the classic music in contrast with the much vaunted modern. Mr. Bedetti did his best, and like Mr. Laurent was recalled many times.

O'MORE IS PLEASING.

The kind of a brogue that can make "fever" rhyme with "save her" is not to be acquired. It is born in you. Among other things, that helps to make the old Irish tunes such a delight when Colin O'More sings them.

His audience, which was almost large enough to fill Symphony Hall, was enthusiastic over his program, the enthusiasm running rather more to the Irish and English songs than [illegible] O'More's [illegible] is a pleasure. The voice is, for the most part, of sweet quality; there is power when wanted; the range is good and the musicianship, too.

Assisting Mr. O'More was Emilie Rose Knox, violinist. Miss Knox played two movements from the Wieniawski Concerto in D minor. With certain reservations, Miss Knox is rather a good violinist. The tone is broad and deep and there is a good feeling for each individual phrase. More work on the accuracy of octaves would not be amiss. Carl Brunner at the piano played, generally speaking, able accompaniments.

MATZENAUER, SOLOIST

As soloist at the twenty-second pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Margaret Matzenauer, mezzo soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing with the orchestra Isolde's Narrative from Act 1 of Wagner's music drama and an Aria from "Oberon." Pierre Monteux will conduct the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's Suite from the Opera Tsar Saltan."

APR. 14 - AMER.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

EASY PLEASURE WITH BLOCH FOR CONTRAST

His Rhapsody "King Solomon," Proves Puissant and Signal Music—Mr. Foote Succeeds and Professor Smith Fails with the Flute — For Pendant Lighter Brahms

MOSTLY to light, untaxing pleasures ran the Symphony Concert yesterday. Twice during the afternoon was a graver note sounded—in Bloch's "Schelomo" and in the slow movement of Brahms's Second Symphony. The rest of this Symphony is Brahms in genial or sportive mood, while deliberately gay or frankly charming were the other pieces that made the programme—Mozart's Overture to "Figaro's Wedding," Arthur Foote's "Night Piece" for flute and strings, and David Stanley Smith's Fête Galante" for flute and orchestra.

It is good at any time to hear a Symphony Concert of such untroubling nature, and that of yesterday was the more welcome for the foil it made to the cosmic Wagnerian breadths, the glowing Wagnerian ardors and the heroic Wagnerian visions with which the ears of many are just now so thoroughly filled. Like a draught of sparkling wine was the ever-youthful Overture: if there be ageless music, surely it is this. And from Mr. Monteux and the orchestra it received yesterday a performance as subtle, bright and limpid as itself, while with like clarity, eloquence and euphony went the Symphony and the pieces by the two Americans.

Charming as is the Overture, and delightful as are portions of Brahms's singularly uneven Symphony, it was in the three new pieces that the interest of the concert chiefly centred. In calling his "Night Piece" a "slight little thing," Mr. Foote disarms criticism. Slight indeed it is, both of body and of texture, and little enough in length and breadth. But many a composer seeking deliberately to storm high heaven has written and wrought to less purpose and to less enjoyment. Both in key and mood the opening of this Nocturne recalls the first of Mr. Foote's pieces after Omar Khayyam. Gently reflective is his music, its course throughout is placid and untroubled, even the well-nigh inevitable moment of climax is avoided. In his "Fête Galante" Dr. Smith has listened to voices from over-seas. Not so Mr. Foote. There is in his "Night Piece" hardly a chord, hardly a progression, that he might not have written thirty years ago. To his old and his own ways adheres Mr. Foote, not setting his sail to every changing wind of musical fashion. But in his "Night Piece" is heard the composer who writes with skill and with conviction and always to the pursuit of beauty, even if in somewhat familiar guise. Practically a solo for flute, with light string accompaniment, the "Night Piece" put Mr. Laurent clearly in the foreground, and the purity and beauty of his tone and the felicity of his phrasing made additionally pleasurable the music in hand, emphasized in it the note of idyllic, gentle musing.

Since Dr. Smith has specifically set forth his purposes with the "Fête Galante" his words in partial curtailment may to advantage be quoted here. He writes:

> "Fête Galante" is intended to give a picture of aristocratic life in France, as portrayed by Watteau. Many of the paintings of Watteau are of the style known as "fête galante." In these pictures the subjects are polite gatherings of ladies in silks and courtiers with musical instruments, in a setting of rich gardens and fountains. The music is a sequence of hints and fragments rather than a formal development of themes. . . . There are two clearly defined divisions of the work, the first rapid and capricious, the second slow and sentimental, perhaps the unimportant flattery of a lover.

No very ambitious or recondite design is [illegible], yet it might not be accomplished without due command of musical and orchestral means, nor without a goodly portion of taste and fancy. The piece is, in [illegible], adroitly made. The prominent part [illegible] flute, again admirably played by Mr. [illegible]ent, is effective, never obtrusive, never [illegible]red by the accompanying orchestra. [illegible] delicate a score the lightest strokes arrest attention. The entrance of a horn becomes portentous, a song for [illegible] seems charged with color and [illegible] has here not attempted over-much, and perhaps for this reason he, too has accomplished the more.

Sharp was the contrast which lay between this "Fête Galante" and Bloch's "Schelomo," which yesterday followed it. The composer of "Schelomo was concerned, not with the polite artificialities of the eighteenth century, but with the Jewish soul, "the complex, glowing, agitated soul . . . vibrating throughout the Bible." Specifically his music deals with Solomon, the King of Israel, both in his proud and sensuous magnificence as monarch and in his bitter, searching wisdom as Preacher and Prophet. Here is matter to tempt to the uttermost the powers of even so abundantly gifted a composer as Ernest Bloch. And the music he has made to voice and interpret it may not be fully appreciated or adequately appraised on a single hearing. With Mr. Bedetti within the orchestra's own ranks to play the exacting part for solo violoncello, there is no reason why "Schelomo" should not soon reappear on a Symphony programme. No new piece presented at these concerts during the season now nearly ended better deserves repetition, and when this second performance comes it will perchance find soloist, conductor and orchestra freer, and hence still more eloquent and persuasive, in their several parts. From them this music may well exact all that they have to give, for it is charged to the brim with emotion—or rather with many emotions—and replete with poetic imagery. Interesting, distinctive and stimulating as much contemporary music undoubtedly is, the tonal art of our time little knows either virility or passion. But while most of his fellows are splitting technical hairs, devising various ingenuities and pursuing elusive phantasms, Ernest Bloch almost atavistically concerns himself with the eternal verities. Whether in his deliberately Hebraic "second period" to which belongs "Schelomo," or in his present relatively abstract manner, Bloch strikes hard and sinks deep. But means to weightier end is his amazing command over every musical and instrumental resource. Expression is still his goal and he seeks and gains it, both to beauty and to power.

To some listeners it makes little difference whether Bloch writes as Jew or merely as a man. Some, in hearing "Schelomo," might be less concerned with its application to Solomon in all his glory—and in all his wisdom—than with its sheer puissance and penetration, its rich coloring, its accents, now proud, now despairing. Yesterday it seemed that the prominence given the solo violoncello tended at times to hold the music in fetters that were straightway snapped when the orchestra spoke aloud, its mighty voice no longer hushed and stifled in deference to the 'cello's tonal limitations. Occasionally, it is true, the solo-instrument lends a poignantly personal note, that in the brooding, fate-haunted, almost dismal conclusion, becomes full of meaning. Yet even here the violoncello is hardly so eloquent as the ominous plucking of the double-basses, relentlessly descending to the depths, or the cavernous voice of the contra-bassoon that alone supports the 'cello's dying gasp.

If this extraordinary music made strong contrast to the Watteau picture that came before, it was no less removed from the sunny music that came after it. Not in all Brahms, hardly in the whole range of symphonic music, is there a single movement that for sheer loveliness and tranquil beauty can stand beside the first movement of this Symphony in D major. No matter how often the piece is heard, the exquisite burgeoning of melody at the end of this movement still brings, like the recurring miracle of Spring, a new thrill of surprise and wonderment. Yet upon this poetic peroration ensues surely the crabbedest, dreariest, dullest slow movement that ever found its way into a great symphony. Charming enough, yet for some over-ingenuous, too consciously nâive, is the Allegretto. And somehow the final movement, for all its serene elation, for all the "Mozartian blood" that Hanslick found flowing in its veins, fails to fulfil the promise of the opening. It is the tragedy of Brahms that, coming so near to true greatness, he should have just failed to attain it. Beethoven and Mozart and, in one instance, even Schubert, might write symphonies that were masterpieces from end to end. Brahms in his could reach the heights in one movement, or in two or three, and then, since his none too ready inspiration, must ever and anon desert him, he might only work his way, with an assumption of lightness or profundity, through the rest.

W. S. S.

TRANS. APR. 14.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Margaret Matzenauer, mezzo soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be the soloist at the Boston Symphony concerts in Symphony hall, next Friday afternon and Saturday evening. She will sing "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from "Oberon," and Isolde's Narrative from the first act of "Tristan and Isolde." Mr. Monteux will conduct the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn No. 6, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and a suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Tsar Sultan." The suite will be played for the first time in Boston.

EXTRA SYMPHONY

The closing concert of the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony orchestra will take place on April 23. Mr. Monteux will present the Overture to Weber's "Oberon," Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony (promptness in attending this concert is urged, for this symphony is played without pauses between movements), Saint-Saens's Septet for string orchestra, with trumpet and piano, the trumpet solo to be played by George Mager and the piano solo by Jesus Samroma. He will also conduct the prelude to Wagner's "Mastersingers," and, as a closing number, Berlioz's "Rakoczy" march. Florence Macbeth, soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will sing Pamina's aria from "The Magic Flute" and Blondina's air from "The Escape from the Seraglio."

HERALD - APR. 16

MONDAY SYMPHONY

The closing Monday evening Symphony concert will take place April 23. Pierre Monteux will present Weber's "Oberon" overture, Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony, Saint-Saens' Septet for strings, trumpet and piano, the prelude to Wagner's "Mastersingers" and Berlioz's "Rakoczy" March. Florence Macbeth, the coloratura soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will sing two Mozart arias.

MATZENAUER NEXT SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Margaret Matzenauer, the great mezzo soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be the soloist at Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. She will sing with orchestra an aria from "Oberon," and Isolde's narrative from the first act of "Tritan and Isolde." Pierre Monteux will conduct the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and a suite from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Tsar Saltan."

ADVTSR. APR. 15.

Last Monday Symphony

The closing concert of the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place on April [illegible] Pierre Monteux will present the overture to Weber's fairy opera, "Oberon" Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony (promptness in attending this concert is urged in that this symphony is played without pauses between movements) Saint-Saens' Septet for string orchestra with trumpet and piano, the trumpet solo to be played by Georges Mager and the piano solo by Jesus Samroma. He will also conduct the prelude to Wagner's "Meistersingers," and as a closing number Berlioz's "Rakoczy" March. As soloist of the evening Florence Macbeth, the coloratura soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will sing two arias of Mozart from "The Magic Flute" and "Il Seraglio."

Symphony Programme

Margaret Matzenauer, the great mezzo soprano of the Metropolitan Opera company, will be the soloist at the next regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 20 and 21. She will sing with the orchestra an aria from "Oberon," and Isolde's narrative from the first act of "Tristan and Isolde." Pierre Monteux will conduct the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn No. 6, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and a suite from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Tsar Saltan."

POST - APR. 15.

Friday at 2:30 and Saturday at 8:15 Boston Symphony Orchestra, 22d program. "Surprise" Symphony, Haydn; Suite from the opera "Tsar Saltan," Rimsky Korsakov; "Isolde's Narrative" from act 1 of "Tristan," Wagner; aria from "Oberon," Weber; "Ballad of the Gnomides," Respighi. Soloist, Margarete Matzenauer, mezzo soprano.

GLOBE. APR. 15.

"SCHELEMO" GIVEN FIRST RENDITION

Bloch Rhapsody Has Imagination and Intensity

BY OLIN DOWNES

A composition of towering imagination, and at times of an almost agonizing intensity of feeling—Ernest Bloch's "Schelemo" ("Solomon"), Jewish Rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra—was performed for the first time in this city at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, last night in Symphony Hall.

THE RACIAL SPIRIT

Because music goes so much deeper than speech, and because we are no Shelleys or Shaksperes, it is very difficult to give an idea of the wildness and the grandeur of this music in certain places, the utter despair of other pages, the vehement passion, the oriental gorgeousness of color. Let Mr. Bloch speak for himself. He can do it better. In the programme-book he says: "It is the Jewish soul that interests me, the complex, glowing, agitated soul that I feel vibrating through the Bible; the freshness and naivete of the Patriarchs; the violence that is evident in the prophetic books; the Jew's savage love of justice; the despair of the Preacher in Jerusalem; the sorrow and immensity of the Book of Job; the sensuality of the Song of Songs. All this is in us; all this is in me, and it is the better part of me. [illegible] subscribe in [illegible]

Great 'Cello Composition

Perhaps Mr. Bedetti, the admirable first 'cellist of the orchestra, is not as thankful as we are for a really great piece of music for 'cello and orchestra, for this piece is very difficult to play. It is difficult alike for soloist and for orchestra, and equally full of ideas for each of them. The orchestral part and the 'cello part have quite different roles, closely as they fit together. The 'cellist is the narrator, the exhorter. The orchestra establishes mood and background, and, more than that, rises to tremendous heights of prophecy and gloom when feeling seems to have accumulated to the point where the voice of a solo instrument can go no farther.

We don't know of any piece of music we have heard for a long time which has the originality, the depth, the powerful dramatic feeling of this one. Free in form, the freedom is that of a master. The emotion, as Mr. Bloch himself has truly remarked, is more than that of an individual. It is racial, ancestral, it is the voice of sages and prophets, which never dies, resounding in the souls of the peoples for unnumbered ages.

Orchestra's Task

Probably because of the great technical difficulty of this music, and notwithstanding the noble tone and the art of Mr. Bedetti, the performance had a quality somewhat cautious. This is an opinion of an unfamiliar work that will not down, based on an audition of the music some seasons ago with the composer, when the mood was more noble and more wild, and later cursory glances at the score. We believe that this truly magnificent composition could be more dramatically presented.

Two other living composers represented by first performances of their compositions at these concerts were Arthur Foote, "Night Piece," for flute and string orchestra, and David Stanley Smith, "Fete Galante," for orchestra with flute obligato. These pieces required the services as soloist of Georges Laurent. Mr. Foote's piece is very simple and charmingly written. Played with exquisite art by Mr. Laurent as soloist, it appeared as a model of what a composer who knows his business and also knows exactly what he is going to do can accomplish. Mr. Foote would not attach unwarranted importance to a piece of modest pretensions, but the audience had reason to rejoice in that very modesty and simplicity shown in a composition written surely and with unfailing good taste.

Mr. Smith's "Fete Galante" purports to be Watteausque. It is Debussyesque too, and the strain of a waltz in it could probably be characterized by some other "esque." It is over-long, and the effect is of spinelessness, in spite of repetitions of parts and sections. With the reservation we personally harbor about Bloch's music, the remaining performances were of the highest quality. What sparkle and verve in the music of Mozart! And what music! An overture written with no more thought, presumably, than of supplying a curtain-raiser. And the man who wrote it contemned by all the crowd of pretenders and mediocrities in the city with him.

If the music of Bloch was upsetting because of its power and intensity, it was followed by the symphony, so truly, so persistently, almost, in D major, of Brahms. And this symphony is lovely. It makes one think of the tender figures of Botticelli's picture of the Spring. Yes! The final pages of the first movement are like the spring which has not reached us!

POST - APR. 15

JACCHIA AGAIN WILL CONDUCT POP CONCERTS

Orchestra to Give Programs Sundays as Well as Week Days

Agide Jacchia has been re-engaged to conduct the 38th season of Pop concerts at Symphony Hall, which will open on Monday, May 7. This year will be the seventh season that he has conducted the Pops orchestra.

AGIDE JACCHIA

Because of the public desire, concerts will be held this year on Sundays as well as week days. The orchestra this year will have 80 members, and notable new pieces will be added to the favorites of long standing. Special programs will be given as frequently as in the past.

HERALD - APR. 18.

Respighi's extraordinary "Ballade of the Gnomides" will be played at the Symphony concerts this week. It was recently performed at an extra concert of the orchestra. The other orchestral pieces will be Haydn's "Surprise" symphony and two movements from the suite derived from Rimsky-Korsakov's fantastical opera, "The Legend of the Tsar Saltan." This suite is new here, though it was played in New York by the Russian Symphony Society as far back as 1905. Mme. Matzenauer will sing "Ocean! Thou Mighty Monster" and Isolde's Narrative. When Mme. Gadski sang the former aria at a Symphony concert in 1898 she was mildly rebuked for singing it in German. She and her husband laughed derisively. "Why not in German? Is 'Oberon' not a German opera? Wasn't Weber a German? Ha! ha!" It took some time to convince them that "Oberon" was written for London; that Weber learned English in order to set music to Planche's libretto.

Next Monday evening the Boston Symphony orchestra will give its last extra concert. Music by Sibelius, Wagner, Saint-Saens (Trumpet Septet) and Berlioz. Florence Macbeth will sing two arias by Mozart.

HERALD - APR. 19

TO HOLD [illegible] SUNDAY NIGHTS

New Plan Will Be Tried Out This Season

AGIDE JACCHIA
Again to direct the "Pops" at Symphony Hall.

Sunday night "Pop" concerts will be given for the first time during the new season, opening at Symphony Hall on Monday, May 7. It has been announced that, in response to the great demand for additional concerts, there will be Sunday programmes on alternate Sundays during May and June. The first Sunday night concert will be held May 13. This innovation is expected to meet the desires of many people, who have regretted that Sundays were always, in previous seasons, silent nights at the "Pops."

Agide Jacchia, who has conducted the "Pops" for the last six seasons, has been re-engaged for the approaching season. He will have 80 players of the Symphony Orchestra under him. Notable new pieces will be added to the programmes, but "Pops" favorites of long standing will not be forgotten. Refreshments served at tables and at the "Pops bar" will again create the unique "Pops" atmosphere, which makes the season so pleasant to Bostonians.

POST - APR. 18

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

Mr. Monteux Introduces Two Fragments of "Tsar Saltan," Opera by Rimsky-Korsakov of Old Russian Legend—Forthcoming Programmes

THREE operas by Rimsky-Korsakov have now been heard in Boston—"The Golden Cockerel," "The Tsar's Bride" and "The Snow Maiden." But that fecund composer wrote twelve others—and most of them we are not likely to hear even from a Russian company such as that which lately visited us. There is reason, then, for stir of interest when excerpts from those operas are played by the Symphony Orchestra. Last season a scene from "Mlada" was so made known to us, and on the programme of the Symphony Concerts of this week Mr. Monteux has set the first and last of three "Musical Pictures" from "The Legend of the Tsar Saltan, of his Son the Famous and Doughty Warrior Prince Gvidon Saltanovitch, and of the Beautiful Tsaritsa, Liebed," an opera based upon Pushkin's poem of like title, and first produced in December, 1900, at Moscow. "Previously to the first performance of the work," writes Rosa Newmarch in her invaluable book "The Russian Opera," "an orchestral suite consisting of three of the entr'actes, was played in Petersburg at one of the concerts of the Imperial Russian Musical Society. And it is this Suite that we of Boston are now in part to hear. Again, to quote Mrs. Newmarch, "The story . . . offers a strange mixture of the fantastic and the realistic. The opera is remarkable for fine orchestral numbers and the novelty and brilliancy of the instrumentation and for the free use of folk-melodies."

Printed in the score against each of the three numbers of the Suite is a quotation from Pushkin's poem in Russian and in German. The first piece of martial character, has for preface this brief stanza:

Then arose a war.
The Tsar Saltan of his wife took leave,
And, as he mounted his steed,
Bade her, by her love for him,
Remain steadfast and strong.

That which gives clue to the third movement is more extensive, as is the music itself:

An island lives in the sea,
Upon which rises, proud and high,
A city with golden battlements
And within are gardens and palaces.
There life is glad and free,
And three wonders are there.
First: a gentle and gracious squirrel
Who, cracking nuts of gold,
Takes from them kernels of emerald,
And collects the shells
Into piles of equal size,
The while he whistles lustily,
"In the garden, in the wood."
Second: there the sea
Stormily rises high in air,
All decked with white spray,
Roars thunderously, and boils and hisses
And overflowing, covers the land—
And leaves behind upon the shore
Three and thirty bold warriors,
Gold-helmeted conquerors.

[83]

[illegible] O'More's [illegible] is a pleasure. The voice is, for the most part, of sweet quality; there is power when wanted; the range is good and the musicianship, too.

Assisting Mr. O'More was Emilie Rose Knox, violinist. Miss Knox played two movements from the Wieniawski Concerto in D minor. With certain reservations, Miss Knox is rather a good violinist. The tone is broad and deep and there is a good feeling for each individual phrase. More work on the accuracy of octaves would not be amiss. Carl Brunner at the piano played, generally speaking, able accompaniments.

MATZENAUER, SOLOIST

As soloist at the twenty-second pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Margaret Matzenauer, mezzo soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing with the orchestra Isolde's Narrative from Act 1 of Wagner's music drama and an Aria from "Oberon." Pierre Monteux will conduct the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's Suite from the Opera Tsar Saltan."

APR. 14 - AMER.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

EASY PLEASURE WITH BLOCH FOR CONTRAST

His Rhapsody "King Solomon," Proves Puissant and Signal Music—Mr. Foote Succeeds and Professor Smith Fails with the Flute — For Pendant Lighter Brahms

MOSTLY to light, untaxing pleasures ran the Symphony Concert yesterday. Twice during the afternoon was a graver note sounded—in Bloch's "Schelomo" and in the [illegible] movement of Brahms's Second Symphony. The rest of this Symphony is Brahms in genial or sportive mood, while deliberately gay or frankly charming were the other pieces that made the programme —Mozart's Overture to "Figaro's Wedding," Arthur Foote's "Night Piece" for flute and strings, and David Stanley Smith's Fête Galante" for flute and orchestra.

It is good at any time to hear a Symphony Concert of such untroubling nature, and that of yesterday was the more welcome for the foil it made to the cosmic Wagnerian breadths, the glowing Wagnerian ardors and the heroic Wagnerian passions with which the ears of many are [illegible] now so thoroughly filled. Like a draught of sparkling wine was the ever-youthful Overture: if there be ageless music, surely it is this. And from Mr. Monteux and the orchestra it received yesterday a performance as subtle, bright and limpid as itself, while with like clarity, eloquence and euphony went the Symphony and the pieces by the two Americans.

Charming as is the Overture, and delightful as are portions of Brahms's singularly uneven Symphony, it was in the three new pieces that the interest of the concert chiefly centred. In calling his "Night Piece" a "slight little thing," Mr. Foote disarms criticism. Slight indeed it is, both of body and of texture, and little enough in length and breadth. But many a composer seeking deliberately to storm high heaven has written and wrought to less purpose and to less enjoyment. Both in key and mood the opening of this Nocturne recalls the first of Mr. Foote's pieces after Omar Khayyam. Gently reflective is his music, its course throughout is placid and untroubled, even the well-nigh inevitable moment of climax is avoided. In his "Fête Galante" Dr. Smith has listened to voices from over-seas. Not so Mr. Foote. There is in his "Night Piece" hardly a chord, hardly a progression, that he might not have written thirty years ago. To his old and his own ways adheres Mr. Foote, not setting his sail to every changing wind of musical fashion. But in his "Night Piece" is heard the composer who writes with skill and with conviction and always to the pursuit of beauty, even if in somewhat familiar guise. Practically a solo for flute, with light string accompaniment, the "Night Piece" put Mr. Laurent clearly in the foreground, and the purity and beauty of his tone and the felicity of his phrasing made additionally pleasurable the music in hand, emphasized in it the note of idyllic, gentle musing.

Since Dr. Smith has specifically set forth his purposes with the "Fête Galante" his words in partial curtailment may to advantage be quoted here. He writes:

> "Fête Galante" is intended to give a picture of aristocratic life in France, as portrayed by Watteau. Many of the paintings of Watteau are of the style known as "fête galante." In these pictures the subjects are polite gatherings of ladies in silks and courtiers with musical instruments, in a setting of rich gardens and fountains. The music is a sequence of hints and fragments rather than a formal development of themes. . . . There are two clearly defined divisions of the work, the first rapid and capricious, the second slow and sentimental, perhaps the unimportant flattery of a lover.

No very ambitious or recondite design is this, yet it might not be accomplished without due command of musical and orchestral means, nor without a goodly portion of taste and fancy. The piece is, in [illegible], adroitly made. The prominent part [illegible] flute, again admirably played by Mr. [illegible]ent, is effective, never obtrusive, never obscured by the accompanying orchestra. [illegible] delicate a score the lightest strokes [illegible] arrest attention. The entrance of a [illegible] horn becomes portentous, a song for [illegible] seems charged with color and [illegible] Piece," Dr. Smith has here not attempted over-much, and perhaps for this reason he, too has accomplished the more.

Sharp was the contrast which lay between this "Fête Galante" and Bloch's "Schelomo," which yesterday followed it. The composer of "Schelomo was concerned, not with the polite artificialities of the eighteenth century, but with the Jewish soul, "the complex, glowing, agitated soul . . . vibrating throughout the Bible." Specifically his music deals with Solomon, the King of Israel, both in his proud and sensuous magnificence as monarch and in his bitter, searching wisdom as Preacher and Prophet. Here is matter to tempt to the uttermost the powers of even so abundantly gifted a composer as Ernest Bloch. And the music he has made to voice and interpret it may not be fully appreciated or adequately appraised on a single hearing. With Mr. Bedetti within the orchestra's own ranks to play the exacting part for solo violoncello, there is no reason why "Schelomo" should not soon reappear on a Symphony programme. No new piece presented at these concerts during the season now nearly ended better deserves repetition, and when this second performance comes it will perchance find soloist, conductor and orchestra freer, and hence still more eloquent and persuasive, in their several parts. From them this music may well exact all that they have to give, for it is charged to the brim with emotion—or rather with many emotions—and replete with poetic imagery. Interesting, distinctive and stimulating as much contemporary music undoubtedly is, the tonal art of our time little knows either virility or passion. But while most of his fellows are splitting technical hairs, devising various ingenuities and pursuing elusive phantasms, Ernest Bloch almost atavistically concerns himself with the eternal verities. Whether in his deliberately Hebraic "second period" to which belongs "Schelomo," or in his present relatively abstract manner, Bloch strikes hard and sinks deep. But means to weightier end is his amazing command over every musical and instrumental resource. Expression is still his goal and he seeks and gains it, both to beauty and to power.

To some listeners it makes little difference whether Bloch writes as Jew or merely as a man. Some, in hearing "Schelomo," might be less concerned with its application to Solomon in all his glory—and in all his wisdom—than with its sheer puissance and penetration, its rich coloring, its accents, now proud, now despairing. Yesterday it seemed that the prominence given the solo violoncello tended at times to hold the music in fetters that were straightway snapped when the orchestra spoke aloud, its mighty voice no longer hushed and stifled in deference to the 'cello's tonal limitations. Occasionally, it is true, the solo-instrument lends a poignantly personal note, that in the brooding, fate-haunted, almost dismal conclusion, becomes full of meaning. Yet even here the violoncello is hardly so eloquent as the ominous plucking of the double-basses, relentlessly descending to the depths, or the cavernous voice of the contra-bassoon that alone supports the 'cello's dying gasp.

If this extraordinary music made strong contrast to the Watteau picture that came before, it was no less removed from the sunny music that came after it. Not in all Brahms, hardly in the whole range of symphonic music, is there a single movement that for sheer loveliness and tranquil beauty can stand beside the first movement of this Symphony in D major. No matter how often the piece is heard, the exquisite burgeoning of melody at the end of this movement still brings, like the recurring miracle of Spring, a new thrill of surprise and wonderment. Yet upon this poetic peroration ensues surely the crabbedest, dreariest, dullest slow movement that ever found its way into a great symphony. Charming enough, yet for some over-ingenuous, too consciously náive, is the Allegretto. And somehow the final movement for all its serene elation, for all the "Mozartian blood" that Hanslick found flowing in its veins, fails to fulfil the promise of the opening. It is the tragedy of Brahms that, coming so near to true greatness, he should have just failed to attain it. Beethoven and Mozart and, in one instance, even Schubert, might write symphonies that were masterpieces from end to end. Brahms in his could reach the heights in one movement, or in two or three, and then since his none too ready inspiration, must ever and anon desert him, he might only work his way, with an assumption of lightness or profundity, through the rest.

W. S. S.

TRANS APR. 14.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Margaret Matzenauer, mezzo soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be the soloist at the Boston Symphony concerts in Symphony hall, next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. She will sing "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from "Oberon," and Isolde's Narrative from the first act of "Tristan and Isolde." Mr. Monteux will conduct the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn No. 6, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and a suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Tsar Sultan." The suite will be played for the first time in Boston.

EXTRA SYMPHONY

The closing concert of the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony orchestra will take place on April 23. Mr. Monteux will present the Overture to Weber's "Oberon," Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony (promptness in attending this concert is urged, for this symphony is played without pauses between movements); Saint-Saens's Septet for string orchestra, with trumpet and piano, the trumpet solo to be played by George Mager and the piano solo by Jesus Samroma. He will also conduct the prelude to Wagner's "Maestersingers," and, as a closing number, Berlioz's "Rakoczy" march. Florence Macbeth, soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will sing Pamina's aria from "The Magic Flute" and Blondina's air from "The Escape from the Seraglio."

HERALD - APR. 15

MONDAY SYMPHONY

The closing Monday evening Symphony concert will take place April 23. Pierre Monteux will present Weber's "Oberon" overture, Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony, Saint-Saens' Septet for strings, trumpet and piano, the prelude to Wagner's "Mastersingers" and Berlioz's "Rakoczy" March. Florence Macbeth, the coloratura soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will sing two Mozart arias.

MATZENAUER NEXT SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Margaret Matzenauer, the great mezzo soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be the soloist at Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. She will sing with orchestra an aria from "Oberon," and Isolde's narrative from the first act of "Tritan and Isolde." Pierre Monteux will conduct the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and a suite from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Tsar Saltan."

ADVTSR. APR. 15.

Last Monday Symphony

The closing concert of the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place on April 23. Pierre Monteux will present the overture to Weber's fairy opera, "Oberon," Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony (promptness in attending this concert is urged in that this symphony is played without pauses between movements), Saint-Saens' Septet for string orchestra with trumpet and piano, the trumpet solo to be played by Georges Mager and the piano solo by Jesus Samroma. He will also conduct the prelude to Wagner's "Meistersingers," and as a closing number Berlioz's "Rakoczy" March. As soloist of the evening Florence Macbeth, the coloratura soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will sing two arias of Mozart from "The Magic Flute" and "Il Seraglio."

Symphony Programme

Margaret Matzenauer, the great mezzo soprano of the Metropolitan Opera company, will be the soloist at the next regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts to be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 20 and 21. She will sing with the orchestra an aria from "Oberon," and Isolde's narrative from the first act of "Tristan and Isolde." Pierre Monteux will conduct the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn No. 6, Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and a suite from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Tsar Saltan."

POST - APR. 15

Friday at 2:30 and Saturday at 8:15 Boston Symphony Orchestra, 22d program. "Surprise" Symphony, Haydn; Suite from the opera "Tsar Saltan," Rimsky Korsakov; "Isolde's Narrative" from act 1 of "Tristan," Wagner; aria from "Oberon," Weber; "Ballad of the Gnomides," Respighi. Soloist, Margarete Matzenauer, mezzo soprano.

GLOBE APR. 15.

"SCHELEMO" GIVEN FIRST RENDITION

Bloch Rhapsody Has Imagination and Intensity

BY OLIN DOWNES

A composition of towering imagination, and at times of an almost agonizing intensity of feeling—Ernest Bloch's "Schelemo" ("Solomon"), Jewish Rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra—was performed for the first time in this city at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, last night in Symphony Hall.

THE RACIAL SPIRIT

Because music goes so much deeper than speech, and because we are no Shelleys or Shaksperes, it is very difficult to give an idea of the wildness and the grandeur of this music in certain places, the utter despair of other pages, the vehement passion, the oriental gorgeousness of color. Let Mr. Bloch speak for himself. He can do it better. In the programme-book he says: "It is the Jewish soul that interests me, the complex, glowing, agitated soul that I feel vibrating through the Bible; the freshness and naivete of the Patriarchs; the violence that is evident in the prophetic books; the Jew's savage love of justice; the despair of the Preacher in Jerusalem; the sorrow and immensity of the Book of Job; the sensuality of the Song of Songs. All this is in us; all this is in me, and it is the better part of me.

[illegible] transcribe in [illegible] music."

Great 'Cello Composition

Perhaps Mr. Bedetti, the admirable first 'cellist of the orchestra, is not as thankful as we are for a really great piece of music for 'cello and orchestra, for this piece is very difficult to play. It is difficult alike for soloist and for orchestra, and equally full of ideas for each of them. The orchestral part and the 'cello part have quite different roles, closely as they fit together. The 'cellist is the narrator, the exhorter. The orchestra establishes mood and background, and, more than that, rises to tremendous heights of prophecy and gloom when feeling seems to have accumulated to the point where the voice of a solo instrument can go no farther.

We don't know of any piece of music we have heard for a long time which has the originality, the depth, the powerful dramatic feeling of this one. Free in form, the freedom is that of a master. The emotion, as Mr. Bloch himself has truly remarked, is more than that of an individual. It is racial, ancestral, it is the voice of sages and prophets, which never dies, resounding in the souls of the peoples for unnumbered ages.

Orchestra's Task

Probably because of the great technical difficulty of this music, and notwithstanding the noble tone and the art of Mr. Bedetti, the performance had a quality somewhat cautious. This is an opinion of an unfamiliar work that will not down, based on an audition of the music some seasons ago with the composer, when the mood was more noble and more wild, and later cursory glances at the score. We believe that this truly magnificent composition could be more dramatically presented.

Two other living composers represented by first performances of their compositions at these concerts were Arthur Foote, "Night Piece," for flute and string orchestra, and David Stanley Smith, "Fete Galante," for orchestra with flute obligato. These pieces required the services as soloist of Georges Laurent. Mr. Foote's piece is very simple and charmingly written. Played with exquisite art by Mr. Laurent as soloist, it appeared as a model of what a composer who knows his business and also knows exactly what he is going to do can accomplish. Mr. Foote would not attach unwarranted importance to a piece of modest pretensions, but the audience had reason to rejoice in that very modesty and simplicity shown in a composition written surely and with unfailing good taste.

Mr. Smith's "Fete Galante" purports to be Watteausque. It is Debussyesque too, and the strain of a waltz in it could probably be characterized by some other "esque." It is over-long, and the effect is of spinelessness, in spite of repetitions of parts and sections. With the reservation we personally harbor about Bloch's music, the remaining performances were of the highest quality. What sparkle and verve in the music of Mozart! And what music! An overture written with no more thought, presumably, than of supplying a curtain-raiser. And the man who wrote it contemned by all the crowd of pretenders and mediocrities in the city with him.

If the music of Bloch was upsetting because of its power and intensity, it was followed by the symphony, so truly, so persistently, almost, in D major, of Brahms. And this symphony is lovely. It makes one think of the tender figures of Botticelli's picture of the Spring. Yes! The final pages of the first movement are like the spring which has not reached us!

POST - APR. 15

JACCHIA AGAIN WILL CONDUCT POP CONCERTS

Orchestra to Give Programs Sundays as Well as Week Days

Agide Jacchia has been re-engaged to conduct the 38th season of Pop concerts at Symphony Hall, which will open on Monday, May 7. This year will be the seventh season that he has conducted the Pops orchestra.

AGIDE JACCHIA

Because of the public desire, concerts will be held this year on Sundays as well as week days. The orchestra this year will have 80 members, and notable new pieces will be added to the favorites of long standing. Special programs will be given as frequently as in the past.

HERALD - APR. 18.

Respighi's extraordinary "Ballade of the Gnomides" will be played at the Symphony concerts this week. It was recently performed at an extra concert of the orchestra. The other orchestral pieces will be Haydn's "Surprise" symphony and two movements from the suite derived from Rimsky-Korsakov's fantastical opera, "The Legend of the Tsar Saltan." This suite is new here, though it was played in New York by the Russian Symphony Society as far back as 1905. Mme. Matzenauer will sing "Ocean! Thou Mighty Monster" and Isolde's Narrative. When Mme. Gadski sang the former aria at a Symphony concert in 1898 she was mildly rebuked for singing it in German. She and her husband laughed derisively. "Why not in German? Is 'Oberon' not a German opera? Wasn't Weber a German? Ha! ha!" It took some time to convince them that "Oberon" was written for London; that Weber learned English in order to set music to Planche's libretto.

Next Monday evening the Boston Symphony orchestra will give its last extra concert. Music by Sibelius, Wagner, Saint-Saens (Trumpet Septet) and Berlioz. Florence Macbeth will sing two arias by Mozart.

HERALD - APR. 19

TO HOLD POP SUNDAY NIGHTS

New Plan Will Be Tried Out This Season

AGIDE JACCHIA

Again to direct the "Pops" at Symphony Hall.

Sunday night "Pop" concerts will be given for the first time during the new season, opening at Symphony Hall on Monday, May 7. It has been announced that, in response to the great demand for additional concerts, there will be Sunday programmes on alternate Sundays during May and June. The first Sunday night concert will be held May 13. This innovation is expected to meet the desires of many people, who have regretted that Sundays were always, in previous seasons, silent nights at the "Pops."

Agide Jacchia, who has conducted the "Pops" for the last six seasons, has been re-engaged for the approaching season. He will have 80 players of the Symphony Orchestra under him. Notable new pieces will be added to the programmes, but "Pops" favorites of long standing will not be forgotten. Refreshments served at tables and at the "Pops bar" will again create the unique "Pops" atmosphere, which makes the season so pleasant to Bostonians.

POST - APR. 18

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

Mr. Monteux Introduces Two Fragments of "Tsar Saltan," Opera by Rimsky-Korsakov of Old Russian Legend—Forthcoming Programmes

THREE operas by Rimsky-Korsakov have now been heard in Boston—"The Golden Cockerel," "The Tsar's Bride" and "The Snow Maiden." But that fecund composer wrote twelve others—and most of them we are not likely to hear even from a Russian company such as that which lately visited us. There is reason, then, for stir of interest when excerpts from those operas are played by the Symphony Orchestra. Last season a scene from "Mlada" was so made known to us, and on the programme of the Symphony Concerts of this week Mr. Monteux has set the first and last of three "Musical Pictures" from "The Legend of the Tsar Saltan, of his Son the Famous and Doughty Warrior Prince Gvidon Saltanovitch, and of the Beautiful Tsaritsa, Liebed," an opera based upon Pushkin's poem of like title, and first produced in December, 1906, at Moscow. "Previously to the first performance of the work," writes Rosa Newmarch in her invaluable book "The Russian Opera," an orchestral suite consisting of three of the entr'actes, was played in Petersburg at one of the concerts of the Imperial Russian Musical Society. And it is this Suite that we of Boston are now in part to hear. Again, to quote Mrs. Newmarch, "The story . . . offers a strange mixture of the fantastic and the realistic. The opera is remarkable for fine orchestral numbers and the novelty and brilliancy of the instrumentation and for the free use of folk-melodies."

Printed in the score against each of the three numbers of the Suite is a quotation from Pushkin's poem in Russian and in German. The first piece of martial character, has for preface this brief stanza:

Then arose a war.
The Tsar Saltan of his wife took leave,
And, as he mounted his steed,
Bade her, by her love for him,
Remain steadfast and strong.

That which gives clue to the third movement is more extensive, as is the music itself:

An island lies in the sea,
Upon which rises, proud and high,
A city with golden battlements
And within are gardens and palaces.
There life is glad and free,
And three wonders are there.
First: a gentle and gracious squirrel
Who, cracking nuts of gold,
Takes from them kernels of emerald,
And collects the shells
Into piles of equal size,
The while he whistles lustily,
"In the garden, in the wood."
Second: there the sea
Stormily rises high in air,
All decked with white spray,
Roars thunderously, and boils and hisses
And overflowing, covers the land—
And leaves behind upon the shore
Three and thirty bold warriors,
Gold-helmeted conquerors,

Third: the Princess Hilda,
Prototype of all beauty,
By day banishes the sun,
By night lights the earth,

Beneath her crown of hair the full moon shimmers,
And upon her brow there gleams a star.

There repeatedly I dipped
My beard in beer and wine—
But nothing passed my lips.

This third "Musical Picture," which in the opera serves as Prelude to the fourth and final act, consists of a series of episodes differing in mood and in tempo and key. Many of the themes have a folk-song character and, in view of Mrs. Newmarch's declaration regarding the source of the music, it may be presumed that some, at least, are actually of folk-song origin. As in "Milada," Rimsky-Korsakov uses in the "Tsar Saltan" an ampler orchestra than that with which he wrought the tonal marvels of "Antar" and "Scheherazade." In this case even the celesta, stranger to Rimsky's scores as we know them, makes an appearance. W. S. S.

Incidents and Prospects

Mr. Monteux has revised the programme for the supplementary Symphony Concert on Monday evening next in Symphony Hall, dropping the announced Symphony of Sibelius and substituting for it the pretty Scotch Symphony of Mendelssohn and Weber's efflorescent Overture to his opera, "Oberon." Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Saint-Saëns's Septet for Trumpet, Strings and Piano; the Rákóczy March of Berlioz and Miss Macbeth's two airs from Mozart keep place in a happily miscellaneous list.

At the Symphony Concerts of next week, Mr. Monteux will deservedly repeat Vaughan Williams's London Symphony, piece deepening impression at every hearing; and make known hereabouts little known Canons of Schumann as arranged for orchestra by the Parisian, Dubois, and a "Suite Primeval" drawn from Indian tribal melodies by Mr. Skilton, composer in the Middle West. Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi" will make [illegible] close.

TRANS. APR. 19.

SARDONIC MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

Raspighi's "Ballad of the Gnomes" Perplexes

BY OLIN DOWNES

Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomes," bearing on the flyleaf of the score a very strange and probably, in part, unpublishable "explanation" by Carlo Claussetti, was played for the first time at the subscription concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

IS HOLIDAY MUSIC

The explanatory poem hints vaguely at singular nuptials and revels satanic. Pages of the composition for us, such as the opening, are conventionally brilliant, and could be written for a holiday picnic as well as for the dwarfs and brides Claussetti describes. But later it is imaginative and [illegible], and highly original in harmony and instrumentation. He himself has witnessed these happenings. He was among the initiate. He tells his tale, his tongue in his cheek, in language not to be comprehended by the quotidians.

Margaret Matzenauer of the Metropolitan Opera Company was soloist. She sang the air, "Ocean, thou mighty monster," from Weber's "Oberon," and the tragic narrative of Isolde from the first act of Wagner's opera. She sang this music not only with nobility and dramatic spirit, but with the color that is inherent in her voice, and that lends to the music of Wagner the sensuousness which too many opera singers either forget or are unable to attain. Only twice, once in each of her performances, did the great range of the vocal part serve to remind one that after all Margaret Matzenauer is not a soprano, but a contralto of phenomenal beauty and range. Then a shrillness and evidence of effort brought this reminder. The amazing thing is that the voice has stood the terrible strain of Wagnerian soprano roles as it has, that it retains the color and quality which make it incomparable.

The other orchestra pieces, brilliantly played, were Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, and excerpts from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Tsar Saltan," an opera after a Russian legend.

POST - APR 21.

SYMPHONY GIVES ITS 22D CONCERT

Mme. Matzenauer Is Soloist; Repeat Concert Tonight

By PHILIP HALE

The 22d concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The orchestral pieces were Haydn's Symphony in G major ("The Surprise"); Respighi's "Ballade of the Gnomides" (first time at these concerts); and the first and third movements of a suite derived from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera "The Legend of the Tsar Saltan" (first time in Boston). Mme. Matzenauer sang "Ocean! Thou Mighty Monster," from "Oberon," and Isolde's narrative from the first act of "Tristan and Isolde."

Rispighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" was first played at Rome in 1920. Mr. Toscanini brought it out in New York two years ago. It was performed here at an extra concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last month. It was inspired by Carlo Clausetti's poem-prose, which, no doubt, like the play produced by Hamlet, is written "in very choice Italian," but translated into English for the score it appears to be expurgated and is not wholly intelligible. Two women drag along a raving gnome. He is said to be their husband. Hordes of gnomes are waiting eager for their prey. The women throw their husband into the sea after "the distorted nuptials." Then they dance in the morning breeze. Tiny people join in this wild dance. "One shrieks, another mocks, still another bites or laughs aloud."

That Respighi has a keen sense of beauty and a mastery of poetic expression is shown by his "Fountains of Rome." In this "Ballade of Gnomides" he found a subject that would have fired Richard Strauss to enthusiasm. We doubt if Strauss would have written so appropriate or savagely intense music. There is a splendid barbarity in Respighi's. Its frenzy is spontaneous, not coolly labored. The music might serve for the terrible scene in "The Bacchal" of Euripides. What is the most surprising feature of the Ballade is that in its frenzy there is no ugliness. Powerfully dramatic, ragingly dissonant at times, startling as is the use of instruments, with all the groaning and the shrieking and the horrid voices exulting in the cruel and sadic deeds, this Ballade is indisputably a work of tragic art. It was played with superb fire and fury.

The Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's fairy opera was performed before the opera itself was produced at Moscow in 1900. The second movement, which is in the nature of a Lamentation, was omitted yesterday. The first movement, in the form of a march is for the Tsar called to a war, with a lyrical theme for his farewelling his young bride. The third movement portrays the wonders of an enchanted isle on which a squirrel chews golden nuts with emerald kernels while he sings a folk song. Thirty-three warriors, mail-clad, land on the shore. The third wonder is a princess who outshines the light.

This music is possibly more effective in the opera house than in the concert hall. It might go well with a film play of the legend. In concert, the march is not conspicuous for originality—but the pleasing lyrical theme has something of a folk-song flavor. The other movement is disappointing. One expected from Rimsky-Korsakov something more fantastical in exoticism. The one charming feature was the folk song: "In the orchard, in the garden," which is introduced.

Haydn's honest and delightful symphony was admirably played, so well that the orchestra rose in acknowledgment of the applause. How fresh and vital this music is today!

Mme. Matzenauer sang with a wealth of tone and with a dramatic expression that was not too theatrical for a concert the great Scena and Air from "Oberon" and Isolde's Narrative. Occasionally one was reminded that she is a mezzo-soprano whose ambition leads her to sing soprano roles. It would be impertinent to insist on this in view of her moving performance. But the long-winded Narrative of Isolde should not be taken from the opera-house.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week comprises Vaughan Williams's London Symphony; Three Cannons of Schumann orchestrated by Dubois; two movements from Skilton's Primeval Suite on Tribal Indian melodies, Flute-Serenade and Moccasin Game, and the overture to Wagner's "Rienzi."

HERALD APR 21

SYMPHONY AUDIENCE LIKES MATZENAUER

Apr 21

Contralto Sings Weber and Wagner Scenes

Globe

Margarete Matzenauer, the noted contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, was cordially applauded yesterday afternoon at the Symphony concert for her dramatic singing of "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from Weber's "Oberon," and of Isolde's narrative to Brangaene in act 1 of "Tristan and Isolde," concerning Tristan's perfidy.

Like most operatic contraltos, Mme Matzenauer also essays roles that were intended for dramatic sopranos. The range of her voice makes this possible, but the timbre is not always what the composer intended.

Mme Matzenauer can produce clarion tones of great power and beauty. Her singing of a sustained melodic phrase is less satisfactory, she often swoops and sometimes is perceptibly, though not badly, short-breathed. Her interpretations are deficient in restraint and breadth. When she sings in English the quality of some of the vowel sounds, especially of long "a" and "i," is impure.

Mr Monteux began the program with Haydn's "Surprise" symphony. The opening allegro was taken prestissimo, the minuet moderato, and the finale allegro molto. These tempi did not produce satisfactory results, though Haydn's rather vague indications may be, and often are, successfully disregarded by other modern conductors.

The first movement yesterday was blurred, the minuet absurdly pompous. The first violins played their obligato variation in the slow movement beautifully, but the rest of the performance lacked subtlety. And Haydn, like Brahms, demands of the performer an extra amount of delicacy and of nuances to atone for his own deficiencies in these attributes.

Two movements from a suite taken from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera, "Tsar Saltan," played for the first time here, showed Rimsky as his own best imitator. The music recalled again and again other better-known works of his, in which substantially the same material was more finely wrought. The little march was played with spirit and grace.

Mr Monteux again performed Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," first played at the fourth of this year's Monday concerts. He made the calmer middle sections poetic and rhapsodic. The rambling, incoherent nature of the music makes the piece seem longer than it actually is.

Respighi in part of this tone poem set out to depict the torments of the damned. It is therefore to his credit that much of the music made at least one of the audience feel them.

The accompaniments for Mme Matzenauer were made more poetic and less perfunctory than usual.

Next week Vaughan Williams' "London Symphony" is again to be played. The other numbers announced are Dubois' arrangement for orchestra of Schumann's Three Pieces in Canon Form, Wagner's "Rienzi" overture, and two movements from a "Suite Primeval" by Skilton.

Famous Singer Here on Monday

Florence Macbeth, who will be the star soloist at the final extra Symphony concert next Monday night at Symphony Hall, is considered the most brilliant American coloratura singer. She has won a place for herself by the side of Frieda Hempel and Amelita Galli-Curci, yet she achieved this honor without going abroad. Her success in opera is among the first notable products of the American school and stage.

FLORENCE MACBETH

Miss Macbeth first came to Boston with the Chicago Opera Company. With this famous organization she now takes the place formerly occupied by Galli-Curci. At the Symphony concert on Monday night she will sing two arias from Mozart operas. Pierre Monteux will conduct the orchestra in an attractive program.

Matzenauer As Symphony Star

This week's Symphony soloist is Mme. Matzenauer, who after eclipsing almost all other contraltos blazed forth as dramatic soprano. Her Symphony selections, which were enthusiastically applauded yesterday, are an aria from Weber's "Oberon" and Isolde's long first-act narrative from the classic Wagner opera.

The orchestral numbers on the program, which will be repeated tonight, include Haydn's "Surprise" symphony, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Tsar Saltan" suite, and Respighi's extremely modern "Ballad of the Gnomides." The performance of the Respighi novelty was hugely enjoyed.

ADVTSR. APR. 21.

Twenty-Second Program of Boston Orchestra

The twenty-second program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, given yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall, was:

Haydn, Symphony in G major, "The Surprise"
Weber, Scena and Aria, "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from "Oberon"
Respighi, "Ballad of the Gnomides"
Wagner, Isolde's Narrative from "Tristan und Isolde"
Rimsky-Korsakoff, Suite from "Tsar Saltan"

Margaret Matzenauer was the soloist.

The program was one of unusual musical interest, and not the least interesting part of it was Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony. By some it is thought a condescension to admire the music of Haydn. To them it is hopelessly out of date and moreover childishly simple. To be sure, it is far from complex in its emotional and intellectual appeal and requires little effort on the part of the listener for its comprehension, yet for all that it is not so entirely simple as might at first appear. As for its execution, it demands an orchestral technic of the highest order, and Mr. Monteux and the orchestra have given no greater proof of their skill in this regard than yesterday afternoon. The precision of attack, and the beauty of tone and phrasing which the orchestra has acquired under his leadership were apparent at every turn.

Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" is harsh and disagreeable music, for all its cleverness in construction and orchestration. There is more real invention and musical craftsmanship in any one of good old "Papa" Haydn's pages than in any two of the Italian's; but programs consisting entirely of masterpieces would pall in the long run.

Rimsky's Suite, of course, has a distinctly Russian flavor. The episode of the whistling squirrel is particularly amusing and could have been so graphically, yet so musically portrayed only by a Korsakoff.

Mme. Matzenauer intoned Weber's Scena and Aria and Isolde's Narrative with the necessary fervor. Weber's music, in spite of an occasional old-fashioned turn, is still vigorous. It was curious to note that a short motive occurring several times on the trumpet distinctly recalls the sword motive of the "Ring." Of course, it is nothing new to state that several other motives used by the great Richard are to be found in the works of other composers, even as far back as Mozart. Isolde's Narrative is hardly a piece for the concert room. In any case, after a recent two weeks' course of Wagner, other music would have been more welcome.

Mme. Matzenauer sang the English text of the Oberon Aria with clear enunciation. Why did she not sing Isolde's Narrative in English also? A poor translation is preferable to a text sung in a language which is not understood by the greater portion of the audience. The listeners, however, turned the leaves of the program book with praiseworthy desire to find out what it was all about. There is no good reason why singers like Madame Matzenauer, who are capable of singing in English, should not be compelled by public opinion to do so on all occasions. The days when Wagner's text was held so sacred that to sing it in any other than the original language was considered sacrilege of the worst sort are happily past.

S. M.

MONTR. APR. 21

Sings for Others Rather Than Self

FLORENCE MACBETH

In these days of rush and push there is a constant cry for service in every direction. The public service would soon be the centre of a storm if it became too negligent of its duty to the people. The foundations of the postal department would be rudely shaken by a long suffering public, were the mail carrier to miss a delivery—of course, he never does. And the telephone, suppose you were given the correct number on your first call, why words could not express the—but, no, this is taboo. And so in other walks of life, service, or lack of it, makes or unmakes harmony and contentment.

"But there are other channels of service not generally thought of," says Florence Macbeth, the charming prima donna of the Chicago Opera Association, who is singing here Monday evening, April 23. "Most people," she said, "seem to have the impression that artists sing only for fame and fortune—and perhaps a few do, principally foreigners, though—but it is not generally so. I sing to serve and serving brings me joy. I feel that every note I sing has a message of love. As a matter of fact, I look upon my whole career as one of devoted service to my fellowmen, just as the public service, the mail carrier and the other necessary departments regard theirs."

SUNDAY POPS

A new feature of the Pop concerts which will take possession of Symphony hall during the spring and summer will be the extension of the season to Sunday evenings. This innovation is the inevitable result of the steadily growing attendance and popularity of Pop concerts in the recent seasons under the directorship of Agide Jacchia. This celebrated musician has been re-engaged for the coming 38th season of Pop concerts, which will begin on Monday, May 7, and which will be the seventh season under his conductorship.

The Pop concerts will number 80 players, with several striking novelties added to the Pops favorites of long standing, and with occasional "special nights" much may be expected from Agide Jacchia's programs.

TWENTY-THIRD SYMPHONY

The 23d program of the Boston symphony concerts, which will be the last pair but one of the season, will take place next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony hall, April 27 and 28. Pierre Monteux will conduct Vaughan Williams' London Symphony, which he introduced and repeated here two seasons ago; also a series of canons by Schumann, orchestrated by Dubois; Skilton's Suite Primeval on tribal Indian melodies and Wagner's overture to "Rienzi."

MACBETH NEXT SOLOIST

Florence Macbeth, prima donna soprano of the Chicago opera company, will appear as soloist at the last Boston symphony concert of the orchestra Monday evening series, which will take place next Monday, April 23 at 8:15 in Symphony hall.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Scotch Symphony of Mendelssohn, also Weber's overture to "Oberon", Wagner's prelude to the "Meistersingers," Saint-Saens septet for trumpet, strings and piano, soloists to be Jesus Sanroma and Georges Mager, and Berlioz's "Rakoczy" march. Miss Macbeth will sing arias of Mozart from "The Magic Flute" and "Il Seraglio."

TRAV. APR. 21.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

HARVES AGAIN OF VARIEGATED AFTERNOON

Haydn's Eighteenth-Century Music Versus a Twentieth-Century Orchestra — Respighi's Ballad of Gnomes and Grotesquerie in Second Hearing — Rimsky-Korsakov Fragmentary—Mme. Matzenauer for Dramatic Song

WISELY Mr. Monteux is choosing relatively untaxing programme for the final Symphony Concerts. At the end of a season audiences may conceivably be, if not actually, music-weary, at least more in mood for lighter pieces, less receptive to weightier ones than when the season is young or only half-advanced. For some, perhaps, the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn that began the concert of yesterday may now prove too light and even seem unworthy of serious consideration in this, the one hundred and thirty-third year of its age. It is indeed true that the "Surprise" is not the piece whereby Haydn's standing as symphonic composer should be appraised. He is here more irritatingly ingenuous, less charmingly naive than in others of his symphonies, even those that are frankly gay. But in the "Surprise," though the first movement and the Minuet offer little that is distinctive, there is the compensating pleasure of the celebrated Andante and the brisk, typically Haydnesque Finale. Since Mr. Walther lately showed us the way to the obtaining of just tonal balance in the performance of an eighteenth century symphony, in such a piece the orchestra's full string-choir seems now unduly cumbersome. More than once yesterday it seemed that the slender tunes of the "Surprise" Symphony could but ill bear the weight of sixteen first violins. Again, in many of the forte passages the string tone sounded heavy and opaque, while in certain strenuous moments the horns must well-nigh over-exert themselves in the effort to pierce the tonal mass. In the Andante, to be sure, there was the requisite transparency and euphony, yet perchance even this movement might have benefited by a reducing of the number of violins, violas and 'cellos in proportion to the reduction that Mr. Monteux actually made in the number of double-basses.

The performance of the other orchestral pieces of the afternoon—Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and the Suite from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera "Tsar Saltan"—brought no such repinings. Here each division of the band might revel and glory in its fullness and strength. Hitherto heard here only at a concert of the "extra" series (that of March 26 last), Respighi's Ballad found yesterday not only an environment better suited to its musical exactions, but also an orchestra better versed and more at ease in its many trying passages. Yet, though the performance was one calculated to display the music in the most favorable light, it may scarcely be said that this music proved wholly convincing. Thrice in the course of the piece does Respighi gain the sinister accents that he so assiduously courts—in the eerie string-glissandos of one passage, in the shrilly shrieking trumpets of another, and in the climax of the funeral march. But too often comes the thought that Berlioz, nearly a hundred years ago in his Fantastic Symphony, wrote music more truly horrible, surely more wildly imaginative—and without the orchestral and harmonic technique of these dissonant days to aid him. From the other music of Respighi that has been heard here it is not easy to see why he should have been one to essay such a study in the macabre as this "Ballad of the Gnomides." Among the modern Italians he is preeminently the poet and lyricist, the author of the "Fountains of Rome," the exquisite adapter of music from the sixteenth century surely, is not one by nature fitted to traffic with these filthy, gibbering what he has done [illegible] "Ballad" [illegible] the inevitable venting of spontaneous impulse than a cerebral tour de force.

Far removed from the vile doings of these loathesome Gnomides are the fantastic scenes and personages of Rimsky-Korsakov's fairy opera—the Tsar Saltan, his son, the renowned and mighty Paladin, the Prince Guidon Saltanovitch, and the beautiful Tsarevna Lebed. And quite as far removed from Respighi's shivers, shrieks and shudders are the pleasant tunes and warmly colorful instrumentation of the two entr'actes from the opera that were played yesterday. No composer, however great, may write nothing but masterpieces. As Homer nodded, so did Bach, Mozart, Beethoven and Wagner. Whatever may be the nature of the other music of the "Tsar Saltan," these two fragments do not disclose the composer of "Scheherazade" and the "Snow Maiden" in his most distinguished aspect—ever and anon in them comes hint of triviality. But better in the concert room a touch of triviality than a visitation of dullness and, at least through one hearing, these "Musical Pictures" made highly agreeable entertainment. There may be but little suggestion and tonal picturing in the third of these interludes (the second was omitted in yesterday's performance), but for the time it seemed sufficient that the music was ever melodious, often with the lilt and cadence of the Russian folk-song, and that now and again came the golden, glowing sonority peculiar to Rimsky-Korsakov's orchestral music.

Indirectly at least, other fairy folk had their place in yesterday's concert. As the soloist of the afternoon Mme. Matzenauer for one of her two numbers sang Rezia's "Scene and Air," "Ocean! Thou Mighty Monster!" from Weber's "Oberon." The precise reasons that led Mme. Matzenauer to choose this particular piece are not too readily discernible. As is generally known, Mme. Matzenauer made her first appearance among us of America as a contralto. Brangäne, Ortrud and Amneris were her rôles. Then, aspiring to become a soprano, she passed from Brangäne to Isolde. Mme. Matzenauer's Isolde is often a moving and impressive achievement, though there are places in which the music lies quite obviously outside the natural range of her voice. Yet the part of Isolde is well worth the trying for any singer of the vocal capacity and dramatic stature to encompass it. Why, however, merely as a concert-piece Mme. Matzenauer should essay Rezia's "Scena and Aria" when there are so many more deserving in which she might be heard to better advantage, is less clear. Even when she sings them full and true, these high notes are not the most effective part of her voice. And since Rezia's measures soar frequently if not continuously, and since in many passages the pitch of the accompaniment throws the voice into sharp relief, the listener yesterday had too often the uncomfortable apprehension that the singer might not "get away with it."

A thousand times better as sheer music Mme. Matzenauer's other piece of the afternoon—Isolde's narrative of the wounded Tristan from the first act of Wagner's opera—made, too, an infinitely more satisfactory vehicle for her singing. Here is music that she has made a part of herself, music to which she may bring the quickening fires of the opera house, music that lies often in the singer's warm, lustrous middle voice, and that, when it rises, rises over a clamoring, storming orchestra, so that hint of shrillness becomes not altogether amiss . . . To Mme. Matzenauer's singing of this deathless music but one objection might be raised—it came to an end all too soon. If only the rest of the act might somehow have followed it! . . . And how few are the pieces to be heard in any concert that bring a pang of sharp regret when they are ended. W. S. S.

TRANS. APR. 21

MATZENAUER SYMPHONY SOLOIST

By ZOE FABER

Margaret Matzenauer, soprano, was soloist with the symphony yesterday afternoon for the twenty-second concert of the season, Mr. Monteux conducting.

Mme. Matzenauer made two appearances, the first time singing "Ocena, Thou Mighty Monster" from Weber's "Oberon," and the second time singing Isolde's narrative from "Tristan und Isolde."

The voice of Matzenauer is too familiar to Boston audiences to require more than the briefest comment. The range seemed larger than ever and the volume nothing short of amazing.

The remainder of the program did not hold one's interest as it has on many another occasion. Mr. Monteux opened the concert with [illegible] Haydn symphony in G major. The final movement proved to be the best of the four.

A second hearing of the Respighi [illegible] the Gnomides" failed to [illegible] some of us that it is any [illegible]eable than it was on first [illegible] few weeks ago. It is too [illegible] shrieking, too blatant [illegible] repetition.

[illegible] delightful thing of the [illegible] sakov

[illegible] from "Tsar Saltan." Here is charming music, which is full of color and abounding in fairy-tale themes. It was particularly well played. It merits another hearing as soon, if not sooner, than the "Ballad of the Gnomides" if the greater number are to be pleased.

SUNDAY POPS SEASON'S FEATURE

A new feature of the Pop concerts which will take possession of Symphony Hall during the Spring and Summer will be the extension of the season to Sunday evenings. Previously the single silent night of the week during the Pop's season. This innovation is the inevitable result of the steadily growing attendance and popularity of Pop concerts in the recent seasons under the directorship of Agide Jacchia.

Agide Jacchia

This musician has been again engaged for the coming thirty-eighth season of Pop concerts which will begin on Monday, May 7, and which will be the seventh season under his conductorship.

MACBETH, SOLOIST

Florence Macbeth, the prima donna soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will appear as soloist at the last Boston Symphony concert of the Monday evening series, which will take place Monday, April 23, in Symphony Hall. Pierre Monteux will conduct the Scotch Symphony of Mendelssohn; also Weber's overture to "Oberon"; Wagner's prelude to the "Mastersingers"; Saint-Saens septet for trumpet, strings and piano, soloists to be Jesus Sanroma and Georges Mager; and Berlioz's "Rakoczy" march.

Florence Macbeth

AMER. APR. 21.

At the Symphony Concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next, Mr. Monteux, in deference to many requests, will repeat for a fourth time Vaughan Williams's "London Symphony," still the high-water mark of the new generation of English composers. As warmly as the conductor does a considerable public remember and admire the music; while with every performance it deepens impression. Upon the same programme the conductor has also set little-known Canons of Schumann as arranged for orchestra by the Parisian, Dubois, and a "Suite Primeval" drawn from Indian tribal melodies by Mr. Skilton, composer in the Middle West. Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi" will make vociferous close.

On Monday evening in Symphony Hall befalls the last in the current series of supplementary Symphony Concerts, enlisting the full orchestra, led by Mr. Monteux and traversing a programme of familiar or semi-familiar pieces, with a "soloist," Miss Florence Macbeth, for gilding. So may those hear the Symphony Orchestra who are not minded to its long succession of "regular concerts" or to its excursions into untried music. The programme traverses the pretty Scotch Symphony of Mendelssohn; Weber's efflorescent Overture to his opera, "Oberon"; Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Saint-Saëns Septet for Trumpet, Strings and Piano; the Rakoczy March of Berlioz, and for Miss Macbeth two airs from Mozart.

Thursday evening, May 3, in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge, the ninth and last of the current series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Monteux conducting. Chaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony; three dances from Grétry's opera, "Cephalus and Procris"; Weber's Overture to "Oberon;" airs of Wagner and Saint-Saëns, sung by Emma Roberts, full-voiced contralto, fill the programme.

[illegible] afternoon, May 4, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-fourth and last of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra through its forty-second season. Mr. Monteux will conduct, with Saint-Saëns's displayful "Organ Symphony" for major item of the programme

Saturday evening, May 5, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-fourth and last of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra through its forty-second season. Mr. Monteux will conduct, with Saint-Saëns' displayful "Organ Symphony" for major item of the programme.

TRANS-APR. 21

"Pop" Concerts Soon to Begin in Symphony Hall

The 38th season of "Pop" concerts will begin in Symphony Hall Sunday evening, May 7. Agide Jacchia has been reengaged to preside over the orchestra. This will be his seventh season and he has done much to make the "Pops" worthy of their name.

Last year's record season promises to be again exceeded if the still growing demand of clubs, conventions, schools and colleges for blocks of seats is any indication. Sunday has been the only silent night of the week in previous "Pop" seasons and this single loop hole for extension will bring Sunday pop concerts beginning May 13 and occurring on alternate Sundays through May and June. These will be featured as concerts although no less popular than the rest. The "pops" orchestra will number 80 players.

Tomorrow evening at 8:15 Boston Symphony Orchestra's last concert of the extra series, Florence Macbeth, soprano soloist. Mr Monteux will conduct the Scottish Symphony, Mendelssohn, without pause between the movements; Weber's overture, "Oberon"; Wagner, prelude to the "Mastersingers"; Saint-Saens Septet for trumpet, strings and piano, soloists, Jesus Sanroma and Georges Mager and Berlioz' "Rakoczy" march. Miss Macbeth will sing arias of Mozart from "The Magic Flute" and "Il Seraglio."

GLOBE-APR. 22.

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
MAR 5 1923

vertisement.

SEAT SALE AT TWO PLACES

As large a schedule as possible is being undertaken by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, including more than 50 concerts in Boston, 15 in Greater New York, and others in the larger cities of the East. For the majority of these concerts all seats have been taken for the season in advance. Pierre Monteux, the world famous conductor, has prepared for Portland a program of special interest which will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the ninth municipal concert, under the auspices of the music commission, Wednesday evening, March 7. Seats for this concert may be obtained at City Hall and also at Steinert's all day Tuesday and Wednesday.

PORTLAND
ME.
PRESS HERALD
MAR 5 1923

BOSTON ORCHESTRA CONCERT.

It is not unnatural that the coming of an organization of such importance and renown as the Boston Symphony Orchestra should take precedence over all other musical events and that the concert in City Hall auditorium Wednesday evening should give promise of being largely attended as well as brilliant artistically and socially.

The present concert is the ninth in the Municipal Organ course by Edwin H. Lemare, municipal organist, under the auspices of the Music Commission. Mr. Lemare will not take part, as the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux conductor, will furnish the entire program. The special construction of the platform for the orchestra of 101 members, makes it obviously impossible to have the console of the organ in place upon the stage. Then, besides this, the organ is not in pitch with the orchestra so that the performance of a concerto or other work, by Mr. Lemare, with the orchestra, would be out of the question.

The seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the City Hall box office, open daily from 9 a. m. until 4 p. m. On Tuesday and Wednesda tickets will be on sale not only at the Cit Hall box office but also at Steinert's.

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
MAR 6 1923

WOMAN HARPIST WITH THE BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYERS

Has Played in Many European Cities

That the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 101 musicians has one woman member, Mme. Lucille Delcourt, harpist, is a fact which is little known and will be of interest to many in the large audience now booking for the concert at which this world famous organization will appear in City Hall auditorium, under the auspices of the music commission, tomorrow evening. Mme. Delcourt has been with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for nearly three seasons. She is the wife of the eminent French conductor and has played all over Europe. Mme. Delcourt as is also of interest, is the personal friend of Mrs. Adam P. Leighton, the woman member of Portland's music commission.

The members of the Boston Symphony will come to Portland in the special car in which they travel and will arrive here tomorrow afternoon. The conductor, Pierre Monteaux, and the leaders of the various sections of the orchestra, will be at the Lafayette Hotel for dinner and the short time they will be in the City. The orchestra will return to Boston following the close of the concert.

A detailed account of how the Boston Symphony Orchestra has risen to its present world wide distinction, and how it has made Boston an important musical center, would constitute a long and impressive record of endeavor and fruition.

In 1881, the late Major Henry L. Higginson realized the first dream and inspiration of his life by founding in Boston a full sized symphony orchestra—a rare phenomenon in those days. This noted musician, soldier, financier, and all-public spirited citizen believed that there was a musical public for such an undertaking. Sparing no expense, he engaged the finest musicians then available in Europe to fill up the ranks and brought to this Country one after another of the world's greatest conductors to lend their individual genius to the cumulative improvements of the ensemble.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in its original form had only 60 players and its conductor was George Henschel, a celebrated musician of the day. The initial aims (always since adhered to) were that the musicians should play under one conductor in one orchestra, and not debase their talents by routine engagements; that the symphony concerts should provide only the finest music; that artistic considerations should always be paramount, and that the conductor be given absolute control. Controversy waxed hot in those days. The policies, the programs, even the wisdom of the whole venture were violently attacked and staunchly defended. But the wisdom of the founder was justified as each succeeding year of the orchestra added growth and success to the last.

The second conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, engaged in 1884, was a thorough and aruous musician, who did much towards training the ensemble to its new, traditional state of perfection. In 1889 came Arthur Nikisch, one of the most brilliant conductors of all time, who in turn was succeeded by Emil Pauer in 1893. In 1898 Mr. Gericke returned for a period of eight years, during which time Symphony Hall was built especially for the orchestra in 1900.

The conductors since then have been: Karl Muck, 1906-1908; Max Fiedler, 1908-1912; Karl Muck, 1912-1918; Henry Rabaud, 1918-1919; and since then, Pierre Monteux. The fact is worth remarking that all these conductors are living. It was in the autumn of 1919 that Pierre Monteux recognized as one of the greatest living conductors was offered the post, but could not obtain release from existing engagements except for a short period when he conducted the opening Boston Symphony for that season. In the season of 1919-20 he became the permanent conductor of the orchestra. His genius has added new qualities of beauty to the famous organization and never have the concerts been more highly praised or evidently enjoyed than under his direction.

Tickets for the local concert are on sale at City Hall box office and Steinert's. The indications point to a record breaking audience. There are still plenty of seats in all the desirable locations. It is planned to accommodate every patron even if an extra block of seats has to be placed on the floor of the auditorium.

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
MAR 6 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY SEATS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra attracts a large out-of-town patronage when it comes to Portland for its annual visit, under the auspices of the music commission, for it is the only opportunity Maine people have of hearing this wonderful organization without making a trip to Boston. This year the number of applications for tickets by out of town people is unusually large and the demand for seats on the part of the general public has been constant since the opening of the public sale. Although a capacity audience is practically assured and patrons are warned not to delay in purchasing their tickets, there are still plenty of good seats left and an efforts will be made to seat every applicant. A block of extra seats will be placed in the auditorium, if necessary.—[illegible]

PORTLAND
ME.
PRESS HERALD
MAR 7 1923

SYMPHONY CONCERT TONIGHT.

A program of outstanding interest will characterise the annual visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 101 members to Portland for the concert to be given in City Hall auditorium this evening. Pierre Monteaux, the illustrious conductor of the orchestra, will present the great symphony in D Minor by Caeser Franck, which is looked upon as his masterpiece and, indeed, as the foremost achievement of the French school of music.

The symphony will be preceded by Beethoven's Overture to Lenore No. 3. The modern German school of music will be represented by the most popular of Richard Strauss' tone poems, Till Eulenlegel's Merry Pranks, a humorous score describing the fantastic adventures of the character of the Mediaval legend. As an example of the modern English school of music, the Fantasia on a [illegible]

Theme by Thomas Tallis [illegible] played. The evening will close with music of still another nationality, when Pierre Monteaux and the orchestra present the Romanian Rhapsody of George Enesco, the distinguished composer now visiting America for the first time.

Tickets will be on salt all day at Steinert's and also at the City Hall box office [illegible]

POST
[illegible]ss: Washington, D. C.
MAR 8 1923

Boston Symphony.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will give its only concert in Washington this season at Poli's next Tuesday afternoon at 4:30.

The Boston Symphony orchestra is a great center of musical culture. As a museum brings visual works of art before the people, the Boston Symphony orchestra does its great service to the art of music. It was endowed and supported for the public benefit it might bring, and through 40 years of concerts in Boston, New York and other principal cities this world-famous organization has splendidly fulfilled its purpose.

The program, by special request, will be Wagnerian with the exception of the Caesar Franck Symphony in D minor. From all indications, a capacity audience will greet this great orchestra of 101 musicians next Tuesday.

Remaining seats now on sale at Mrs. Wilson-Greene's Concert bureau in Droop's, Thirteenth and G streets.

[illegible]TABLISHED 18[illegible]
[illegible]rom MAR 10 1923
[illegible]VENING MAIL
New York City

FAUST, BY THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

Liszt's "Faust" Symphony will comprise the larger part of the matinee programme to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Saturday afternoon, March 17, Carnegie Hall.

The concert for Thursday evening will include Chausson's Symphony in B flat major, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," C. M. Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," after Maeterlinck (viola d'amore solo, by Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra), and the "Tannhauser" overture.

From SUN
Address New York City
Date MAR 10 1923

"A Faust Symphony," dedicated to Berlioz and Liszt's yargest symphonic Berlioz and Liszt's largest symphonic York by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in March, 1917, which will give it again next Saturday afternoon with the Harvard Glee Club. The score is not strictly a symphony, but rather a succession of these tone poems, describing the three principal figures in Goethe's poem, although the Gretchen section has some resemblance to a slow movement and the Mephistopheles section to a scherzo. This last section presents no new themes, but is a fiendish mockery of those gone before—the "spirit of denial" incarnate in music. This leads to the Finale, "Andante mistica," wherein the male chorus is introduced.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 10 [illegible]

Faust Symphony by Boston Orchestra

Liszt's "Faust" Symphony will comprise the larger part of the matinée programme to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Saturday afternoon, March 17, at 2:30, in Carnegie Hall.

This work is divided into three parts, describing Faust, Gretchen, and Mephistopheles, and introducing a final chorus to be sung by the Harvard Glee Club, the tenor solo to be taken by Arthur Hackett. The Faust Symphony will be preceded by Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 5 in D major for string orchestra and solo string quartet.

The concert for next Thursday evening will include Chausson's Symphony in B flat major, Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," C. M. Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," after Maeterlinck (viola d'amore solo by Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra), and the "Tannhäuser" Overture.

[90]

what he has done in this Ballad [illegible] the inevitable venting of spontaneous impulse than a cerebral tour de force.

Far removed from the vile doings of these loathesome Gnomides are the fantastic scenes and personages of Rimsky-Korsakov's fairy opera—the Tsar Saltan, his son, the renowned and mighty Paladin, the Prince Guidon Saltanovitch, and the beautiful Tsarevna Lebed. And quite as far removed from Respighi's shivers, shrieks and shudders are the pleasant tunes and warmly colorful instrumentation of the two entr'actes from the opera that were played yesterday. No composer, however great, may write nothing but masterpieces. As Homer nodded, so did Bach, Mozart, Beethoven and Wagner. Whatever may be the nature of the other music of the "Tsar Saltan," these two fragments do not disclose the composer of "Scheherazade" and the "Snow Maiden" in his most distinguished aspect—ever and anon in them comes hint of triviality. But better in the concert room a touch of triviality than a visitation of dullness and, at least through one hearing, these "Musical Pictures" made highly agreeable entertainment. There may be but little suggestion and tonal picturing in the third of these interludes (the second was omitted in yesterday's performance), but for the time it seemed sufficient that the music was ever melodious, often with the lilt and cadence of the Russian folk-song, and that now and again came the golden, glowing sonority peculiar to Rimsky-Korsakov's orchestral music.

Indirectly at least, other fairy folk had their place in yesterday's concert. As the soloist of the afternoon Mme. Matzenauer for one of her two numbers sang Rezia's "Scene and Air," "Ocean! Thou Mighty Monster!" from Weber's "Oberon." The precise reasons that led Mme. Matzenauer to choose this particular piece are not too readily discernible. As is generally known, Mme. Matzenauer made her first appearance among us of America as a contralto. Brangäne, Ortrud and Amneris were her rôles. Then, aspiring to become a soprano, she passed from Brangäne to Isolde. Mme. Matzenauer's Isolde is often a moving and impressive achievement, though there are places in which the music lies quite obviously outside the natural range of her voice. Yet the part of Isolde is well worth the trying for any singer of the vocal capacity and dramatic stature to encompass it. Why, however, merely as a concert-piece Mme. Matzenauer should essay Rezia's "Scena and Aria" when there are so many more deserving in which she might be heard to better advantage, is less clear. Even when she sings them full and true, these high notes are not the most effective part of her voice. And since Rezia's measures soar frequently if not continuously, and since in many passages the pitch of the accompaniment throws the voice into sharp relief, the listener yesterday had too often the uncomfortable apprehension that the singer might not "get away with it."

A thousand times better as sheer music Mme. Matzenauer's other piece of the afternoon—Isolde's narrative of the wounded Tristan from the first act of Wagner's opera—made, too, an infinitely more satisfactory vehicle for her singing. Here is music that she has made a part of herself, music to which she may bring the quickening fires of the opera house, music that lies often in the singer's warm, lustrous middle voice, and that, when it rises, rises over a clamoring, storming orchestra, so that hint of shrillness becomes not altogether amiss . . . To Mme. Matzenauer's singing of this deathless music but one objection might be raised—it came to an end all too soon. If only the rest of the act might somehow have followed it! . . And how few are the pieces to be heard in any concert that bring a pang of sharp regret when they are ended. W. S. S.

TRANS. APR 21

MATZENAUER SYMPHONY SOLOIST

By ZOE FABER

Margaret Matzenauer, soprano, was soloist with the symphony yesterday afternoon for the twenty-second concert of the season, Mr. Monteux conducting.

Mme. Matzenauer made two appearances, the first time singing "Ocena, Thou Mighty Monster" from Weber's "Oberon," and the second time singing Isolde's narrative from "Tristan und Isolde."

The voice of Matzenauer is too familiar to Boston audiences to require more than the briefest comment. The range seemed larger than ever and the volume nothing short of amazing.

The remainder of the program did not hold one's interest as it has on many another occasion. Mr. Monteux opened the concert with the Haydn symphony in G major. The final movement proved to be the best of the four.

A second hearing of the Respighi "Ballad of the Gnomides" failed to convince some of us that it is any more agreeable than it was on first hearing a few weeks ago. It is too strident, too shrieking, too blatant for an early repetition.

The most delightful thing of the [illegible] Rimsky-Korsakov

Suite from Tsar Saltan." Here is charming music, which is full of color and abounding in fairy-tale themes. It was particularly well played. It merits another hearing as soon, if not sooner, than the "Ballad of the Gnomides" if the greater number are to be pleased.

SUNDAY POPS SEASON'S FEATURE

A new feature of the Pop concerts which will take possession of Symphony Hall during the Spring and Summer will be the extension of the season to Sunday evenings. Previously the single silent night of the week during the Pop's season. This innovation is the inevitable result of the steadily growing attendance and popularity of Pop concerts in the recent seasons under the directorship of Agide Jacchia.

Agide Jacchia

This musician has been again engaged for the coming thirty-eighth season of Pop concerts which will begin on Monday, May 7, and which will be the seventh season under his conductorship.

MACBETH, SOLOIST

Florence Macbeth, the prima donna soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will appear as soloist at the last Boston Symphony concert of the Monday evening series, which will take place Monday, April 23, in Symphony Hall. Pierre Monteux will conduct the Scotch Symphony of Mendelssohn; also Weber's overture to "Oberon"; Wagner's prelude to the "Mastersingers"; Saint-Saens septet for trumpet, strings and piano, soloists to be Jesus Sanroma and Georges Mager; and Berlioz's "Rakoczy" march.

Florence Macbeth

AMER. APR. 21.

At the Symphony Concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next, Mr. Monteux, in deference to many requests, will repeat for a fourth time Vaughan Williams's "London Symphony," still the high-water mark of the new generation of English composers. As warmly as the conductor does a considerable public remember and admire the music; while with every performance it deepens impression. Upon the same programme the conductor has also set little-known Canons of Schumann as arranged for orchestra by the Parisian, Dubois, and a "Suite Primeval" drawn from Indian tribal melodies by Mr. Skilton, composer in the Middle West. Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi" will make vociferous close.

On Monday evening in Symphony Hall befalls the last in the current series of supplementary Symphony Concerts, enlisting the full orchestra, led by Mr. Monteux and traversing a programme of familiar or semi-familiar pieces, with a "soloist," Miss Florence Macbeth, for gilding. So may those hear the Symphony Orchestra who are not minded to its long succession of "regular concerts" or to its excursions into untried music. The programme traverses the pretty Scotch Symphony of Mendelssohn; Weber's efflorescent Overture to his opera, "Oberon"; Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Saint-Saëns Septet for Trumpet, Strings and Piano; the Rakoczy March of Berlioz, and for Miss Macbeth two airs from Mozart.

Thursday evening, May 3, in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge, the ninth and last of the current series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Monteux conducting. Chaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony; three dances from Grétry's opera, "Cephalus and Procris"; Weber's Overture to "Oberon;" airs of Wagner and Saint-Saëns, sung by Emma Roberts, full-voiced contralto, fill the programme.

Friday afternoon, May 4, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-fourth and last of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra through its forty-second season, Mr. Monteux will conduct, with Saint-Saëns's displayful "Organ Symphony" for major item of the programme

Saturday evening, May 5, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-fourth and last of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra through its forty-second season. Mr. Monteux will conduct, with Saint-Saëns' displayful "Organ Symphony" for major item of the programme.

TRANS - APR. 21

"Pop" Concerts Soon to Begin in Symphony Hall

The 38th season of "Pop" concerts will begin in Symphony Hall Sunday evening, May 7. Agide Jacchia has been reengaged to preside over the orchestra. This will be his seventh season and he has done much to make the "Pops" worthy of their name.

Last year's record season promises to be again exceeded if the still growing demand of clubs, conventions, schools and colleges for blocks of seats is any indication. Sunday has been the only silent night of the week in previous "Pop" seasons and this single loop hole for extension will bring Sunday pop concerts beginning May 13 and occurring on alternate Sundays through May and June. These will be featured as concerts although no less popular than the rest. The "pops" orchestra will number 80 players.

Tomorrow evening at 8:15 Boston Symphony Orchestra's last concert of the extra series, Florence Macbeth, soprano soloist. Mr Monteux will conduct the Scottish Symphony, Mendelssohn, without pause between the movements; Weber's overture, "Oberon"; Wagner, prelude to the "Mastersingers"; Saint-Saens Septet for trumpet, strings and piano, soloists, Jesus Sanroma and Georges Mager and Berlioz' "Rakoczy" march. Miss Macbeth will sing arias of Mozart from "The Magic Flute" and "Il Seraglio."

GLOBE - APR. 22

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
MAR 5 1928

SEAT SALE AT TWO PLACES

As large a schedule as possible is being undertaken by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, including more than 50 concerts in Boston, 15 in Greater New York, and others in the larger cities of the East. For the majority of these concerts all seats have been taken for the season in advance. Pierre Monteux, the world famous conductor, has prepared for Portland a program of special interest which will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the ninth municipal concert, under the auspices of the music commission, Wednesday evening, March 7. Seats for this concert may be obtained at City Hall and also at Steinert's all day Tuesday and Wednesday.

PORTLAND
ME.
PRESS HERALD
MAR 5 1928

BOSTON ORCHESTRA CONCERT.

It is not unnatural that the coming of an organization of such importance and renown as the Boston Symphony Orchestra should take precedence over all other musical events and that the concert in City Hall auditorium Wednesday evening should give promise of being largely attended as well as brilliant artistically and socially.

The present concert is the ninth in the Municipal Organ course by Edwin H. Lemare, municipal organist, under the auspices of the Music Commission. Mr. Lemare will not take part, as the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux conductor, will furnish the entire program. The special construction of the platform for the orchestra of 101 members, makes it obviously impossible to have the console of the organ in place upon the stage. Then, besides this, the organ is not in pitch with the orchestra so that the performance of a concerto or other work, by Mr. Lemare, with the orchestra, would be out of the question.

The seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the City Hall box office, open daily from 9 a. m. until 4 p. m. On Tuesday and Wednesda tickets will be on sale not only at the Cit Hall box office but also at Steinert's

---

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
MAR 6 1923

WOMAN HARPIST WITH THE BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYERS

Has Played in Many European Cities

That the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 101 musicians has one woman member, Mme. Lucille Delcourt, harpist, is a fact which is little known and will be of interest to many in the large audience now booking for the concert at which this world famous organization will appear in City Hall auditorium, under the auspices of the music commission, tomorrow evening. Mme. Delcourt has been with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for nearly three seasons. She is the wife of the eminent French conductor and has played all over Europe. Mme. Delcourt as is also of interest, is the personal friend of Mrs. Adam P. Leighton, the woman member of Portland's music commission.

The members of the Boston Symphony will come to Portland in the special car in which they travel and will arrive here tomorrow afternoon. The conductor, Pierre Monteaux, and the leaders of the various sections of the orchestra, will be at the Lafayette Hotel for dinner and the short time they will be in the City. The orchestra will return to Boston following the close of the concert.

A detailed account of how the Boston Symphony Orchestra has risen to its present world wide distinction, and how it has made Boston an important musical center, would constitute a long and impressive record of endeavor and fruition.

In 1881, the late Major Henry L. Higginson realized the first dream and inspiration of his life by founding in Boston a full sized symphony orchestra—a rare phenomenon in those days. This noted musician, soldier, financier, and all-public spirited citizen believed that there was a musical public for such an undertaking. Sparing no expense, he engaged the finest musicians then available in Europe to fill up the ranks and brought to this Country one after another of the world's greatest conductors to lend their individual genius to the cumulative improvements of the ensemble.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in its original form had only 60 players and its conductor was George Henschel, a celebrated musician of the day. The initial aims (always since adhered to) were that the musicians should play under one conductor in one orchestra, and not debase their talents by routine engagements; that the symphony concerts should provide only the finest music; that artistic considerations should always be paramount, and that the conductor be given absolute control. Controversy waxed hot in those days. The policies, the programs, even the wisdom of the whole venture were violently attacked and staunchly defended. But the wisdom of the founder was justified as each succeeding year of the orchestra added growth and success to the last.

The second conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, engaged in 1884, was a thorough and aruous musician, who did much towards training the ensemble to its new, traditional state of perfection. In 1889 came Arthur Nikisch, one of the most brilliant conductors of all time, who in turn was succeeded by Emil Pauer in 1893. In 1898 Mr. Gericke returned for a period of eight years, during which time Symphony Hall was built especially for the orchestra in 1900.

The conductors since then have been: Karl Muck, 1906-1908; Max Fiedler, 1908-1912; Karl Muck, 1912-1918; Henry Rabaud, 1918-1919; and since then, Pierre Monteux. The fact is worth remarking that all these conductors are living. It was in the autumn of 1919 that Pierre Monteux recognized as one of the greatest living conductors was offered the post, but could not obtain release from existing engagements except for a short period when he conducted the opening Boston Symphony for that season. In the season of 1919-20 he became the permanent conductor of the orchestra. His genius has added new qualities of beauty to the famous organization and never have the concerts been more highly praised or evidently enjoyed than under his direction.

Tickets for the local concert are on sale at City Hall box office and Steinert's. The indications point to a record breaking audience. There are still plenty of seats in all the desirable locations. It is planned to accommodate every patron even if an extra block of seats has to be placed on the floor of the auditorium.

PORTLAND
ME.
EXPRESS
ISSUE OF
MAR 6 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY SEATS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra attracts a large out-of-town patronage when it comes to Portland for its annual visit, under the auspices of the music commission, for it is the only opportunity Maine people have of hearing this wonderful organization without making a trip to Boston. This year the number of applications for tickets by out of town people is unusually large and the demand for seats on the part of the general public has been constant since the opening of the public sale. Although a capacity audience is practically assured and patrons are warned not to delay in purchasing their tickets, there are still plenty of good seats left and an efforts will be made to seat every applicant. A block of extra seats will be placed in the auditorium, if necessary.—A

PORTLAND
ME.
PRESS HERALD
MAR 7 1928

SYMPHONY CONCERT TONIGHT.

A program of outstanding interest will characterize the annual visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 101 members to Portland for the concert to be given in City Hall auditorium this evening. Pierre Monteaux, the illustrious conductor of the orchestra, will present the great symphony in D Minor by Caeser Franck, which is looked upon as his masterpiece and, indeed, as the foremost achievement of the French school of music.

The symphony will be preceded by Beethoven's Overture to Lenore No. 3. The modern German school of music will be represented by the most popular of Richard Strauss' tone poems, Till Euleniegel's Merry Pranks, a humorous score describing the fantastic adventures of the character of the Mediaval legend. As an example of the modern English school of music, the Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis will be played. The evening will close with music of still another nationality, when Pierre Monteaux and the orchestra present the Romanian Rhapsody of George Enesco, the distinguished composer now visiting America for the first time.

Tickets will be on salt all day at Steinert's and also at the City Hall [illegible] office [illegible]

POST
ss: Washington, D. C.
MAR 8 1928

Boston Symphony.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will give its only concert in Washington this season at Poli's next Tuesday afternoon at 4:30.

The Boston Symphony orchestra is a great center of musical culture. As a museum brings visual works of art before the people, the Boston Symphony orchestra does its great service to the art of music. It was endowed and supported for the public benefit it might bring, and through 40 years of concerts in Boston, New York and other principal cities this world-famous organization has splendidly fulfilled its purpose.

The program, by special request, will be Wagnerian with the exception of the Caesar Franck Symphony in D minor. From all indications, a capacity audience will greet this great orchestra of 101 musicians next Tuesday.

Remaining seats now on sale at Mrs. Wilson-Greene's Concert bureau in Droop's, Thirteenth and G streets.

---

rom MAR 10 1928
VENING MAIL
New York City

FAUST, BY THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

Liszt's "Faust" Symphony will comprise the larger part of the matinee programme to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Saturday afternoon, March 17, Carnegie Hall.

The concert for Thursday evening will include Chausson's Symphony in B flat major, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," C. M. Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," after Maeterlinck (viola d'amore solo, by Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra), and the "Tannhauser" overture.

From SUN
Address New York City
Date MAR 10 1928

"A Faust Symphony," dedicated to Berlioz and Liszt's yargest symphonic Berlioz and Liszt's largest symphonic York by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in March 1917, which will give it again next Saturday afternoon with the Harvard Glee Club. The score is not strictly a symphony, but rather a succession of these tone poems, describing the three principal figures in Goethe's poem, although the Gretchen section has some resemblance to a slow movement and the Mephistopheles section to a scherzo. This last section presents no new themes, but is a fiendish mockery of those gone before—the "spirit of denial" incarnate in music. This leads to the Finale, "Andante mistica," wherein the male chorus is introduced.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
MAR 10 [illegible]

Faust Symphony by Boston Orchestra

Liszt's "Faust" Symphony will comprise the larger part of the matinée programme to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Saturday afternoon, March 17, at 2:30, in Carnegie Hall.

This work is divided into three parts, describing Faust, Gretchen, and Mephistopheles, and introducing a final chorus to be sung by the Harvard Glee Club, the tenor solo to be taken by Arthur Hackett. The Faust Symphony will be preceded by Handel's Concerto Trosso No. 5 in D major for string orchestra and solo string quartet.

The concert for next Thursday evening will include Chausson's Symphony in B flat major, Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," C. M. Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," after Maeterlinck (viola d'amore solo by Richard Burgin, concert master of the orchestra), and the "Tannhäuser" Overture.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
MAR 11 1928

The fourth and last concert, but one of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be given in the Academy of Music on Friday evening, March 16, with Emma Calve appearing as soloist. Pierre Monteux will open the programme with Schubert's immortal, melodious masterpiece, the "Unfinished" symphony in B minor, and will conduct the humorous and fantastic tone poem of Richard Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks." American music will be represented by a performance of Loeffler's "La Mart de Tintagiles," which has become as celebrated as the poem of Maeterlinck that inspired the music. The viola d'amore solo will be played by Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra. The concert will close with the brilliant and colorful Roumanian Rhapsody of Enesco, one of the Roumanian composer's most characteristic works, which is based upon the folk tunes of his own people. Emma Calve, the great French soprano, who is probably best known as the creator of the role of Carmen, made a vivid impression upon the American public last season and this by the dramatic power and sensuous beauty of her voice on the concert stage. She will sing with the orchestra Gluck's aria, "Divinities of the Styx," from Alceste," and Handel's aria of "Cleopatra."

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
March 11 1923

The last concert of the season in New York City will take place in Town Hall, Wednesday afternoon when Emilio de Gogorza will be the soloist.

At the Philadelphia Orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall on Tuesday March 13, Leopold Stokowski will present, for the first time here Henry Eichheim's "Oriental Impressions," for orchestra. Eichheim was formerly one of the first violinists in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He left that organization at the close of the season of 1911-1912, to become conductor of the Winchester (Mass.) Symphony Orchestra, but for the last few years he has devoted himself exclusively to composition. He was invited by Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge to compose music for the Pittsfield Festival of 1921. Using material gathered in the East, which he had visited in 1915 and 1919, he composed a group of Oriental sketches scored for a small group of instruments, "corresponding in size with that of a Chinese orchestra," which were performed at the Pittsfield Festival on Oct. 1, 1921. The pieces, rescored for large orchestra, were played for the first time in this form by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, March 24, 1922. The suite comprises five sketches, of which three will be presented, namely, the Korean Sketch, Chinese Sketch, and Japanese Nocturne.

The program opens with the Seventh Symphony of Schubert, and closes with Richard Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel."

WASHINGTON
D. C.
TIMES HERALD
MAR 11 1928

CONCERTS

Boston Symphony Concert on Tuesday

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, composed of one hundred and one musicians, will give its only concert in Washington this season at Poli's Theater in an all-orchestra program next Tuesday afternoon, March 13, at 4:30, under the management of Mrs. Wilson-Greene.

This historical organization has long ranked at the head of all others in America and is, by virtue of its supreme qualities, known throughout the musical world. This supremacy has been achieved through forty years of endeavor in which high ideals have been maintained, much wealth expended, and the genius of one after another of the world's greatest conductors contributed to the gradual perfecting of the ensemble. A minimum of change in the personnel, from season to season has enabled these artists to play together with marvelous unanimity.

The program is: Symphony, D Minor (Cesar Franck); overture, "The Flying Dutchman" (Wagner); [illegible] and love-death, "Tristan [illegible] Siegfried's funeral march, "Dusk of the Gods," Act III (Wagner); Siegfried's "Ascent to Brunhilde's Rock," Siegfried's "Rhine Journey," and the finale of "Dusk of the Gods" (Wagner.)

---

The remaining tickets on sale at Mrs. Wilson-Greene's Concert Bureau, Droop's, Thirteenth and G streets.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
~~TIMES~~ Star
ISSUE OF
MAR 11 1928

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tuesday.

One hundred and one musicians, collectively the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will make their one and only appearance in Washington this season at Poli's Theater, Tuesday afternoon, at 4:30 o'clock, under the management of Mrs. Wilson-Greene Pierre Monteux is the conductor.

The program might be called "Wagnerian," as four of the five numbers are the works of that great German The first number will be the "Symphony in D Minor, Lento: Allegro non Troppo, Allegretto, Allegro non Troppe" (Franck), and these Wagner compositions: Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"; "Prelude" and "Love Death," "Tristan and Isolde"; "Siegfried's Funeral March" ("Dusk of the Gods," Act III); "Siegfried's Ascent to Bruennhilde's Rock" ("Siegfried's Rhine Journey" and close of "Dusk of the Gods"). Tickets are on sale at Mrs. Wilson-Greene's concert bureau, 13th and G streets.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
~~TIMES~~ Star
ISSUE OF
MAR 11 1928

MUSIC IN Washington

HISTORICALLY, if from no other standpoint, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play here Tuesday for the first and only time this season, is the most interesting of all symphony organizations heard in this city. In 1881 the late Henry L. Higginson of Boston founded and brought together the first personnel of the orchestra, and virtually supported it alone for some time. Soon it became self-supporting, because Boston came to regard the orchestra as an integral part of its whole life. Many great conductors have developed the orchestra, and many great composers have achieved fame through compositions first played by this organization. The success of Boston's symphony orchestra can, to a large degree, be laid to the fact that few of its original members have departed from it, with the result that a machine has been built upon a foundation of solidarity and personal interest.

* * * *

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVENING GLOBE
ISSUE OF
MAR 12 1928

Coming Concerts.

A variety of interesting symphony concerts representing several cities are in view for the well-known New York music lover. The Philadelphia Orchestra, under the dynamic Mr. Stokowski, will present for the first time here Henry Eichheim's "Oriental Impressions" at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, March 13. Mr. Eichheim, formerly a first violinist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, composed this suite of five sketches for the Pittsfield Festival of 1921, scoring it for a small group of instruments corresponding in size with a Chinese orchestra. "The Corean Sketch," "Chinese Sketch," and "Japanese Nocturne" will be given here. Schubert's seventh symphony and Richard Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel" comprise the rest of the programme.

WASHINGTON
D. C.
TIMES HERALD
MAR 11 1928

MONTEUX RETURNS IN SINGLE CONCERT OF BOSTON PLAYERS

John Charles Thomas, American Baritone, Whose Appeal Seconds That of John McCormack, Returns for a Second Song-Recital Here This Week—Jeritza Confesses Her Favorite Opera Role, While Kindler Tells How Hofmann Was Patronized by Small Lad.

By JESSIE MacBRIDE.

WE welcome the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its single concert of the season here this week.

Time was when this famous orchestra, in five concerts a year, perhaps less, was the only orchestra of world fame that Washington ever heard. Fancy the National Capital with such a small musical menu!

Pierre Monteux, eminent French conductor of the Boston Symphony, has maintained their distinguishing trait, which is an infinite fineness in detail of phrase and purity and perfection of tone in a marvelous ensemble. The Frenchman's ideal in music, as it is in language, is for a classic purity of line and form—at the opposite pole from the Slav, to whom emotion is the first thought.

M. Monteux and his players will give the Cesar Franck D Minor Symphony, "Pere Frank," whom all Frenchmen reverence as the bulwark of their music. The rest of the program is entirely from the music-drama of Richard Wagner. The rendition will not lack temperament, but of this we may be sure, each chiseled out, and, if you know your Wagner well, the people of his dramas will each speak to you, in individual character, from the instruments of his orchestra.

ABOVE, at left, Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in a "close-up" with his two children, Denise, a beautiful little girl, and Claude, who may have been named for his father's famous countryman, Claude Achille Debussy. ~~At right, John Charles Thomas, American baritone, at the National Thursday. Below, Alfredo Casella, soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra~~ March 20.

ESTABLISHED MAR 11 1928
From
Telegram
New York City

Liszt's "Faust" symphony will comprise the larger part of the matinee program to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. The Harvard Glee Club will assist. The tenor solo is to be taken by Arthur Hackett. The "Faust" symphony will be preceded by Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 5 in D major for string orchestra and solo string quartet.

The concert for next Thursday evening will include Chausson's symphony in B flat major, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," C. M. Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagilos," after Maeterlinck (viola d'amore solo by Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra), and the "Tannhaeuser" overture.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 11 1928

the soloist being Mieczyslaw Munz.

Bostonians Bring Chorus.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in its last visit but one for this season, plays under Pierre Monteux's direction next Thursday evening at Carnegie Hall, as follows:

Symphony Op. 20, in B flat	Chausson
"Till Eulenspiegel"	Richard Strauss
"La Mort de Tintagiles"	C. M. Loeffler
Overture, "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner

Assisted by the Harvard Glee Club and Arthur Hackett, tenor, the Boston Orchestra announces for its Saturday matinee this dual program:

Concerto Grosso No. 5, D major	Handel
A "Faust" symphony	Liszt

Mr. Monteux and his men will return for their last New York concerts of the season on April 5 and 7.

NEW YORK
TIMES
MAR 11 1928

[illegible] by Mr. Goodrich.

The Boston Transcript speaks mysteriously of a "surprise" for the audience of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be given them at the concert on March 30—"if the trustees ever permit it to be announced."

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD
MAR 11 1928

1410

Mr. Monteux's programs for the [illegible] pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week at Carnegie Hall are: Thursday evening, Chausson, Symphony, B flat; Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel'; Loeffler, "La Mort de Tintagiles," with viola d'amore solo by Richard Burgin; Wagner, "Tannhauser" overture. Saturday—Matinee, Handel, Concerto Grosso, No. 5, D, for string orchestra and string quartet; Liszt, "Faust" Symphony, with chorus sung by Harvard Glee Club, tenor solo, by Arthur Hackett.

BALTIMORE
MD.
EVENING SUN
MAR 12 1928

interest.

ON Wednesday Calve is to sing here with the Boston Orchestra. A thrilling thought, truly!

It will be wonderful to hear this supreme artist again. She is one of the most famous singers of the "great days" of opera.

Moreover, it will be nice to be listening once more to the Boston Orchestra. It plays here far too infrequently.

[91]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

MAR 11 1928
From American
Baltimore, Md.

With Boston Symphony

Emma Calve, the noted French soprano, will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony, of which another French artist, Pierre Monteux, is director, at its only performance this season in Baltimore on next Wednesday at the Lyric.

Calve To Be Soloist With Boston Symphony

nteresting Program To Be Given By This Orchestra At The Lyric On Wednesday Evening—Pierre Monteux Will Conduct.

HE annual visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Baltimore will take place Wednesday ning, March 14, when this organ- ation appears in the Lyric Theatre ive a concert at 8.30 o'clock.

erre Monteux, the conductor of orchestra, will open the program Cesar Franck's Symphony in minor, which is acknowledged to he masterpiece of the great Bel- composer and the finest achieve- nt of the French school of music. ning in an atmosphere of mystic curity, the music ascends gradual- to wondrous heights of spiritual altation. The Allegretto contains mous solo for the English horn. the distinguished soloist of the ning, Emma Calve, the great ch dramatic soprano, who has of late equalled her former successes in grand opera by appearances on the concert stage, will sing two notable arias, "Divinities of the Styx" from Gluck's "Alceste" and the aria of Cleopatra from Handel's "Julius Caesar."

Mr. Monteux will also conduct the fine score of Charles Martin Loeffler, "La Mort de Tintagiles," based on the drama of Maurice Maeterlinck and looked upon as one of the most beautiful works by an American composer. A beautiful solo by the viola d'amore, suggesting the character of the prince, according to Maeterlinck's story, is interwoven in the score and will be played by Richard Burgin, the concertmaster of the orchestra. The closing number on the program will be the "Tannhauser" Overture.

BALTIMORE,
MD.
SUN
ISSUE OF
MAR 11 1928

OMORROW night Tandy Mackenzie, a young Hawaiian tenor, will ap- recital at Maryland School for Blind, at Overlea.

Wednesday evening a program of variety and deep interest will be ented by the Boston Symphony Or- ra at the Lyric, with Emma Calvé, French soprano, as soloist. Pierre teux, who is now fulfilling his th season as conductor of the or- stra, will open the program with the phony of Franck in D minor, which erally is regarded as his masterpiece as one of the foremost achieve- nts in the French school of music. work opens in sombre mood, with mysterious theme through which the sic ultimately works its way to a n of joy, symbolic of an affirmation faith by one of the most religious of posers.

Monteux also has included in his am "La Mort de Tintagiles," the atic poem of C. M. Loeffler, who is the most generally liked of Amer- omposers. The work was inspired by the drama of Mæterlinck and has come to be almost as well known. The solo viola d'amore part will be played by Richard Burgin, the concert master of the orchestra. Mme. Calvé is probably best known for her creation of the role of Carmen. She will sing with the orchestra Gluck's aria "Divinities of the Styz," from "Alceste," and Handel's aria of Cleopatra. The full program will be:

Symphony in D minor............Franck
I. Lento: Allegro non troppo.
II. Allegretto.
III. Allegro non troppo.
Aria, "Divinités du Styx," from "Alceste"..............................Gluck
"La Mort de Tintagiles," Dramatic Poem after the Drama of Maurice Maeterlinck, for Orchestra and Viole d'Amour, Loeffler
(Viole d'Amour—Richard Burgin)
Aria of Cleopatra.................Handel
Overture to "Tannhauser"........Wagner
Soloist.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
MAR 11 1928

Boston Symphony This Week.

The fourth visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season will comprise concerts in Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening, March 15, and Saturday afternoon, March 17. At the Thursday concert Pierre Monteaux will present the Symphony in B flat of Chausson, "Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," C. M. Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," in which the viola d'amore solo will be played by Richard Burgin, the concert master; also the "Tannhauser" overture.

On Saturday Pierre Monteaux will revive the "Faust" Symphony of Liszt. This score is divided into three parts, describing Faust, Gretchen and Mephistopheles, and culminates with a chorus glorifying the "eternal feminine." The chorus will be sung by the Harvard Glee Club and the tenor solo by Arthur Hackett. The symphony will be preceded by Handel's Concerto Grosso Number 5 in D major for string orchestra and solo string quartette.

"A Faust Symphony," dedicated to Berlioz, and Liszt's largest symphonic work, was last performed in New York by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in March, 1917. The score is not strictly a symphony, but rather a succession of three-tone poems, describing the three principal figures in Goethe's poem, although the Gretchen section has some resemblance to a slow movement and the Mephistopheles section to a scherzo. The last section presents no new themes, but is a fiendish mockery of those gone before the "spirit of denial" incarnate in music. This leads to the finale, "Andante mistica," wherein the male chorus is introduced.

NEW YORK
N. Y. Bklyn
WORLD
ISSUE OF
MAR 11 1928

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will have Emma Calve as soloist at the concert to be given Friday evening at the Academy of Music. Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" will be followed by the tone poem of Strauss "Til Eulenspgelies Merry Pranks," based on a mediaeval legend. Richard Burgen, concertmaster of the orchestra, will play Loeffler's dramatic poem "La Mort di Tintagiles" and the viola di armore "The Roumanin Rhapsody," Enesco, considered one of the composer's most characteristic works.

BALTIMORE,
MD.
NEWS
ISSUE OF
MAR 12 1928

"Carmen," with Emma Calve, was my first grand opera. Though just out of long clothes, I remember the event very distinctly. I was quite crazy about the whole thing and, in fact, don't think I ever entirely recovered.

Well, I have not heard Mlle. Emma since, so it is natural, I suppose, to approach her appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Lyric next Wednesday night with something like trepidation. Probably many others are in the same boat.

Calve's return to the American concert stage was one of the much discussed happenings of the musical world last season. Despite the years that have gone sailing by since her prime; despite the many other Carmens who have waved their fringe and sung the Habanera—all too many of 'em 'way off key at that—she manipulated a "come-back" that has had few precedents. She is apparently another exemplification of the saying "Once a great artist always a great artist."

What an original of the originals she was! They say she used to make Marguerite a flirtatious young thing who ogled Faust on the very portals of the church. Well, why not? I've always thought that Mephistopheles got entirely too much credit for that affair.

At her appearance with the Boston Symphony she will sing Handel's Aria of Cleopatra and "Divinities du Styx" from Gluck's "Alceste," recently sung here by Jeritza.

BALTIMORE
MD.
EVENING SUN
MAR 13 1928

TOMORROW evening, at the Lyric, the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Pierre Monteux, will give its only concert here this season.

The assisting artist will be no other than Emma Calve, the distinguished soprano, whose name is so closely associated with the golden days of Metropolitan Opera, and who on this occasion will sing—and in the grand manner, it is quite safe to predict—the "Divinities du Styx" aria, from Gluck's "Alceste," and also Cleopatra's aria, by Handel.

The orchestra will play the Symphony in D minor, by Cesar Franck; Loeffler's dramatic poem "La Mort de Tintagiles," the inspiration of which is Mæterlinck's drama of the same name and in which the solo voice is the rarely heard Viole d'Amour, an antique instrument that on this occasion will be played by Richard Burgin.

The overture to Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" will close the concert.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
MAR 31 1928

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE FINAL CONCERT OF SEASON

Harold Bauer to be Soloist April 10 at Infantry Hall

The final Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season will be given in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, April 10, at 8:15, with Harold Bauer, noted pianist, as soloist.

The symphony chosen by Pierre Monteux for the occasion will be the Sixth by Tchaikovsky, known as the "Pathetic," the masterpiece of the great Russian, which embodies the deep suffering of an oppressed nation.

Harold Bauer will appear to the finest advantage in the "Emperor" Concerto, No. 5, by Beethoven, the score of which in general scope and importance ranks with the nine symphonies of the great master. The closing number will be Enesco's brilliant score, the Roumanian Rhapsody.

FROM MAR 31 1928
NEWS,
Providence, R. I.

HAROLD BAUER IS SOLOIST, APRIL 10, BOSTON SYMPHONY

With Harold Bauer, the great pianist, as soloist, Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will make their final appearance of the season in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, April 10, at 8:15.

The symphony chosen for this occasion will be the sixth by Tchaikovsky, known as the "Pathetic," the masterpiece of the great Russian, which embodies the deep suffering of an oppressed nation. This, probably as much as any other single work, has brought the true Slavic temperament in touch with the Western world.

Harold Bauer will appear to the finest advantage in the "Emperor" Concerto, Number 5, by Beethoven. This score, which in general scope and importance ranks with the nine symphonies of the great master, exacts the finest of Harold Bauer's skill and artistry. The concert and the season will close with Enesco's brilliant score, the Roumanian Rhapsody, based on the folk themes of the composer's own people. It is one of the most popular of symphonic pieces.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
TRIBUNE
ISSUE OF
APR 1 1928

HAROLD BAUER

Great Pianist With the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
TRIBUNE
ISSUE OF
APR 1 1928

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will close its Providence season with a concert in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, April 10, at which the soloist will be Harold Bauer, the great pianist. The "Emperor" concerto of Beethoven, in which Harold Bauer is to appear with the orchestra is looked upon as equal to the symphonies of this great master, by the magnitude of its conception and scope. This music exacts the very finest of Harold Bauer's interpretative powers.

The symphony chosen for this closing concert will be the sixth by Tchaikovsky, known as the "Pathetic," which, as much as any other work, has made Russia famous as a nation of musical genius; indeed, it voices the deep suffering, the idealism and disillusion of a great emotional people, and contains numerous melodies of poignant beauty.

The closing number will be the riotous Roumanian Rhapsody by Georges Enesco. This composition, based on characteristic Roumanian melodies and scored with amazing dash and brilliance, is one of the most captivating in the symphonic repertory.

The MacDowell Club will hold their annual meeting to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock at the home of Mrs. James Wheaton Luther, 113 Keene street, and after the regular business meeting there will be a program of music.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
APR 6 1928

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was perhaps not the most inspiring performance possible that Mr. Monteux gave of the Schubert "Unfinished Symphony" last night, at Carnegie Hall, but it was a correct one and by no means unenjoyable.

Pablo Casals had an accident just as he began and this delayed matters a few minutes, but he did play the Schumann 'cello concerto in a manner that may be described as perfection. His marvelous singing tone, his impeccable intonation, his warmth of feeling that makes the instrument as emotional as a human voice,—all these contributed to the sum total of a really great program.

Pierre Monteux is at his best in French and Russian music and the Debussy suite "Printemps" (everybody is playing "spring" music, evidently in the hope of coaxing forth the real spring) was another argument to prove the point. The concert ended with Wagner's "Rienzi" overture.

W. H. HUMISTON.

[92]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

MAR 11 1928
From American
Baltimore, Md.

With Boston Symphony

Emma Calve, the noted French soprano, will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony, of which another French artist, Pierre Monteux, is director, at its only performance this season in Baltimore on next Wednesday at the Lyric.

Calve To Be Soloist With Boston Symphony

Interesting Program To Be Given By This Orchestra At The Lyric On Wednesday Evening—Pierre Monteux Will Conduct.

THE annual visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Baltimore will take place Wednesday evening, March 14, when this organization appears in the Lyric Theatre to give a concert at 8.30 o'clock.

Pierre Monteux, the conductor of the orchestra, will open the program with Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor, which is acknowledged to be the masterpiece of the great Belgian composer and the finest achievement of the French school of music. Opening in an atmosphere of mystic obscurity, the music ascends gradually to wondrous heights of spiritual exaltation. The Allegretto contains a famous solo for the English horn.

As the distinguished soloist of the evening, Emma Calve, the great French dramatic soprano, who has of late equalled her former successes in grand opera by appearances on the concert stage, will sing two notable arias, "Divinities of the Styx" from Gluck's "Alceste" and the aria of Cleopatra from Handel's "Julius Caesar."

Mr. Monteux will also conduct the fine score of Charles Martin Loeffler, "La Mort de Tintagiles," based on the drama of Maurice Maeterlinck and looked upon as one of the most beautiful works by an American composer. A beautiful solo by the viola d'amore, suggesting the character of the prince, according to Maeterlinck's story, is interwoven in the score and will be played by Richard Burgin, the concertmaster of the orchestra. The closing number on the program will be the "Tannhauser" Overture.

BALTIMORE,
MD.
SUN
ISSUE OF
MAR 11 1928

OMORROW night Tandy Mackenzie, a young Hawaiian tenor, will appear in recital at Maryland School for the Blind, at Overlea.

On Wednesday evening a program of wide variety and deep interest will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Lyric, with Emma Calvé, the French soprano, as soloist. Pierre Monteux, who is now fulfilling his fourth season as conductor of the orchestra, will open the program with the Symphony of Franck in D minor, which generally is regarded as his masterpiece and as one of the foremost achievements in the French school of music. The work opens in sombre mood, with a mysterious theme through which the music ultimately works its way to a paean of joy, symbolic of an affirmation of faith by one of the most religious of composers.

Mr. Monteux also has included in his program "La Mort de Tintagiles," the dramatic poem of C. M. Loeffler, who is one of the most generally liked of American composers. The work was inspired by the drama of Mæterlinck and has come to be almost as well known. The solo viola d'amore part will be played by Richard Burgin, the concert master of the orchestra. Mme. Calvé is probably best known for her creation of the role of Carmen. She will sing with the orchestra Gluck's aria "Divinities of the Styz," from "Alceste," and Handel's aria of Cleopatra. The full program will be:

Symphony in D minor............Franck
  I. Lento: Allegro non troppo.
  II. Allegretto.
  III. Allegro non troppo.
Aria, "Divinités du Styx," from "Alceste"..........................Gluck
"La Mort de Tintagiles," Dramatic Poem after the Drama of Maurice Maeterlinck, for Orchestra and Viole d'Amour, Loeffler
(Viole d'Amour—Richard Burgin)
Aria of Cleopatra..................Handel
Overture to "Tannhauser"........Wagner
Soloist.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
MAR 11 1928

Boston Symphony This Week.

The fourth visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season will comprise concerts in Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening, March 15, and Saturday afternoon, March 17. At the Thursday concert Pierre Monteaux will present the Symphony in B flat of Chausson, "Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," C. M. Loeffler's "La Mort de Tintagiles," in which the viola d'amore solo will be played by Richard Burgin, the concert master; also the "Tannhauser" overture.

On Saturday Pierre Monteaux will revive the "Faust" Symphony of Liszt. This score is divided into three parts, describing Faust, Gretchen and Mephistopheles, and culminates with a chorus glorifying the "eternal feminine." The chorus will be sung by the Harvard Glee Club and the tenor solo by Arthur Hackett. The symphony will be preceded by Handel's Concerto Grosso Number 5 in D major for string orchestra and solo string quartette.

"A Faust Symphony," dedicated to Berlioz, and Liszt's largest symphonic work, was last performed in New York by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in March, 1917. The score is not strictly a symphony, but rather a succession of three-tone poems, describing the three principal figures in Goethe's poem, although the Gretchen section has some resemblance to a slow movement and the Mephistopheles section to a scherzo. This last section presents no new themes, but is a fiendish mockery of those gone before the "spirit of denial" incarnate in music. This leads to the finale, "Andante mistica," wherein the male chorus is introduced.

NEW YORK
N. Y. Bklyn
WORLD
ISSUE OF
MAR 11 1928

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will have Emma Calve as soloist at the concert to be given Friday evening at the Academy of Music. Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" will be followed by the tone poem of Strauss "Til Eulenspgelies Merry Pranks," based on a mediaeval legend. Richard Burgen, concertmaster of the orchestra, will play Loeffler's dramatic poem "La Mort di Tintagiles" and the viola di armore "The Roumanin Rhapsody," Enesco, considered one of the composer's most characteristic works.

BALTIMORE,
MD.
NEWS
ISSUE OF
MAR 12 1928

"Carmen," with Emma Calve, was my first grand opera. Though just out of long clothes, I remember the event very distinctly. I was quite crazy about the whole thing and, in fact, don't think I ever entirely recovered.

Well, I have not heard Mlle. Emma since, so it is natural, I suppose, to approach her appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Lyric next Wednesday night with something like trepidation. Probably many others are in the same boat.

Calve's return to the American concert stage was one of the much discussed happenings of the musical world last season. Despite the years that have gone sailing by since her prime; despite the many other Carmens who have waved their fringe and sung the Habanera—all too many of 'em 'way off key at that—she manipulated a "come-back" that has had few precedents. She is apparently another exemplification of the saying "Once a great artist always a great artist."

What an original of the originals she was! They say she used to make Marguerite a flirtatious young thing who ogled Faust on the very portals of the church. Well, why not? I've always thought that Mephistopheles got entirely too much credit for that affair.

At her appearance with the Boston Symphony she will sing Handel's Aria of Cleopatra and "Divinities du Styx" from Gluck's "Alceste," recently sung here by Jeritza.

BALTIMORE
MD.
EVENING SUN
MAR 13 1928

TOMORROW evening, at the Lyric, the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Pierre Monteux, will give its only concert here this season.

The assisting artist will be no other than Emma Calve, the distinguished soprano, whose name is so closely associated with the golden days of Metropolitan Opera, and who on this occasion will sing—and in the grand manner, it is quite safe to predict—the "Divinities du Styx" aria, from Gluck's "Alceste," and also Cleopatra's aria, by Handel.

The orchestra will play the Symphony in D minor, by Cesar Franck; Loeffler's dramatic poem "La Mort de Tintagiles," the inspiration of which is Mæterlinck's drama of the same name and in which the solo voice is the rarely heard Viole d'Amour, an antique instrument that on this occasion will be played by Richard Burgin.

The overture to Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" will close the concert.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
MAR 31 1928

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE FINAL CONCERT OF SEASON

Harold Bauer to be Soloist April 10 at Infantry Hall.

The final Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season will be given in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, April 10, at 8:15, with Harold Bauer, noted pianist, as soloist.

The symphony chosen by Pierre Monteux for the occasion will be the Sixth by Tchaikovsky, known as the "Pathetic," the masterpiece of the great Russian, which embodies the deep suffering of an oppressed nation.

Harold Bauer will appear to the finest advantage in the "Emperor" Concerto, No. 5, by Beethoven, the score of which in general scope and importance ranks with the nine symphonies of the great master. The closing number will be Enesco's brilliant score, the Roumanian Rhapsody.

FROM MAR 31 1928
NEWS,
Providence, R. I.

HAROLD BAUER IS SOLOIST, APRIL 10, BOSTON SYMPHONY

With Harold Bauer, the great pianist, as soloist, Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will make their final appearance of the season in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, April 10, at 8:15.

The symphony chosen for this occasion will be the sixth by Tchaikovsky, known as the "Pathetic," the masterpiece of the great Russian, which embodies the deep suffering of an oppressed nation. This, probably as much as any other single work, has brought the true Slavic temperament in touch with the Western world.

Harold Bauer will appear to the finest advantage in the "Emperor" Concerto, Number 5, by Beethoven. This score, which in general scope and importance ranks with the nine symphonies of the great master, exacts the finest of Harold Bauer's skill and artistry. The concert and the season will close with Enesco's brilliant score, the Roumanian Rhapsody, based on the folk themes of the composer's own people. It is one of the most popular of symphonic pieces.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
TRIBUNE
ISSUE OF
APR 1 1928

HAROLD BAUER

Great Pianist With the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
TRIBUNE
ISSUE OF
APR 1 1928

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will close its Providence season with a concert in Infantry Hall on Tuesday evening, April 10, at which the soloist will be Harold Bauer, the great pianist. The "Emperor" concerto of Beethoven, in which Harold Bauer is to appear with the orchestra is looked upon as equal to the symphonies of this great master, by the magnitude of its conception and scope. This music exacts the very finest of Harold Bauer's interpretative powers.

The symphony chosen for this closing concert will be the sixth by Tchaikovsky, known as the "Pathetic," which, as much as any other work, has made Russia famous as a nation of musical genius; indeed, it voices the deep suffering, the idealism and disillusion of a great emotional people, and contains numerous melodies of poignant beauty.

The closing number will be the riotous Roumanian Rhapsody by Georges Enesco. This composition, based on characteristic Roumanian melodies and scored with amazing dash and brilliance, is one of the most captivating in the symphonic repertory.

The MacDowell Club will hold their annual meeting to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock at the home of Mrs. James Wheaton Luther, 113 Keene street, and after the regular business meeting there will be a program of music.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
APR 6 1928

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was perhaps not the most inspiring performance possible that Mr. Monteux gave of the Schubert "Unfinished Symphony" last night, at Carnegie Hall, but it was a correct one and by no means unenjoyable.

Pablo Casals had an accident just as he began and this delayed matters a few minutes, but he did play the Schumann 'cello concerto in a manner that may be described as perfection. His marvelous singing tone, his impeccable intonation, his warmth of feeling that makes the instrument as emotional as a human voice,—all these contributed to the sum total of a really great program.

Pierre Monteux is at his best in French and Russian music and the Debussy suite "Printemps" (everybody is playing "spring" music, evidently in the hope of coaxing forth the real spring) was another argument to prove the point. The concert ended with Wagner's "Rienzi" overture.

W. H. HUMISTON.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
APR 6 1923

Music In Manhattan

Lucille Oliver, pianist, a young pupil-artist of Leginska, was heard in Aeolian Hall recital last evening. Her programme included Bach's Italian Concerto and the C Minor prelude and fugue; Leginska's "Cradle Song" and "Dance of the Little Clown;" Anthony Bernard's "Variations on a Hill Tune;" three numbers from Goossen's "Kaleidoscope Suite;" Ravel's "Alborada del Grazioso" and a Chopin group.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, at Carnegie Hall last evening played a programme devoted to Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Debussy's "Printemps" and Wagner's "Rienzi" overture. Pablo Casals, 'cellist, was soloist in the Schumann concerto. The same orchestra and soloist will play at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn to-night. The symphony will be Tschaikowsky's "Path

---

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
APR 7 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT

Casals Plays for the Close of the Brooklyn Season.

Mr. Monteux saved his best wine for the end of the feast. He opened the last Boston Symphony concert for the season last evening with the familiar but always welcome "Pathetic" Symphony Tschaikowsky, one of the most moving pieces of great music ever written. It received last evening a performance which enforced the almost infinite variety of this mighty composition. Beside the symphony, Mr. Monteux brought as soloists Pablo Casals, the best of all the 'cellists.

Mr. Casals played the Schumann Concerto in A minor. In his hands the 'cello seems really like a lower toned violin. All the clumsiness commonly associated with its big strings disappears. They seem to have the flexibility and smothness of a violin and you never catch a run thumping. Beyond this high technical finish, Mr. Casals has a wealth of musical feeling and a depth of poetic tenderness from which the Schumann music profited. He also has a temperament from which Mr. Monteux apparently did not profit. Whispered directions from a soloist are not exactly in the routine of the conductor of a great orchestra and as they had played this Concerto the night before at Carnegie Hall it would seem as if Messrs. Casals and Monteux might have settled their differences at that time. The excitement of the soloist did not disturb the calm beauty of Schumann's music, however.

But the mountain peak of the performance was not the 'cellist, but Tchaikowsky. Mr. Monteux luxuriated in it from the first bar. The delicacy of the pianissimos in the first movement would hardly have been possible in a large hall, and the use of them permitted a fineness of shading and a variety of dynamics which left not one dull moment in the long first movement, or indeed in the hour-long symphony. The third movement was a triumph of orchestral virtuosity and the audience called the men to their feet to receive an enthusiastic tribute. Then followed the mighty "Lament," so familiar that there is no need to linger on its tragic beauty.

For variety there followed "The Ballad of the Nomides," by Resphighi. apparently a very young Italian. For contrast it was well enough. Some of the gnomes cut queer capers on the oboe, the basses struck one note below the belt, and there were high combinations of brass and strings that set elderly teeth on edge. It was good fun, but about five minutes too long. Jokes should be pithy. The program closed with the seldom heard "Rienzi" overture. It served to remind one that Wagner was once young and leaned on Weber and Meyerbeer. But even from the beginning he knew how to make a loud and cheerful noise.

H. O.

---

rom EVENING SUN
Address New York City
Date APR 6 1923

The Boston Symphony.

One of the largest audiences that has come to Carnegie Hall this winter at the call of the Boston Symphony appeared last night to welcome and applaud Pablo Cassals and as warmly his conductor, Pierre Monteux. The concert, the last of the evening series, opened with the Schubert "Unfinished" Symphony with which the season's program makers seem also never to have finished. This rendering was good in detail. The wood-wind choir sang more blandly than at earlier performances and the string tone was smooth. But Mr. Monteux labored with the tempi and seemed to carve out the rhythms with a stern conscience.

Next came the Schumann concerto, op. 129, which New York has not heard for two years. The weather was rather hard on Mr. Cassals' cello, but otherwise no drawbacks marred the interpretation. The tone rang full and clear, the phrasing molded its contours with a sympathetic hand and the player clung to the recitative passages to their utmost enlightenment.

But from the orchestral point of view Mr. Monteux deserted his hints of hard labor and turned to a labor of sheer love in the Debussy "Printemps" Orchestral Suite. The piano dripped in crystal moisture, the thousand voices of the spring spoke from the hundred instruments with a beautiful and accelerating potency. Why this young work so rarely is allow to stir the pulses of the city it is hard to say, unless it be that the more mature "Faun" has eclipsed his atmospheric prophecy. Last night's pleasure would seem to justify more frequent occurrence.

Back to the young Wagner for the close of the program turned Mr. Monteux, and the adventures of "Rienzi, the last of the Tribunes," called forth the last hand clappings of the last evening subscription audience.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
APR 6 1923

Boston Symphony Orches...

A large and enthusiastic audience heard the first of the final series of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening. Pablo Casals was the soloist, and his presence, in combination with a familiar programme of popular compositions added considerably, no doubt, to the usually large attendance at the Boston concerts. Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony," played with a full appreciation of its meltingly beautiful passages, and received with the usual enthusiasm, was the first number. Mr. Casals played with his customary virtuosity and feeling the solo part of the Schumann Concerto in A minor, and was given round after round of applause at its close.

There was also the Debussy "Printemps," well played, and sounding strangely conventional in these days of so-called modernistic music, and for a finale, the "Rienzi" overture, which sounded a little noisier than usual, and was given somewhat of a perfunctory performance. Altogether, though, the programme was delightfully easy to listen to. One could enjoy it without any conscious effort.

The Boston players, under the bâton of Pierre Monteux, will, it has been announced, give their usual series of concerts here next season. They play in Brooklyn this evening, and for a farewell matinée at Carnegie Hall to-morrow.

H. B.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
ISSUE OF
APR 6 1923

Conducted by Pierre Monteux, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was heard in its fifth concert of the season in Carnegie Hall last evening. The distinguished leader was cordially greeted as he came upon the platform to pilot his body of excellently-trained musicians through compositions of Schubert, Schumann, Debussy and Wagner.

Pablo Casals was soloist of the evening, playing the Schumann concerto for violoncello with orchestral accompaniment in A minor. He appeared in his usual good form, winning additional laurels for his crown of masterly achievements. The program comprised Schubert's beautiful "Unfinished" Symphony, "Printemps" by Debussy and overture to Wagner's "Rienzi."

From APR 6 1923
Telegram
New York City

Casals Heard with Boston Orchestra

Coming to New York for its final pair of concerts of the season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night played before a large and appreciative audience in Carnegie Hall. Under the guidance of Pierre Monteux, the Boston musicians gave an admirable performance of Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony. The tone, particularly of strings and wood winds, was of lovely quality. The quiet beauty of the Schubert score was brought out without undue effort or ostentation. It was all spontaneous. The modern nervous spirit which some of the best conductors nowadays try to read into the classics was appropriately absent. It was a restful, enjoyable performance.

The soloist was Pablo Casals, who played the Schumann A minor concerto for 'cello and orchestra. Mr. Casals played with his unrivalled rhythmic force, with his sure musical sense and his characteristic aggressiveness. At times, however, he appeared to be more interested in the accompaniment of the orchestra than in his own 'cello, which, in a sense, detracted from the general effectiveness of the performance.

Debussy's "Printemps" suite and the overture to Wagner's "Rienzi" completed the program.

NEW YORK
TIMES
APR 6 1923

BID BOSTON PLAYERS ADIEU

Orchestra Opens Last Visit With Casals and Crowded Hall.

Before an audience that once more overflowed Carnegie Hall and that warmly greeted Pablo Casals as the evening's star, the Boston Symphony opened its last visit of the season at Carnegie Hall last night. A Brooklyn farewell this evening and a closing matinee tomorrow in Carnegie Hall will complete the thirty-seventh season in which these players, or the veterans among them, have been annual contributors to the Winter feast of New York's music.

It has been made known that the orchestra will return on corresponding dates next season and that Mr. Monteux will again be in command during the coming year.

There was no need last night, such as some visitors have had, to post signs for "Exit in Case of Schoenberg," as a former generation had its "Exit in Case of Brahms." Here was nectar for the gods in Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Schumann's 'cello concerto, Debussy's orchestral suite, "Printemps," and for final good measure, Wagner's overture to "Rienzi.' The first three brought their respective composers for the first time into the current evening series, a summary of the year being included in the program notes by Mr. Hale.

If the symphony of heavenly brevity was paced at somewhat measured tread, Conductor Monteux was at all events happily at home in the delicate impressionism of Debussy's evocation of a Spring of 1887 at Villa Medici, by the then youthful holder of the Prix de Rome.

Pablo Casals's playing of the 'cello romanza midway in Schumann's concerto proved naturally the high point of the audience's enjoyment; a climax duly awaited, though the weather had wrought havoc with strings, and masterfully realized by an artist, master of his instrument, of the orchestra and of his audience. It was an evening of excited comment during intermission on the pleasure—not so plentiful today—of music, merely as music, played to be enjoyed.

FROM APR 6 1923
Globe
NEW YORK CITY

Other Music.

Respite for the music lover weary of the complexities of the ultra-modern was offered at a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening. Large and rapturous was the audience which gathered to hear Mr. Monteux conduct and particularly to hear Pablo Casals, the soloist, play his 'cello.

A more appropriate programme for a soft April evening could hardly be imagined. To begin with there was Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony given a beautifully romantic and graceful performance. Mr. Casals then played Schumann's concerto in A minor, presenting its lovely melodies and wistful sentiment in his usual masterly, mellow style.

Representing the more or less modern was "Printemps," a suite in Debussy's early manner, its two movements offering the pleasant contrast of the warm languors afterward developed in "The Afternoon of a Faun" with more agile, clear-cut melodies. Wagner's well-worn but still vigorous "Rienzi" overture completed the programme.

At Aeolian Hall at the same time Lucile Oliver presented an interesting programme, including piano music by Bach, Chopin, Ravel, and Leginska.

APR 6 1923
ROM
VENING JOURNAL,
New York City

CASALS AT CONCERT OF BOSTON ORCHESTRA

For the final Thursday evening concert in Carnegie Hall of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux presented a well-balanced programme in which there was nothing to puzzle his audience in the way of new music. It began with Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, after which Pablo Casals appeared as soloist in the Schumann concerto for violoncello. The latter half of the evening was concerned with Debussy's early suite, "Printemps," and the overture to Wagner's "Rienzi."

ESTABLISHED
From APR 6 1923
EVENING WORLD
New York City

IN THE REALM OF MUSIC

Pablo Casals Charms Big Audience With His Magic Violoncello.

By Frank H. Warren.

If left to us we should award the palm for yesterday's best exhibition of interpretative work to Pablo Casals for his playing of Schumann's concerto for cello and orchestra at the concert given by the Boston Symphony. The three movements of this composition Mr. Casals delivered in his familiar nonchalant and finished manner, his cello weaving its strongest spell in the andante section. The graceful accompaniment provided by Conductor Monteux did much to aggravate the helpless condition of the audience. Mr. Casals's presence on the program attracted the largest evening gathering the Bostonians have enjoyed in some time.

The Schubert "Unfinished" Symphony, that opened the program, was a suave, reposeful and artistic performance quite in keeping with the orchestra's traditions. Debussy's "Printemps" suite and the overture to "Rienzi" were other numbers.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD
APR 6 1923

BOSTON ORCHESTRA IN FINAL CONCERT

Monteux Leads Men in Season's Last Program.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its fifth and final evening concert in New York this season at Carnegie Hall last night. Mr. Monteux's program, although without a novel work, was full of interest.

Made up of German works, with one French number for good measure, the list consisted of Schubert's unfinished symphony, Schumann's cello concerto, Debussy's orchestral suite, "Printemps," and Wagners "Rienzi" overture.

Pablo Casals, making one of his infrequent appearances as a soloist, was the cellist. Mr. Monteux's orchestra was in excellent form and his reading of Schubert's symphony reached a high standard of excellence. Poetic sympathy and fine color and finish were well employed throughout in revealing the manifold beauties of the score.

Mr. Casals, who was ably supported by the orchestra, made much of Schumann's seldom heard concerto. He seemed to bring life into many of the often dull passages. The lovely andante needed no spur. His playing of the music was delightful with its great beauty of tone, impeccable intonation and a highly polished style.

The audience made it evident in no uncertain manner that his masterful performance was thoroughly enjoyed. There was a short delay before he began the concerto, as he was obliged to leave the stage and get the peg to his cello, which he had forgotten.

Debussy's "Printemps" suite, now of such charming texture and again gay and riotous in plan, was an interlude in the list, happily reminiscent of spring, while Wagner's "Rienzi" overture served to give the evening's music a brilliant close.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
APR 6 1923

Boston Symphony Gives Evening Full Of Musical Pleasure

Casals Is Soloist in First of Fifth and Last Pair of Concerts Mr. Monteux Gives Here This Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made unobtrusive entry here again last night for the first concert of the fifth and last pair of its current New York season. The large audience present, both by its size and by its cordiality, showed again that there is a public for music given beautiful performance for its own sake and with no attempt to enhance interest through adventitious circumstance or spectacular methods. The program chosen by Mr. Monteux offered nothing provocative or controversial, but was devoted to Schubert, Schumann, early Debussy and Wagner and was planned and conducted with characteristic reticence. It tempted the listener to settle down for an evening of enjoyment.

More often than not these concerts are given without the assistance of a soloist, but last night Mr. Pablo Casals was an added attraction, and his playing of the Schumann violoncello concerto in A minor, opus 129, was a thoroughly delightful feature. Seldom has he been heard to better advantage. His playing had all its accustomed perfection of finish and seemed warmer toned and more deeply expressive than usual, Mr. Monteux providing excellent accompaniment.

The Schubert "Unfinished" Symphony was the opening number of the evening. Following the concerto the symphonic suite "Printemps," composed by Debussy in 1887, opened the second half. Listening to its placidly melodious measures it was difficult to realize that in the year of its composition it was considered so excessively radical that it was refused performance in Paris. It falls on our ears agreeably, seeming even a trifle commonplace in some of its thematic material, pleasantly suggestive of the languors and gayeties of spring. The suite is in two parts, the first rather subdued, the second more lively in mood. It was first performed here by the New York Symphony in 1913. As a final number Wagner's overture to "Rienzi" brought the evening to a sonorous close.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
AMERICAN
ISSUE OF
APR 6 1923

MUSIC that "maketh glad the heart of man" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night. And the programme proved so enticing that the hall contained one of the season's largest audiences at a Hub event.

Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony set the melodic pace. In this opening selection the quality of the instruments, no less than the beauty of the composition, made a definite appeal. Schubert's lovely measures were slightly curtailed in length, due to an occasional hasty tempo. But otherwise Mr. Monteux' reading was a satisfying one and deserved the hearty applause, punctuated by a few lusty "bravos" that it received.

The Schumann Concerto introduced that admirable musician, Pablo Casale, as soloist. He made two entrances before beginning, for he had forgotten the lifting of his 'cello and made a rieving expedition. He play true to form, glorious in tone curate in pitch and technical brilliant.

De y's "Printemps" suite and ner's "Rienzi" overture comp the programme.

ABLISHED APR 8 1923
m legram
New York City

With a concert yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its New York season. The novelty of the program was Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," a very clever work. Respighi is one of a group of Italian experimenters. He creates new orchestral colors and has an uncanny skill for picturing the grotesque in music. His "Ballad" is notable more for its cleverness than for its actual musical content. It was played brilliantly under the direction of Pierre Monteux. The program contained also Debussy's prelude, "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun," three dances from "Cephale et Procris" by Gretry-Mottl, and Beethoven's third symphony.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
AMERICAN
ISSUE OF
APR 8 1923

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES ITS LAST CONCERT

Orchestra's Final of Season Will Be Remembered for Its Din in the Novelty Number; Denton Charms at Piano

By GRENA BENNETT.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY'S final concert, which took place yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, will be remembered for its din if for nothing else. Admitted that that word applies to only one selection on the programme—Respighi's "Ballade of the Gnomides," the novelty of the list.

The noisy number followed Debussy's gently dissonant "Afternoon of a Faun" and contained only a few short hints of that pastel-tinted tone poem.

It preceded Beethoven's mighty "Eroica" symphony but promised nothing of the glory and content of that masterpiece.

Gnomides, it seems, are polygamous dwarfs who celebrate the marriage of their kind with violent blaspheming, shrieks, frenzied dancing and even murder. Mr. Respighi is a composer whose individuality and invention have frequently proved interesting additions to modern music. But whether his "Ballade of the Gnomides" has value or charm is a question.

The outstanding impression of yesterday's new work was a resemblance to the night sounds of a thickly populated frog-pond. Schoenberg at his worst has not constructed greater ear-smiting cacophonies than those that punctuate the Respighi setting to the story of the raving gnome with his two brides. Mr. Monteux and his men came through the effort of interpretation valiantly and deserve high praise.

The large and appreciative audience evidently enjoyed the ancient grace and charm of three dances from Gretry's "Cephalc et Procris." The Beethoven symphony brought the concert and the series to a close.

NEWS, APR 11 1923
Providence, R. I.

LAST SYMPHONY OF SEASON IS PLAYED UNDER MONTEUX

Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 6 in B-minor, the "Pathetic" symphony, as played last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux, brought forth an even greater burst of enthusiasm than during the many times it has been played here by this splendid group of musicians. Monteux seemed to guide his orchestra into such a wonderful fine interpretation of the score that it seems as though it could be done in no more masterly way. This was the last of the five concerts of the season.

Harold Bauer, than whom there are few pianists who can boast such breadth of vision, such mastery of technique, or such a fine sense of the niceties of musical interpretation, played Beethoven's concerto No. 5, in E-flat major in a style that brought to him as much applause as the work of Mr. Monteux and his orchestra. For the closing number of the concert and the series the orchestra played Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody in A-major, a brilliantly constructed and gloriously played number.

The "Pathetic" symphony is one to strike a solemn mood, carrying as it does the idea, powerfully and dramatically clear, even to the layman, that all life is mortal and that death is the end of all things. Perhaps it does not bear out the Christian conception of immortality, or possibly it can be interpreted to depict the terror and despair of the doubter, but, through it all, there is a note of a deep sorrow and despair that eventually triumphs over the more cheerful parts. Nevertheless it is one of the most compelling symphonies yet given to the world, and the Boston orchestra brings out all of its rich fullness of tonal thought in a masterly and graphic manner. The programme follows:

Symphony No. 6 in B-Minor, "Pathetic," op. 74....Tschaikowsky
 Adagio; Allegro non troppo.
 Allegro con grazia.
 Allegro molto vivace.
 Finale, Adagio lamentoso.
Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 5, in E-flat major, op. 73...Beethoven
 Allegro.
 Adagio un poco moto.
 Rondo: Allegro ma non trappo.
Roumanian Rhapsody in A-major, op. 11, No. 1 ....Enesco

---

From JOURNAL APR 11 1923
Providence, R. I.

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN FINAL CONCERT

Orchestra Plays Brilliant Programme with Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" as Feature.

HAROLD BAUER IS SOLOIST

Noted Pianist Accorded Tremendous Ovation for Rendition of Beethoven Concerto.—Monteux Given Rousing Tribute.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its final concert of the season in Infantry Hall last evening. An audience that filled the hall enjoyed the performance, which proved one of the best of the series. This was due to the presence on the programme of Tschaikowsky's symphony in B-minor, the "Pathetic," and to the appearance of Harold Bauer, pianist, as soloist.

Among the great pianists of the day Mr. Bauer ranks high and last evening he played magnificently the Beethoven concerto No. 5, in E-flat major, scoring a most emphatic success. The big audience was aroused to a point of enthusiasm rarely seen at these concerts. After the symphony's third movement, in which conductor and players rose to artistic heights, a tremendous wave of applause swept the hall. At the conclusion of the finale there was a still greater demonstration, M. Monteux and the orchestra standing while the great throng gave full vent to its feelings. A similar tribute was accorded Mr. Bauer after his playing of the concerto, a half-dozen recalls showing his hearers' regard for his fine work.

The concert programme, so brilliantly presented, was a fitting finale to a season which, in point of attendance and artistic results, may be considered one of the most successful enjoyed here by the Boston organization in recent years.

The programme follows:

Symphony No. 6 in B-minor, "Pathetic," op. 74 .... Tschaikowsky
 Adagio; Allegro non troppo.
 Allegro con grazia.
 Allegro molto vivace.
 Finale, Adagio lamentoso.
Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 5, in E-flat major, op. 73 ....Beethoven
 Allegro.
 Adagio un poco moto.
 Rondo: Allegro ma non trappo.
Roumanian Rhapsody in A-major, op. 11, No. 1 .... Enesco

"PATHETIC" POPULAR NUMBER

Among the great symphonies there are few, if any, that make so deep and powerful impression upon the hearer as the Tschaikowsky "Pathetic." The work has been played here many times by the Boston orchestra and each repetition gives the listener a clearer understanding of its structure, grandeur and sombre beauty. Its melancholy character, its gripping intensity, its touch of sinister suggestion and its final abandonment to a portrayal of the depths of human despair are told in musical language that thrills the listener through and through. It is a picture of the intimate thoughts, the forebodings, the pessimism of its creator. But it is wonderful music.

Tschaikowsky's genius for making himself musically intelligible is fully shown in this, his greatest orchestral work. Melody there is to be sure. Thematic material is not wanting. But it is his marvellous power of expression through the combining of orchestral voices that astonishes and enthralls. The second movement, with its curious rhythm of five beats to the measure, is perfectly adapted to the effect evidently intended. The beating drum suggestive of Death, or perhaps inexorable fate, persists with a strange monotony that puzzles the ear. Throughout the third movement there is animation; bright melodic fragments are tossed about among the various instrumental sections and a triumphant march rises to splendid power in the full voiced orchestra. But through all there shines a sinister note which tells of the common fate which awaits all flesh. Realizing the futility of struggle, despair seizes the mind and the finale is a tone picture of a soul bereft of hope.

FINE READING GIVEN

M. Monteux gave a very fine reading of the symphony. The men played as if they were inspired by the music as well as by their leader. There was splendid smoothness of ensemble in which effects of nuance were in constant and pleasing evidence.

Harold Bauer is an artist admirably fitted to present such a work as the Beethoven No. 5. He is a player of that type, so rarely found, that shines equally as virtuoso, romanticist or classicist. He is an artist that impresses the listener by the breadth of his style, his remarkable musicianship and poise. He is a masterful musician, one that compels admiration by his personality, as well as the delightful quality of his playing.

His conception of the concerto was one in which there was, first, nobility of style. There was dignity and breadth, impeccable technique, richness of tone quality and expressive phrasing. He possesses the gift of perfect concentration which results in every measure being given its full meaning. He is always at the height of his imaginative power. M. Monteux gave the soloist fine support and at the concerto's conclusion joined with orchestra and audience in the splendid tribute of applause.

The Roumanian Rhapsody which brought the concert to a close is an exceedingly brilliant work. The orchestra seemed to enjoy playing it, presenting it with much fire and abandon. A. F. P.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
BULLETIN
ISSUE OF
APR 11 1923

FINAL CONCERT OF SEASON GIVEN BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its final concert of the season in Infantry Hall last evening. An audience that filled the hall enjoyed the performance, which proved one of the best of the series. This was due to the presence on the programme of Tschaikowsky's symphony in B-minor, the "Pathetic," and to the appearance of Harold Bauer, pianist, as soloist.

Among the great pianists of the day Mr. Bauer ranks high and last evening he played magnificently the Beethoven concerto No. 5, in E-flat major, scoring a most emphatic success. The big audience was aroused to a point of enthusiasm rarely seen at these concerts. After the symphony's third movement, in which conductor and players rose to artistic heights, a tremendous wave of applause swept the hall. At the conclusion of the finale there was a still greater demonstration, M. Monteux and the orchestra standing while the great throng gave full vent to its feelings. A similar tribute was accorded Mr. Bauer after his playing of the concerto, a half-dozen recalls showing his hearers' regard for his fine work.

The concert programme, so brilliantly presented, was a fitting finale to a season which, in point of attendance and artistic results, may be considered one of the most successful enjoyed here by the Boston organization in recent years.

The programme follows:

Symphony No. 6 in B-minor, "Pathetic," op. 74 .... Tschaikowsky
 Adagio; Allegro non troppo.
 Allegro con grazia.
 Allegro molto vivace.
 Finale, Adagio lamentoso.
Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 5, in E-flat major, op. 73 ....Beethoven
 Allegro.
 Adagio un poco moto.
 Rondo: Allegro ma non trappo.
Roumanian Rhapsody in A-major, op. 11, No. 1 .... Enesco

"Pathetic" Popular Number

Among the great symphonies there are few, if any, that make so deep and powerful impression upon the hearer as the Tschaikowsky "Pathetic." The work has been played here many times by the Boston orchestra and each repetition gives the listener a clearer understanding of its structure, grandeur and sombre beauty. Its melancholy character, its gripping intensity, its touch of sinister suggestion and its final abandonment to a portrayal of the depths of human despair are told in musical language that thrills the listener through and through. It is a picture of the intimate thoughts, the forebodings, the pessimism of its creator. But it is wonderful music.

Tschaikowsky's genius for making himself musically intelligible is fully shown in this, his greatest orchestral work. Melody there is to be sure. Thematic material is not wanting. But it is his marvellous power of expression through the combining of orchestral voices that astonishes and enthralls. The second movement, with its curious rhythm of five beats to the measure, is perfectly adapted to the effect evidently intended. The beating drum suggestive of Death, or perhaps inexorable fate, persists with a strange monotony that puzzles the ear. Throughout the third movement there is animation; bright melodic fragments are tossed about among the various instrumental sections and a triumphant march rises to splendid power in the full voiced orchestra. But through all there shines a sinister note which tells of the common fate which awaits all flesh. Realizing the futility of struggle, despair seizes the mind and the finale is a tone picture of a soul bereft of hope.

Fine Reading Given

M. Monteux gave a very fine reading of the symphony. The men played as if they were inspired by the music as well as by their leader. There was splendid smoothness of ensemble in which effects of nuance were in constant and pleasing evidence.

Harold Bauer is an artist admirably fitted to present such a work as the Beethoven No. 5. He is a player of that type, so rarely found, that shines equally as virtuoso, romanticist or classicist. He is an artist that impresses the listener by the breadth of his style, his remarkable musicianship and poise. He is a masterful musician, one that compels admiration by his personality, as well as the delightful quality of his playing.

His conception of the concerto was one in which there was, first, nobility of style. There was dignity and breadth, impeccable technique, richness of tone quality and expressive phrasing. He possesses the gift of perfect concentration which results in every measure being given its full meaning. He is always at the height of his imaginative power. M. Monteux gave the soloist fine support and at the concerto's conclusion joined with orchestra and audience in the splendid tribute of applause.

The Roumanian Rhapsody which brought the concert to a close is an exceedingly brilliant work. The orchestra seemed to enjoy playing it, presenting it with much fire and abandon. A. F. P.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
TRIBUNE
ISSUE OF
APR 11 1923

Symphony Orchestra Gives Final Concert

Rich and Satisfying Program Before Big Audience at Infantry Hall

The fifth and last concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the season of 1922-1923 was held in Infantry Hall last night before an audience that filled the hall. Pierre Monteux was conductor, and never, it seems, was such a rich and completely satisfying program given. Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony, Beethoven's Concerto in E-flat major, with Harold Bauer as the soloist, and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody" were the three numbers.

The program was evidently selected for an audience who had come to relax under the beauty and richness of melody rather than for a super-intellectual gathering who might have quibbled because Mr. Monteux did not play something that was not understandable to the groundlings. The program was entirely emotional and judging from the tremendous applause that each number received, the reactions showed that the selections had been well chosen. Most people who attend symphony concerts go primarily for the grandeur and the sweep of the ensemble rather than to pluck the forehead or cock the ear to get the nuances and subtleties and intracies of musical Browingism. The symphony attendant wants the emotional reaction of melody, richly and beautifully played; intricate intellectualism rather bores him. He does not want, of course, the obvious or the syncopated melody of the vaudeville stage. He wants the melody and the rythm as conceived by the musical giants. He got it last night.

The Tschaikowsky symphony contained a noble theme, a struggling with the problems of life and the final conquering by the grim tyrant death. In it there were passages of compelling loveliness, rich sentimental beauty, especially the second and third movements, with song and dance driving away for the moment the dreaded [illegible] the fatality that [illegible] kowsky ever reminds us, through the steady rumble of the drum, that death is omnipresent and lurking.

Harold Bauer squeezed from the Beethoven concerto every last drop of musical beauty. A man of symphony and understanding, backed by strength and technical perfection, he played the final of the second movement with such heart-rending beauty that it must still be pulsating through the bodies of those who were fortunate enough to have heard him last night. It seems hardly possible that such ineffable ecstacy could be concentrated in so few moments. When he had finished the excellent rendition of a rich piece, he was called back for five bows.

The Enesco "Rhapsody" brought memories of the Tzigani, with their wild abandon of dance and song. Upon hearing this number, one felt an overwhelming desire to get up and go, to be off with the raggle-taggle gypsies, as its tremendous force and sustained passionate and wild rhythm swept through the hall. Gypsy song and dance around flaming camp fires in Hungary or Roumania, with the joy of life sending the blood in a mad whirl of abandon through the body, that is the picture that it presents.

It seems that Mr. Monteux never had his orchestra any more completely under control than he did last night. The Boston Symphony is a richer, finer and more beautiful ensemble than it has been at any one time before. Maybe the sweep and the beauty of the numbers selected have shaded the views of an old sentimentalist, but if so much sustained happiness can be secured from two hours and a half of the Boston Symphony, and especially if one feels that the same emotion was common last night, then surely the Boston Symphony Orchestra has achieved its function.

NEW YORK
TIMES
APR 15 1923

It is, perhaps, not too late to welcome to the ranks of the daily newspaper critics of music in New York Lawrence Gilman, who has been appointed to succeed the late H. E. Krehbiel on the staff of The Tribune. He will begin his regular duties next Fall, but is expecting to do some observing in foreign parts before that time. It is an admirable appointment; for Mr. Gilman is fully equipped to maintain the high standard of The Tribune's treatment of music during Mr. Krehbiel's time and long before. Musical knowledge, the critical faculty, a brilliant, flexible and cultivated English style have marked Mr. Gilman's writings about music. These are well known to music lovers everywhere; for Mr. Gilman has written numerous books about music; has had for many years a musical department in The North American Review and for some time has written the program notes for the Philharmonic Society of New York and the Philadelphia Orchestra. In all these things he has shown qualifications that will be most valuable in his new post. It is gratifying to know that he will continue the preparation of the two series of program books, which have edified and delighted so many audiences.

There seemed to be doubt in the minds of some as to whether that piece about the "Gnomides" and the young ladies they tortured, composed by the usually mellifluous Ottorino Respighi and played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its last concert, had ever been heard before in New York. "Some say" that it had been, wrote Mr. Taylor. We said so, and though it is not a matter of much consequence, say again that Mr. Toscanini played the piece in the concert he gave in Carnegie Hall, with his Italian orchestra, on March 18, two years ago. It seemed then, as it does now, that in this composition "Respighi leaves behind the feeling for beauty that so poetically permeates his piece on the fountains of Rome," and that the music is "morbidly grotesque in the graphic realism."

[94]

ESTABLISHED 1881
FROM APR 19 1923
REPUBLICAN,
Springfield, Mass.

OLD SPLENDOR SHOWN BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

Pierre Monteux's Organization Gives Splendid Concert at Smith College

From a Special Correspondent

Northampton, April 18—The Boston Symphony orchestra with Pierre Monteux conductor, was heard here tonight in John M. Greene hall in an exceptionally fine concert. This was the second orchestral concert in the Smith college course this season, the other being the brilliant opening one of the year by the New York Philharmonic orchestra. The Boston Symphony organization seems to have completely recovered from the disrupting experiences of the war years and to have become again the unified and magnificent orchestra that it had been for so many years.

Mr Monteux is always happy in his making of programs and the one tonight was admirable in every way, generous in length and sufficiently varied to please all tastes. The symphony was Cesar Franck's in D minor, one of the finest of modern compositions, calling for all the breadth of style, richness of tone and perfection of finish possible. It was a broad, sympathetic and emotional reading which Mr Monteux gave the symphony, especially notable, perhaps, in the impressive first movement, but delightful throughout, and one which brought out to the utmost the remarkably beautiful touch effects of Franck's orchestration.

The second half of the program opened with the familiar and ever-beautiful overture, No 3, by Beethoven, followed by the interesting "Fantasia on a Theme" by Thomas Tallis, for double-stringed orchestra, by Vaughn Williams, which, it will be recalled, was so much enjoyed at the concert by this orchestra in Springfield last January. Three Wagner numbers completed the program, "The Ride of the Valkyries," from "The Valkyrie," "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal," and the prelude to "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg."

Like everything else of the evening, these were played splendidly, with an exquisite sense of balance and a wonderful freedom and spontaneity. The audience responded most heartily.

The series for next season will open with the New York Philharmonic orchestra, conducted by Willem Van Hoogstraten, and will include recitals by Josef Hofmann, Arthur Middleton, Toscha Seidel and Margaret Matzenauer, and concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Tickets will be out on sale in October.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

The 23d pair of Boston Symphony concerts and last but one of the season will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Mr. Monteux will conduct Vaughan Williams's "London Symphony," which he introduced and repeated at the concerts two seasons ago; also a series of Canons by Schumann, orchestrated by Dubois; Skilton's "Suite Primeval," on Tribal Indian Melodies, and Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi."

SUNDAY POPS

On Monday, May 7, in Symphony hall, the 38th season of Pop concerts will begin. Agide Jacchia will again conduct the Pops orchestra. This will be his seventh season. He has added to his previous fame as conductor of operatic, orchestral and choral concerts by making the Pops more musically delightful and more numerously patronized than ever before.

Last year's record season promises to be again exceeded if the still growing demand of clubs, conventions, schools and colleges for blocks of seats is any indication. Sunday has been the only silent night of the week in previous Pop seasons. This season will bring Sunday Pop concerts, beginning May 13 and occurring on alternate Sundays through May and June. These will be featured as concerts, although no less popular than the rest. The orchestra will number 80 players with several striking new pieces added to the Pops favorites of long standing, and with occasional "Special Nights." There will also be refreshments and other features of the Pops which combine to create the elsewhere unattainable "Pops atmosphere."

EXTRA SYMPHONY

The closing concert of the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place in Symphony hall tomorrow night. Mr. Monteux will present the Overture to Weber's "Oberon," Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony (promptness in attending this concert is urged, for this symphony is played without pauses between movements), Saint-Saens's Septet for string orchestra, with trumpet and piano, the trumpet solo to be played by George Mager and the piano solo by Jesus Samroma. He will also conduct the prelude to Wagner's "Maestersingers" and, as a closing number, Berlioz's "Rakoczy" march. Florence Macbeth, soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will sing Pamina's aria from "The Magic Flute" and an air from "The Escape from the Seraglio."

HERALD-APR.22

MACBETH SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Sanroma Assists in Saint-Saens Septet

Florence Macbeth, heard here in leading roles with the Chicago Opera, sang for the first time at a public concert in Boston last night at the final concert of the extra Symphony series. She chose two quietly beautiful Mozart airs, not calculated to arouse wild demonstrations in a popular audience, yet she was recalled four times by eager and hearty applause. It was noteworthy that many members of the orchestra were clapping Miss Macbeth's exquisite singing with marked enthusiasm.

Her voice has a very rare combination of purity, clarity and warmth of tone. She can sing very high notes with an ease and beauty almost unparalleled. To Pamina's air from "The Magic Flute," and Blonde's air from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail" she brought a finished perfection of execution, and a keen sympathy for the emotional content of words and music. She is one of the finest singers now before the American public, heard too seldom in this city.

Jesus Sanroma, as assisting pianist in Saint-Saens' empty and trivial septet for trumpet, piano and strings, displayed a clean-cut technique and a musicianly sense of rhythm that deserved a better opportunity. Georges Mager was the trumpet soloist, doing his part effectively.

The other numbers were all stock pieces from the orchestral repertory, Weber's "Oberon" overture, Mendelssohn's "Scotch" symphony, Wagner's "Meistersinger" prelude and Berlioz' "Rakoczy March." The performance calls for no special praise or blame. Mr Monteux and the orchestra were warmly and deservedly applauded.

GLOBE. APR. 24.

MONDAY SYMPHONY LOUDLY APPLAUDED

Splendid Program Is Cause of Demonstration

For the fifth symphony concert of the Monday evening series, Mr. Monteux played Weber's "Oberon" overture, Mendelssohn's Scotch symphony, the prelude to "Die Meistersinger," the Saint-Saens septet for trumpet, strings and piano (piano solo, Jesus Sanroma; trumpet solo, Georges Mager), and Berlioz's "Rakoczy" march from "The Damnation of Faust." Florence Macbeth, soprano, sang Pamina's air, "Ah, lo so" from Mozart's "Magic Flute," and Blondchen's aria, "Con vezzie, con lusinghe" from "Il Seraglio."

This was a concert, the second part of it at all events, to stir an audience to enthusiasm. The demonstration began after the "Meistersinger" prelude, which drew forth such hearty applause that Mr. Monteux promptly motioned to the orchestra to rise and share it. Saint-Saens septet was more warmly applauded still. No wonder, for more brilliant music of a finer clarity does not come to a hearing every day, and clearness and brilliancy still work their spell. It was played by everybody who had a hand in it with a sensitive feeling for euphony which resulted in a dazzling splendor of tone—the strings, Mr. Sanroma, who, as well as beautiful tones, displayed a stirring rhythm, and Mr. Mager, with a voriety in his trumpet tones and an exquisiteness of phrasing like unto those of an accomplished dramatic soprano. If people who plan concerts of chamber music would venture now and again to enliven their staid programs with gay music like this septet, perhaps they would rejoice in a larger public.

And the gentle charm and pretty voice of Miss Macbeth, though she sang two airs of Mozart not so grateful as some he wrote, brought her as long and heated applause as though she had obliged with the facile emotions of "Un bel di." She approached the airs with an appearance of piety that did credit to her spirit of reverence, but scarcely full justice to Mozart's powers of expression. Another time she might to advantage think her Pomina a more human person who felt her troubles with some depth.

There was the Scotch symphony too, to make one marvel at the devastating effect for years of Mendelssohn on music, when the man himself wrote pages of not only poetic imagination but actually of robustness, if his interpreters have the wit to mark it. The most of them are much to blame, his immediate followers too and his contemporary admirers for so misconceiving him.

The audience last night was very large. The program book brought the pleasant news that there will be five Monday concerts next season. They fill a need.

R. R. G.

HERALD-APR. 24

FINAL MONDAY NIGHT CONCERT

Symphony Closes Extra Series With Spirit

BY OLIN DOWNES

Respectable performance of thrice respectable music distinguished the final concert of the Monday night series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, last night in Symphony Hall. The orchestra played Weber's "Oberon" overture, Mendelssohn's "Scotch" symphony, Wagner's prelude to "The Meistersingers" and Berlioz' "Rakoczy" march. The soloists were Florence Macbeth, who sang two arias of Mozart, and Messrs. Jesus Sanroma, pianist, and George Mager, first trumpeter of the orchestra, who took the solo parts in the performance of Saint-Saens' septet for trumpet, piano and strings.

The "Meistersinger" prelude, brilliantly played, has been a hobby-horse of conductors and orchestras this winter, but it remains a veritable explosion of genius, which one never hears without the emotion of wonder, and the esprit of Berlioz' march makes it a lonely and incomparable creation. And if the Mendelssohn symphony is duller to the ears of this generation than the First Symphony of Sibelius, which it replaced, at the last moment on the programme, there are still pages which thrill us. These occur in the development section of the first movement, which is mysterious with the brooding and whispering of many waters, and in the liveliest, raciest music Mendelssohn ever wrote—the second movement, "Vivace non tropp." Then there is the introduction to the "Oberon" overture, which requires a finer poetic mood than it had last night.

Miss MacBeth, who sang the arias, "Ah, lo so," from "The Magic Flute," and "Con vezzie," from "Il Seraglio," has shown herself long since a singer of uncommon gifts, not only as regards her voice itself, but the intelligence and art with which she employs it. She is well equipped to sing Mozart, though her performance of the first air was a little deliberate and studied.

Mr. Sanroma showed the spirit of a born virtuoso and a musical understanding which should place him high among present day virtuosi in the years to come.

APR. 24.

FEW are the American composers whose orchestral scores have attained to the dignity of print, but among them, strangely enough, is one whose name and whose music are little known to the concert-going public: to wit, Charles Sanford Skilton. A native of Massachusetts, born in Northampton in 1868, Mr. Skilton has been, since 1903, professor of organ, theory, and history of music at the University of Kansas. Nearby is a Government school for Indians—Haskell University by name—and from certain of the students at this latter institution, Mr. Skilton has obtained authentic specimens of Indian tribal music. The melodies thus acquired he has made the basis of sundry orchestral pieces and two of these—a "Deer Dance" and a "War Dance"—were published a few years ago by the house of Fischer. With the addition of a group of four more pieces of like derivation they are now published as a "Suite Primeval," in two parts. From this set Mr. Monteux has chosen two numbers—a "Flute Serenade" and a "Moccasin Game"—for place upon the programme of the Symphony Concerts of this week.

In the prefatory matter upon the fly-leaf of the score of this "Suite Primeval," the composer explains that it has been his intention to create in tones "an impression of the life of the Indian of the West in his primeval surroundings." Of the "Flute Serenade" he writes specifically:

> Among most Indians it is the custom of courtship that the lover, concealing himself at twilight near the tepee of the maiden of his choice, shall serenade her by playing on the flute traditional airs. If favorable to his suit the maiden shows herself and he is encouraged to make further advances. The melody employed in this piece is traditional among the Sioux Indians, and is played on a large modern flute about two feet long, blown from the end like a clarinet.

And of the "Moccasin Game":

> A variety of the gambling game used among the Winnebago Indians. Four squares of moccasions are spread on the ground, under which an Indian rapidly passes a marble back and forth while his opponent with a stick raises the square under which he thinks the marble is concealed. The spectators sing the melody with continuous drum accompaniment.

Both pieces are comparatively short, simple in construction, and direct in appeal. In the matter of percussive instruments the orchestral demands are, as befits the subject, extensive and even unusual; otherwise the music is scored for an orchestra of normal proportion. From a glance at the printed page it would seem that Mr. Skilton has often succeeded in obtaining striking effects through simple means—for example, the alternate plucking and bowing of a single tone by the double-basses through most of the "Moccasin Game." Here an Indian drum is struck continuously with rapid stroke, recalling Bizet's use of the Tambour de Basque in the Farandole of the second Suite from the music to "L'Arlésienne."

And from Schumann

Besides these sophisticated excursions into aboriginal music, three more novel pieces grace the pending programme. Not all the admirers of Schumann are aware that he wrote and published two sets of pieces for the little-known Pedalflügel, or pianoforte with a pedal keyboard. The first of these sets, bearing the opus number 56, consists of six studies in canon form. The late Theodore Dubois, a fertile and accomplished, if not a particularly distinguished composer, once arranged four [illegible] for orchestra, and the first, [illegible] and third of those transcriptions Mr. Monteux now purposes to make known to us. Number one, which incidentally is number five of the original pieces, stands in the key of D minor and bears the tempo indication "not too fast." Running almost uninterruptedly in staccato chords, the piece sets forth a canon in the octave, announced by clarinet doubled in the octave by flute, and answered by bassoon. Number two (number six according to Schumann) is a short Adagio in B major, scored principally for strings, and likewise presenting a canon in the octave. Number three (it is that in both versions), an Andantino in C-sharp minor, is more elaborate and diversified. The canon here is at the interval of the fifth, and it falls first to clarinet and solo-violin and then to oboe, doubled in the octave by flute and horn.

These little pieces, in which Schumann happily combined musical science and musical fancy, have been recast for orchestra tastefully, with discretion, and, presumably, with more skill than though Schumann himself had done the task. Moreover, since these canons may not readily be heard in the medium for which they were designed, the services of the transcriber become here more pertinent, less superfluous than is often the case.

W. S. S.

TRANS. APR. 26.

Herald apr 26

"HOME SWEET HOME" TO BE FEATURED BY POPS

The 38th Pop concert season will open Monday evening, May 7, in Symphony hall, the seventh under the leadership of Agide Jacchia. He has made a special arrangement of "Home, Sweet Home" which will be played at the second concert in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the first performance of that song. Concerts are to be given in many parts of England on that day for the same purpose. The song had its first performance in 1823 as a number in the opera "Clari" by Sir Henry Rowley Bishop. John Howard Payne of Boston wrote the words and is said to have suggested the music.

EVEN at the final concerts for the season of the Symphony Orchestra—next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall—Mr. Monteux may not forego his novel number. This time he chooses "Soir de Fête," little known piece by Chausson, the romantical Parisian, piece also of different voice than the more familiar Symphony and "Poem." For the rest, the most classic and the most eloquent of all overtures, Beethoven's Third "Leonora," will begin the concerts; while two favorite and displayful pieces—Respighi's tone-picturing of "Fountains of Rome" and Saint-Saëns's "Symphony with Organ"—will end them. As it happens Mr. Monteux has never before set this Symphony on a "regular" programme.

The concerts of the orchestra in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge will likewise end for the season on Thursday, with a programme containing but one piece heard of late under Mr. Monteux in Boston. It lists Chaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony; three dances from Grétry's opera, "Cephalus and Procris"; Weber's Overture to "Oberon"; airs of Wagner and Saint-Saëns, sung by Emma Roberts, full-voiced contralto.

TRANS-APR. 28

Symphony

SYMPHONY CONCERT

MASTERPIECE SETS CONTRAST TO MISCELLANY

Trifles from Schumann, Trifles from Skilton and Early Wagner Theatric—Before and Above Them Vaughan Williams's "London Symphony" Remarkable, Ripening and Different in the Music of Our Time

HALF the Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon fell to a signal and lasting piece of music written in our time—Vaughan Williams's "London Symphony"; and half to the more or less agreeable miscellany from which Mr. Monteux has seemed of late to be clearing his study-table. The first of these items was three-fold—Canons of Schumann, written in the forties for a freakish pedal-piano and scored for small orchestra in the nineties by the Parisian journeyman, Dubois. He has made his version neatly enough, with a hand and ear quick to the easy effect that a singing flute or a ruminant bassoon may make in the concert-hall. He has kept clear Schumann's assiduity with the academic form that in these pieces he chose to cultivate. Such exercises apart, they interest as proof once more that the little poem in tones—for piano, for voice, for both joined—was Schumann's instinctive and flowering means of self-expression. Very little, very minor poems are these three Canons, yet Schumann's dreamfulness haunts the first wistfully; while over the third plays his gentle grace of gladness. . . .

To Schumann succeeded Skilton—professor of music in a Kansan university—busied with motivs from Indian music handed him by twentieth-century tribesmen in a neighboring institute. One motiv, or rather melody, recalled the serenade that Sioux swains still flute at nightfall wooing hidden maiden. It is gaunt, lonesome, wistful; it hints at great empty spaces of sky and plain; while it bears the one desire that haunts them. It accords also with the voice of Mr. Laurent's flute and with Mr. Skilton's workmanlike tonal background. The other motiv, from a "Moccasin Game" of the Winnebagos, has a sharp, clear, snapping rhythm that through a few measures pleasantly taps the listening fancy. Unusual intervals also prick the ear. Unfortunately, Mr. Skilton, setting the motiv, fails to make either interest more than momentary. . . .

After Schumann and Skilton, dreams, Canons, pedal-pianos and the aborigines, Wagner and the theatre in the Overture to "Rienzi," out of which conductor and orchestra wrung the last effectual drop. Everyone knows by this time that the music begins in trumpet-calls and ends in a "grand crescendo," according to the operatic habit of its eighty-year-old day. Everyone remembers also the ad captandum, jigging tunes in which it also abounds; while many take pleasure in the obviousness and clamor pervading them. Meanwhile, nearly everyone forgets that in the Overture to "Rienzi" sounds also the Wagner who could make incandescent whatever music—even the meanest—that his hand touched and who could translate that incandescence into heat and glow of the theatre. With reason a Muck or a Monteux, master of such a piece in performance, may occasionally lead the Overture to "Rienzi" into Symphony Hall. Yet with so much novel and deserving music waiting performance or revival in Boston, why Schumann of these Canons or Mr. Skilton communing—in his study—with the redskins?

* * *

So did the concert become virtually a repetition of the London Symphony, flower thus far in the blossoming garden of the "new" Britons, gradually establishing itself in the "standard repertory" of English-speaking concert-halls from its own city westward to Chicago, penetrating even eastward into the fastnesses (when "insular" music is in question) of continental Europe. It deserved repetition since by intent and achievement, by quality and design, it stands apart in the music of our time; while each rehearing ripens the impression of every attribute. It deserves also the affectionate care, the studious pains, that Mr. Monteux evidently lavishes upon it. He now gives the street-music freer, more characteristic voice than he did of old. He agrees that a snatch of tune from a concertina, in a jumble of week-end sounds, should sound as vulgarly as the composer has intentionally written it. No more does the conductor soften any hint of coster's ditty in the medley of the highways and byways at morning.

Yet it is still possible to wish more harsh, more bitter the music, toward the end, of the "under-dogs" and the "hunger-marchers." Hint of savagery underlies it. More than does Mr. Williams, Mr. Monteux subdues it. "The Reds" in Symphony Hall—even in no more than the stride and stridency of tones! Perish the baleful thought. . . . Yet poet with the composer is the conductor when the music evokes the girdling river of mystery; when of a sudden upon measures quick with the zest and glow of urban life seems to fall the shadow of the huge bulk, the vast inertia, the calloused mass of a great city, and therewith the music saddens, turns ominous and bleak. As illusory, too, were conductor and orchestra when Mr. Williams sets in his night-pieces—the one of wintry, solitary, haunted dusk, the other of blaring, flaring Saturday over the river, beyond the mists, in the mean streets. To conductor as to hearers, such close-packed music as this London Symphony may but gradually disclose itself.

* * *

Throughout Mr. Williams writes with high seriousness, after much reflection and revision, in gravity of mood and intensity of expression, with controlled and directed power, never over blown, never quite exhausted. Little symphonic music of recent years is freer from rhetoric and device. The composer works with bare hand, with eye fixed on the object of his vision—the life, the aspects, the spirit of London that have wakened in him sensation and creation. Before music so generated, the hearer takes little thought of method and means. Not in the concert-hall, but for paper and print, does he recall Williams's architectural sense, achieving a symphony that, from first measure to last, is a unified, expanding, proportioned whole, with the end foreseen from the beginning, with the progress adjusted and cumulated, without hollows as without protuberance. In such after-reflection again, the listener recalls the diversity of matter within this unity, the interweaving of tonal strands that knits it closely but not thickly, the manipulation of motivs to bind and character the music. Even in this retrospect, he may hardly define Williams's ways with harmony. The learned in such things relate them to certain churchly modes, find occasional precedent in the music of other composers. Enough that to the hearing ear they seem neither ancient nor modern, neither labored nor assimilated, but an inevitable and characterizing background to the musical thought, a play of light and shadow over the musical progress.

There are composers in our day with a keener, a more imaginative ear than Mr. Williams's for individual instrumental voices; occasionally they serve his purpose; but quite as often he relies upon blended choirs in preference to isolated or accentuated timbres. And ever he remembers that in rhythm dwells the life of music. In fine, so fused are the matter and the manner, the substance and the form of the "London Symphony" that structure and procedure seem only the flow into expression of thought, mood, sensation. Of late an audible modal mannerism, an insistence upon certain sequences has beset Mr. Williams's music. Deliberately, besides, he has seemed to subdue it almost to monotone. Ten years ago when he wrote this London Symphony he was not so obsessed.

Few modern symphonies begin in such sombre and mysterious splendor. In the imagery and the voice of the music the gray river changelessly encircles a gray and hidden world. Everlasting has been, everlasting will be, its flow. Like Saturn, the brooding god, so is it among streams. The light stirs, the air quivers, the veil of the mists is rent, the city upheaves itself, and the music passes to the visioning of London. Variously in tones Mr. Williams sets his sensations—until of a sudden, toward the end of the Symphony, the mists regather and descend, while through them pulses the eternal river, the eternal mystery. Debussy's Spain flares itself away; Mr. Williams's London sinks and is still.

ESTABLISHED 1861
FROM APR 19 1923
REPUBLICAN,
Springfield, Mass.

OLD SPLENDOR SHOWN BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

Pierre Monteux's Organization Gives Splendid Concert at Smith College

From a Special Correspondent

Northampton, April 18—The Boston Symphony orchestra with Pierre Monteux conductor, was heard here tonight in John M. Greene hall in an exceptionally fine concert. This was the second orchestral concert in the Smith college course this season, the other being the brilliant opening one of the year by the New York Philharmonic orchestra. The Boston Symphony organization seems to have completely recovered from the disrupting experiences of the war years and to have become again the unified and magnificent orchestra that it had been for so many years.

Mr Monteux is always happy in his making of programs and the one tonight was admirable in every way, generous in length and sufficiently varied to please all tastes. The symphony was Cesar Franck's in D minor, one of the finest of modern compositions, calling for all the breadth of style, richness of tone and perfection of finish possible. It was a broad, sympathetic and emotional reading which Mr Monteux gave the symphony, especially notable, perhaps, in the impressive first movement, but delightful throughout, and one which brought out to the utmost the remarkably beautiful touch effects of Franck's orchestration.

The second half of the program opened with the familiar and ever-beautiful overture, No 3, by Beethoven, followed by the interesting "Fantasia on a Theme" by Thomas Tallis, for double-stringed orchestra, by Vaughn Williams, which, it will be recalled, was so much enjoyed at the concert by this orchestra in Springfield last January. Three Wagner numbers completed the program, "The Ride of the Valkyries," from "The Valkyrie," "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal," and the prelude to "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg."

Like everything else of the evening, these were played splendidly, with an exquisite sense of balance and a wonderful freedom and spontaneity. The audience responded most heartily.

The series for next season will open with the New York Philharmonic orchestra, conducted by Willem Van Hoogstraten, and will include recitals by Josef Hofmann, Arthur Middleton, Toscha Seidel and Margaret Matzenauer, and concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Tickets will be put on sale in October.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

The 23d pair of Boston Symphony concerts and last but one of the season will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Mr. Monteux will conduct Vaughan Williams's "London Symphony," which he introduced and repeated at the concerts two seasons ago; also a series of Canons by Schumann, orchestrated by Dubois; Skilton's "Suite Primeval," on Tribal Indian Melodies, and Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi."

SUNDAY POPS

On Monday, May 7, in Symphony hall the 38th season of Pop concerts will begin. Agide Jacchia will again conduct the Pops orchestra. This will be his seventh season. He has added to his previous fame as conductor of operatic, orchestral and choral concerts by making the Pops more musically delightful and more numerously patronized than ever before.

Last year's record season promises to be again exceeded if the still growing demand of clubs, conventions, schools and colleges for blocks of seats is any indication. Sunday has been the only silent night of the week in previous Pop seasons. This season will bring Sunday Pop concerts, beginning May 13 and occurring on alternate Sundays through May and June. These will be featured as concerts, although no less popular than the rest. The orchestra will number 80 players with several striking new pieces added to the Pops favorites of long standing, and with occasional "Special Nights." There will also be refreshments and other features of the Pops which combine to create the elsewhere unattainable "Pops atmosphere."

EXTRA SYMPHONY

The closing concert of the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place in Symphony hall tomorrow night. Mr. Monteux will present the Overture to Weber's "Oberon," Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony (promptness in attending this concert is urged, for this symphony is played without pauses between movements), Saint-Saens's Septet for string orchestra, with trumpet and piano, the trumpet solo to be played by George Mager and the piano solo by Jesus Samroma. He will also conduct the prelude to Wagner's "Maestersingers" and, as a closing number, Berlioz's "Rakoczy" march. Florence Macbeth, soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will sing Pamina's aria from "The Magic Flute" and an air from "The Escape from the Seraglio."

HERALD - APR. 22

MACBETH SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Sanroma Assists in Saint-Saens Septet

Florence Macbeth, heard here in leading roles with the Chicago Opera, sang for the first time at a public concert in Boston last night at the final concert of the extra Symphony series. She chose two quietly beautiful Mozart airs, not calculated to arouse wild demonstrations in a popular audience, yet she was recalled four times by eager and hearty applause. It was noteworthy that many members of the orchestra were clapping Miss Macbeth's exquisite singing with marked enthusiasm.

Her voice has a very rare combination of purity, clarity and warmth of tone. She can sing very high notes with an ease and beauty almost unparalleled. To Pamina's air from "The Magic Flute," and Blonde's air from "Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail" she brought a finished perfection of execution, and a keen sympathy for the emotional content of words and music. She is one of the finest singers now before the American public, heard too seldom in this city.

Jesus Sanroma, as assisting pianist in Saint-Saens' empty and trivial septet for trumpet, piano and strings, displayed a clean-cut technique and a musicianly sense of rhythm that deserved a better opportunity. Georges Mager was the trumpet soloist, doing his part effectively.

The other numbers were all stock pieces from the orchestral repertory, Weber's "Oberon" overture, Mendelssohn's "Scotch" symphony, Wagner's "Meistersinger" prelude and Berlioz' "Rakoczy March." The performance calls for no special praise or blame. Mr Monteux and the orchestra were warmly and deservedly applauded.

GLOBE - APR. 24

MONDAY SYMPHONY LOUDLY APPLAUDED

Splendid Program Is Cause of Demonstration

For the fifth symphony concert of the Monday evening series, Mr. Monteux played Weber's "Oberon" overture, Mendelssohn's Scotch symphony, the prelude to "Die Meistersinger," the Saint-Saens septet for trumpet, strings and piano (piano solo, Jesus Sanroma; trumpet solo, Georges Mager), and Berlioz's "Rakoczy" march from "The Damnation of Faust." Florence Macbeth, soprano, sang Pamina's air, "Ah, lo so" from Mozart's "Magic Flute," and Blondchen's aria, "Con vezzie, con lusinghe" from "Il Seraglio."

This was a concert, the second part of it at all events, to stir an audience to enthusiasm. The demonstration began after the "Meistersinger" prelude, which drew forth such hearty applause that Mr. Monteux promptly motioned to the orchestra to rise and share it. Saint-Saens septet was more warmly applauded still. No wonder, for more brilliant music of a finer clarity does not come to a hearing every day, and clearness and brilliancy still work their spell. It was played by everybody who had a hand in it with a sensitive feeling for euphony which resulted in a dazzling splendor of tone—the strings, Mr. Sanroma, who, as well as beautiful tones, displayed a stirring rhythm, and Mr. Mager, with a voriety in his trumpet tones and an exquisiteness of phrasing like unto those of an accomplished dramatic soprano. If people who plan concerts of chamber music would venture now and again to enliven their staid programs with gay music like this septet, perhaps they would rejoice in a larger public.

And the gentle charm and pretty voice of Miss Macbeth, though she sang two airs of Mozart not so grateful as some he wrote, brought her as long and heated applause as though she had obliged with the facile emotions of "Un bel di." She approached the airs with an appearance of piety that did credit to her spirit of reverence, but scarcely full justice to Mozart's powers of expression. Another time she might to advantage think her Pomina a more human person who felt her troubles with some depth.

There was the Scotch symphony too, to make one marvel at the devastating effect for years of Mendelssohn on music, when the man himself wrote pages of not only poetic imagination but actually of robustness, if his interpreters have the wit to mark it. The most of them are much to blame, his immediate followers too and his contemporary admirers for so misconceiving him.

The audience last night was very large. The program book brought the pleasant news that there will be five Monday concerts next season. They fill a need.

R. R. G.

HERALD-APR. 24

FINAL MONDAY NIGHT CONCERT

Symphony Closes Extra Series With Spirit

BY OLIN DOWNES

Respectable performance of thrice respectable music distinguished the final concert of the Monday night series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conductor, last night in Symphony Hall. The orchestra played Weber's "Oberon" overture, Mendelssohn's "Scotch" symphony, Wagner's prelude to "The Meistersingers" and Berlioz' "Rakoczy" march. The soloists were Florence Macbeth, who sang two arias of Mozart, and Messrs. Jesus Sanroma, pianist, and George Mager, first trumpeter of the orchestra, who took the solo parts in the performance of Saint-Saens' septet for trumpet, piano and strings.

The "Meistersinger" prelude, brilliantly played, has been a hobby-horse of conductors and orchestras this winter, but it remains a veritable explosion of genius, which one never hears without the emotion of wonder, and the esprit of Berlioz' march makes it a lonely and incomparable creation. And if the Mendelssohn symphony is duller to the ears of this generation than the First Symphony of Sibelius, which it replaced, at the last moment on the programme, there are still pages which thrill us. These occur in the development section of the first movement, which is mysterious with the brooding and whispering of many waters, and in the liveliest, raciest music Mendelssohn ever wrote—the second movement, "Vivace non tropp." Then there is the introduction to the "Oberon" overture, which requires a finer poetic mood than it had last night.

Miss MacBeth, who sang the arias, "Ah, lo so," from "The Magic Flute," and "Con vezzie," from "Il Seraglio," has shown herself long since a singer of uncommon gifts, not only as regards her voice itself, but the intelligence and art with which she employs it. She is well equipped to sing Mozart, though her performance of the first air was a little deliberate and studied.

Mr. Sanroma showed the spirit of a born virtuoso and a musical understanding which should place him high among present day virtuosi in the years to come.

24

Few are the American composers whose orchestral scores have attained to the dignity of print, but among them, strangely enough, is one whose name and whose music are little known to the concert-going public: to wit, Charles Sanford Skilton. A native of Massachusetts, born in Northampton in 1868, Mr. Skilton has been, since 1903, professor of organ, theory, and history of music at the University of Kansas. Nearby is a Government school for Indians—Haskell University by name—and from certain of the students at this latter institution, Mr. Skilton has obtained authentic specimens of Indian tribal music. The melodies thus acquired he has made the basis of sundry orchestral pieces and two of these—a "Deer Dance" and a "War Dance"—were published a few years ago by the house of Fischer. With the addition of a group of four more pieces of like derivation they are now published as a "Suite Primeval," in two parts. From this set Mr. Monteux has chosen two numbers—a "Flute Serenade" and a "Moccasin Game"—for place upon the programme of the Symphony Concerts of this week.

In the prefatory matter upon the fly-leaf of the score of this "Suite Primeval," the composer explains that it has been his intention to create in tones "an impression of the life of the Indian of the West in his primeval surroundings." Of the "Flute Serenade" he writes specifically:

> Among most Indians it is the custom of courtship that the lover, concealing himself at twilight near the tepee of the maiden of his choice, shall serenade her by playing on the flute traditional airs. If favorable to his suit the maiden shows herself and he is encouraged to make further advances. The melody employed in this piece is traditional among the Sioux Indians, and is played on a large modern flute about two feet long, blown from the end like a clarinet.

And of the "Moccasin Game":

> A variety of the gambling game used among the Winnebago Indians. Four squares of moccasions are spread on the ground, under which an Indian rapidly passes a marble back and forth while his opponent with a stick raises the square under which he thinks the marble is concealed. The spectators sing the melody with continuous drum accompaniment.

Both pieces are comparatively short, simple in construction, and direct in appeal. In the matter of percussive instruments the orchestral demands are, as befits the subject, extensive and even unusual; otherwise the music is scored for an orchestra of normal proportion. From a glance at the printed page it would seem that Mr. Skilton has often succeeded in obtaining striking effects through simple means—for example, the alternate plucking and bowing of a single tone by the double-basses through most of the "Moccasin Game." Here an Indian drum is struck continuously with rapid stroke, recalling Bizet's use of the Tambour de Basque in the Farandole of the second Suite from the music to "L'Arlésienne."

And from Schumann

Besides these sophisticated excursions into aboriginal music, three more novel pieces grace the pending programme. Not all the admirers of Schumann are aware that he wrote and published two sets of pieces for the little-known Pedalflügel, or pianoforte with a pedal keyboard. The first of these sets, bearing the opus number 56, consists of six studies in canon-form. The late Theodore Dubois, a fertile and accomplished, if not a particularly distinguished composer, once arranged four of these canons for orchestra, and the first, second and third of those transcriptions Mr. Monteux now purposes to make known to us. Number one, which incidentally is number five of the original pieces, stands in the key of D minor and bears the tempo indication "not too fast." Running almost uninterruptedly in staccato chords, the piece sets forth a canon in the octave, announced by clarinet doubled in the octave by flute, and answered by bassoon. Number two (number six according to Schumann) is a short Adagio in B major, scored principally for strings, and likewise presenting a canon in the octave. Number three (it is that in both versions), an Andantino in C-sharp minor, is more elaborate and diversified. The canon here is at the interval of the fifth, and it falls first to clarinet and solo-violin and then to oboe, doubled in the octave by flute and horn.

These little pieces, in which Schumann happily combined musical science and musical fancy, have been recast for orchestra tastefully, with discretion, and, presumably, with more skill than though Schumann himself had done the task. Moreover, since these canons may not readily be heard in the medium for which they were designed, the services of the transcriber become here more pertinent, less superfluous than is often the case.

W. S. S.

TRANS. APR. 26

~~Herald Apr. 28~~

"HOME SWEET HOME" TO BE FEATURED BY POPS

The 38th Pop concert season will open Monday evening, May 7, in Symphony hall, the seventh under the leadership of Agide Jacchia. He has made a special arrangement of "Home, Sweet Home" which will be played at the second concert in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the first performance of that song. Concerts are to be given in many parts of England on that day for the same purpose. The song had its first performance in 1823 as a number in the opera "Clari" by Sir Henry Rowley Bishop. John Howard Payne of Boston wrote the words and is said to have suggested the music.

Even at the final concerts for the season of the Symphony Orchestra—next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall—Mr. Monteux may not forego his novel number. This time he chooses "Soir de Fête," little known piece by Chausson, the romantical Parisian, piece also of different voice than the more familiar Symphony and "Poem." For the rest, the most classic and the most eloquent of all overtures, Beethoven's Third "Leonora," will begin the concerts; while two favorite and displayful pieces—Respighi's tone-picturing of "Fountains of Rome" and Saint-Saëns's "Symphony with Organ"—will end them. As it happens Mr. Monteux has never before set this Symphony on a "regular" programme.

The concerts of the orchestra in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge will likewise end for the season on Thursday, with a programme containing but one piece heard of late under Mr. Monteux in Boston. It lists Chaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony; three dances from Grétry's opera, "Cephalus and Procris"; Weber's Overture to "Oberon"; airs of Wagner and Saint-Saëns, sung by Emma Roberts, full-voiced contralto.

TRANS - APR

Symphony

SYMPHONY CONCERT

MASTERPIECE SETS CONTRAST TO MISCELLANY

Trifles from Schumann, Trifles from Skilton and Early Wagner Theatric—Before and Above Them Vaughan Williams's "London Symphony" Remarkable, Ripening and Different in the Music of Our Time

Half the Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon fell to a signal and lasting piece of music written in our time—Vaughan Williams's "London Symphony"; and half to the more or less agreeable miscellany from which Mr. Monteux has seemed of late to be clearing his study-table. The first of these items was three-fold—Canons of Schumann, written in the forties for a freakish pedal-piano and scored for small orchestra in the nineties by the Parisian journeyman, Dubois. He has made his version neatly enough, with a hand and ear quick to the easy effect that a singing flute or a ruminant bassoon may make in the concert-hall. He has kept clear Schumann's assiduity with the academic form that in these pieces he chose to cultivate. Such exercises apart, they interest as proof once more that the little poem in tones—for piano, for voice, for both joined—was Schumann's instinctive and flowering means of self-expression. Very little, very minor poems are these three Canons, yet Schumann's dreamfulness haunts the first wistfully; while over the third plays his gentle grace of gladness. . . .

To Schumann succeeded Skilton—professor of music in a Kansan university—busied with motivs from Indian music handed him by twentieth-century tribesmen in a neighboring institute. One motiv, or rather melody, recalled the serenade that Sioux swains still flute at nightfall wooing hidden maiden. It is gaunt, lonesome, wistful; it hints at great empty spaces of sky and plain; while it bears the one desire that haunts them. It accords also with the voice of Mr. Laurent's flute and with Mr. Skilton's workmanlike tonal background. The other motiv, from a "Moccasin Game" of the Winnebagos, has a sharp, clear, snapping rhythm that through a few measures pleasantly taps the listening fancy. Unusual intervals also prick the ear. Unfortunately, Mr. Skilton, setting the motiv, fails to make either interest more than momentary. . . .

After Schumann and Skilton, dreams, Canons, pedal-pianos and the aborigines, Wagner and the theatre in the Overture to "Rienzi," out of which conductor and orchestra wrung the last effectual drop. Everyone knows by this time that the music begins in trumpet-calls and ends in a "grand crescendo," according to the operatic habit of its eighty-year-old day. Everyone remembers also the ad captandum, jigging tunes in which it also abounds; while many take pleasure in the obviousness and clamor pervading them. Meanwhile, nearly everyone forgets that in the Overture to "Rienzi" sounds also the Wagner who could make incandescent whatever music—even the meanest—that his hand touched and who could translate that incandescence into heat and glow of the theatre. With reason a Muck or a Monteux, master of such a piece in performance, may occasionally lead the Overture to "Rienzi" into Symphony Hall. Yet with so much novel and deserving music waiting performance or revival in Boston, why Schumann of these Canons or Mr. Skilton communing—in his study—with the redskins?

So did the concert become virtually a repetition of the London Symphony, flower thus far in the blossoming garden of the "new" Britons, gradually establishing itself in the "standard repertory" of English-speaking concert-halls from its own city westward to Chicago, penetrating even eastward into the fastnesses (when "insular" music is in question) of continental Europe. It deserved repetition since by intent and achievement, by quality and design, it stands apart in the music of our time; while each rehearing ripens the impression of every attribute. It deserves also the affectionate care, the studious pains, that Mr. Monteux evidently lavishes upon it. He now gives the street-music freer, more characteristic voice than he did of old. He agrees that a snatch of tune from a concertina, in a jumble of week-end sounds, should sound as vulgarly as the composer has intentionally written it. No more does the conductor soften any hint of coster's ditty in the medley of the highways and byways at morning.

Yet it is still possible to wish more harsh, more bitter the music, toward the end, of the "under-dogs" and the "hunger-marchers." Hint of savagery underlies it. More than does Mr. Williams, Mr. Monteux subdues it. "The Reds" in Symphony Hall—even in no more than the stride and stridency of tones! Perish the baleful thought. . . . Yet poet with the composer is the conductor when the music evokes the girdling river of mystery; when of a sudden upon measures quick with the zest and glow of urban life seems to fall the shadow of the huge bulk, the vast inertia, the calloused mass of a great city, and therewith the music saddens, turns ominous and bleak. As illusory, too, were conductor and orchestra when Mr. Williams sets in his night-pieces—the one of wintry, solitary, haunted dusk, the other of blaring, flaring Saturday over the river, beyond the mists, in the mean streets. To conductor as to hearers, such close-packed music as this London Symphony may but gradually disclose itself.

Throughout Mr. Williams writes with high seriousness, after much reflection and revision, in gravity of mood and intensity of expression, with controlled and directed power, never over blown, never quite exhausted. Little symphonic music of recent years is freer from rhetoric and device. The composer works with bare hand, with eye fixed on the object of his vision—the life, the aspects, the spirit of London that have wakened in him sensation and creature. Before music so generated, the hearer takes little thought of method and means. Not in the concert-hall, but for paper and print, does he recall Williams's architectural sense, achieving a symphony that, from first measure to last, is a unified, expanding, proportioned whole, with the end foreseen from the beginning, with the progress adjusted and cumulated, without hollows as without protuberance. In such after-reflection again, the listener recalls the diversity of matter within this unity, the interweaving of tonal strands that knits it closely but not thickly, the manipulation of motivs to bind and character the music. Even in this retrospect, he may hardly define Williams's ways with harmony. The learned in such things relate them to certain churchly modes, find occasional precedent in the music of other composers. Enough that to the hearing ear they seem neither ancient nor modern, neither labored nor assimilated, but an inevitable and characterizing background to the musical thought, a play of light and shadow over the musical progress.

There are composers in our day with a keener, a more imaginative ear than Mr. Williams's for individual instrumental voices; occasionally they serve his purpose; but quite as often he relies upon blended choirs in preference to isolated or accentuated timbres. And ever he remembers that in rhythm dwells the life of music. In fine, so fused are the matter and the manner, the substance and the form of the "London Symphony" that structure and procedure seem only the flow into expression of thought, mood, sensation. Of late an audible modal mannerism, an insistence upon certain sequences has beset Mr. Williams's music. Deliberately, besides, he has seemed to subdue it almost to monotone. Ten years ago when he wrote this London Symphony he was not so obsessed.

Few modern symphonies begin in such sombre and mysterious splendor. In the imagery and the voice of the music the gray river changelessly encircles a gray and hidden world. Everlasting has been, everlasting will be, its flow. Like Saturn, the brooding god, so is it among streams. The light stirs, the air quivers, the veil of the mists is rent, the city upheaves itself—and the music passes to the visioning of London. Variously in tones Mr. Williams sets his sensations—until of a sudden, toward the end of the Symphony, the mists regather and descend, while through them pulses the eternal river, the eternal mystery. Debussy's Spain fares itself away; Mr. Williams's London sinks and is still.

Music News and Reviews

"A London Symphony" Again Heard in Boston

The program of the twenty-third concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, given in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, was:

Vaughan Williams, "A London Symphony"
Schumann, Three pieces in Canon form arranged for orchestra by Theodore Dubois
Skilton, Two movements from "Suite Primeval"
Wagner, Overture to "Rienzi"

Vaughan Williams' "A London Symphony" was welcome even after so short an interval since its last performance here. A work of this complexity needs frequent hearings before its real worth can be appreciated; and in this case the favorable impression created on its first performance here was greatly heightened and confirmed. This is music of the imagination and heart, music which stirs the emotions. Here there is no bandying about of motives for the sake of merely ingenious combinations. There is, of course, development in the musical sense of the term, but this development is always subservient to the underlying poetic thought. Mr. Monteux and the orchestra played with an even more complete understanding of the music than heretofore, and it would be difficult to conceive of a more finely balanced or carefully thought-out reading of this symphony than that of yesterday afternoon.

Skilton's two movements, based on Indian melodies, inevitably recall compositions of a similar character by Henry Gilbert, who has made this form of writing peculiarly his own, and it is impossible on hearing them to avoid comparisons. They are but pale reflections of Indian music as we have come to regard it through Gilbert's settings. Skilton's Indians are highly refined and civilized representatives of the race, and, although there is much clever use made of these tribal melodies, they lose a deal of their original barbaric coloring in the process. By including these movements in yesterday's program Mr. Monteux again gave evidence of his interest in music by American composers. These pieces are well worth hearing for their musical interest alone, regardless of the fact that they are a native product.

Schumann's three canons in Dubois' orchestral version are amiable music, useful for filling in a program. They are mildly interesting, never annoying and arouse a small degree of astonishment and wonder that so artificial a form as the canon may be made to express emotion even faintly. César Franck seems to have been the only composer who has been able to say anything worth saying in this form, although we believe that a modern French composer, Paul Dupin, has chosen to express himself canonically with some degree of success, according to foreign critics. His music is as yet unknown in Boston.

The overture to "Rienzi" was played unusually well. This overture may easily become bombastic. Mr. Monteux skillfully avoided this pitfall and gave it a nobility which it often lacks. S. M.

Many a composer has written mysterious music; Mr. Williams's in prelude and postlude is a rarer music of austere brooding. It has depths.

Between goes a manifold London—first in ardent rhythmical and melodic tumult. There is fall of hurrying feet, quick echo of whistling lips, flicks of the syncopation which is ragtime, flecks of coster-song, this note and that in urban din. Each slips into place within an elastic tonal fabric, within a graphic, unified impression of the stir of a city awake and in motion, of the diverse multitude peopling it, the exhilaration it quickens, the fascination it exerts, the affection it breeds. Universally, Mr. Williams evokes the zest of life and work in a multifarious and goading capital. It a new emotion, a new illusion for music. By detail he characterizes this illusion as the zest and the stir of London intrinsically homely, hearty, warm-spirited in tones. To this London of morning succeeds in a later division the London of night. There is distant din of the slum that will not be stilled, that must jerk out jigs, squeak at concertina and mouth-organ, snarl and guffaw, "bash" and wheedle. Again a web of detail weaves itself into a single vivid impression, both universal and individual. In the imagery, the voice, the color of the music are the confused murmur, the dull flare against the sky of a great town by night, when eye and ear look and listen remote. For the second time, a new evocation, a new illusion in music; yet more particularly a London so heard and seen. The flare fades; the sound settles into silence. In undercurrent the everlasting river pulses anew. Night as well as dawn may brood upon Mr. Williams's city. Again there are depths, as well as surfaces.

The London that stirs not has also touched Mr. Williams's imagination. Briefly as for the sake of contrast, he first stills for it the music of his bustling, zestful city. For the morning penetrates these quiet corners, lays a wistful glow upon them. Here gentleness hides, while tumult passes. By only a little does this intermezzo fall short of the magic of old, forgotten, far-off things. It is as though Mr. Williams—true Englishman—would not soften too much. Fearing sentimentality, he misses sentiment. Before it has quite charmed, the music blushes and strides away. He is less afear'd of the gray music of the gray quarters, where wintry dusks turn all things ghostly. For them neither the truculence of the slums nor the swirl of the busy streets. Decay haunts them; past has shrivelled into present; the world departed leaves them still and solitary. Every elder city has such neighborhoods. Again for the first time, symphonic music seems to sound the melancholy, the pity of them. The motiv that the horns finally swell into melody haunts as none other, outside the river-music, of Mr Williams's inventions. Once more he is universal, though he particularize with his fragment of "Sweet Lavender," his street-musician fiddling upon the viola.

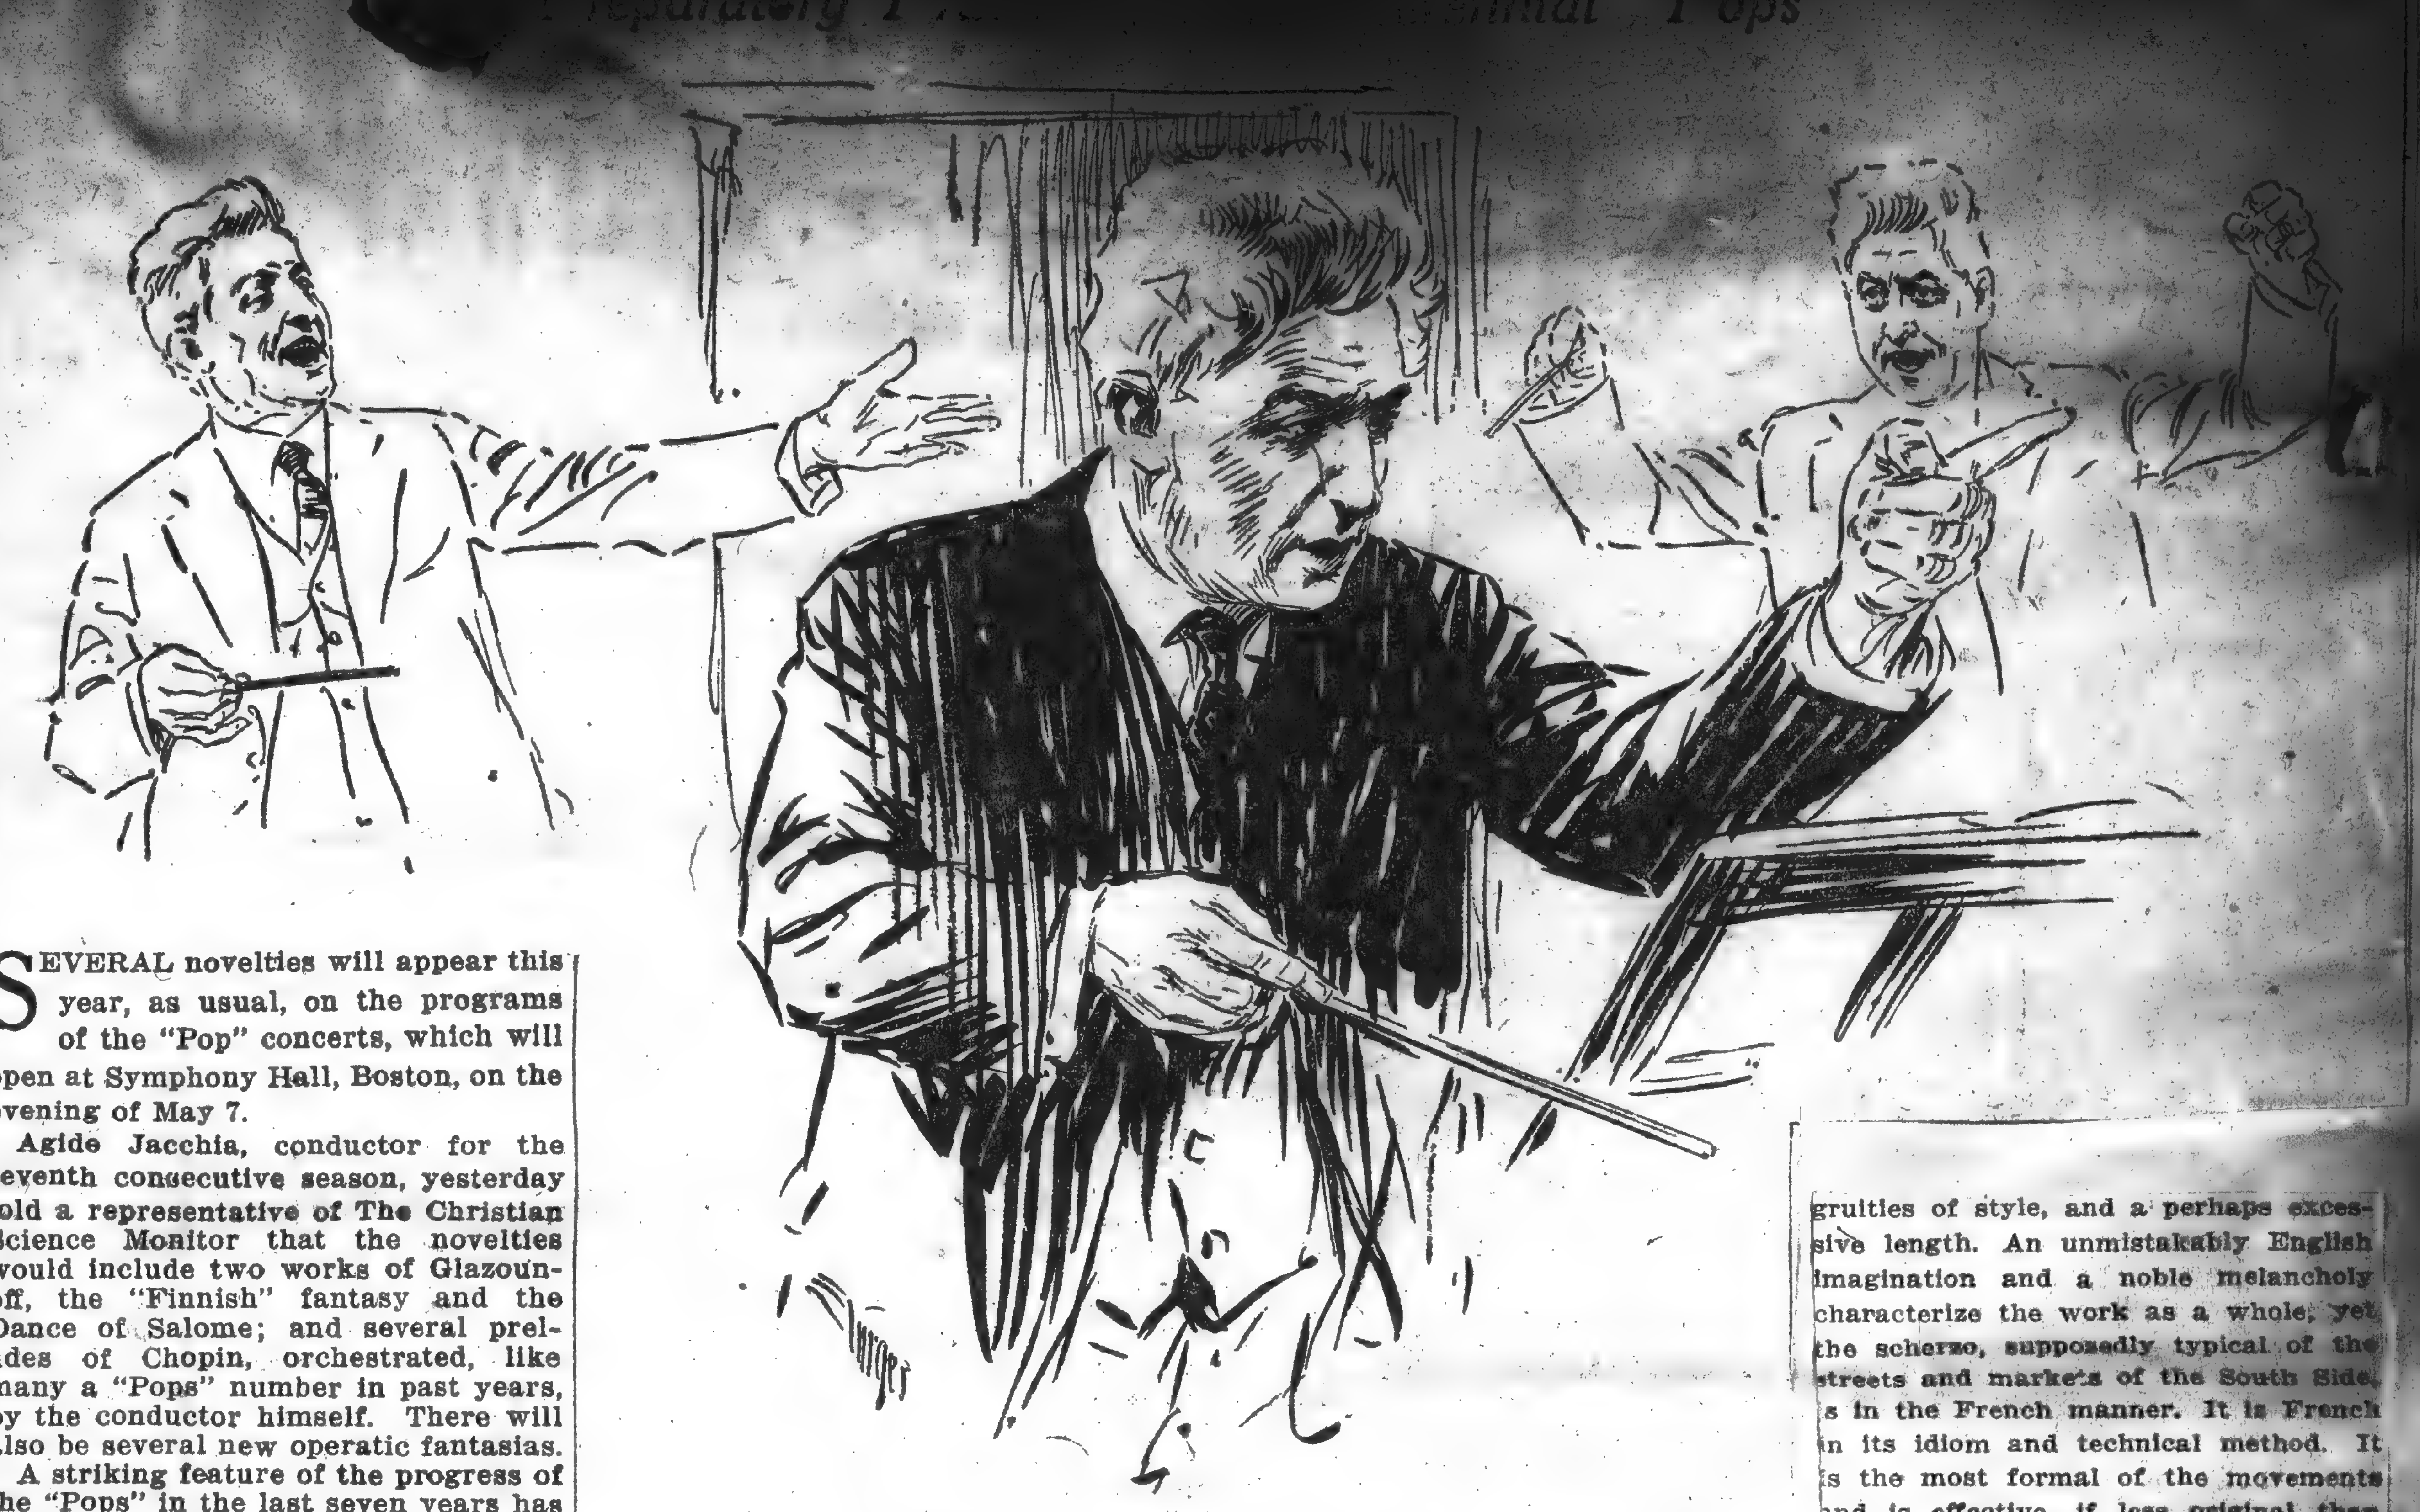
Yet another London has measures in the music—measures that only a composer of this, our day, would write. For a while, before the postlude of the eternal river, the symphony rasps and jangles, moves to broken, distorted march-rhythms. Dissonances clash; the zestful motivs of the awakening city mock at themselves; the music thuds and grinds. Resentment, almost hate, cries in it. Those who know Mr. Williams's purpose say that therein the "under-dogs" of London, of any great city in this twentieth century, growl and tug. Alive to this time, shutting himself in no ivory tower of tone-poetry, with the English instinct, even in the arts, to face the facts, Mr. Williams has dared this music of social bitterness and feud. No wonder this "Hunger March," as the analysts call it, baffles hearers. They miss the intention. Novelists, playwrights, painters, sculptors may touch the issues of life in their hour and world, do touch them abundantly. But music, heavenly muse! doing likewise? Out upon such a fallen, bedraggled Euterpe! Yet as some like to believe with Mr. Williams and, may be, with Stravinsky, it is natural enough.

H. T. P.

TRANS. APR. 28.

[illegible] eparatory P[illegible] ennial "Pops"



Agide Jacchia, Conductor, in Action at Rehearsal

SEVERAL novelties will appear this year, as usual, on the programs of the "Pop" concerts, which will open at Symphony Hall, Boston, on the evening of May 7.

Agide Jacchia, conductor for the seventh consecutive season, yesterday told a representative of The Christian Science Monitor that the novelties would include two works of Glazounoff, the "Finnish" fantasy and the Dance of Salome; and several preludes of Chopin, orchestrated, like many a "Pops" number in past years, by the conductor himself. There will also be several new operatic fantasias.

A striking feature of the progress of the "Pops" in the last seven years has been the steady improvement in the quality of the music played. Asked how this growth had come about, Mr. Jacchia replied:

"I have simply followed the musical development of the people who make up the audiences. When I first came here the programs had to be made up chiefly of marches, waltzes, and overtures. Gradually I was able to insert a better piece of music here and there, and, as musical taste improved, to raise the standard until only a few of the emptier pieces are left in the programs.

"Of course, I should prefer never to play worthless music. On the other hand, a popular program is not the place for experiments with the latest radical developments in the art. My aim is to build programs of standard works of proved value which are not only musically good, but beautiful as well. For I know lots of works which are musically good, but far from being beautiful. I also know some which are both bad and ugly. What we want for the 'Pops' programs is music that is both good and beautiful.

"And we are working toward that end. Nowadays I can include such works as the symphonic suite 'Schéhérazade,' by Rimsky-Korsakoff, for example, which is one of the most popular numbers. I also give a movement from a symphony now and then, and these too are well received. The excerpts from the great operatic composers answer all the requirements of popular concerts. Of these, of course, Wagner is the greatest, and I am glad to say that his music is now, in theatrical parlance, 'sure-fire stuff.' Eventually, I hope, we shall reach the point where nothing trashy will ever find place on our programs."

The orchestra of the "Pops" this year will consist, as usual, of 80 or 90 of the regular forces of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be but one radical departure from precedent, in the form of several Sunday evening concerts to meet the demand of people who find it difficult to attend during the week.

The "special" evenings, devoted to a particular organization or group of listeners, will be more numerous than ever this season, totaling 40 or more already.

MONITOR APR. 28.

"Home, Sweet Home" at Pops

In many parts of England concerts will be given on May 8 next to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the first performance of the most popular of all songs—"Home, Sweet Home." The principal observance in Boston will be at the Pop concert of that date in Symphony hall, which will be the second concert of the Pops season. Agide Jacchia has made a special arrangement of the famous melody for the occasion.

"Home, Sweet Home" had its first performance in 1823 as a number in the opera "Clari" by Sir Henry Rowley Bishop. The words were written by John Howard Payne, an American, and a resident of Boston, who likewise, it is said, suggested the tune to Bishop from a song which he had heard from a young peasant girl in Italy.

LAST SYMPHONY CONCERT

The last regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts of the season will be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, May 4 and 5, in Symphony hall.

The symphony, which will be the last number on the programme, will be that by Saint-Saens in C minor for orchestra with organ. Pierre Monteux will also conduct Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Chausson's "Soir de Fete," and the symphonic poem "Fountains of Rome" by Respighi, which was played and repeated at these concerts two seasons ago.

TRAV. APR. 28.

'POPS' READY FOR 38th SEASON

The thrty-eighth season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall on Monday night, May 7, under the directorship of Agide Jacchia, who is to preside over the Pops Orchestra for the seventh successive season. Refreshments will be served at the tables and in the first balcony. An innovation will be Sunday night Pops, to be given on alternate Sundays beginning May 13. This concert will have a Russian-Tschaikovsky program.

For the Pops' opening on May 7, Agide Jacchia has made the following program:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin". Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz"........Weber
Waltz No. ....Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"........Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody..........Liszt
Prelude, op. 28, No. 6..............Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"............Waldtenfel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3....Tschaikovsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"..................Grieg
"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"....Jessel
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen"........Bizet

AMER. APR. 28

BRITISH MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

Post

Williams' Long London Symphony Is Played

BY OLIN DOWNES

Vaughan Williams' "London Symphony" was played for the third time in this city at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. This symphony, at first a stumbling block to many, becomes more impressive, more evocative of mood, with each repetition.

SCHERZO VERY FRENCH

This is so [illegible]

gruities of style, and a perhaps excessive length. An unmistakably English imagination and a noble melancholy characterize the work as a whole, yet the scherzo, supposedly typical of the streets and markets of the South Side, is in the French manner. It is French in its idiom and technical method. It is the most formal of the movements and is effective, if less original than other pages, because of the fluent and effective treatment of a rhythmical figure. But here the composer, unawares, as it seems to us, speaks in the tone of other musicians whom he has admired and carefully studied.

These things do not weaken the symphony enough for it to lose its appeal to profound emotions. De Quincey did not write of the streets of London with more feeling than this English composer of today. Whether Mr. Williams is thinking of the racket of morning traffic, the drab quiet of Bloomsbury, or the cries of costermongers, is unimportant. It is true that there are certain literalisms in the score, such as the effect of a mouth-organ, the balletic tune of an old fiddler playing before a tavern; the street-cry, "Lavender, sweet lavender," these are merely incidental brush strokes. What makes the score eloquent to everyone who has or has not known London, is its fine philosophic gloom and the apostrophe to life as it passes in the noise and welter of a great pitiless city, while the Thames flows eternally by.

Big Ben tolls the hour. Technically, imaginatively, this symphony appears to us as one of the most important compositions by contemporaneous Englishmen.

POST-APR. 28.

INDIAN MUSIC AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Skilton Suite and Canons by Schumann Novelties

Two numbers from a "Suite Primeval," based on tribal Indian melodies, by Charles Sanford Skilton, born in Northampton and educated at Yale, were played for the first time in Boston at yesterday's Symphony concert. Mr Skilton has been teaching for 20 years at the University of Kansas. He obtained these themes from a student at a nearby school for Indians. He has used them in piano pieces, from which the orchestral version heard yesterday was rather too obviously evolved.

The theme of the "Flute Serenade," beautifully played by Mr Laurent, is distinctive and beautiful, though not well adapted to transplantation from prairie and wigwam to the concert hall. The "Moccasin Game" has also a striking rhythmic theme, which lent itself better to Mr Skilton's harmonization and orchestration. But why does anyone think that red Indian music has anything to do with present-day America? The audience liked both numbers, which were eloquently played.

The other novelty must have made sure that no living Parisian composer was left unrepresented on the Symphony programs. It was Theodore Dubois' orchestral version of three canons written by Schumann for a now obsolete instrument, the piano with pedals. These canons are fluent and not too labored treatments of the strict form. M Dubois, now 86, made the arrangement for orchestra 30 years ago. It lacks distinction.

Mr Monteux again played Vaughan Williams' "London Symphony," now become a repertory piece, seemingly deemed more worthy of biennial hearings than several of Beethoven's symphonies. The performance, like the music, was a bit stodgy.

Repeated hearings of this music fail to make it seem less diffuse or more intensely emotional than it did at first. Vaughan Williams had material here for a highly effective symphonic poem, to be played in not over 15 minutes. But the Symphony yesterday took 50 minutes in performance. The applause was not especially cordial.

The other number, Wagner's overture to "Rienzi," is the work of a man who, like Vaughan Williams, never knew [illegible]

Music News and Reviews

"A London Symphony" Again Heard in Boston

The program of the twenty-third concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, given in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, was:

Vaughan Williams, "A London Symphony"
Schumann, Three pieces in Canon form arranged for orchestra by Theodore Dubois
Skilton, Two movements from "Suite Primeval"
Wagner, Overture to "Rienzi"

Vaughan Williams' "A London Symphony" was welcome even after so short an interval since its last performance here. A work of this complexity needs frequent hearings before its real worth can be appreciated; and in this case the favorable impression created on its first performance here was greatly heightened and confirmed. This is music of the imagination and heart, music which stirs the emotions. Here there is no bandying about of motives for the sake of merely ingenious combinations. There is, of course, development in the musical sense of the term, but this development is always subservient to the underlying poetic thought. Mr. Monteux and the orchestra played with an even more complete understanding of the music than heretofore, and it would be difficult to conceive of a more finely balanced or carefully thought-out reading of this symphony than that of yesterday afternoon.

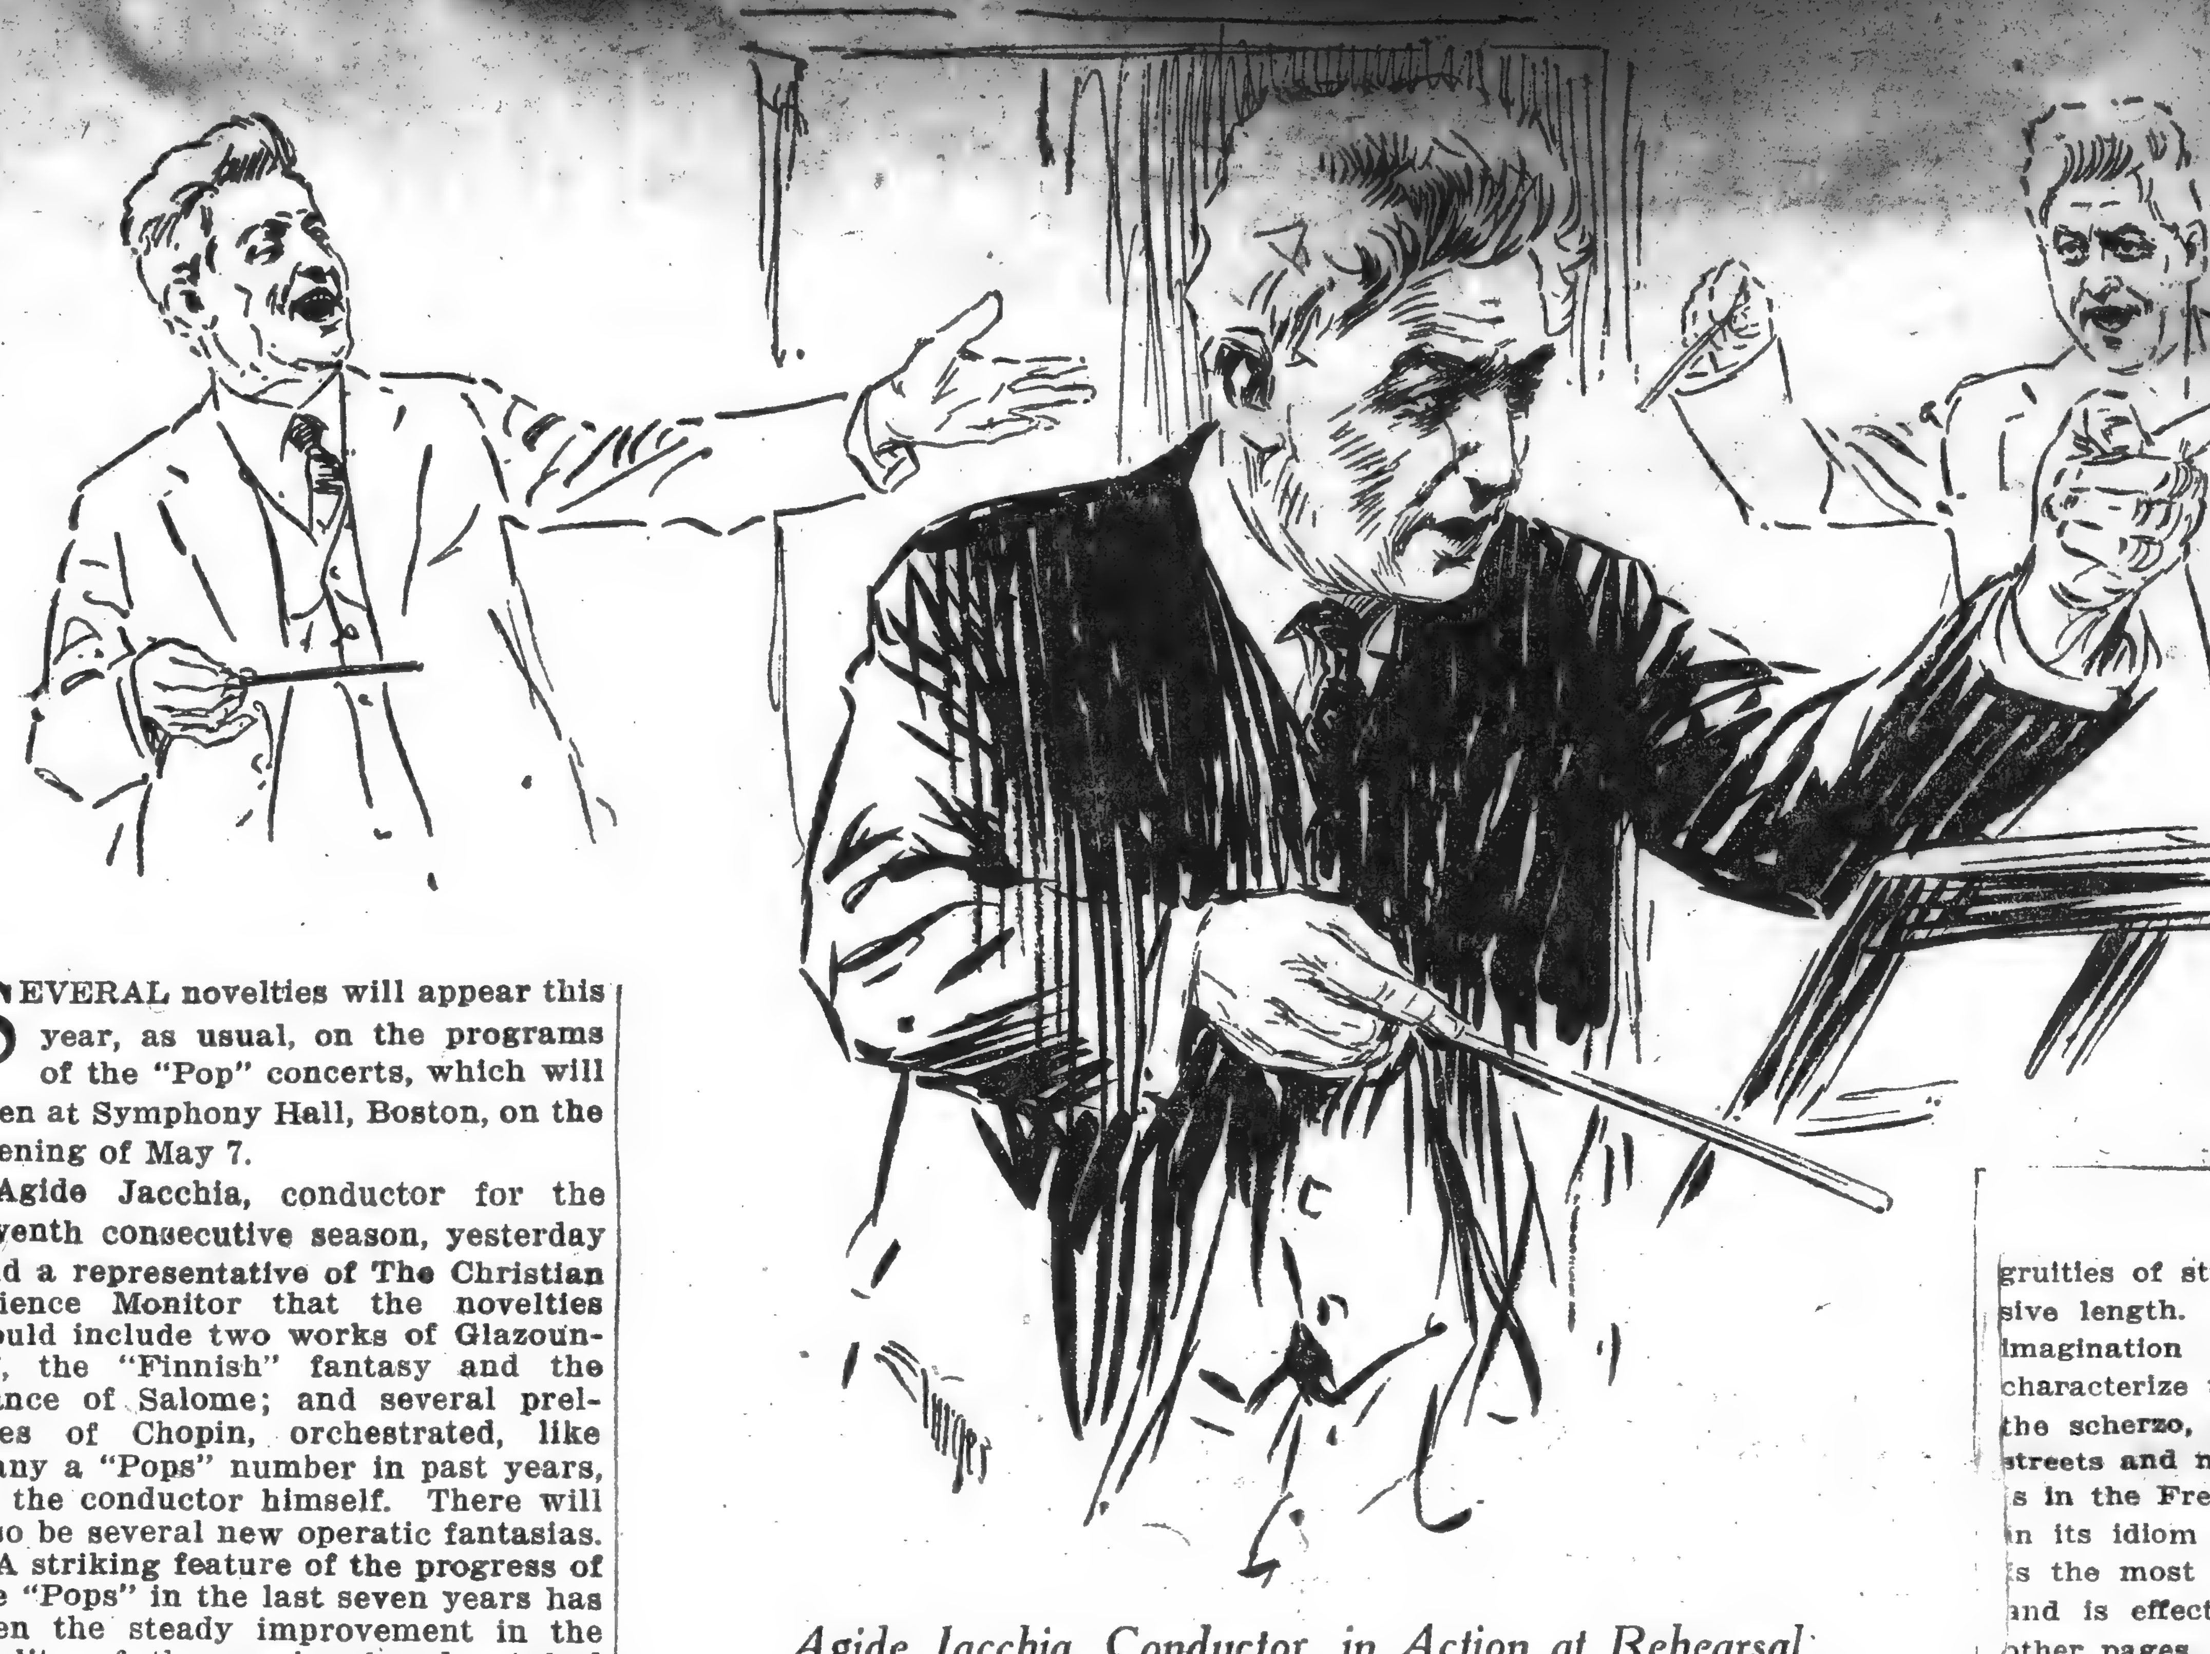
Skilton's two movements, based on Indian melodies, inevitably recall compositions of a similar character by Henry Gilbert, who has made this form of writing peculiarly his own, and it is impossible on hearing them to avoid comparisons. They are but pale reflections of Indian music as we have come to regard it through Gilbert's settings. Skilton's Indians are highly refined and civilized representatives of the race, and, although there is much clever use made of these tribal melodies, they lose a deal of their original barbaric coloring in the process. By including these movements in yesterday's program Mr. Monteux again gave evidence of his interest in music by American composers. These pieces are well worth hearing for their musical interest alone, regardless of the fact that they are a native product.

Schumann's three canons in Dubois' orchestral version are amiable music, useful for filling in a program. They are mildly interesting, never annoying and arouse a small degree of astonishment and wonder that so artificial a form as the canon may be made to express emotion even faintly. César Franck seems to have been the only composer who has been able to say anything worth saying in this form, although we believe that a modern French composer, Paul Dupin, has chosen to express himself canonically with some degree of success, according to foreign critics. His music is as yet unknown in Boston.

The overture to "Rienzi" was played unusually well. This overture may easily become bombastic. Mr. Monteux skillfully avoided this pitfall and gave it a nobility which it often lacks.

S. M.

Preparatory Pr[illegible] Perennial "Pops"



Agide Jacchia, Conductor, in Action at Rehearsal

SEVERAL novelties will appear this year, as usual, on the programs of the "Pop" concerts, which will open at Symphony Hall, Boston, on the evening of May 7.

Agide Jacchia, conductor for the seventh consecutive season, yesterday told a representative of The Christian Science Monitor that the novelties would include two works of Glazounoff, the "Finnish" fantasy and the Dance of Salome; and several preludes of Chopin, orchestrated, like many a "Pops" number in past years, by the conductor himself. There will also be several new operatic fantasias.

A striking feature of the progress of the "Pops" in the last seven years has been the steady improvement in the quality of the music played. Asked how this growth had come about, Mr. Jacchia replied:

"I have simply followed the musical development of the people who make up the audiences. When I first came here the programs had to be made up chiefly of marches, waltzes, and overtures. Gradually I was able to insert a better piece of music here and there, and, as musical taste improved, to raise the standard until only a few of the emptier pieces are left in the programs.

"Of course, I should prefer never to play worthless music. On the other hand, a popular program is not the place for experiments with the latest radical developments in the art. My aim is to build programs of standard works of proved value which are not only musically good, but beautiful as well. For I know lots of works which are musically good, but far from being beautiful. I also know some which are both bad and ugly. What we want for the 'Pops' programs is music that is both good and beautiful.

"And we are working toward that end. Nowadays I can include such works as the symphonic suite 'Schéhérazade,' by Rimsky-Korsakoff, for example, which is one of the most popular numbers. I also give a movement from a symphony now and then, and these too are well received. The excerpts from the great operatic composers answer all the requirements of popular concerts. Of these, of course, Wagner is the greatest, and I am glad to say that his music is now, in theatrical parlance, 'sure-fire stuff.' Eventually, I hope, we shall reach the point where nothing trashy will ever find place on our programs."

The orchestra of the "Pops" this year will consist, as usual, of 80 or 90 of the regular forces of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be but one radical departure from precedent, in the form of several Sunday evening concerts to meet the demand of people who find it difficult to attend during the week.

The "special" evenings, devoted to a particular organization or group of listeners, will be more numerous than ever this season, totaling 40 or more already.

MONITOR APR. 28

Many a composer has written mysterious music; Mr. Williams's in prelude and postlude is a rarer music of austere brooding. It has depths.

Between goes a manifold London—first in ardent rhythmical and melodic tumult. There is fall of hurrying feet, quick echo of whistling lips, flicks of the syncopation which is ragtime, flecks of coster-song, this note and that in urban din. Each slips into place within an elastic tonal fabric, within a graphic, unified impression of the stir of a city awake and in motion, of the diverse multitude peopling it, the exhilaration it quickens, the fascination it exerts, the affection it breeds. Universally, Mr. Williams evokes the zest of life and work in a multifarious and goading capital. It [illegible] new emotion, a new illusion for music. By detail he characterizes this illusion as the zest and the stir of London intrinsically homely, hearty, warm-spirited in tones. To this London of morning succeeds in a later division the London of night. There is distant din of the slum that will not be stilled, that must jerk out jigs, squeak at concertina and mouth-organ, snarl and guffaw, "bash" and wheedle. Again a web of detail weaves itself into a single vivid impression, both universal and individual. In the imagery, the voice, the color of the music are the confused murmur, the dull flare against the sky of a great town by night, when eye and ear look and listen remote. For the second time, a new evocation, a new illusion in music; yet more particularly a London so heard and seen. The flare fades; the sound settles into silence. In undercurrent the everlasting river pulses anew. Night as well as dawn may brood upon Mr. Williams's city. Again there are depths, as well as surfaces.

The London that stirs not has also touched Mr. Williams's imagination. Briefly as for the sake of contrast, he first stills for it the music of his bustling, zestful city. For the morning penetrates these quiet corners, lays a wistful glow upon them. Here gentleness hides, while tumult passes. By only a little does this intermezzo fall short of the magic of old, forgotten, far-off things. It is as though Mr. Williams—true Englishman—would not soften too much. Fearing sentimentality, he misses sentiment. Before it has quite charmed, the music blushes and strides away. He is less afear'd of the gray music of the gray quarters, where wintry dusks turn all things ghostly. For them neither the truculence of the slums nor the swirl of the busy streets. Decay haunts them; past has shrivelled into present; the world departed leaves them still and solitary. Every elder city has such neighborhoods. Again for the first time, symphonic music seems to sound the melancholy, the pity of them. The motiv that the horns finally swell into melody haunts as none other, outside the river-music, of Mr Williams's inventions. Once more he is universal, though he particularize with his fragment of "Sweet Lavender," his street-musician fiddling upon the viola.

Yet another London has measures in the music—measures that only a composer of this, our day, would write. For a while, before the postlude of the eternal river, the symphony rasps and jangles, moves to broken, distorted march-rhythms. Dissonances clash; the zestful motivs of the awakening city mock at themselves; the music thuds and grinds. Resentment, almost hate, cries in it. Those who know Mr. Williams's purpose say that therein the "under-dogs" of London, of any great city in this twentieth century, growl and tug. Alive to this time, shutting himself in no ivory tower of tone-poetry, with the English instinct, even in the arts, to face the facts, Mr. Williams has dared this music of social bitterness and feud. No wonder this "Hunger March," as the analysts call it, baffles hearers. They miss the intention. Novelists, playwrights, painters, sculptors may touch the issues of life in their hour and world, do touch them abundantly. But music, heavenly muse! doing likewise? Out upon such a fallen, bedraggled Euterpe! Yet as some like to believe with Mr. Williams and, may be, with Stravinsky, it is natural enough.

H. T. P.

TRANS. APR. 28.

"Home, Sweet Home" at Pops

In many parts of England concerts will be given on May 8 next to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the first performance of the most popular of all songs—"Home, Sweet Home." The principal observance in Boston will be at the Pop concert of that date in Symphony hall, which will be the second concert of the Pops season. Agide Jacchia has made a special arrangement of the famous melody for the occasion.

"Home, Sweet Home" had its first performance in 1823 as a number in the opera "Clari" by Sir Henry Rowley Bishop. The words were written by John Howard Payne, an American, and a resident of Boston, who likewise, it is said, suggested the tune to Bishop from a song which he had heard from a young peasant girl in Italy.

LAST SYMPHONY CONCERT

The last regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts of the season will be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, May 4 and 5, in Symphony hall.

The symphony, which will be the last number on the programme, will be that by Saint-Saens in C minor for orchestra with organ. Pierre Monteux will also conduct Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Chausson's "Soir de Fete," and the symphonic poem "Fountains of Rome" by Respighi, which was played and repeated at these concerts two seasons ago.

TRAV. APR. 28.

POPS' READY FOR 38th SEASON

The thrty-eighth season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall on Monday night, May 7, under the directorship of Agide Jacchia, who is to preside over the Pops Orchestra for the seventh successive season. Refreshments will be served at the tables and in the first balcony. An innovation will be Sunday night Pops, to be given on alternate Sundays beginning May 13. This concert will have a Russian-Tschaikovsky program.

For the Pops' opening on May 7, Agide Jacchia has made the following program:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz"	Weber
Waltz No.	Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Prelude, op. 28, No. 6	Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"	Waldtenfel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3	Tschaikovsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"	Jessel
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen"	Bizet

AMER. APR. 28

BRITISH MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

Williams' Long London Symphony Is Played

BY OLIN DOWNES

Vaughan Williams' "London Symphony" was played for the third time in this city at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. This symphony, at first a stumbling block to many, becomes more impressive, more evocative of mood, with each repetition.

SCHERZO VERY FRENCH

This is so[illegible]

gruities of style, and a perhaps excessive length. An unmistakably English imagination and a noble melancholy characterize the work as a whole, yet the scherzo, supposedly typical of the streets and markets of the South Side, is in the French manner. It is French in its idiom and technical method. It is the most formal of the movements and is effective, if less original than other pages, because of the fluent and effective treatment of a rhythmical figure. But here the composer, unawares, as it seems to us, speaks in the tone of other musicians whom he has admired and carefully studied.

These things do not weaken the symphony enough for it to lose its appeal to profound emotions. De Quincey did not write of the streets of London with more feeling than this English composer of today. Whether Mr. Williams is thinking of the racket of morning traffic, the drab quiet of Bloomsbury, or the cries of costermongers, is unimportant. It is true that there are certain literalisms in the score, such as the effect of a mouth-organ, the balletic tune of an old fiddler playing before a tavern; the street-cry, "Lavender, sweet lavender," these are merely incidental brush strokes. What makes the score eloquent to everyone who has or has not known London, is its fine philosophic gloom and the apostrophe to life as it passes in the noise and welter of a great pitiless city, while the Thames flows eternally by.

Big Ben tolls the hour. Technically, imaginatively, this symphony appears to us as one of the most important compositions by contemporaneous Englishmen.

POST-APR. 28.

INDIAN MUSIC AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Skilton Suite and Canons by Schumann Novelties

Two numbers from a "Suite Primeval," based on tribal Indian melodies, by Charles Sanford Skilton, born in Northampton and educated at Yale, were played for the first time in Boston at yesterday's Symphony concert. Mr Skilton has been teaching for 20 years at the University of Kansas. He obtained these themes from a student at a nearby school for Indians. He has used them in piano pieces, from which the orchestral version heard yesterday was rather too obviously evolved.

The theme of the "Flute Serenade," beautifully played by Mr Laurent, is distinctive and beautiful, though not well adapted to transplantation from prairie and wigwam to the concert hall. The "Moccasin Game" has also a striking rhythmic theme, which lent itself better to Mr Skilton's harmonization and orchestration. But why does anyone think that red Indian music has anything to do with present-day America? The audience liked both numbers, which were eloquently played.

The other novelty must have made sure that no living Parisian composer was left unrepresented on the Symphony programs. It was Theodore Dubois' orchestral version of three canons written by Schumann for a now obsolete instrument, the piano with pedals. These canons are fluent and not too labored treatments of the strict form. M Dubois, now 86, made the arrangement for orchestra 30 years ago. It lacks distinction.

Mr Monteux again played Vaughan Williams' "London Symphony," now become a repertory piece, seemingly deemed more worthy of biennial hearings than several of Beethoven's symphonies. The performance, like the music, was a bit stodgy.

Repeated hearings of this music fail to make it seem less diffuse or more intensely emotional than it did at first. Vaughan Williams had material here for a highly effective symphonic poem, to be played in not over 15 minutes. But the Symphony yesterday took 50 minutes in performance. The applause was not especially cordial.

The other number, Wagner's overture to "Rienzi," is the work of a man who, like Vaughan Williams, never knew [illegible]. But although Wagner's [illegible] may prove emotionally [illegible]

[96]

hausting they do not often act as a soporific. This overture is naively dramatic. The composer is obviously thrilled like a child with a new toy over the sonorous brass chords, which were in 1840 a novelty. One of its themes is far more childish than Haydn; another, that of Rienzi's prayer, is a ...ble forecast of the later Wagner. Mr. ...teux and the orchestra gave an ef... performance, though inferior to that they gave a recent Pension Fund concert.

The final program of the season, next week, will begin with Bethoven's "Leonore No. 3" overture, and include a novelty from the late Chausson, called "Soir de Fete," opus 30; Respighi's "Fountains of Rome," and Saint-Saens' C minor symphony, with organ.

GLOBE APR. 28.

SYMPHONY PLAYS INDIAN MELODIES

Herald
Apr 28

Orchestra Gives 23d Concert—Season Closes Next Week

By PHILIP HALE

The 23d concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteaux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The program was as follows: Vaughan Williams, A London Symphony; Schumann-Dubois, Three Pieces in Canon Form (first time at these concerts, if not in Boston); Skilton, "Flute Serenade" and "Moccasin Game" from the "Suite Primeval" on tribal Indian melodies (first time in Boston); Wagner, overture to "Rienzi."

Charles Sanford Skilton, born at Northampton in 1868, after graduation from Yale, studied music in Berlin and New York. In 1903 he went to Lawrence, Kan., where he is professor of the organ, theory and history of music at the State University of Kansas. As he was near Haskell Institute, he became interested in the music of the North American Indians. Tribal melodies were given to him by the Indian students. He has written a Deer Dance, a War Dance and this "Suite Primeval."

The solo flute melody, at the beginning of the Serenade, beautifully played by Mr. Laurent, is traditional among the Sioux. Now, the "wooing flute" is not confined to the North American Indian; it is found all over the world. The "Moccasin Game" melody came from a Winnebago Indian.

Mr. Skilton has utilized these Indian themes in an appropriately simple manner. Although he has ornamented the flute theme with thrills and flourishes, his treatment is not too sophisticated. He has written frankly and effectively, without disturbing ethnological purpose or parade, nor does he insist that this music is distinctively "Amu-Ur-ican," in which respect he is wiser than some of his fellow laborers in the North American vineyard. We should like to hear music from Mr. Skilton for which he has invented his own themes.

Schumann, wishing to be contrapuntal, whereas his genius was lyrical, shown chiefly in his songs and piano pieces, whereas in his larger compositions he was often ill at ease, wrote Six Studies and Four Sketches in canon form for the pedal piano. The pedalier is a fearsome instrument, but useful to the student of the organ. Nevertheless more elaborate pieces than Schumann's have been composed for it. Witness Gounod, who in his later but still emotional years, fell in with Lucie Palicot, a woman of indisputable temperament. For her Gounod wrote two or three pieces for the pedalier with orchestra. (Mme. Palicot visited Boston in 1898 and thundered away on the rough-toned instrument in Music hall.)

Dubois orchestrated four of Schuman's Canons 30 years or so ago, and orchestrated them deftly, especially the one in B minor, in which Mr. Laus made sport with his bassoon in a delightful manner. The Canons are eminently Schumannesque in their wistfulness, fancy and tender melancholy.

Vaughan Williams's "London" Symphony again made a deep impression. It is doubtful whether without the title and the descriptive program a hearer, as the music was playing, would say, "Aha! London, I hear the Thames, the roar and bustle of the streets. Now we are in foggy, dismal Bloomsbury. Let's go to the Thames Embankment. And now we see the march of the unemployed." No. The austere, remote Delius wrote a symphonic poem "Paris," which is anything but the Paris of

"Louise,
or Terre
A crit
Williams
phony a
of "Ha
"We'll popular
of 1897. liberately
The Sy worth, T richest
erful ex
London
the contr
phonicall
matic. T
cellent e
seems to ments la
oring. Th employed called for is of a hi
the whole contribut
of the m
not been
The perfo
perb orch
Wagner
—which beer—bro
"The co
The prog
the last c
lows, "B
nore," N
(first tim
Fountain
Symphon

POP CONCERTS TO BEGIN SOON

On Monday night, May 7th, the 38th season of Pop concerts will open in Symphony hall under the directorship of Agide Jacchia, who is to preside over the Pop's orchestra for the seventh successive season. As usual there will be added to the enjoyment of popular programs by the splendid symphony orchestra refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony. An innovation will be Sunday night pops, to be given on alternate Sundays beginning May 13th. This concert will have a Russian-Tschaikovsky program.

For the Pop's opening on May 7th, Agide Jacchia has made this program:

1, Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; 2, Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; 3, Waltz No 5, Brahms-Gericke; 4, Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; 5, Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; 6, Prelude op. 28 No. 6, Chopin; 7, Waltz, "Espana," Waldtenfal; 8, Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tschaikovsky; 9, Suite "Peer Gynt," Grieg; 10, "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; 11, Gypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet.

TELEGRAM APR. 28

LAST SYMPHONY

At the last Symphony concerts of the season, next Friday and Saturday, the program will include Saint-Saens' symphony in C minor, Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Chausson's "Soir de Fete" and Respighi's symphonic poem, "Fountains of Rome."

ADVISR. APR 29.

POP CONCERTS TO BEGIN NEXT WEEK

A week from tomorrow night the 38th season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall. An innovation will be Sunday night pop concerts, beginning May 13, with a Russian program. Agide Jacchia will again be the Pops' Conductor. His opening program follows:

Introduction to act 3 "Lohengrin" Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz"......Weber
Waltz No. 5.............Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"......Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody........Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6..............Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"..............Waldtenfel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3...Tchaikovsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"....................Grieg
"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"..Jessel
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen"......Bizet

ADVISR. APR 29.

Last Symphony Programme

The last regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts of the season will be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall.

The symphony, which will be the last number on the programme, will be that by Saint-Saens in C minor for orchestra with organ. Pierre Monteux will also conduct Beethoven's ...ure to "Leonore" No. 3, Chauss... de Fete" and the symphonic ... tains of Rome" by Respi... played and repeated two

POPS' OPENING

A week from tomorrow, Monday evening, May 7, the 38th season of Pops Concerts will open in Symphony Hall. A large symphony orchestra will provide popular programmes every night, with the usual additional attraction of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony.

This is worth while noting, for it bears on one of the moot points of musical composition in America. Can really American music be derived from Indian, Negro or other folk-themes of the land? The answer depends entirely on the nature and imagination of the composer. If these things stir in him something that is himself, if they reveal to him vistas which his own spirit may traverse, the result will be vital, significant music. But from the mere exhuming, arranging, translating, so to speak, of Indian or any other folk-melodies into our own musical tongue, no important or creative art can appear.

POST - APR. 29.

Friday at 2:30 and Saturday at 8:15, Boston Symphony Orchestra, 24th and final program. Overture "Leonore No. 3," Beethoven; "Soir de Fete," Chausson; "Fountains of Rome," Respighi; Third Symphony, with organ, Saint-Saens. There will be no soloist.

The centenary of "Home, Sweet Home" is to be celebrated at the Pops May 8 by the performance of a specially prepared orchestral arrangement made by Agide Jacchia.

GLOBE - APR. 29.

The annual series of "Pop Concerts" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin at Symphony Hall on Monday evening, May 7, with Mr. Jacchia again conducting.

At its twenty-third concert the Boston Symphony Orchestra played Vaughan Williams's "London Symphony," two movements from Skilton's "Suite Primeval," on tribal Indian melodies, and Theodore Dubois's arrangement for orchestra of four pieces by Schumann in the form of canon.

NY. TIMES. APR. 29

They are getting famously forward in Boston. Mr. Burgin plays Beethoven's violin concerto with the Boston Orchestra, and H. T. P. in The Transcript says that the concerto had "forunately been laid to rest through four years at these concerts." Mr. Burgin "infused no semblance of emotion into a music intrinsically emotionless; with the composer and with the violinist for whom it was written, he courted the flowing elegance which is substitute. A more faithful, a more just performance of the concerto, alike by violinist, conductor and orchestra, were hard to imagine. Therewith all three stopped and, so stopping, left the music naked to the ear as displayful virtuoso-piece into which passing years and changing fashions clearly bite. There are pretty tunes in the concerto, through the first and the second divisions; ornate measures enticing to audience as well as fiddler. There are also stretches of 'passage-work' long since worn thread-bare and stretches also of dull repetition for which 'orthodox form' is label rather than excuse."

NY. TIMES - APR. 29.

"Home Sweet Home" will be 100 years old in May. Mme. ... will sing it "as arranged by Patti" tonight in Symphony hall. At the Pop concert of May 8 Mr. Jacchia's arrangement of the tune will be played.

POPS OPENING

On Monday evening, May 7, the 38th season of Pops concerts will open in Symphony hall. A large orchestra will provide popular programs every night, with the usual additional attractions of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony.

An innovation will be Sunday night Pop concerts, to be given on alternate Sundays beginning May 13. This first Sunday Pop concert will have a Russian-Tschaikovsky program.

Agide Jacchia will again be the Pops' conductor. This will be his seventh season at this post. He has devoted the larger part of his career to the conducting of opera, in which field he was eminent in his native Italy before he came to this country. He conducted several opera companies in the United States, particularly the Century Theater opera in New York and the Boston National opera company. At the head of the Pops he has given a new importance to their musical aspect, and also made them more popular than ever before.

Mr. Jacchia's opening program, which will mingle old Pops favorites with numbers to be heard for the first time at the Pops, follows:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischuetz".....Weber
Waltz No. 5..............Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda".......Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody........Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6..............Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"..................Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3..Tchaikovsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"....................Greig
"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"...Jessel
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen"........Bizet

Comicalities

IT is enjoyable—and also lawful—to smoke at the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings. It is enjoyable—but also unlawful—to smoke at the same concerts, in the same room, on Sunday evening. It is enjoyable—and also lawful—to eat and to drink at The Pops from Monday through Saturday. Yet on Sunday evening such carnality is "banned" by the law. That is to say, the audiences at the projected Sunday Pops may only prop their elbows on the tables—and stop, look, listen. Graciously, however, the law permits conversation at public entertainments on the first day of the week. In hotels, it also permits eating, drinking and smoking to the sound of music. Only in the concert-hall is indulgence in these vices then prohibited. So has ruled the head of the State Department of Public Safetly. The Sunday Pops have only to hear and obey. There is no explanation. There are many morals.

H. T. P.

TRANS. APR. 30.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
TIMES
ISSUE OF
APR 7 1923

Music Events

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

The program of the last of the series of five philharmonic concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last night was finely balanced and varied, and certainly must have left its large audience in a high state of anticipation for the return of the orchestra next season.

Outstanding on the program was Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony which the orchestra under direction of pierre Monteaux, played excellently, lending to it all the plaintive and pathetic qualities of this great composition. None of its pale colorings were lost in the rendition.

The remainder of the program comprised the "Ballad of the Gnomides," by Respighi in which all the weird and unearthly music of the composition was preserved by the orchestra; the overture from Wagner's "Rienze," and Schumann's concerto for violincello with orchestral accompaniment, in A minor, Op. 129. In this latter selection Pablo Casals, soloists, played the cello parts with a rare and exquisite sense of the beauty of it, and the imagination of the true artist. Despite a long and enthusiastic demonstration he played no encore.

All the vitality of Wagner's music in the overture to "Rienzi," was in the splendid rendition by Monteaux. The difficulties usually found in the Wagner music were coped with successfully and with ease and great virility.

This orchestra could not have bid farewell to Brooklyn with a more interesting and delightful program.

LAST SYMPHONY

The last Boston Symphony concerts of the season will be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony hall.

The symphony, which will be the last number on the program, will be Saint-Saens's in C minor for orchestra with organ. Mr. Monteux will also conduct Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Chausson's "Soir de Fete," and the symphonic poem "Fountains of Rome" by Respighi, which was played and repeated two seasons ago. Chausson's symphonic poem will be performed for the first time in America.

POPS AND "HOME, SWEET HOME"

In many parts of England concerts will be given on May 8 to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the first performance of the most popular of all songs, "Home, Sweet Home." The principal observance in Boston will be at the Pop Concert of that date in Symphony hall, which will be the second concert of the Pops season. Agide Jacchia has made a special arrangement of the famous melody for the occasion.

T); AGIDE JACCHIA, WHO WILL AGA

HERALD - APR. 29.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
CITIZEN
ISSUE OF
APR 7 1923

PABLO CASELS SOLOIST WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

This season's last visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Brooklyn was marked by an excellent program at the Academy of Music last evening. Pablo Casels was the soloist, playing Schumann's Concerto in A minor, Op. 129, for violoncello and orchestra. Mr. Casels played with rare beauty of tone to the entire satisfaction of the large audience present.

The remainder of the program included: Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique," Tschiarkowsky; "Ballard of the Gnomides," Respighi, and the overture to "Rienzi," Wagner. Mr. Monteux and his players, were at their best in the always welcome "Pathetique," their rendition of which was invested with strong feeling, and much dramatic power. This number was received with grateful appreciation.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
APR 7 1923

Boston Symphony Farewell

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its fifth and last of this season's concerts in Brooklyn under Institute auspices, at the Academy of Music, last night. The programme held as opening number the only Tschaikowsky work played on the 1922-23 Boston programmes here, namely, the "Pathetique Symphony." Other numbers were Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," Schumann's A minor violoncello concerto (opus 129), with Pablo Casals as soloist, and Wagner's "Rienzi" overture. The audience was large, and, as usual at these concerts, conservative with its applause.

Mr. Monteux's reading of the "Pathetique" must take a place definitely among the outstanding versions of Tschaikowsky's inspired and inspiring work. It was a sincere and deeply musical version, free from the taint of emotional sensationalism, therefore standing out in magnificent contrast to Mr. Mengelberg's distorted interpretation of the same symphony heard recently at a Brooklyn concert by the Philharmonic forces.

Resphigi's "Gnomides" (introduced here by Toscanini a few seasons ago) is a musical painting in bold drawing of early Florentinism, colored with harmonic freedom and instrumental unconstraint. A representative work of Italy's new symphonic school, tepid applause followed last night's hearing, despite vivid performance.

Mr. Casals, than whom amongst the world's masters of 'cello playing none is greater, accomplished the feat of making Schumann's old bone-dry concerto sound interesting. "Rienzi," as closing number, challenged and almost put to rout the negative acoustical condition of the auditorium, a condition which has ever made difficult brilliant orchestral performances in the Academy's opera house.

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
TRIBUNE
ISSUE OF
APR 8 1923

CLOSING SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The final Boston Symphony concert of the Providence season will take place in Infantry Hall next Tuesday evening, April 10, at 8:15. The soloist will be Harold Bauer, who is looked upon as one of the very greatest of living pianists. Especially celebrated as an interpreter of the music of Beethoven, he will appear at this concert in th egreat "Emperor" concerto, No. 5, by this master, which is certainly the mightiest concerto ever written and is equal to his symphonies in conception and importance.

The larger part of the program, however, will be occupied by the "Pathetic" Symphony of Tchaikovsky, No. 6, in B minor, which is looked upon as the masterpiece of this composer. It has often been remarked that no other single musical work nor, indeed, any artistic creation, voices the temperament and emotional characteristics of a great people as does this. The haunting quality of Tchaikovsky's melodies in this score, the charm of the movement in the rhythm of five beats, the "March" movement, in which ephemeral pomp sinks into dissolution, and the last movement a penetrating lament which probes into the lowest depths of the tonal register—these qualities make the "Pathetic" Symphony unique in the whole record of musical achievement.

The concert and the season will close with Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, the composer of which has just made his first visit to this country and appeared as guest conductor with this orchestra.

rom APR 8 1923
OURNAL
Providence, R. I.

Harold Bauer with Symphony

Beethoven's "Emperor" concerto No. 5 which Harold Bauer, the pianist, will play with the Boston Symphony next Tuesday night in Infantry Hall, is considered by many, one of the finest concertos ever written. In it Mr. Bauer is said to display his interpretative genius at its heights.

Another work of stupendous power is Tschaikowski's sixth symphony, the famous "Pathetic," with which Mr. Monteux will open his programme. Perhaps more than any other score, this symphony has brought the Russian music and temperament to the attention and sympathy of the western world. The pages of this remarkable work voice the suffering of the Russian people, their aspirations and disillusions. The plaintive and haunting quality of the melodious themes, the lowest depths of instrumental tone which the composer probes, indelibly impressed the symphony upon the world when it was composed, and in the years from that time to this it has held its place of eminence as an individual and distinctive artistic creation. The number which will close the concert is Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, the composer of which has just made his first visit to this country and appeared as guest conductor with the orchestra.

This concert concludes the Boston Symphony's Providence series for the season. Last week Mr. Monteux's players wound up their season of evening concerts in New York with a programme numbering Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Schumann's 'cello concerto, Debussy's orchestral suite "Printemps" and Wagner's "Rienzi." Pablo Casals was the soloist. The Bostonians farewelled in Brooklyn Friday night and in New York at a matinee yesterday. It marked the end of the orchestra's 37th season in New York.

[97]

hausting, they do not often act as a soporific. This overture is naively dramatic. The composer is obviously thrilled like a child with a new toy over the sonorous brass chords, which were in 1840 a novelty. One of its themes is far more childish than Haydn; another, that of Rienzi's prayer, is a feeble forecast of the later Wagner. Mr. Monteux and the orchestra gave an effective performance, though inferior to that they gave a recent Pension Fund concert.

The final program of the season, next week, will begin with Bethoven's "Leonore No. 3" overture, and include a novelty from the late Chausson, called "Soir de Fete," opus 30; Respighi's "Fountains of Rome," and Saint-Saens' C minor symphony, with organ.

GLOBE APR. 28

SYMPHONY PLAYS INDIAN MELODIES

Orchestra Gives 23d Concert—Season Closes Next Week

By PHILIP HALE

The 23d concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Monteaux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The program was as follows: Vaughan Williams, A London Symphony; Schumann-Dubois, Three Pieces in Canon Form (first time at these concerts, if not in Boston); Skilton, "Flute Serenade" and "Moccasin Game" from the "Suite Primeval" on tribal Indian melodies (first time in Boston); Wagner, overture to "Rienzi."

Charles Sanford Skilton, born at Northampton in 1868, after graduation from Yale, studied music in Berlin and New York. In 1903 he went to Lawrence, Kan., where he is professor of the organ, theory and history of music at the State University of Kansas. As he was near Haskell Institute, he became interested in the music of the North American Indians. Tribal melodies were given to him by the Indian students. He has written a Deer Dance, a War Dance and this "Suite Primeval."

The solo flute melody, at the beginning of the Serenade, beautifully played by Mr. Laurent, is traditional among the Sioux. Now, the "wooing flute" is not confined to the North American Indian; it is found all over the world. The "Moccasin Game" melody came from a Winnebago Indian.

Mr. Skilton has utilized these Indian themes in an appropriately simple manner. Although he has ornamented the flute theme with thrills and flourishes, his treatment is not too sophisticated. He has written frankly and effectively, without disturbing ethnological purpose or parade, nor does he insist that this music is distinctively "Amu-r-ican," in which respect he is wiser than some of his fellow laborers in the North American vineyard. We should like to hear music from Mr. Skilton for which he has invented his own themes.

Schumann, wishing to be contrapuntal, whereas his genius was lyrical, shown chiefly in his songs and piano pieces, whereas in his larger compositions he was often ill at ease, wrote Six Studies and Four Sketches in canon form for the pedal piano. The pedalier is a fearsome instrument, but useful to the student of the organ. Nevertheless more elaborate pieces than Schumann's have been composed for it. Witness Gounod, who in his later but still emotional years, fell in with Lucie Palicot, a woman of indisputable temperament. For her Gounod wrote two or three pieces for the pedalier with orchestra. (Mme. Palicot visited Boston in 1898 and thundered away on the rough-toned instrument in Music hall.)

Dubois orchestrated four of Schuman's Canons 30 years or so ago, and orchestrated them deftly, especially the one in B minor, in which Mr. Laus made sport with his bassoon in a delightful manner. The Canons are eminently Schumannesque in their wistfulness, fancy and tender melancholy.

Vaughan Williams's "London" Symphony again made a deep impression. It is doubtful whether without the title and the descriptive program a hearer, as the music was playing, would say, "Aha! London, I hear the Thames, the roar and bustle of the streets. Now we are in foggy, dismal Bloomsbury. Let's go to the Thames Embankment. And now we see the march of the unemployed." No. The austere, remote Delius wrote a symphonic poem "Paris," which is anything but the Paris of

"Louise, or Terre
A criti
Williams
phony a
of "Hay
"We'll popular
of 1897. liberately
The Sy worth. T richest
erful ex
London
the contr
phonicall
matic. T
cellent e
seems to ments la
oring. Th employed called for is of a hi
the whole contribut
of the m
not been
The perfo
perb orch
Wagner
—which heer—bro
"The co
The prog
the last c
lows. "Be nore." N
(first tim
Fountain
Symphon

POP CONCERTS TO BEGIN SOON

On Monday night, May 7th, the 38th season of Pop concerts will open in Symphony hall under the directorship of Agide Jacchia, who is to preside over the Pop's orchestra for the seventh successive season. As usual there will be added to the enjoyment of popular programs by the splendid symphony orchestra refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony. An innovation will be Sunday night pops, to be given on alternate Sundays beginning May 13th. This concert will have a Russian-Tschaikovsky program.

For the Pop's opening on May 7th, Agide Jacchia has made this program:

1, Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; 2, Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; 3, Waltz No 5, Brahms-Gericke; 4, Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; 5, Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; 6, Prelude op. 28 No. 6, Chopin; 7, Waltz, "Espana," Waldtenfal; 8, Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tschaikovsky; 9, Suite "Peer Gynt," Grieg; 10, "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; 11, Gypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet.

TELEGRAM APR. 28

LAST SYMPHONY

At the last Symphony concerts of the season, next Friday and Saturday, the program will include Saint-Saens' symphony in C minor, Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Chausson's "Soir de Fete" and Respighi's symphonic poem, "Fountains of Rome."

ADVTSR. APR. 29.

POP CONCERTS TO BEGIN NEXT WEEK

A week from tomorrow night the 38th season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall. An innovation will be Sunday night pop concerts, beginning May 13, with a Russian program. Agide Jacchia will again be the Pops' Conductor. His opening program follows:

Introduction to act 3 "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz"	Weber
Waltz No. 5	Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6	Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"	Waldtenfel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3	Tchaikovsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"	Jessel
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen"	Bizet

ADVTSR. APR. 29.

Last Symphony Programme

The last regular pair of Boston Symphony concerts of the season will be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall.

The symphony, which will be the last number on the programme, will be that by Saint-Saens in C minor for orchestra with organ. Pierre Monteux will also conduct Beethoven's re to "Leonore" No. 3, Chauss de Fete" and the symphonic tains of Rome" by Respi played and repeated two

POPS' OPENING

A week from tomorrow, Monday evening, May 7, the 38th season of Pops Concerts will open in Symphony Hall. A large symphony orchestra will provide popular programmes every night, with the usual additional attraction of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony.

This is worth while noting, for it bears on one of the moot points of musical composition in America. Can really American music be derived from Indian, Negro or other folk-themes of the land? The answer depends entirely on the nature and imagination of the composer. If these things stir in him something that is himself, if they reveal to him vistas which his own spirit may traverse, the result will be vital, significant music. But from the mere exhuming, arranging, translating, so to speak, of Indian or any other folk-melodies into our own musical tongue, no important or creative art can appear.

POST-APR. 29.

Friday at 2:30 and Saturday at 8:15, Boston Symphony Orchestra, 24th and final program. Overture "Leonore No. 3," Beethoven; "Soir de Fete," Chausson; "Fountains of Rome," Respighi; Third Symphony, with organ, Saint-Saens. There will be no soloist.

The centenary of 'Home, Sweet Home" is to be celebrated at the Pops May 8 by the performance of a specially prepared orchestral arrangement made by Agide Jacchia.

GLOBE-APR. 29.

The annual series of "Pop Concerts" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin at Symphony Hall on Monday evening, May 7, with Mr. Jacchia again conducting.

At its twenty-third concert the Boston Symphony Orchestra played Vaughan Williams's "London Symphony," two movements from Skilton's "Suite Primeval," on tribal Indian melodies, and Theodore Dubois's arrangement for orchestra of four pieces by Schumann in the form of canon.

N.Y. TIMES. APR. 29

They are getting famously forward in Boston. Mr. Burgin plays Beethoven's violin concerto with the Boston Orchestra, and H. T. P. in The Transcript says that the concerto had "forunately been laid to rest through four years at these concerts." Mr. Burgin "infused no semblance of emotion into a music intrinsically emotionless; with the composer and with the violinist for whom it was written, he courted the flowing elegance which is substitute. A more faithful, a more just performance of the concerto, alike by violinist, conductor and orchestra, were hard to imagine. Therewith all three stopped and, so stopping, left the music naked to the ear as displayful virtuoso-piece into which passing years and changing fashions clearly bite. There are pretty tunes in the concerto, through the first and the second divisions; ornate measures enticing to audience as well as fiddler. There are also stretches of 'passage-work' long since worn thread-bare and stretches also of dull repetition for which 'orthodox form' is label rather than excuse."

N.Y. TIMES-APR. 29.

"Home Sweet Home" will be 100 years old in May. Mme. Melius will sing it "as arranged by Patti" tonight in Symphony hall. At the Pop concert of May 8 Mr. Jacchia's arrangement of the tune will be played.

POPS OPENING

On Monday evening, May 7, the 38th season of Pops concerts will open in Symphony hall. A large orchestra will provide popular programs every night, with the usual additional attractions of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony.

An innovation will be Sunday night Pop concerts, to be given on alternate Sundays beginning May 13. This first Sunday Pop concert will have a Russian-Tschaikovsky program.

Agide Jacchia will again be the Pops' conductor. This will be his seventh season at this post. He has devoted the larger part of his career to the conducting of opera, in which field he was eminent in his native Italy before he came to this country. He conducted several opera companies in the United States, particularly the Century Theater opera in New York and the Boston National opera company. At the head of the Pops he has given a new importance to their musical aspect, and also made them more popular than ever before.

Mr. Jacchia's opening program, which will mingle old Pops favorites with numbers to be heard for the first time at the Pops, follows:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischuetz"	Weber
Waltz No. 5	Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhaspody	Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6	Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"	Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3	Tchaikovsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"	Greig
"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"	Jessel
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen"	Bizet

Comicalities

IT is enjoyable—and also lawful—to smoke at the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings. It is enjoyable—but also unlawful—to smoke at the same concerts, in the same room, on Sunday evening. It is enjoyable—and also lawful—to eat and to drink at The Pops from Monday through Saturday. Yet on Sunday evening such carnality is "banned" by the law. That is to say, the audiences at the projected Sunday Pops may only prop their elbows on the tables—and stop, look, listen. Graciously, however, the law permits conversation at public entertainments on the first day of the week. In hotels, it also permits eating, drinking and smoking to the sound of music. Only in the concert-hall is indulgence in these vices then prohibited. So has ruled the head of the State Department of Public Safetly. The Sunday Pops have only to hear and obey. There is no explanation. There are many morals.

H. T. P.

TRANS. APR. 30.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
TIMES
ISSUE OF
APR 7 1923

Music Events

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

The program of the last of the series of five philharmonic concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last night was finely balanced and varied, and certainly must have left its large audience in a high state of anticipation for the return of the orchestra next season.

Outstanding on the program was Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony which the orchestra under direction of pierre Monteaux, played excellently, lending to it all the plaintive and pathetic qualities of this great composition. None of its pale colorings were lost in the rendition.

The remainder of the program comprised the "Ballad of the Gnomides," by Respighi in which all the weird and unearthly music of the composition was preserved by the orchestra; the overture from Wagner's "Rienze," and Schumann's concerto for violincello with orchestral accompaniment, in A minor, Op. 129. In this latter selection Pablo Casals, soloists, played the cello parts with a rare and exquisite sense of the beauty of it, and the imagination of the true artist. Despite a long and enthusiastic demonstration he played no encore.

All the vitality of Wagner's music in the overture to "Rienzi," was in the splendid rendition by Monteaux. The difficulties usually found in the Wagner music were coped with successfully and with ease and great virility.

This orchestra could not have bid farewell to Brooklyn with a more interesting and delightful program.

LAST SYMPHONY

The last Boston Symphony concerts of the season will be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony hall.

The symphony, which will be the last number on the program, will be Saint-Saens's in C minor for orchestra with organ. Mr. Monteux will also conduct Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Chausson's "Soir de Fete," and the symphonic poem "Fountains of Rome" by Respighi, which was played and repeated two seasons ago. Chausson's symphonic poem will be performed for the first time in America.

POPS AND "HOME, SWEET HOME"

In many parts of England concerts will be given on May 8 to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the first performance of the most popular of all songs, "Home, Sweet Home." The principal observance in Boston will be at the Pop Concert of that date in Symphony hall, which will be the second concert of the Pops season. Agide Jacchia has made a special arrangement of the famous melody for the occasion.

HERALD-APR. 29.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
CITIZEN
ISSUE OF
APR 7 1923

PABLO CASELS SOLOIST WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

This season's last visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Brooklyn was marked by an excellent program at the Academy of Music last evening. Pablo Casels was the soloist, playing Schumann's Concerto in A minor, Op. 129, for violoncello and orchestra. Mr. Casels played with rare beauty of tone to the entire satisfaction of the large audience present.

The remainder of the program included: Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique," Tschiarkowsky; "Ballard of the Gnomides," Respighi, and the overture to "Rienzi," Wagner. Mr. Monteux and his players, were at their best in the always welcome "Pathetique," their rendition of which was invested with strong feeling, and much dramatic power. This number was received with grateful appreciation.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
STANDARD UNION
ISSUE OF
APR 7 1923

Boston Symphony Farewell

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its fifth and last of this season's concerts in Brooklyn under Institute auspices, at the Academy of Music, last night. The programme held as opening number the only Tschaikowsky work played on the 1922-23 Boston programmes here, namely, the 'Pathetique Symphony." Other numbers were Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides," Schumann's A minor violoncello concerto (opus 129), with Pablo Casals as soloist, and Wagner's "Rienzi" overture. The audience was large, and, as usual at these concerts, conservative with its applause.

Mr. Monteux's reading of the "Pathetique" must take a place definitely among the outstanding versions of Tschaikowsky's inspired and inspiring work. It was a sincere and deeply musical version, free from the taint of emotional sensationalism, therefore standing out in magnificent contrast to Mr. Mengelberg's distorted interpretation of the same symphony heard recently at a Brooklyn concert by the Philharmonic forces.

Resphigi's "Gnomides" (introduced here by Toscanini a few seasons ago) is a musical painting in bold drawing of early Florentinism, colored with harmonic freedom and instrumental unconstraint. A representative work of Italy's new symphonic school, tepid applause followed last night's hearing, despite vivid performance.

Mr. Casals, than whom amongst the world's masters of 'cello playing none is greater, accomplished the feat of making Schumann's old boney dry concerto sound interesting. "Rienzi," as closing number, challenged and almost put to rout the negative acoustical condition of the auditorium, a condition which has ever made difficult brilliant orchestral performances in the Academy's opera house.

T); AGIDE JACCHIA, WHO WILL AGAI

PROVIDENCE
R. I.
TRIBUNE
ISSUE OF
APR 8 1923

CLOSING SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The final Boston Symphony concert of the Providence season will take place in Infantry Hall next Tuesday evening, April 10, at 8:15. The soloist will be Harold Bauer, who is looked upon as one of the very greatest of living pianists. Especially celebrated as an interpreter of the music of Beethoven, he will appear at this concert in th egreat "Emperor" concerto, No. 5, by this master, which is certainly the mightiest concerto ever written and is equal to his symphonies in conception and importance.

The larger part of the program, however, will be occupied by the "Pathetic" Symphony of Tchaikovsky, No. 6, in B minor, which is looked upon as the masterpiece of this composer. It has often been remarked that no other single musical work nor, indeed, any artistic creation, voices the temperament and emotional characteristics of a great people as does this. The haunting quality of Tchaikovsky's melodies in this score, the charm of the movement in the rhythm of five beats, the "March" movement, in which ephemeral pomp sinks into dissolution, and the last movement, a penetrating lament which probes into the lowest depths of the tonal register—these qualities make the "Pathetic" Symphony unique in the whole record of musical achievement.

The concert and the season will close with Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, the composer of which has just made his first visit to this country and appeared as guest conductor with this orchestra.

from APR 8 1923
JOURNAL
Providence, R. I.

Harold Bauer with Symphony

Beethoven's "Emperor" concerto No. 5 which Harold Bauer, the pianist, will play with the Boston Symphony next Tuesday night in Infantry Hall, is considered by many, one of the finest concertos ever written. In it Mr. Bauer is said to display his interpretative genius at its heights.

Another work of stupendous power is Tschaikowski's sixth symphony, the famous "Pathetic," with which Mr. Monteux will open his programme. Perhaps more than any other score, this symphony has brought the Russian music and temperament to the attention and sympathy of the western world. The pages of this remarkable work voice the suffering of the Russian people, their aspirations and disillusions. The plaintive and haunting quality of the melodious themes, the lowest depths of instrumental tone which the composer probes, indelibly impressed the symphony upon the world when it was composed, and in the years from that time to this it has held its place of eminence as an individual and distinctive artistic creation. The number which will close the concert is Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, the composer of which has just made his first visit to this country and appeared as guest conductor with the orchestra.

This concert concludes the Boston Symphony's Providence series for the season. Last week Mr. Monteux's players wound up their season of evening concerts in New York with a programme numbering Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Schumann's 'cello concerto, Debussy's orchestral suite "Printemps" and Wagner's "Rienzi." Pablo Casals was the soloist. The Bostonians farewelled in Brooklyn Friday night and in New York at a matinee yesterday. It marked the end of the orchestra's 37th season in New York.

NEW YORK
TIMES
APR 8 1923

MUSIC

By RICHARD ALDRICH.

The Boston Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra finished its doings in New York for the present season, at its concert in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. The program ended with Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, which still seems to many an excelent piece to end with, or to begin with or to play in between. Felix Mottl's arrangements of three dance movements from Grétry's opera of "Céphale et Pro-cris," were first on the program, all delightful pieces, ending with an enchanting gigue, skillfully arranged and skillfully played under Mr. Monteux's direction, in a manner quite to preserve their essential spirit.

Then came Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" that has lost none of its fascination in losing its ultra-modern aspect. It is still sufficiently modern to be alive and to wear its beauty without wrinkles. No beauty, wrinkled or unwrinkled, has ever adorned the next piece on the program, Ottorino Respighi's "Ballade of the Gnomides," nor was ever intended to. "Expression" was the composer's object and he appears to have attained it, at great length. The length, indeed, is such as to cool something of the interest with which those who like their expression strong may have regarded it.

The piece is remembered here, having been played first by Mr. Toscanini and his Italian orchestra. It is not such a one as might have been expected from Mr. Respighi, who does not usually breathe fire from his nostrils. He has added a few comparatively novel diabolical effects to the orchestral repertory of such things, and the "Ballade of the Gnomides" may rest its title to fame upon that fact.

The orchestra played all these things admirably. It has, in fact, made this season a long step in return to its old supremacy, in quality and homogeneity of tone, in finish and plastic flexibility under its conductor's hand. It is one of the most valuable features of the New York musical season; and there ought to be more music lovers who value it highly enough to attend its concerts. It is good to see in the program book the announcement of its ten concerts in New York next season.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
APR 8 1923

The Boston Symphony Orchestra disproves the rumor that it would discontinue its New York concerts next season by publishing the dates. As usual, it will give five Thursday evening and five Saturday afternoon concerts during the season of 1923-'24 at Carnegie Hall, with different programs for the evening and afternoon series, beginning on Thursday, November 29.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD
APR 8 1923

Boston Orchestra Ends Season: Plays Dance by Respighi

'Ballad of Gnomides,' Cleverly Composed, Is Presented Here for First Time.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its season in this city with its concert in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. The program consisted of three dances from Gretry's "Cephale et Procris," arranged by Felix Mottl; Debussy's "L'Apres-Midi d'un Faune," Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony. The composition of Respighi was performed for the first time here.

There is a program note by Carlo Clausetti, which recites in melodramatic manner the seizure of a diminutive gnome by two women, who drag him to the nuptial couch. A rabble of gnomes wait without, screaming and cursing till the women drag their spouse out again and hurl him from a hill into the sea. After that the two brides join in a mad dance with the gnomes and wild frenzy reigns.

Of course the general madness finds expression in tumultuous orchestration and trumpets in violent [illegible] utter the shrieks. There is a very striking funeral march and then more riotous antics by the gnomes. The composition is cleverly made and the orchestra is used with masterly skill. But there does not seem to be much to say about the indecent rabble and their filthy doings that has not been said before. The way of doing this sort of thing is now thoroughly conventionalized. It was not for Respighi to open a new path, and even if he had succeeded the question would still remain, "What comes to the art of music from such subjects?"

The performance of the ballad was a brilliant display of the technical skill of the Boston organization.

The various series of concerts given by the Philharmonic Society approaches its end. The last of the Saturday entertainments took place in Carnegie Hall last evening. The feast laid before the numerous audience comprised the well published "Ein Heldenleben" of Richard Strauss, the same composer's "Don Juan" and the dance and final scene from his opera "Salome." The opera itself has been threatened ever since last autumn when an American prima donna gained wide celebrity through her preparations to impersonate the daughter of Herodias. Later the Wagnerian festival company held it over the heads of music lovers. But only excerpts have broken into this long and active season.

After a somewhat forced performance of the "Don Juan" the dance from "Salome" was played at a tempo which would have puzzled Miss Bianca Froelich, who did the dance in the one memorable performance at the Metropolitan, but might have been grateful to Miss Mary Garden who executed her own terpsichorean solo.

TRIBUNE
APR 8 1923

Respighi Ballade Closes Boston Symphony Year

Novel 'Gnomide' Music Set to Fantastic Program Well Received at Last Concert of 37th New York Season

Pieces Old and New Heard

18th Century Ballet Airs Contrast to Modern With Beethoven as Golden Mean

By F. D. Perkins

There was an agreeable blend of familiar and unfamiliar numbers in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last New York concert of the season, yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, with the eighteenth century Gretry offset by Ottorino Respighi, and the "Afternoon of a Faun," and the "Eroica" Symphony to complete the program.

Of these the principal interest, or at least the charm of novelty, lay in Respighi's "Ballade of the Gnomides," which had a tart flavor after the pastoral calm of the Debussy number. Its "program" was bizarre, and the music, following it, often bizarre as well, though considerably less so than it might have been in the hands of Schonberg or Darius Milhaud. Respighi's music was undeniably of the modern Italian school, not the flowing, mellifluous Respighi of "Fontane di Roma." It arrested the ear, with a flavor now sweet, now acid, but did not vex it.

An Agitating Story

The printed "program" of Carlo Clausetti is not a soothing one. "Dragging the raving gnome," it begins, "the women go, abandoning their flimsy draperies to the wind," the women being two wives of a "diminutive man," with whom they are fleeing before a "cunning throng of manlings." Eventually they throw their husband over a cliff, and join the gnomes in a frenzied dance. The music, which makes more agreeable hearing than its subject, begins with whirling figures, through wich a more definite theme becomes audible; then subsides to a calmer, almost lyric mood not unlike that of the preceding Debussy number. But excitement is whipped up once more, and melody is mixed and alternates with dissonance, while the mood changes to that of a dance toward the end. The "Ballade" caused much applause, and none of the aggressive dissent that had been stirred by Honegger's "Horace Victorieux" or Schonberg's "Kammersymphonie."

Gretry Music Pleases

Mr. Monteux began with three dance pieces from Gretry's "Heroic Ballet," "Cephale et Procris," originally of the vintage of 1775, but freely arranged by Felix Mottl. In spite of the indicated freedom, Mottl had preserved the eighteenth century atmosphere flavor. The result was light, graceful, generally cheerful but for a plaintive touch in the minuet separating the "Tambourin" and "Gigue." Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" had a smooth, expressive performance and Mr. Monteux led Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony to close the Boston Symphony's thirty-seventh season in New York.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD
APR 8 1923

Leaders Attempt to Crowd Too Much Into Concerts

Profound and Novel Offerings Should Be Brought Before Audiences Early in Order to Be Heard by Minds Fresh and Vigorous.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

IN the program notes of yesterday afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the erudite Philip Hale, furnishing interesting information about Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, the last number on the list, tells us that the work was published in October, 1806, and that there was this note:

"Since the symphony is longer than an ordinary symphony it should be performed at the beginning rather than at the end of a concert, either after an overture or an aria or after a concerto. If it be performed too late there is danger that it will not produce on the audience, whose attention will be already wearied by the preceding pieces, the effect which the composer purposed in his own mind to attain."

It is inconceivable that Mr. Hale realized that the publication of this note was a gentle blow at Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who had asked his audience to listen to three dance numbers from Gretry's "Cephale et Procris," arranged by Felix Mottl; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Respighi's "Ballade of the Gnomides." To be sure none of these is a ponderous work, but to listen attentively for three-quarters of an hour does impose a measurable strain on the mind and leave it unready to absorb the large utterances and extended developments of a symphonic composition.

This by a natural progress brings us to the theme of program making in general. Conductors of orchestral concerts are for some reason not often good program makers. They attempt to crowd too much into their concerts. They not only make their programs too long but they make them too broad. One would suppose that a well balanced program with sufficient variety to keep the mind of the auditors stimulated was not a difficult thing to create, but evidently it is not easy.

Profound Works Should Be Played Early.

But the suggestion contained in the note quoted by Mr. Hale should never be put aside. Every conductor who has something profound or novel to offer should bring it before the audience early in the program in order that it may be heard by minds fresh and vigorous, not having the edge of their appetites dulled by several courses already received.

Especially is this necessary in our own time, when such a thing as a short symphony is not written. When Haydn wrote one he managed to present his simple thematic ideas and his brief descant on them in a few minutes. Mozart took little longer, and even Beethoven managed in most of his works to finish in thirty-five or forty minutes. But now a composer needs an hour and usually says much less than even Haydn, the kind old gentleman who made melodic bon bons for the Viennese.

We are no longer naive. We compose ponderously for many instruments, with the thunder of many drums and the clashing of many cymbals, gongs and bells, with complications in harmony and counterpoint, and, above all, with stupendous ideas. We compose not merely symphonies in C or B flat, but we embody in them histories, philosophies, religions, cults, and, in short, the entire catalogue of secrets of the human heart, which, as we all know, is desperately wicked.

Such music should begin, not end, a program. The conductors often plead that their programs are arranged to meet artistic demands. In many instances this is true. But much too frequently art is at least open to question. What artistic principle commands the performance of a Beethoven sympathy at the end of a program which has already included two much more modern works? Perhaps this one—that these same modern works would sound rather pitiful if heard after the Beethoven symphony. But with the customary ten minutes' intermission after the symphony this fate would not befall them. And it should be understood that the second part of any program was to be composed of less serious music than the first part.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
APR 8 1923

Philadelphia, with its visits from our Symphony Society and the Boston Symphony, gains a certain amount of orchestral variety, but the case of Boston, of which Mr. Parker writes, and of other large cities blessed with an orchestra, is quite different. Boston depends almost entirely on one orchestra, which is the Boston Symphony, and one conductor, who is Pierre Monteux. It also has its People's Symphony Orchestra, which, according to newspaper accounts, has been doing very creditable work this season, but this cultivates a different field and does not claim to rival the organization founded by the late Major Higginson. Visits from other orchestras, though they occur every now and then, are infrequent. The Chicago Orchestra, under Frederick Stock, paid a visit some years ago; the Cincinnati Orchestra was heard in Symphony Hall in 1917, while the Philharmonic drops in from time to time. Mr. Mengelberg brought it to Boston last season, and inspired mixed feelings in the breasts of local reviewers. Writing in "The Boston Herald" the dean of the critical fraternity, Mr. Philip Hale, took marked exception to the high coloring applied by Mr. Mengelberg in one of his chief war horses, Liszt's "Les Préludes."

'But, with mounting expenses, especially railroad fares, the tendency has been toward fewer visits, and practically all of the symphonic diet heard in Boston since the days of Dr. Muck and the interregnum of Henri Rabaud has been from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as directed and interpreted by Pierre Monteux. While Mr. Monteux is an excellent musician, a good conductor and, as a rule, a maker of interesting programs, musical Boston should not suffer, but rather profit, by an occasional specimen of the work of others. Mr. Parker observes that "the time is past when the symphony concerts moved in a little round of their own, fondly believed to be sufficient to itself, more to be desired because it was a thing apart. The hidebound to the contrary notwithstanding, the world outside this town is interesting, even stimulating." Undoubtedly, and Boston audiences, with all due respect to Mr. Monteux, probably have enjoyed these occasional changes in the musical diet offered by their symphony orchestra. But here the musical public has already a diet of large quantity and considerable variety, and would seem to have quite enough to assimilate as it is.

ROM APR 9 1923
Globe
NEW YORK CITY

Other Music.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra finished its thirty-seventh season in New York with its concert in Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon. Nothing seems to be said about the return of the orchestra next season. Saturday's programme introduced to New York an interesting "Ballade of the Gnomides" by Ottorino Respighi. The other numbers were three dances from Grétry's ballet "Céphale et Procris," as "freely" arranged for concert performance by Felix Mottl; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven.

[98]

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
APR 9 1923

Orchestras and Singers.

Saturday afternoon, at Carnegie Hall, Pierre Monteux conducted the last Boston Symphony concert of the season in New York. He began his program with the delightful suite of dances from Gretry's "Cephalus and Procris," as arranged for the modern orchestra by Felix Mottl. He followed this with a colorful performance of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and then came the novelty, "Ballade of the Gnomides." This might have had for a subtitle "The Honeymoon of a Bigamist Gnome." Once, at the MacDowell colony, in Peterborough, when the "colonists" were taking it easy after a day's work in their various studios, the question came up, "What is the feminine of 'Gnome'?" Edward Ballentine suggested "Yes'm." The poem by Carlo Clausetti—"Ballata delle Gnomidi"—of two of these gnomic femininities who consort with one male—with disastrous results, it would seem—is about as agreeable as a description of a morgue—not the newspaper variety, either. Here are two sentences from Philip Hale's program notes on the piece: "Eighteen pages of the score are devoted to the development of this material" and "There are other sections, but their material has already been heard in one form or another." Let it go at that. The music perhaps outlines the poem in a way that might answer for a moving picture, but who cares to have music that describes such a line as this: "In a twinkling the filthy husband was downward hurled and the rite thus ended"? Sufficient unto the music is the evil thereof.

The remainder of the program was given up to an excellent performance of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, which will continue to find a place on orchestral programs, we fancy, long after present-day charnel house music has disappeared—"spurlos versenkt."

---

om APR 9 1923
VENING WORLD
New York City

Other Saturday events were a piano recital by Oliver Denton, always a capable and reliable artist; the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the Italian Respighi's modern "Ballade of the Gnomides," with its changing flavors, contrasting strongly with Debussy's soothing "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Beethoven "Eroica" symphony on the program; the playing of the last named composition failing to dispel memories of Mr. Mengelberg's recent finished performance of it; and the evening concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, at which, in a Strauss program, Barbara Kemp, Metropolitan soprano, gave a stunning exhibition of the way to sing the final scene from the composer's "Salome." Mme. Kemp had to battle against an orchestral flood that, at times, drowned her voice, but she succeeded in making her effort effective.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
APR 9 1923

Other Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its final concert here for the present season on Saturday afternoon. The programme included a piece of the vermouth school by Respighi, entitled "Ballade of the Gnomides," which was favorably received by the audience. There were also pieces by Debussy—the familiar "L'Après-midi d'un Faune," three dances from old Grétry's "Cephale et Procris," and a symphonie called "Eroica" in Italian by an old-fashioned composer hailing from Bonn and Vienna widely known as Beethoven.

In the evening the Philharmonic gave, also in Carnegie Hall, an all-Strauss programme, at which, it is needless to say, Mengelberg and his men were at their best. Barbara Kemp was the soloist and the programme included "Don Juan," "Heldenleben," Salome's dance and the final scene from "Salome." Yesterday afternoon's Philharmonic was a repetition of a programme heard before. Josef Lhévinne was again the soloist, playing Liszt's E flat concerto. The audience was enthusiastic over him, the orchestra, and Mengelberg.

Every day brings a new orchestra. The latest made its début yesterday at Town Hall. It is called the American National Orchestra, because it intends to travel much of the time. Its conductor is Howard Barlow.

At the Hippodrome Rosa Raisa and Giacomo Rimini were heard last night by a large Hippodrome audience. At Carnegie Hall, in the afternoon, an- [illegible] singer, Reinald Werren- [illegible] a recital contrasting

NEW YORK
TIMES
APR 8 1923

MUSIC

By RICHARD ALDRICH.

The Boston Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra finished its doings in New York for the present season, at its concert in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. The program ended with Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, which still seems to many an excelent piece to end with, or to begin with or to play in between. Felix Mottl's arrangements of three dance movements from Grétry's opera of "Céphale et Pro-cris," were first on the program, all delightful pieces, ending with an enchanting gigue, skillfully arranged and skillfully played under Mr. Monteux's direction, in a manner quite to preserve their essential spirit.

Then came Debussy's prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" that has lost none of its fascination in losing its ultra-modern aspect. It is still sufficiently modern to be alive and to wear its beauty without wrinkles. No beauty, wrinkled or unwrinkled, has ever adorned the next piece on the program, Ottorino Respighi's "Ballade of the Gnomides," nor was ever intended to. "Expression" was the composer's object and he appears to have attained it, at great length. The length, indeed, is such as to cool something of the interest with which those who like their expression strong may have regarded it.

The piece is remembered here, having been played first by Mr. Toscanini and his Italian orchestra. It is not such a one as might have been expected from Mr. Respighi, who does not usually breathe fire from his nostrils. He has added a few comparatively novel diabolical effects to the orchestral repertory of such things, and the "Ballade of the Gnomides" may rest its title to fame upon that fact.

The orchestra played all these things admirably. It has, in fact, made this season a long step in return to its old supremacy, in quality and homogeneity of tone, in finish and plastic flexibility under its conductor's hand. It is one of the most valuable features of the New York musical season; and there ought to be more music lovers who value it highly enough to attend its concerts. It is good to see in the program book the announcement of its ten concerts in New York next season.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
APR 8 1923

The Boston Symphony Orchestra disproves the rumor that it would discontinue its New York concerts next season by publishing the dates. As usual, it will give five Thursday evening and five Saturday afternoon concerts during the season of 1923-'24 at Carnegie Hall, with different programs for the evening and afternoon series, beginning on Thursday, November 29.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD
APR 8 1923

Boston Orchestra Ends Season: Plays Dance by Respighi

'Ballad of Gnomides,' Cleverly Composed, Is Presented Here for First Time.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its season in this city with its concert in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. The program consisted of three dances from Gretry's "Cephale et Procris," arranged by Felix Mottl; Debussy's "L'Apres-Midi d'un Faune," Respighi's "Ballad of the Gnomides" and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony. The composition of Respighi was performed for the first time here.

There is a program note by Carlo Clausetti, which recites in melodramatic manner the seizure of a diminutive gnome by two women, who drag him to the nuptial couch. A rabble of gnomes wait without, screaming and cursing till the women drag their spouse out again and hurl him from a hill into the sea. After that the two brides join in a mad dance with the gnomes and wild frenzy reigns.

Of course the general madness finds expression in tumultuous orchestration and trumpets in violent [illegible] utter the shrieks. There is a very striking funeral march and then more riotous antics by the gnomes. The composition is cleverly made and the orchestra is used with masterly skill. But there does not seem to be much to say about the indecent rabble and their filthy doings that has not been said before. The way of doing this sort of thing is now thoroughly conventionalized. It was not for Respighi to open a new path, and even if he had succeeded the question would still remain, "What comes to the art of music from such subjects?"

The performance of the ballad was a brilliant display of the technical skill of the Boston organization.

The various series of concerts given by the Philharmonic Society approaches its end. The last of the Saturday entertainments took place in Carnegie Hall last evening. The feast laid before the numerous audience comprised the well published "Ein Heldenleben" of Richard Strauss, the same composer's "Don Juan" and the dance and final scene from his opera "Salome." The opera itself has been threatened ever since last autumn when an American prima donna gained wide celebrity through her preparations to impersonate the daughter of Herodias. Later the Wagnerian festival company held it over the heads of music lovers. But only excerpts have broken into this long and active season.

After a somewhat forced performance of the "Don Juan" the dance from "Salome" was played at a tempo which would have puzzled Miss Bianca Froelich, who did the dance in the one memorable performance at the Metropolitan, but might have been grateful to Miss Mary Garden who executed her own terpsichorean solo.

TRIBUNE
APR 8 1923

RespighiBallade Closes Boston Symphony Year

Novel 'Gnomide' Music Set to Fantastic Program Well Received at Last Concert of 37th New York Season

Pieces Old and New Heard

18th Century Ballet Airs Contrast to Modern With Beethoven as Golden Mean

By F. D. Perkins

There was an agreeable blend of familiar and unfamiliar numbers in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last New York concert of the season, yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, with the eighteenth century Gretry offset by Ottorino Respighi, and the "Afternoon of a Faun," and the "Eroica" Symphony to complete the program.

Of these the principal interest, or at least the charm of novelty, lay in Respighi's "Ballade of the Gnomides," which had a tart flavor after the pastoral calm of the Debussy number. Its "program" was bizarre, and the music, following it, often bizarre as well, though considerably less so than it might have been in the hands of Schonberg or Darius Milhaud. Respighi's music was undeniably of the modern Italian school, not the flowing, mellifluous Respighi of "Fontane di Roma." It arrested the ear, with a flavor now sweet, now acid, but did not vex it.

An Agitating Story

The printed "program" of Carlo Clausetti is not a soothing one. "Dragging the raving gnome," it begins, "the women go, abandoning their flimsy draperies to the wind," the women being two wives of a "diminutive man," with whom they are fleeing before a "cunning throng of manlings." Eventually they throw their husband over a cliff, and join the gnomes in a frenzied dance. The music, which makes more agreeable hearing than its subject, begins with whirling figures, through wich a more definite theme becomes audible; then subsides to a calmer, almost lyric mood not unlike that of the preceding Debussy number. But excitement is whipped up once more, and melody is mixed and alternates with dissonance, while the mood changes to that of a dance toward the end. The "Ballade" caused much applause, and none of the aggressive dissent that had been stirred by Honegger's "Horace Victorieux" or Schonberg's "Kammersymphonie."

Gretry Music Pleases

Mr. Monteux began with three dance pieces from Gretry's "Heroic Ballet," "Cephale et Procris," originally of the vintage of 1775, but freely arranged by Felix Mottl. In spite of the indicated freedom, Mottl had preserved the eighteenth century atmosphere flavor. The result was light, graceful, generally cheerful but for a plaintive touch in the minuet separating the "Tambourin" and "Gigue." Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" had a smooth, expressive performance and Mr. Monteux led Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony to close the Boston Symphony's thirty-seventh season in New York.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
HERALD
APR 8 1923

Leaders Attempt to Crowd Too Much Into Concerts

Profound and Novel Offerings Should Be Brought Before Audiences Early in Order to Be Heard by Minds Fresh and Vigorous.

By W. J. HENDERSON.

IN the program notes of yesterday afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the erudite Philip Hale, furnishing interesting information about Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, the last number on the list, tells us that the work was published in October, 1806, and that there was this note:

"Since the symphony is longer than an ordinary symphony it should be performed at the beginning rather than at the end of a concert, either after an overture or an aria or after a concerto. If it be performed too late there is danger that it will not produce on the audience, whose attention will be already wearied by the preceding pieces, the effect which the composer purposed in his own mind to attain."

It is inconceivable that Mr. Hale realized that the publication of this note was a gentle blow at Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who had asked his audience to listen to three dance numbers from Gretry's "Cephale et Procris," arranged by Felix Mottl; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and Respighi's "Ballade of the Gnomides." To be sure none of these is a ponderous work, but to listen attentively for three-quarters of an hour does impose a measurable strain on the mind and leave it unready to absorb the large utterances and extended developments of a symphonic composition.

This by a natural progress brings us to the theme of program making in general. Conductors of orchestral concerts are for some reason not often good program makers. They attempt to crowd too much into their concerts. They not only make their programs too long but they make them too broad. One would suppose that a well balanced program with sufficient variety to keep the mind of the auditors stimulated was not a difficult thing to create, but evidently it is not easy.

Profound Works Should Be Played Early.

But the suggestion contained in the note quoted by Mr. Hale should never be put aside. Every conductor who has something profound or novel to offer should bring it before the audience early in the program in order that it may be heard by minds fresh and vigorous, not having the edge of their appetites dulled by several courses already received.

Especially is this necessary in our own time, when such a thing as a short symphony is not written. When Haydn wrote one he managed to present his simple thematic ideas and his brief descant on them in a few minutes. Mozart took little longer, and even Beethoven managed in most of his works to finish in thirty-five or forty minutes. But now a composer needs an hour and usually says much less than even Haydn, the kind old gentleman who made melodic bon bons for the Viennese.

We are no longer naive. We compose ponderously for many instruments, with the thunder of many drums and the clashing of many cymbals, gongs and bells, with complications in harmony and counterpoint, and, above all, with stupendous ideas. We compose not merely symphonies in C or B flat, but we embody in them histories, philosophies, religions, cults, and, in short, the entire catalogue of secrets of the human heart, which, as we all know, is desperately wicked.

Such music should begin, not end, a program. The conductors often plead that their programs are arranged to meet artistic demands. In many instances this is true. But much too frequently art is at least open to question. What artistic principle commands the performance of a Beethoven sympathy at the end of a program which has already included two much more modern works? Perhaps this one—that these same modern works would sound rather pitiful if heard after the Beethoven symphony. But with the customary ten minutes' intermission after the symphony this fate would not befall them. And it should be understood that the second part of any program was to be composed of less serious music than the first part.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
APR 8 1923

Philadelphia, with its visits from our Symphony Society and the Boston Symphony, gains a certain amount of orchestral variety, but the case of Boston, of which Mr. Parker writes, and of other large cities blessed with an orchestra, is quite different. Boston depends almost entirely on one orchestra, which is the Boston Symphony, and one conductor, who is Pierre Monteux. It also has its People's Symphony Orchestra, which, according to newspaper accounts, has been doing very creditable work this season, but this cultivates a different field and does not claim to rival the organization founded by the late Major Higginson. Visits from other orchestras, though they occur every now and then, are infrequent. The Chicago Orchestra, under Frederick Stock, paid a visit some years ago; the Cincinnati Orchestra was heard in Symphony Hall in 1917, while the Philharmonic drops in from time to time. Mr. Mengelberg brought it to Boston last season, and inspired mixed feelings in the breasts of local reviewers. Writing in "The Boston Herald" the dean of the critical fraternity, Mr. Philip Hale, took marked exception to the high coloring applied by Mr. Mengelberg in one of his chief war horses, Liszt's "Les Préludes."

'But, with mounting expenses, especially railroad fares, the tendency has been toward fewer visits, and practically all of the symphonic diet heard in Boston since the days of Dr. Muck and the interregnum of Henri Rabaud has been from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as directed and interpreted by Pierre Monteux. While Mr. Monteux is an excellent musician, a good conductor and, as a rule, a maker of interesting programs, musical Boston should not suffer, but rather profit, by an occasional specimen of the work of others. Mr. Parker observes that "the time is past when the symphony concerts moved in a little round of their own, fondly believed to be sufficient to itself, more to be desired because it was a thing apart. The hidebound to the contrary notwithstanding, the world outside this town is interesting, even stimulating." Undoubtedly, and Boston audiences, with all due respect to Mr. Monteux, probably have enjoyed these occasional changes in the musical diet offered by their symphony orchestra. But here the musical public has already a diet of large quantity and considerable variety, and would seem to have quite enough to assimilate as it is.

ROM APR 9 1923
Globe
NEW YORK CITY

Other Music.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra finished its thirty-seventh season in New York with its concert in Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon. Nothing seems to be said about the return of the orchestra next season. Saturday's programme introduced to New York an interesting "Ballade of the Gnomides" by Ottorino Respighi. The other numbers were three dances from Grétry's ballet "Céphale et Procris," as "freely" arranged for concert performance by Felix Mottl; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven.

BROOKLYN
N. Y.
EAGLE
ISSUE OF
APR 9 1923

Orchestras and Singers.

Saturday afternoon, at Carnegie Hall, Pierre Monteux conducted the last Boston Symphony concert of the season in New York. He began his program with the delightful suite of dances from Gretry's "Cephalus and Procris," as arranged for the modern orchestra by Felix Mottl. He followed this with a colorful performance of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," and then came the novelty, "Ballade of the Gnomides." This might have had for a subtitle "The Honeymoon of a Bigamist Gnome." Once, at the MacDowell colony, in Peterborough, when the "colonists" were taking it easy after a day's work in their various studios, the question came up, "What is the feminine of 'Gnome'?" Edward Ballentine suggested "Yes'm." The poem by Carlo Clausetti—"Ballata delle Gnomidi"—of two of these gnomic femininities who consort with one male—with disastrous results, it would seem—is about as agreeable as a description of a morgue—not the newspaper variety, either. Here are two sentences from Philip Hale's program notes on the piece: "Eighteen pages of the score are devoted to the development of this material" and "There are other sections, but their material has already been heard in one form or another." Let it go at that. The music perhaps outlines the poem in a way that might answer for a moving picture, but who cares to have music that describes such a line as this: "In a twinkling the filthy husband was downward hurled and the rite thus ended"? Sufficient unto the music is the evil thereof.

The remainder of the program was given up to an excellent performance of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, which will continue to find a place on orchestral programs, we fancy, long after present-day charnel house music has disappeared—"spurlos versenkt."

---

om APR 9 1923
VENING WORLD
New York City

Other Saturday events were a piano recital by Oliver Denton, always a capable and reliable artist; ~~the final~~ concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the Italian Respighi's modern "Ballade of the Gnomides," with its changing flavors, contrasting strongly with Debussy's soothing "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Beethoven "Eroica" symphony on the program; the playing of the last named composition failing to dispel memories of Mr. Mengelberg's recent finished performance of it; and the evening concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, at which, in a Strauss program, Barbara Kemp, Metropolitan soprano, gave a stunning exhibition of the way to sing the final scene from the composer's "Salome." Mme. Kemp had to battle against an orchestral flood that, at times, drowned her voice, but she succeeded in making her effort effective.

NEW YORK
N. Y.
EVE. POST
ISSUE OF
APR 9 1923

Other Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its final concert here for the present season on Saturday afternoon. The programme included a piece of the vermouth school by Respighi, entitled "Ballade of the Gnomides," which was favorably received by the audience. There were also pieces by Debussy—the familiar "L'Après-midi d'un Faune," three dances from old Grétry's "Cephale et Procris," and a symphonie called "Eroica" in Italian by an old-fashioned composer hailing from Bonn and Vienna widely known as Beethoven.

In the evening the Philharmonic gave, also in Carnegie Hall, an all-Strauss programme, at which, it is needless to say, Mengelberg and his men were at their best. Barbara Kemp was the soloist and the programme included "Don Juan," "Heldenleben," Salome's dance and the final scene from "Salome." Yesterday afternoon's Philharmonic was a repetition of a programme heard before. Josef Lhévinne was again the soloist, playing Liszt's E flat concerto. The audience was enthusiastic over him, the orchestra, and Mengelberg.

Every day brings a new orchestra. The latest made its début yesterday at Town Hall. It is called the American National Orchestra, because it intends to travel much of the time. Its conductor is Howard Barlow.

At the Hippodrome Rosa Raisa and Giacomo Rimini were heard last night by a large Hippodrome audience. At Carnegie Hall, in the afternoon, another famous singer, Reinald Werren- [illegible] a recital contrasting features of which were Brahms's Four Serious Songs and several gems by Grieg.

Dusolina Giannini, the twenty-year old girl who made a sensation at the last Schola Cantorum concert, was heard in Town Hall last night at a Polish benefit concert, the other artists heard being Adamo Didur, Alexander Brachocki, and Leo Schulz.

From APR 9 1923
EVENING WORLD
New York City

MUSIC

By Deems Taylor

BOSTON'S FAREWELL.

Beethoven had the honor of closing the Boston Symphony Orchestra's season at Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon. His "Eroica" symphony came last on an interesting program that was heard with demonstrative approval throughout by one of the largest audiences that have turned out this year to hear Mr. Monteux and his men.

There were three other numbers on the list, beginning with the Mottl orchestral arrangement of three numbers from Gretry's "Cephale et Procris." These, delightfully played, comprised a tambourin, a minuet, and a jig that might have come straight out of Gilbert and Sullivan. Equally played was Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faun"—which, by the way, seems to be rivalling "Til Eulenspiegel" in popularity among conductors this season. It is always worth hearing again, however, and was particularly so under Mr. Monteux's auspices.

The fact that he used to play it so much for the Russian Ballet may have influenced his reading, but whatever the cause, he makes it a much more vigorous, forthright piece of music than its other interpreters do. Saturday afternoon it was much less a dream-picture than a transcript of actuality. Mallarme's faun was never quite sure whether he had met his nymph or imagined her. The Monteux faun has no doubts on the subject. Whether or not one likes this version of Debussy is debatable; there is no doubt, though, that it is a plausible and attractive one.

The novelty of the program was Ottorino Respighi's symphonic poem, "La Ballata delle Gnomidi." Some say that Toscanini introduced it here a couple of years ago when he brought his "La Scala" Orchestra for a visit, but as no one could remember having heard the music, Saturday's performance might be set down as a "first time" in New York.

The work is based on a grisly Italian poem about a gnome whose two wives drag him into a cave, do him to death, toss his corpse into the sea and dance a bacchanal of triumph. This reviewer heard the Cincinnati Orchestra, under Fritz Reiner, play it earlier in the season, and wrote glowingly of it. A second hearing makes it necessary to dim the ardor of that first report a trifle.

"La Ballata delle Gnomidi" is undoubtedly the most individual thing Respighi has yet done. It is full of drastic dissonances, but the strength and logic of its structure are such that they sound much more reasonable and inevitable than do the cacaphonies of much ultra-modern music. Near the end there is a death march that goes its way with grim power and hypnotic reiteration of curious ostinato theme, and the closing bacchanal has fascinating rhythm and color.

Most of the themes are significant and, save for an E-flat clarinet that shrieks in the accents of "Til," strongly individual, and the scoring, which is full and immensely complicated, is striking in color and handled with masterly effectiveness.

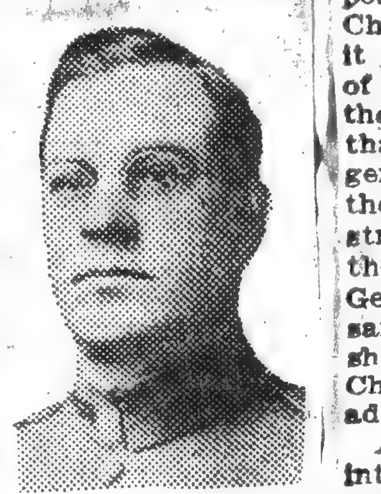
But after hearing the piece twice we are inclined to quarrel with it on two points. First, as to length. Respighi exhibits a tendency toward reiteration of his melodic figures, a la Malipiero, that inevitably makes for monotony, and much of the thematic material is discussed just a little too long for its own good.

Besides, granting that this music is a remarkably successful translation of a literary idea to terms of sound, one might still wonder whether it was worth doing with such loving care. The music is certainly as good as the poem, and is remarkably faithful to its letter and spirit; but we are not sure that we think so much of the poem. It is all very horrid and gruesome and terrifying, to be sure, but an author who has nothing to say but "boo!" is likely to be a bore after one is used to him. And try as he might, this reader could find very little beyond melodrama in the poem—and, frankly, very little else in the music.

The more faithfully it clung to the lines that had inspired it the less important it seemed. Only at the end, where the author had virtually said "They march; they dance," did Respighi, freed of the necessity of carrying out somebody else's ideas, clasp the words "march" and "dance" to his bosom with a shout of delight and proceed to write music—music that was his and his alone, and that said more, in its sheer blazing color and mad rhythms, than all the care[illegible]matics that had gone be-

REFRESHMENTS BARRED AT POPS ON SUNDAYS

The first Sunday Symphony Pops will be held in Boston with everything but the pop.



Alfred F. Foote

There will be no smoking. There will be no drinking—not even ginger ale. Not a spoonful of ice cream will be sold to tickle jaded palates.

The State has so ruled. A petition of the Symphony Pops management to sell its normal, non-intoxicating accessories on Sundays as well as week days has been rejected by Colonel Alfred F. Foote, the State commissioner of public safety.

Fifteen years ago, the Legislature voted to give Foote's department the right to regulate and license Sunday entertainments. He now turns down the Pops' application because in the past a request to sell refreshments in connection with a Sunday show had never been granted; it probably had never been asked.

This development adds another straw to the mow-full of Sunday law inconsistencies.

A person can see a movie on Sunday, but he can't witness a Shakesperian drama. He may attend vaudeville, but not grand opera. The rules do not permit a continuous and complete performance.

He may play baseball or golf, but not play checkers. He violates the law by working in his own garden on Sunday, but he can sit in the garden and look over the backyard fence at a pair of healthy fellows walloping a golf ball.

It is said the refusal by Foote will not alter the plan of the Symphony management to put on the Sunday Popless Pops.

AMER. MAY.

The last Symphony concerts of the season will take place tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evenings. Beethoven's overture, "Leonore" No. 3; Chausson's "Soir de fete"; Respikhi's "Fountains of Rome" and Saint-Saens's Symphony in C minor (with organ). Chausson's symphonic poem will be played for the first time in this country. Its history is a curious one: although it was performed in Paris as far back as 1898, it has not been published. Mr. Monteux will conduct from the composer's manuscript score. There were three performances after the first, but they were not in Paris. Since there was great interest in all of Chausson's compositions after his death, it is strange that the 'Soir de Fete" has been neglected, especially as his friends, Vincent d'Indy among them, think highly of it.

HERALD-MAY 3

24TH CONCERT OF SYMPHONY

Chausson's Soir de Fete Heard for First Time in America

MONTEUX GREETED WITH ENTHUSIASM

By PHILIP HALE

The 24th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Monteux, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The program was as follows:

Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3; Chausson, Sior de Fete, (first time in America); Respighri, "Fountains of Rome"; Saint-Saens, Symphony in C minor (with organ).

Although Chausson's "Soir de Fete" was performed in Paris as long ago as 1898, it has not been published. Mr. Monteux conducted from the composer's manuscript. Why this work has been neglected by publishers is not easily explained, especially as Chausson's friends thought highly of it, and they were influential. As Chausson was killed in a bicycle accident about a year after the production, he probably had thought there was time enough to attend to the publication.

When the symphonic poem was first performed—there were three other performances within a few years, but outside of Paris—Pierre de Breville wrote as a review an argument, an explanatory program, which probably resulted from talks with Chausson. The substance of it was that a poet, a dreamer, passing through a crowd on a festal night withdrew to hear the voices of nature. Returning to the crowd he took part for a time in the boisterous agitation, but yearning for calm and silence he again withdrew.

For some years Chausson's music was, in a way, tentative, one might say experimental. Charming as his "Viviane" is, it shows a certain indecision. One might say it is a pastel by a naturally talented amateur. Even in his symphony the influence of Cesar Franck is too strongly felt. But "Soir de Fete," composed eight years after the symphony and two years after the "Poem" for violin and orchestra, shows self-reliance. It is more individual; Chausson here knows what he wishes to do and he does it.

The joyous sections are free from the vulgarity which by some French composers is mistaken for frank gaiety, but Chausson's festival is not too refined, it is, after all, music of a crowd, not of a court. Its brilliance is not towdry; the music is not boisterously realistic; that of the contrasting sections has genuine beauty, music of the "huge and thoughtful night." In the harmonic structure and in the instrumentation there are happy inventions. It was George Moore's friend Cabaner who said to portray silence effectively he should need three military bands. Chausson would have enjoyed this paradox.

A very dramatic but not extravagant interpretation of Beethoven's "Leonore" overture opened the concert, the last Friday afternoon concert of the 42d season. The overture is more than the summing up of "Fidelio"; it is the opera itself, without the dull music of the first act and the anti-climax of all that follows the immortal prison scene; without the disturbing spoken dialogue.

Respighi has been represented twice this season; by his Ballad of the Gnomides, superb in its barbaric frenzy and mysterious haunting episodes, and by the enchanting, less powerful, "Fountains of Rome." The popular judgment at present is in favor of the latter composition. It is useless to say that time will tell, for this world is an allusion, a passing show, and 20 years from now Respighi's music may be thought commonplace or his name may only be known by a catalogue of Italian composers.

The architecture of Saint-Saens's third Symphony shows his remarkable skill in building an imposing structure out of comparatively slight material. Not long ago Mr. Ernest Newman, who has apparently sworn to destroy Saint-Saens's reputation, and, keeping his oath, has made many foolish and unjust statements, complained of the "repetition of platitudes" in Saint-Saens's piano concerto in C minor. The complaint was not wholly unfounded, and it might be brought against this symphony in spite of the art shown in varying the repetitions. The finale does not seem to us equal to the preceding sections. It is diffuse, and there are moments when the composer is not so logical in musical thought as is his wont. Nevertheless, it is a sonorous work with pages of genuine strength and beauty, suitable for the brilliant ending of a brilliant season.

The concert will be repeated tonight.

Mr. Monteux was most warmly greeted when he came before the audience, and in the course of the concert enthusiasm ran high. A short account of the season will be found in the Herald of tomorrow. Fortunate, indeed, is Boston in its great orchestra and in its conductor. May he long be with us!

The announcement is made that there will be no public sale of seats for the Friday afternoon concerts next season, for the very few reserved seats not resubscribed are insufficient to file applications on the long waiting list.

HERALD.-MAY. 5.

POPS BEGIN WITH SMART PROGRAM

The opening night of the Pops is always one of the biggest of the season and the first concert, which will be given on Monday evening, promises to be no exception. This Spring and Summer edition of Symphony Hall concerts is entering on its thirty-eighth season and it is the seventh under the leadership of Agide Jacchia.

Agide Jacchia

The usual accompaniment of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony will add to the popular program. The second night at the Pops next Tuesday will be celebrated as the hundredth anniversary of "Home Sweet Home," and Mr. Jacchia has made a special arrangement of this immortal air for the occasion. The first of the Sunday evening Pop concerts will be given on May 13.

The Monday program will be as follows:

Introduction to Act 3 "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz"	Weber
Waltz No. 15	Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Prelude op 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia)	Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"	Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3	Tschaikowsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"	Greig
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers	Jessel
Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen"	Bizet

AMER. MAY. 5.

SYMPHONY GIVES LAST CONCERT

By ZOE FABER

Pierre Monteux was given quite an ovation when he appeared to take up his position for the final pair of symphony concerts of this season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

Holding vigorously to his passion for orchestral novelties, Mr. Monteux placed a "first time in America" number on his last program. It was the Chausson Soir de Fete played from manuscript. It is interesting music, full of color, with brilliant and more sober, reflective themes interwoven skillfully. It is hoped that a second hearing will be given it early in the fall.

Doubtless the Fountains of Rome, by Respighi, held first place in the affections of most of the audience. It is tone-painting that deepens the first impression of lovliness with each successive performance. As lovely as the play of sun upon dripping water, was the play and interplay of harp and string.

The Saint-Saens Symphony in C minor occupied the latter half of the program. With so many other more beautiful symphonies in the repertoire of the orchestra, the reason for this one on the final program is not quite clear. It has, of course, passages that are stirring and others that are lovely in theme but on the whole, it lacks the power, the breadth and the grandeur that lies in so many others.

The concert will be rendered tonight.

AMER. MAY. 5.

42D SYMPHONY SEASON ENDING

Tonight's concert will close the 42d Symphony season, which on the whole has been the most notable since the war.

At the matinee yesterday Pierre Monteux received a fond farewell from the more fashionable Symphony patrons and the students up in the second balcony. Each season this modest Frenchman makes many new friends and admirers. At times this season his conducting has been extremely brilliant. He does his work expertly, intelligently, unobtrusively. The more we see of "guest" conductors like Mengelberg and Bruno Walter the more we admire Monteux. And this season the orchestra has made another advance toward the high technical plane from which the alarums and controversies of war drove it five years ago. Even in New York they have noticed this improvement.

The final program, which will be repeated tonight, includes Beethoven's third "Lenore" overture, Respighi's symphonic poem, "Fountains of Rome," the Saint-Saens C minor symphony, with organ and piano, and a sort of Mardi Gras piece by Ernest Chausson, called "Soir de Fete," played for the first time in this country. The Respighi and Chausson pieces are in the modern vein—tone pictures, but from different angles. Chausson's work is impressionistic, Respighi's highly imaginative. The "Fountains of Rome," one of the 20th century Italian masterpieces, has fairly won a permanent place in the Symphony repertoire. It was performed yesterday in true virtuoso style, which earned an ovation for Mr. Monteux and his men.

Albert W. Snow, organist, and Alfred de Voto, pianist, are the assisting artists.

Pops Opening to Be Broadcasted

Radio fans will have the first opportunity of hearing a Pop concert when the entire opening program at Symphony Hall is broadcasted next Monday night by the Shepard Station. Agide Jacchia, conductor, has made up this program:—

Introduction, Act 3. "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture. "Der Freischutz"	Weber
Waltz, No. 15	Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"	Ponchelli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6	Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"	Waldteufel
Polonaise, Suite No. 3	Tchaikovsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers	Jessel
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen"	Bizet

ADVSR-MAY 5.

SYMPHONY CONCERT ENDS 42D SEASON

Saint-Saens' Symphony Is Feature of Program

The 42d season of Friday afternoon Boston Symphony concerts ended yesterday with a rather miscellaneous program, on which Saint-Saens' Third Symphony, with organ, was the major item. Slips distributed with the programs announced that all seats for the Friday concerts are already sold for next season, but that places for the Saturday concerts are available at a wide range of prices.

Mr Monteux' term as conductor includes next season, so that the warm welcome he received from yesterday's audience at his first appearance on the stage and the cordial applause at the close of the concert were not a farewell, but merely an "au revoir." The orchestra was brought to its feet to take its share of the applause, just before the intermission.

The orchestra in the past three seasons has shown steady and gratifying progress in routine ensemble playing. The lion's share of the praise for making the Boston Symphony again an instrument unexcelled anywhere must go to Mr Monteux.

Those who feel that Mr Monteux does not always get out of classic or modern repertory pieces all that they contain, who sigh for a more fiery, more intense, more burningly intellectual leader for the Symphony should be conscious that they, like the rest of musical Boston, are deeply in his debt for his patient, good humored, competent labors in reconstituting an orchestra wofully shattered by circumstances still bitterly regretted.

The one novelty yesterday was Chausson's "Soir de Fete," composed in 1898, shortly before his tragic, accidental death and never published or hitherto performed in America. Chausson seemingly tried to contrast a noisy holiday crowd with the reveries of a solitary promenader. He lacked Berlioz' skill at making noise musical and significant.

The pages devoted to the crowd are painstakingly boisterous-but devoid of feeling. The poetic middle section and coda impress one as in the mood of Lamartine.

Respighi's clever salon piece, "Fountains of Rome," again caught the fancy of the audience. He has written with extraordinary superficial brilliance.

Beethoven's "Leonore No. 3" overture began the program as if to atone for the paucity of Beethoven played this season. There are no more poignantly dramatic measures in all music than those in this overture following the trumpet call, which in the opera "Fidelio" means deliverance for the hero. They go with Leonora-Fidelio's exclamation to her captive husband, "Ah, you are safe. Thank God." But instead of the fortissimo ejaculations a lesser genius might have used, Beethoven wrote a simple melodic phrase, beginning pianissimo.

Saint-Saens' Symphony is his most respectable work in quality and size. In the finale he has borrowed part of Arcadelt's "Ave Maria" for his climax theme. In the slow movement he too sedulously avoids copying the themes of others. The music is well written, effective in its way, but the whole symphony has not a tithe the emotion in the single phrase of Beethoven mentioned above.

The brass in the finale of the Saint-Saens played badly, otherwise the performance throughout the concert was acceptable, if not always brilliant.

GLOBE-MAY

LEAVE-TAKING AT HARVARD

The Boston Orchestra in the Final Cambridge Concert for the Year—Chaikovsky's "Pathetic" Symphony," Past, Present, Future—A Hint of "Rienzi"

NOT long ago Ernest Newman wrote amusingly—and scornfully—concerning the pathological nature of Chaikovsky's "Pathetic Symphony," declaring that a chance reader of the score a hundred years hence, would feel only shrinking from its triumphant disclosure of morbid melancholy. But, with due respect for Mr. Newman's well-founded objection to self-analysis in the arts, does "The Pathetic," even today, suggest to the unprejudiced listener the profound and tortured emotions which inspired it? The piece was played last evening at a concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Sanders Theatre and, making all allowance for Mr. Monteux's poised and temperate reading of the score, it seemed that this music is fast losing the particular qualities for which it has been extravagantly praised and vehemently condemned. The opening, with groaning bassoon and dark harmonies of divided basses and violas, is still dismal and lugubrious, but less dismal and less lugubrious than once it was. With an intellectual appreciation of the composer's intention rather than with an unwitting response to this utterance this and similar passages in the Symphony may now be heard. Again, it is still possible to find pleasurable excitement in certain of the more strident and tumultuous pages; but no longer may these measures overpower and stun. Once the final threnody seemed the voice of a lacerating grief, a devastating woe; yet, for some today it is but mildly mournful, and the stopped horns and cavernous tam-tam of the end bring less a shrudder of awe than a half- at the composer's ingenuously theatrical effect.

No longer, then may "The Pathe make way as a succession of shivers sensations—a sort of musical chambe horrors. In music any effect must with the passing of time, some measu its effectiveness, and the more a g composition is dependent for impres upon purely sensational elements, more quickly will it wither and perish the "Pathetic Symphony" survives for other thirty years—and well it may vive, for that time and much long will live not for vehement display of emotio but for persuasion as sheer music—cha or [illegible] richness of colors, solidity of [illegible] that this Symphany has—and to an uncommon degree—these virtues of melody, harmony, instrumentation and form may not be gainsaid. Indeed few symphonies written since the death of Beethoven have been in such respects, more liberally endowed. To be sure, certain melodies in "The Pathetic" tend to sound obvious and even commonplace, but it seems altogether likely that they will sound less obvious, less commonplace, a generation or two hence, when the popular musical speech will undoubtedly have acquired new turns of phrase. And whether or not the "Pathetic Symphony" continues to express all that Chaikovsky intended it to express is, after all, of slight concern so long as it may still please the ear and satisfy the mind. This it seems sure to do for many a year to come. The day when it definitely takes place beside the other "classic symphonies," the debates waged around it will become only the gossip of historians.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Airs from operas of Wagner and Saint-Saëns sung by Emma Roberts, and orchestral pieces from the operas of Grétry and Weber made the latter half of last evening's programme. Since there is a prospect that the German Company which lately visited us will mount "Rienzi" here next season, there was a touch of unusual interest in hearing from Miss Roberts the dramatic scene "Gerechter Gott" and the impassioned air succeeding it. In "Rienzi" is much that is good and much that is bad. In the Overture—the one fragment of the opera familiar to American audiences—the worst and the best of the piece are grotesquely mingled. But nowhere in the Overture is there music of the precise flavor of this "Gerechter Gott," which at times so strongly foreshadows "Tannhäuser" that certain passages might be introduced into the later opera with no sense of incongruity. Indeed these same passages have today a vividness and vitality denied to many pages of Tannhäuser" and even of "Lohengrin." Wagner was long in acquiring full maturity, but from the outset he had his moments of mastery. Blessed with a resonant rather than a luscious contralto voice, Miss Roberts was heard to better advantage in this stirring music of the youthful Wagner—which she made sufficiently dramatic—than in the familiar "Mon coeur s'ouvre à ta voix" from "Samson and Delilah." Perceptibly she failed to give Saint-Saëns's music the note of sensuous passion that alone may redeem its too facile charm.

In making his concert version of the three dances from Grétry's "Cephalus and Procris," Felix Mottl performed a valuable service. There is rare grace and rare distinction in these unpretentious pieces by the "Molière of Music," a composer whose scholarship was limited but whose inspiration was abundant. Last evening the dances, in particular the Minuet and the Gigue, were delightfully played, and was a well-nigh perfect performance of the romantic "Oberon" Overture that brought the concert to joyous end.

W. S. S.

TRANS. MAY. 4.

NEW MUSIC ASSORTED

A Tone-Poem by Chausson for the First Times in America at the Final Symphony Concerts — Vaughan Williams Writes a Mass—Likes and Dislikes Tabulated

ON June 10, 1899, Ernest Chausson met an untimely death. Then in his forty-fifth year Chausson was a composer of conspicuous attainment, and of, perhaps, richer promise. Outside a few songs that bear the stamp of perfect craftsmanship, his compositions suggest that he had not yet found his way, had not yet gained the wholly individual note that would mark him a master. The influence of Franck, and to greater degree that of Wagner, were still strong upon him, so that even in so late a piece as his "Soir de Fête," completed but a little more than a year before his tragic death, the hand of the latter composer is here and there visible.

For some reason this "Soir de Fête" has never found a publisher, and in consequence it has failed to become widely known. At the Symphony Concerts of tomorrow and Saturday it will, indeed, receive first performance in this country. The score from which Mr. Monteux will conduct is in Chausson's own writing and it bears at the end, together with the composer's signature, the inscription "San Domenico de Fiesole, 31 janvier, 1898." Upon the flyleaf is noted the first performance (March 13 of that year) at a Colonne Concert, in Paris, and succeeding performances in this order: "Brussels, October 1898, Ysaye"; "Barcelona, November 1898, d'Indy"; and "Montreux, March 9, 1899, Züttner." In a pencil note at the foot of the page Monsieur d'Indy has contributed the suggestion that the music would gain in effectiveness by being transposed a semitone higher.

So much for externals. The composition itself runs in four main divisions with a brief epilogue. At the outset the music is brilliant, animated, energetic, and it lies, strangely enough, in the somewhat heavy tonality of A-flat major—hence M. d'Indy's suggestion. Upon these energies succeeds a movement in triple time, half-way between a Scherzo and a Waltz, while the next section brings for the first time the typical Chausson, whose characeteristic Muse was greatly reflective, mildly melancholy. A melodic phrase for clarinet, followed in turn by woodwind chords slightly "Tristanesque" in color, prepares the way for music of nocturnal revery. Here the two harps play fantasmal scales against melting harmonies in strings and horns; while over a horn figure that slightly suggests a passage in the love music of Chaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" the clarinet intones a lyrical, tenderly passionate melody that later passes to the violins. This idyl ended, to a strumming of tambourines the music turns once more gay and waltz-like. For conclusion, no doubt in obedience to some programme not divulged, the composer turns for a few measures to the musing [illegible] of the middle section.

W. S. S.

'5 MAY 3

THE POPS

Peculiarly a metropolitan Boston institution, the annual season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall is the clearest assurance that we in this part of the world possess a discriminating sense of popular culture.

Whether the word is derived from popular, or the distinctive voice of stoppers shot out of a bottle by alcoholic pressure does not matter so much, in these days of Volsteadism, as that people come night after night to hear eighty Symphony Orchestra players, directed by the dynamic Jacchia, discourse as only that superb group of musicians can, upon themes lighter than is their custom, but with the power and finish that is their special excellence.

In an era when music for the people is expressed in crashy, trashy animal sounds, these concerts are like a bright candle shining in a murky musical world.

Encourage the young people to go to the "Pops," that their impressionable young ears may learn to appreciate quality, which in art, as in everything else, is the key to intelligence.

Monday is opening night, continuing even through Sundays for a long period. Watch for the daily program; select your nights and show by the goodly presence of Cambridge folk at these concerts that we do not miss the cream of opportunity when it comes our way.

CAMBRIDGE-SENTINEL-(DATE-?)

TO BROADCAST POPS ON OPENING NIGHT

Radio fans will have the first opportunity of hearing a pop concert when the entire opening programme of the 38th Pops season at Symphony Hall is broadcasted Monday night by the Shepard station. The music as played by the Pope Symphony Orchestra of 80 members, under the leadership of Agide Jacchia, will last from 8:15 until shortly before 11, and will include (exclusive of encores) 11 numbers.

POST-MAY.5.

THE SYMPHONY SEASON

The 42d season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ended with the concert of last night. The season has been an eventful one in many ways. The orchestra, which is of Mr. Monteux's creation, has never shown in its history greater technical perfection, euphony and plasticity.

Fifty-eight composers were represented, and there were 100 performances in all at each series of 24 concerts.

Beethoven and Mozart led, each with six works. Wagner came next, with five; Franck and Brahms, with four each; Liszt, Saint-Saens and Schumann, with three; Bach, Berlioz, Casella, Chausson, Debussy, Dvorak, Glazounov, Griffes, Haydn, Marx, Mendelssohn, Respighi, Rimsky-Korsakov, R. Strauss, Weber and Vaughan Williams, with two each.

American composers were represented by Ballantine, Chadwick, Foote, Griffes, Loeffler, MacDowell, D. G. Mason, Powell, Skilton, D. S. Smith. The names of Bloch and Salzedo might be added, for their home and their musical activity are in this country.

Ballantine's "From the Garden of Hellas" was performed for the first time.

WORKS PERFORMED FOR THE FIRST TIME IN AMERICA

Chausson: "Soir de Fete."
Davico: Symphonic Poem, "Polyphemus."
Dohnanyi: Violin Concerto, Op. 27 (Albert Spalding)
Goossens: "Tam o' Shanter."
Honegger: "Horace Victorieux."
Koechlin: Three Chorales.
Stravinsky: Suite No. 1, from the Ballet "Pulcinella."
Turina: Danzas Fantasticas.
Total........................ 8

WORKS PERFORMED FOR THE FIRST TIME IN BOSTON

Albeniz: Spanish Rhapsody for piano and orchestra (orchestrated by Casella; Alfredo Casella, pianist).
Bax: November Woods.
Bloch: "Schelomo" ("Solomon," Jewish Rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra; Jean Bedetti).
Bossi: Theme with Variations.
Casella: "Pupazzetti."
Chadwick: Anniversary Overture.
Dvorak: Symphony, F major, No. 3, Op. 76.
Griffes: "Clouds."
Holst: "The Planets."
Marx: Two songs with orchestra: "Marienlied," "If Love Hath Entered thy Heart" (Frances Alda).
Mason, D. G.: Prelude and Fugue for piano and orchestra (John Powell).
Powell: Rhapsody Negre for orchestra and piano (John Powell).
Rimsky-Korsakov: "Conte Feerique," Op. 29, and Suite from "The Legend of the Tsar Saltan."
Salzedo: "Enchanted Isles" for harp and orchestra (Carlo Salzedo).
Skilton: "Flute Serenade" and "Moccasin Game," from "Suite Primeval."
Smith, D. S.: "Fete Galante" for orchestra with flute obbligato (Georges Laurent).
Tcherpnin: Piano concerto (Benno Moiseiwitsch).
Williams: Fantasia on a Theme by Tallis for double-stringed orchestra.
Total........................ 18

WORKS PERFORMED FOR THE FIRST TIME AT THESE CONCERTS

Casella: "Italia."
Foote: "A Night Piece" for flute and string orchestra (Georges Laurent).
Griffes: "The White Peacock."
Puccini: Aria, "Vissi d' Arte," from "Tosca" (Frances Alda).
Rossini: Overture to "Semiramide."
Spontini: Overture to "La Vestale."
Total........................ 6

The following composers were represented at these concerts for the first time: Davico, Goossens, Holst, Honegger, Koechlin, Marx, Powell, Puccini, Salzedo, Skilton, Tcherpnin, Turina.

LIST OF SOLOISTS

Sopranos: Frances Alda, Frieda Hempel, Margaret Matzenauer	3
Violinists: Richard Burgin, Georges Enesco, Toscha Seidel, Albert Spalding	4
Violoncellist: Jean Bedetti	1
Flutist: Georges Laurent	1
Harpist: Carlos Salzedo	1
Pianists: Alfredo Casella, Alfred Cortot, Benno Moiseiwitsch, John Powell, Olga Samaroff, Arthur Schnabel	6
Organist: Marcel Dupre	1
Total	17

EXTRA CONCERTS

The orchestra gave five extra Symphony concerts, at which Ernest Schelling, pianist; Renée Chemet, violinist; Magdeleine Brard, pianist; Mme. Ferrabini-Jacchia, soprano; Florence Macbeth, soprano, were the soloists, while Georges Mager, trumpeter and Jesus Sanroma, pianist, took part in the performance of Saint-Saens's trumpet septet.

There were two concerts for the Pension Fund. Mme. Slobodskaja sang at the first; Sigrid Onegin, soprano, and Charles H. Bennett, at the second.

There were two concerts for young people; a concert for the benefit of Mr. Gericke; and the orchestra took part in the Chickering Centennial concert, when Mr. Dohnanyi's "Variations on a Nursery Song" for orchestra with piano were played for the first time in America, Mr. Dohnanyi, pianist.

POPS OPEN TOMORROW

Tomorrow night the 38th season of Pop concerts in Symphony hall will open with what may well be one of the largest audiences in the year. This exclusively Bostonian species of concerts which takes possession of Symphony hall in spring and early summer will have a large orchestra of symphony players under the inspiring direction of Agide Jacchia, who is about to be given his seventh season at this post. There will be the usual enlivenment of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony. The 100th anniversary of the first performance of "Home, Sweet Home" will be observed on Tuesday, May 8, by an arrangement of this air which Mr. Jacchia has made for the occasion. Next Sunday will bring the first of the newly instituted Sunday Pop concerts. Programs for the week follow:

MONDAY

Introduction to act 3, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz"	Weber
Waltz No. 15	Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arr. by Jacchia)	Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"	Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3	Tchaikovsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers	Jessel
Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen"	Bizet

TUESDAY

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"	J. Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"	Leoncavallo
Suite, "Nateracker"	Tchaikovsky
Organ Solo (H. D. Sleeper).
Liebesfreud	Kreisler
Overture to "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"	Herbert
Volga Bargemen's Song	arr. by Jacchia
"Home, Sweet Home"	Bishop-Jacchia

WEDNESDAY

Coronation March from "The Prophet"	Meyerbeer
Overture, "Il Guarany"	Gomes
Waltz, "1001 Nights"	Strauss
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"	Puccini
Tempest Scene, "Otello"	Verdi
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Tarantelle	Jacchia
Rhapsody, "Espana"	Chabrier
"L'Arlesienne" Suite, No. 2	Bizet
Tango	Albeniz
Hungarian Dance No. 1 in G minor	Brahms

THURSDAY

Procession of Bacchus	Delibes
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Waltz, "Wine, Women and Song"	Strauss
Fantasia, "La Tosca"	Puccini
Hymn to the Sun, from "Iris"	Mascagni
Romance (Horn solo, Max Hess)	Sinigaglia
Aragonaise from "Le Cid"	Massenet
Overture to "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner
Selection, "The Yankee Princess"	Kalman
Largo (Solo violin, harp, strings and organ.)	Handel
Slavonic Dance, No. 1	Dvorak

FRIDAY

(Southern night.)

Military March	Schubert
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber
(a) Deep River	Burleigh-Jacchia
(b) Dixie's Land	Dan Emmet
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
Suite, "Scenes de Ballet"	Glazounov
Afro-American Folk Songs	arr. by Jacchia
Scherzo, "Midsummer-Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Hungarian March	Berlioz
Waltz, "Roses from the South"	Strauss
Selection of Southern Airs	Bendix

SATURDAY

Charge of the Hussars	Spindler
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
"Little Suite"	Bizet
Procession to the Cathedral, from "Lohengrin" act 2	Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"	Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville"	Albeniz
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
Dubinushka (Solo trumpet, Georges Mager.)	arr. by Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa

SUNDAY

(Russian-Tchaikovsky program.)

Cortege from "Milada"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"	Tchaikovsky
"Kammenoi Ostrov"	Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"	Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony	Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome	Glazounov
"Eili, Eili" (Solo trumpet, Georges Mager.)	arr. by Jacchia
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"	Borodin
Song without Words	Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky

HERALD-MAY.6

[108]

New Pop Concert Season Opens Tomorrow

TOMORROW night in Symphony Hall the 38th season of the famous Pop concerts will open with what is likely to be one of the largest of Pops audiences. The concerts will continue every week-day evening and on alternate Sundays. The popular programs of Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony orchestra will be supplemented by refreshments served at the tables on the floor and in the first balcony.

The first of the novel Sunday Pop concerts will take place on May 13, with a Russian-Tschaikovsky program. The program for tomorrow night follows:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz"	Weber
Waltz No. 15	Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Giaconda"	Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia)	Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"	Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3	Tschhaikovsky
Suite, "Pehr Gynt"	Grieg
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers	Jessel
Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen"	Bizet

ADVTSR-MAY.6.

The 42d season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which came to an end last night in Symphony Hall, has been one of the most successful in the history of that institution.

This is true not only of the prevailing quality of the performances, but also of the support given the orchestra by the public. Its eagerness and enthusiasm for the Boston Symphony concerts are further indicated by the announcement that there will be no sale of seats for the Friday afternoon performances next season, because these seats have either been re-engaged by old subscribers or allotted to members of a large waiting list—and this in spite of an advance in prices.

Mr. Monteux is not only rapidly restoring to the orchestra the mechanical proficiency it has not had since the days of William Gericke, he is giving it with an extremely sensitive and responsive quality which it has not had in many seasons.

PROVED BY WALTER

This was strikingly demonstrated when Bruno Walter appeared as guest conductor of a pair of concerts. Mr. Walter, an authoritative and enthusiastic interpreter of compositions in which the orchestra had been repeatedly and thoroughly drilled, inspired his players and delighted his audiences.

He was able to ignore routine matters, even the systematic beating of time, in the interests of interpretation. He had only to indicate his wishes, for the superbly trained orchestra to carry them out to the last nuance. This was made possible by the labors of Mr. Monteux. Lacking them the conspicuous success of Mr. Walter might have been another story.

Novelties of Season

As a programme maker, Mr. Monteux showed his wonted catholicity and his curiosity about new music. It cannot be said that he was as fortunate as he has been in other seasons in discovering significant and unknown compositions and revealing them to his audiences. The crop seemed rather poor and thin this year. A conductor cannot promise each week a new work of importance. What he can do, and what Mr. Monteux has done, is to see to it that new composers are heard, and audiences kept in touch with current musical tendencies.

Eight compositions were played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time in America; eighteen for the first time in Boston. Six for the first time at these concerts.

First Time in America

The works heard for the first time in America were Chausson's "Soire de Fete," discussed yesterday in this paper; Davico's symphonic poem, "Polyphemus"; Dohnanyi's violin concerto, played by Albert Spalding; Goossens' "Tam O'Shanter," Honegger's "Horace Victorieux" [illegible] 1, from the [illegible]," Turina, "Danzas Fantasticas."

Davico's symphonic poem, not to be taken too seriously, was effective in the modern manner, though it had little more to commend it. Dohnanyi's violin concerto is well made, enjoyable, though rather conventional music, which appears to lie well for the solo instrument—ergo, a new and brilliant violin concerto to replenish the scant stock now available. Goossens' "Tam O'Shanter" is a box of orchestral tricks, an extravaganza of the modern orchestra. The subject can be made to yield musically more. Edgar Stillman Kelley has written a piano piece inspired by the same theme, with more real humor in it. George W. Chadwick's symphonic poem, inspired by the legend, is on the whole superior in imagination and humor to Goossens'.

Honneger's Music Stands Out

The music of Honneger, after months have gone by, stands out because of its force and individuality. That it is ugly in certain places will not be gainsaid, at least not by this generation. Yet, because of its directness, its power, and a certain stark and heroic discordancy the music remains in the memory, not to be lightly or easily dismissed. Greater men than Honneger, at first hearing of their music, have been called artistically degenerate or merely crazy. One is curious concerning the ultimate future of this man, one of the "Group of Six" now become the "Group of Five." The members of this group, extravagant and experimental though they may be, have in such instances as this music of Honneger and in Darius Milhaud's 2nd Symphonic Suite, shown that they have ideas. Also, whether one agrees with them or not, they are brilliant technicians and thoroughly masters of their medium.

Spanish Dances

The Chorals of Koechlin were unimportant, Stravinsky's Suite, divorced from the stage for which the music was designed, seems in the concert room mannered and artificial. It is far from the great Stravinsky of Oiseu de Feu and Petrushka. The Dances of Turina were picturesque in the Spanish manner, but a composer to create music of lasting interest must do more than transcribe dance rhythms and melodic twists found in the folk music of his country.

The works performed for the first time in Boston were 20 in number: Albeniz' "Spanish Rhapsody" for piano and orchestra, orchestrated and played by Alfred-Casella as pianist; Arnold Bax' symphonic poem, "November Woods"; Ernest Bloch's "Schelemo" ("Solomon") for 'cello and orchestra; Enrico Bossi's Theme and Variations; Cassella's set of small pieces, "Pupazzetti" for orchestra; Chadwick's "Anniversary Overture"; Dvorak's symphony in F major; Griffes' "Clouds"; Holst, "The Planets"; Marx, Two Songs with Orchestra, "Marien-

Mr. Salzedo soloist; Skilton's "Flute Serenade" and "Moccasion Game" from his "Suite Primeval"; D. S. Smith's 'Fete Galante" for flute and orchestra, Georges Laurent flutist; Tcherepnin's piano concerto, played by Benno Moiseivitch, and Vaughn Williams' "Fantasia on a Theme by Tallis" for double stringed orchestra.

Casella Ultra-Modern

The Rhapsody of Albeniz is so far of having depth or true originality one wonders why so thoughtful [illegible] a musician as Casella have troubled to orchestrate it [illegible] learn the piano part for public performance. Mr. Casella makes it his point to know everything that has been done in music and to have his finger, as it were, in every pie. Not all his ingenuity could make a masterpiece out of Albeniz' composition.

"November Woods," the work of a composer who has true Keltic fancy, is surprisingly conventional in its orchestral coloring and imagery. The composition which towers above every other novelty we heard this season is the wild Jewish rhapsody of Ernest Bloch. He is a composer to be reckoned with. He is one of the very few who write with the passion, the fanaticism and racial pride of his people in his veins. "Schelemo" is an amazing piece, as difficult, and as effective, for the 'cellist as for the orchestra. It should have been quickly repeated, that an audience unaccustomed to the splendors and the glooms of Bloch's orchestra might fully comprehend the virility, the sensuousness and intense emotion of the music.

Conventional Variations

Bossi has written in the most conventional German manner a Theme with variations. As composer Mr. Casella was heard in two compositions of his own which he conducted here: "Pupazzetti" and "Italia." We have said he is an ultra-modern. The "Pupazzetti" bears witness to that, but we would fain hear more of the composer of whom we just caught an inkling in the sombre and magnificent opening of "Italia."

The death of Charles Tomlinson Griffes at the age of 35 was a misfortune for a composer who was just beginning to enter into his own, and for the American people who admired him. "Clouds" and "The White Peacock" show unmistakably the influence of modern France. But they betray also a feeling for beauty which sets Griffes apart from his generation.

Gustav Holst's "Planets" proved middle class as it was pretentious and stodgy. Mr. Mason's Prelude and Fugue for Orchestra is for us music manufactured according to formula. The same might be said of D. S. Smith's Fete Galante, save that it was not nearly as well manufactured.

In happy contrast to Mr. Mason's Prelude and Fugue, on the same programme, stood John Powell's "Negro Rhapsody." This is a capital piece of music, much less pretentious, far more natural and spontaneous than Mr. Powell's longer and more elaborate compositions, full of humor and of felicitous detail. It is made from fragments of Negro song which Mr. Powell, a Southerner, often hears. It has in its introduction the smell of the jungle, and in the finale a nervous exhilaration made of negroid rhythms and an or melodic richness of color, solidity of structure. That this Symphany has—and to an uncommon degree—these virtues of melody, harmony, instrumentation and form may not be gainsaid. Indeed few symphonies written since the death of Beethoven have been in such respects, more liberally endowed. To be sure, certain melodies in "The Pathetic" tend to sound obvious and even commonplace, but it seems altogether likely that they will sound less obvious, less commonplace, a generation or two hence, when the popular musical speech will undoubtedly have acquired new turns of phrase. And whether or not the "Pathetic Symphony" continues to express all that Chaikovsky intended it to express is, after all, of slight concern so long as it may still please the ear and satisfy the mind. This it seems sure to do for many a year to come. the day when it definitely takes place beside the other "classic symphonies," the debates waged around it will become only the gossip of historians.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Airs from operas of Wagner and Saint-Saëns, sung by Emma Roberts, and orchestral pieces from the operas of Grétry and Weber made the latter half of last evening's programme. Since there is a prospect that the German Company which lately visited us will mount "Rienzi" here next season, there was a touch of unusual interest in hearing from Miss Roberts the dramatic scene "Gerechter Gott" and the impassioned air succeeding it. In "Rienzi" is much that is good and much that is bad. In the Overture—the one fragment of the opera familiar to American audiences—the worst and the best of the piece are grotesquely mingled. But nowhere in the Overture is there music of the precise flavor of this "Gerechter Gott," which at times so strongly foreshadows "Tannhäuser" that certain passages might be introduced into the later opera with no sense of incongruity. Indeed these same passages have today a vividness and vitality denied to many pages of Tannhäuser" and even of "Lohengrin." Wagner was long in acquiring full maturity, but from the outset he had his moments of mastery. Blessed with a resonant rather than a luscious contralto voice, Miss Roberts was heard to better advantage in this stirring music of the youthful Wagner—which she made sufficiently dramatic—than in the familiar "Mon coeur s'ouvre á ta voix" from "Samson and Delilah." Perceptibly she failed to give Saint-Saëns's music the note of sensuous passion that alone may redeem its too facile charm.

In making his concert version of the three dances from Grétry's "Cephalus and Procris," Felix Mottl performed a valuable service. There is rare grace and rare distinction in these unpretentious pieces by the "Molière of Music," a composer whose scholarship was limited but whose inspiration was abundant. Last evening the dances, in particular the Minuet and the Gigue, were delightfully played, and was a well-nigh perfect performance of the romantic "Oberon" Overture that brought the concert to joyous end.

W. S. S.

TRANS. MAY. 4.

NEW MUSIC ASSORTED

A Tone-Poem by Chausson for the First Times in America at the Final Symphony Concerts — Vaughan Williams Writes a Mass—Likes and Dislikes Tabulated

ON June 10, 1899, Ernest Chausson met an untimely death. Then in his forty-fifth year Chausson was a composer of conspicuous attainment, and of, perhaps, richer promise. Outside a few songs that bear the stamp of perfect craftsmanship, his compositions suggest that he had not yet found his way, had not yet gained the wholly individual note that would mark him a master. The influence of Franck, and to greater degree that of Wagner, were still strong upon him, so that even in so late a piece as his "Soir de Fête," completed but a little more than a year before his tragic death, the hand of the latter composer is here and there visible.

For some reason this "Soir de Fête" has never found a publisher, and in consequence it has failed to become widely known. At the Symphony Concerts of tomorrow and Saturday it will, indeed, receive first performance in this country. The score from which Mr. Monteux will conduct is in Chausson's own writing and it bears at the end, together with the composer's signature, the inscription "San Domenico de Fiesole, 31 janvier, 1898." Upon the flyleaf is noted the first performance (March 13 of that year) at a Colonne Concert, in Paris, and succeeding performances in this order: "Brussels, October 1898, Ysaye"; "Barcelona, November 1898, d'Indy"; and "Montreux, March 9, 1899, Züttner." In a pencil note at the foot of the page Monsieur d'Indy has contributed the suggestion that the music would gain in effectiveness by being transposed a semitone higher.

So much for externals. The composition itself runs in four main divisions with a brief epilogue. At the outset the music is brilliant, animated, energetic, and it lies, strangely enough, in the somewhat heavy tonality of A-flat major—hence M. d'Indy's suggestion. Upon these energies succeeds a movement in triple time, half-way between a Scherzo and a Waltz, while the next section brings for the first time the typical Chausson, whose characeteristic Muse was greatly reflective, mildly melancholy. A melodic phrase for clarinet, followed in turn by woodwind chords slightly "Tristanesque" in color, prepares the way for music of nocturnal revery. Here the two harps play fantasmal scales against melting harmonies in strings and horns; while over a horn figure that slightly suggests a passage in the love music of Chaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" the clarinet intones a lyrical, tenderly passionate melody that later passes to the violins. This idyl ended, to a strumming of tambourines the music turns once more gay and waltz-like. For conclusion, no doubt in obedience to some programme not divulged, the composer returns for a few measures to the musing realm of the middle section. W. S. S.

TRANS MAY 3.

THE POPS

Peculiarly a metropolitan Boston institution, the annual season of "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall is the clearest assurance that we in this part of the world possess a discriminating sense of popular culture.

Whether the word is derived from popular, or the distinctive voice of stoppers shot out of a bottle by alcoholic pressure does not matter so much, in these days of Volsteadism, as that people come night after night to hear eighty Symphony Orchestra players, directed by the dynamic Jacchia, discourse as only that superb group of musicians can, upon themes lighter than is their custom, but with the power and finish that is their special excellence.

In an era when music for the people is expressed in crashy, trashy animal sounds, these concerts are like a bright candle shining in a murky musical world.

Encourage the young people to go to the "Pops," that their impressionable young ears may learn to appreciate quality, which in art, as in everything else, is the key to intelligence.

Monday is opening night, continuing even through Sundays for a long period. Watch for the daily program; select your nights and show by the goodly presence of Cambridge folk at these concerts that we do not miss the cream of opportunity when it comes our way.

CAMBRIDGE-SENTINEL-(DATE-?)

TO BROADCAST POPS ON OPENING NIGHT

Radio fans will have the first opportunity of hearing a pop concert when the entire opening programme of the 38th Pops season at Symphony Hall is broadcasted Monday night by the Shepard station. The music as played by the Pope Symphony Orchestra of 80 members, under the leadership of Agide Jacchia, will last from 8:15 until shortly before 11, and will include (exclusive of encores) 11 numbers.

POST-MAY. 5.

THE SYMPHONY SEASON

The 42d season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ended with the concert of last night. The season has been an eventful one in many ways. The orchestra, which is of Mr. Monteux's creation, has never shown in its history greater technical perfection, euphony and plasticity.

Fifty-eight composers were represented, and there were 100 performances in all at each series of 24 concerts.

Beethoven and Mozart led, each with six works. Wagner came next, with five; Franck and Brahms, with four each; Liszt, Saint-Saens and Schumann, with three; Bach, Berlioz, Casella, Chausson, Debussy, Dvorak, Glazounov, Griffes, Haydn, Marx, Mendelssohn, Respighi, Rimsky-Korsakov, R. Strauss, Weber and Vaughan Williams, with two each.

American composers were represented by Ballantine, Chadwick, Foote, Griffes, Loeffler, MacDowell, D. G. Mason, Powell, Skilton, D. S. Smith. The names of Bloch and Salzedo might be added, for their home and their musical activity are in this country.

Ballantine's "From the Garden of Hellas" was performed for the first time.

WORKS PERFORMED FOR THE FIRST TIME IN AMERICA

Chausson: "Soir de Fete."
Davico: Symphonic Poem, "Polyphemus."
Dohnanyi: Violin Concerto, Op. 27 (Albert Spalding)
Goossens: "Tam o' Shanter."
Honegger: "Horace Victorieux."
Koechlin: Three Chorales.
Stravinsky: Suite No. 1, from the Ballet "Pulcinella."
Turina: Danzas Fantasticas.
Total.. 8

WORKS PERFORMED FOR THE FIRST TIME IN BOSTON

Albeniz: Spanish Rhapsody for piano and orchestra (orchestrated by Casella; Alfredo Casella, pianist).
Bax: November Woods.
Bloch: "Schelomo" ("Solomon," Jewish Rhapsody for violoncello and orchestra; Jean Bedetti).
Bossi: Theme with Variations.
Casella: "Pupazzetti."
Chadwick: Anniversary Overture.
Dvorak: Symphony, F major, No. 3, Op. 76.
Griffes: "Clouds."
Holst: "The Planets."
Marx: Two songs with orchestra: "Marienlied," "If Love Hath Entered thy Heart" (Frances Alda).
Mason, D. G.: Prelude and Fugue for piano and orchestra (John Powell).
Powell: Rhapsody Negre for orchestra and piano (John Powell).
Rimsky-Korsakov: "Conte Feerique," Op. 29, and Suite from "The Legend of the Tsar Saltan."
Salzedo: "Enchanted Isles" for harp and orchestra (Carlo Salzedo).
Skilton: "Flute Serenade" and "Moccasin Game," from "Suite Primeval."
Smith, D. S.: "Fete Galante" for orchestra with flute obbligato (Georges Laurent).
Tcherpnin: Piano concerto (Benno Moiseiwitsch).
Williams: Fantasia on a Theme by Tallis for double-stringed orchestra.
Total.. 18

WORKS PERFORMED FOR THE FIRST TIME AT THESE CONCERTS

Casella: "Italia."
Foote: "A Night Piece" for flute and string orchestra (Georges Laurent).
Griffes: "The White Peacock."
Puccini: Aria, "Vissi d' Arte," from "Tosca" (Frances Alda).
Rossini: Overture to "Semiramide."
Spontini: Overture to "La Vestale."
Total.. 6

The following composers were represented at these concerts for the first time: Davico, Goossens, Holst, Honegger, Koechlin, Marx, Powell, Puccini, Salzedo, Skilton, Tcherpnin, Turina.

LIST OF SOLOISTS

Sopranos: Frances Alda, Frieda Hempel, Margaret Matzenauer	3
Violinists: Richard Burgin, Georges Enesco, Toscha Seidel, Albert Spalding	4
Violoncellist: Jean Bedetti	1
Flutist: Georges Laurent	1
Harpist: Carlos Salzedo	1
Pianists: Alfredo Casella, Alfred Cortot, Benno Moiseiwitsch, John Powell, Olga Samaroff, Arthur Schnabel	6
Organist: Marcel Dupre	1
Total	17

EXTRA CONCERTS

The orchestra gave five extra Symphony concerts, at which Ernest Schelling, pianist; Renée Chemet, violinist; Magdeleine Brard, pianist; Mme. Ferrabini-Jacchia, soprano; Florence Macbeth, soprano, were the soloists, while Georges Mager, trumpeter and Jesus Sanroma, pianist, took part in the performance of Saint-Saens's trumpet septet.

There were two concerts for the Pension Fund. Mme. Slobodskaja sang at the first; Sigrid Onegin, soprano, and Charles H. Bennett, at the second.

There were two concerts for young people; a concert for the benefit of Mr. Gericke; and the orchestra took part in the Chickering Centennial concert, when Mr. Dohnanyi's "Variations on a Nursery Song" for orchestra with piano were played for the first time in America, Mr. Dohnanyi, pianist.

POPS OPEN TOMORROW

Tomorrow night the 38th season of Pop concerts in Symphony hall will open with what may well be one of the largest audiences in the year. This exclusively Bostonian species of concerts which takes possession of Symphony hall in spring and early summer will have a large orchestra of symphony players under the inspiring direction of Agide Jacchia, who is about to be given his seventh season at this post. There will be the usual enlivenment of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony. The 100th anniversary of the first performance of "Home, Sweet Home" will be observed on Tuesday, May 8, by an arrangement of this air which Mr. Jacchia has made for the occasion. Next Sunday will bring the first of the newly instituted Sunday Pop concerts. Programs for the week follow:

MONDAY

Introduction to act 3, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz"	Weber
Waltz No. 15	Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arr. by Jacchia)	Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"	Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3	Tchaikovsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers	Jessel
Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen"	Bizet

TUESDAY

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"	J. Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"	Leoncavallo
Suite, "Nateracker"	Tchaikovsky
Organ Solo (H. D. Sleeper).
Liebesfreud	Kreisler
Overture to "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"	Herbert
Volga Bargemen's Song	arr. by Jacchia
"Home, Sweet Home"	Bishop-Jacchia

WEDNESDAY

Coronation March from "The Prophet"	Meyerbeer
Overture, "Ill Guarany"	Gomes
Waltz, "1001 Nights"	Strauss
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"	Puccini
Tempest Scene, "Otello"	Verdi
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Tarantelle	Jacchia
Rhapsody, "Espana"	Chabrier
"L'Arlesienne" Suite, No. 2	Bizet
Tango	Albenis
Hungarian Dance No. 1 in G minor	Brahms

THURSDAY

Procession of Bacchus	Delibes
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Waltz, "Wine, Women and Song"	Strauss
Fantasia, "La Tosca"	Puccini
Hymn to the Sun, from "Iris"	Mascagni
Romance (Horn solo, Max Hess)	Sinigaglia
Aragonaise from "Le Cid"	Massenet
Overture to "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner
Selection, "The Yankee Princess"	Kalman
Largo	Handel
(Solo violin, harp, strings and organ.)
Slavonic Dance, No. 1	Dvorak

FRIDAY

(Southern night.)

Military March	Schubert
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber
(a) Deep River	Burleigh-Jacchia
(b) Dixie's Land	Dan Emmet
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
Suite, "Scenes de Ballet"	Glazounov
Afro-American Folk Songs	arr. by Jacchia
Scherzo, "Midsummer-Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Hungarian March	Berlioz
Waltz, "Roses from the South"	Strauss
Selection of Southern Airs	Bendix

SATURDAY

Charge of the Hussars	Spindler
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
"Little Suite"	Bizet
Procession to the Cathedral, from "Lohengrin" act 2	Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"	Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville"	Albeniz
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
Dubinushka	arr. by Jacchia
Solo trumpet, Georges Mager.
Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa

SUNDAY

(Russian-Tchaikovsky program.)

Cortege from "Milada"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"	Tchaikovsky
"Kammenoi Ostrov"	Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"	Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony	Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome	Glazounov
"Elli, Elli"	arr. by Jacchia
Solo trumpet, Georges Mager.
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"	Borodin
Song without Words	Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky

HERALD-MAY. 6 [100]

---

concerts.

New Pop Concert Season Opens Tomorrow

TOMORROW night in Symphony Hall the 38th season of the famous Pop concerts will open with what is likely to be one of the largest of Pops audiences. The concerts will continue every week-day evening and on alternate Sundays. The popular programs of Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony orchestra will be supplemented by refreshments served at the tables on the floor and in the first balcony.

The first of the novel Sunday Pop concerts will take place on May 13, with a Russian-Tschaikovsky program. The program for tomorrow night follows:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz"	Weber
Waltz No. 15	Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Giaconda"	Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia)	Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"	Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3	Tschhaikovsky
Spite, "Pehr Gynt"	Grieg
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers	Jessel
Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen"	Bizet

ADVTSR-MAY. 6.

The 42d season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which came to an end last night in Symphony Hall, has been one of the most successful in the history of that institution.

This is true not only of the prevailing quality of the performances, but also of the support given the orchestra by the public. Its eagerness and enthusiasm for the Boston Symphony concerts are further indicated by the announcement that there will be no sale of seats for the Friday afternoon performances next season, because these seats have either been re-engaged by old subscribers or allotted to members of a large waiting list—and this in spite of an advance in prices.

Mr. Monteux is not only rapidly restoring to the orchestra the mechanical proficiency it has not had since the days of William Gericke, he is giving it with an extremely sensitive and responsive quality which it has not had in many seasons.

PROVED BY WALTER

This was strikingly demonstrated when Bruno Walter appeared as guest conductor of a pair of concerts. Mr. Walter, an authoritative and enthusiastic interpreter of compositions in which the orchestra had been repeatedly and thoroughly drilled, inspired his players and delighted his audiences.

He was able to ignore routine matters, even the systematic beating of time, in the interests of interpretation. He had only to indicate his wishes, for the superbly trained orchestra to carry them out to the last nuance. This was made possible by the labors of Mr. Monteux. Lacking them the conspicuous success of Mr. Walter might have been another story.

Novelties of Season

As a programme maker, Mr. Monteux showed his wonted catholicity and his curiosity about new music. It cannot be said that he was as fortunate as he has been in other seasons in discovering significant and unknown compositions and revealing them to his audiences. The crop seemed rather poor and thin this year. A conductor cannot promise each week a new work of importance. What he can do, and what Mr. Monteux has done, is to see to it that new composers are heard, and audiences kept in touch with current musical tendencies.

Eight compositions were played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time in America; eighteen for the first time in Boston. Six for the first time at these concerts.

First Time in America

The works heard for the first time in America were Chausson's "Soire de Fete," discussed yesterday in this paper; Davico's symphonic poem, "Polyphemus;" Dohnanyi's violin concerto, played by Albert Spalding; Goossens' "Tam O'Shanter;" Honegger's "Horace Victorieux;" Koechlin's "Three Chorales"; Stravinsky's Suite No. 1, from the ballet "Pulcinella"; Turina, "Danzas Fantasticas."

Davico's symphonic poem, not to be taken too seriously, was effective in the modern manner, though it had little more to commend it. Dohnanyi's violin concerto is well made, enjoyable, though rather conventional music, which appears to lie well for the solo instrument—ergo, a new and brilliant violin concerto to replenish the scant stock now available. Goossens' "Tam O'Shanter" is a box of orchestral tricks, an extravaganza of the modern orchestra. The subject can be made to yield musically more. Edgar Stillman Kelley has written a piano piece inspired by the same theme, with more real humor in it. George W. Chadwick's symphonic poem, inspired by the legend, is on the whole superior in imagination and humor to Goossens'.

Honneger's Music Stands Out

The music of Honneger, after months have gone by, stands out because of its force and individuality. That it is ugly in certain places will not be gainsaid, at least not by this generation. Yet, because of its directness, its power, and a certain stark and heroic discordancy the music remains in the memory, not to be lightly or easily dismissed. Greater men than Honneger, at first hearing of their music, have been called artistically degenerate or merely crazy. One is curious concerning the ultimate future of this man, one of the "Group of Six" now become the "Group of Five." The members of this group, extravagant and experimental though they may be, have in such instances as this music of Honneger and in Darius Milhaud's 2nd Symphonic Suite, shown that they have ideas. Also, whether one agrees with them or not, they are brilliant technicians and thoroughly masters of their medium.

Spanish Dances

The Chorals of Koechlin were unimportant, Stravinsky's Suite, divorced from the stage for which the music was designed, seems in the concert room mannered and artificial. It is far from the great Stravinsky of Oiseu de Feu and Petrushka. The Dances of Turina were picturesque in the Spanish manner, but a composer to create music of lasting interest must do more than transcribe dance rhythms and melodic twists found in the folk music of his country.

The works performed for the first time in Boston were 20 in number: Albeniz' "Spanish Rhapsody" for piano and orchestra, orchestrated and played by Alfred-Casella as pianist; Arnold Bax' symphonic poem, "November Woods"; Ernest Bloch's "Schelemo" ("Solomon") for 'cello and orchestra; Enrico Bossi's Theme and Variations; Cassella's set of small pieces, "Pupazzetti" for orchestra; Chadwick's "Anniversary Overture"; Dvorak's symphony in F major; Griffes' "Clouds"; Holst, "The Planets"; Marx, Two Songs with Orchestra, "Marien-

Mr. Salzedo soloist; Skilton's "Flute Serenade" and "Moccasion Game" from his "Suite Primeval"; D. S. Smith's 'Fete Galante" for flute and orchestra, Georges Laurent flutist; Tcherepnin's piano concerto, played by Benno Moiseivitch, and Vaughn Williams' "Fantasia on a Theme by Tallis" for double stringed orchestra.

Casella Ultra-Modern

The Rhapsody of Albeniz is so far of having depth or true originality one wonders why so thoughtful learned a musician as Casella have troubled to orchestrate it learn the piano part for public performance. Mr. Casella makes it his point to know everything that has been done in music and to have his finger, as it were, in every pie. Not all his ingenuity could make a masterpiece out of Albeniz' composition.

"November Woods," the work of a composer who has true Keltic fancy, is surprisingly conventional in its orchestral coloring and imagery. The composition which towers above every other novelty we heard this season is the wild Jewish rhapsody of Ernest Bloch. He is a composer to be reckoned with. He is one of the very few who write with the passion, the fanaticism and racial pride of his people in his veins. "Schelemo" is an amazing piece, as difficult, and as effective, for the 'cellist as for the orchestra. It should have been quickly repeated, that an audience unaccustomed to the splendors and the glooms of Bloch's orchestra might fully comprehend the virility, the sensuousness and intense emotion of the music.

Conventional Variations

Bossi has written in the most conventional German manner a Theme with variations. As composer Mr. Casella was heard in two compositions of his own which he conducted here: "Pupazzetti" and "Italia." We have said he is an ultra-modern. The "Pupazzetti" bears witness to that, but we would fain hear more of the composer of whom we just caught an inkling in the sombre and magnificent opening of "Italia."

The death of Charles Tomlinson Griffes at the age of 35 was a misfortune for a composer who was just beginning to enter into his own, and for the American people who admired him. "Clouds" and "The White Peacock" show unmistakably the influence of modern France. But they betray also a feeling for beauty which sets Griffes apart from his generation.

Gustav Holst's "Planets" proved middle class as it was pretentious and stodgy. Mr. Mason's Prelude and Fugue for Orchestra is for us music manufactured according to formula. The same might be said of D. S. Smith's Fete Galante, save that it was not nearly as well manufactured.

In happy contrast to Mr. Mason's Prelude and Fugue, on the same programme, stood John Powell's "Negro Rhapsody." This is a capital piece of music, much less pretentious, far more natural and spontaneous than Mr. Powell's longer and more elaborate compositions, full of humor and of felicitous detail. It is made from fragments of Negro song which Mr. Powell, a Southerner, often hears. It has in its introduction the smell of the jungle, and in the finale a nervous exhilaration made of negroid rhythms and an

Salzedo's Tone-Colors

The pieces of Rimsky-Korsakoff belong to his least interesting compositions. Mr. Salzedo is a curious phenomenon. He is cursed with a most acute sense of tone color, which must make him highly dissatisfied with most of the music he hears today. His compositions are formless, though one always listens in hope of a new tone-tint, and is often rewarded.

The Tcherepnin concerto, based on a single theme, is brilliant, kaleidoscopic, but does not go very deep. There was a certain Russian—Tschaikowsky by name—who wrote a concerto in B flat minor. Many have attempted but few have succeeded in emulating him in this form. The composition that emerges with the Bloch piece from all this welter of names is Vaughan Williams' "Fantasia on the Theme of Tallis."

It is a fine, gray piece of music, poetic and deeply emotional. The composer adopts a harmonic style which has an inspired appropriateness to the theme. There is ancestral spirit in this piece, the thought of a man of today speaking with the tongues of his forefathers, interpreting their visions for the living generation. No other living English composer impresses us as deeply as Vaughan Williams.

One hundred compositions were heard at these 24 concerts. Spanish, German, American, Irish, French, Swiss, Italian, Hungarian, Bohemian, Roumanian, Belgian, Austrian, Russian and Finnish composers were represented. Twelve of the composers were German and Austrian. There were nine Frenchmen, four Russians, six Italians, eight Americans and lesser groups—on the whole, a very notable dispensation, and all these nationalities and schools were represented, and their music brilliantly performed without the aid of a Musical Union such as is now throttling the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

POST-MAY. 6.

Pops Opening

Monday evening, May 7th, the thirty-eighth season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall. A large Symphony Orchestra will provide popular programs every night, with the usual additional attraction of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony.

An innovation will be Sunday Night Pop Concerts, to be given on alternate Sundays, beginning May 13th. This first Sunday Pop Concert will have a Russian-Tchaikovsky program.

Agide Jacchia will again be the Pops conductor, and this will be his seventh season at this post. This celebrity has devoted the larger part of his career to the conducting of opera, in which field he was preeminent in his native Italy before he came to this country. He conducted several opera companies in the United States, particularly the Century Theatre Opera in New York and the Boston National Opera Company. At the head of the Pops he has given a new importance to their musical aspect, while making them more popular than ever before.

Mr. Jacchia's opening program, which will mingle old Pops favorites with numbers to be heard for the first time at the Pops, follows: Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Overature to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Waltz No. 5, Brahms-Gericke; Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Prelude opera 28, No. 6, Chopin; Waltz, "Espana," Chabrier; Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tchaikovsky; Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; Cypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet.

EV.-ADVOCATE, MAY 3

Pops Season Opens Monday—Plan Sunday Evening Concerts

The opening night of the Pops is always one of the biggest of the Pop season, and the first concert, which will be given next Monday evening, May 7, promises to be no exception.

This spring and summer edition of Symphony hall concerts is entering on its 38th season, and it is the seventh under the leadership of Agide Jacchia, most popular of all Pops conductors.

The usual accompaniment of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony will add to the programs. The second night at the Pops, Tuesday, May 8, coincides with the 100th anniversary of the first performance of "Home Sweet Home," and Mr. Jacchia has made a special arrangement of this immortal air for the occasion.

[illegible] May 13, will be the first [illegible] Sunday evening Pop concert, the principal new feature of this season, and this concert will [illegible] a Russian-Tschaikovsky program.

[illegible] program (May 7) follows:

MONDAY

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin" ... Wagner

[illegible] to "Der Freischutz"...Weber

[illegible] 15..........Brahms-Gericke

[illegible] "La Gioconda"...Ponchielli

[illegible] Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt

[illegible] No. 6 (arranged by [illegible]).............Chopin

[illegible]..............Waldteufel

[illegible] Suite No. 3 ... Tschaikowsky

[illegible] Wooden Soldiers ... Jessel

TUESDAY

Prelude to "Carmen"............Bizet

Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"..............Nicolai

Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"..................J. Strauss

Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo

Suite, "Nutcracker"....Tschaikovsky

Organ solo.......Prof. H. D. Sleeper

Liebesfreud ....Kreisler

Overture to "Tannhauser"....Wagner

Selection, "Orange Blossoms"..Herbert

Volga Bargemen's Song arranged by Agide Jacchia

"Home, Sweet Home"..Bishop-Jacchia

WEDNESDAY

Coronation March from "The Prophet"......................Meyerbeer

Overture, "Il Guarany".......Gomes

Waltz, "1001 Nights"..........Strauss

Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"..Puccini

Tempest Scene, "Otello".......Verdi

Prelude to "Lohengrin"......Wagner

Tarantelle ....Jacchia

Rhapsody, "Espana"..........Chabrier

"L'Arlesienne" Suite No. 2....Bizet

Tango ....Albenis

Hungarian Dance No. 1 in G minor ... Brahms

THURSDAY

Procession of Bacchus.......Delibes

Overture to "Mignon".......Thomas

Waltz, "Wine, Women and Song" ... Strauss

Fantasia, "La Tosca"...........Puccini

Hymn to the Sun, from "Iris" ... Mascagni

Romance, (Horn solo, Max Hess) ... Sinigaglia

Aragonaise, from "Le Cid"..Massenet

Overture to "Tannhauser"...Wagner

Selection, "The Yankee Princess" ... Kalman

Largo, (solo, violin, harp, strings and organ)..................Handel

Slavonic Dance, No. 1........Dvorak

FRIDAY

Southern Night

Military March..............Schubert

Overture to "Oberon".........Weber

Deep River..........Burleigh-Jacchia

Dixie's Land.............Dan Emmet

Fantasia, "Aida"..................Verdi

Suite, "Scenes de Ballet"..Glazounov

Afro-American Folk Songs arranged by Agide Jacchia

Scherzo, "Midsummer - Night's Dream"..............Mendelssohn

Ride of the Valkyries........Wagner

Hungarian March.............Berlioz

Waltz, "Roses from the South" ... Strauss

Selection of Southern Airs....Bendix

SATURDAY

Charge of the Hussars.......Spindler

Overture to "William Tell"...Rossini

Waltz, "The Barcarolle"..Waldteufel

Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda".................Ponchielli

Little Suite.........................Bizet

Procesion to the Cathedral, from "Lohengrin" Act 2.........Wagner

"Whispering of the Flowers"....Blon

Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville".........................Albenis

Fantasia "Cavalleria Rusticana" ... Mascagni

Dubinushka......arr. by Agide Jacchia

Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager

Stars and Stripes Forever......Sousa

TRAV. MAY 5.

AGAIN THE POPS

A New Series of the Familiar Concerts to Begin on Monday Under the Usual Conditions—Mr. Jacchia for Conductor and Programme-Maker—Occasional Sundays

For a thirty-eighth spring and summer, the Pop Concerts will begin on Monday at Symphony Hall to continue there on every secular evening and, by exception, on four alternate Sundays, well into July. Once more the floor will be cleared of rows of seats, and tables and chairs will replace them. Again it will be possible (except on Sundays) to eat at them, to drink at them—whatever the law allows; to smoke at them (Sundays again excepted) unmolested. Furthermore, for those who prefer liquid refreshment apart from music, a bar—as bars go nowadays—stands as heretofore at the back of the first balcony. Food and drink at The Pops have long been of the best, and this spring there will be no departure from standard. According to custom also, the two balconies will be reserved for those who would take their pleasure as at any other concert. The Symphony Orchestra, seventy or eighty strong, as need may require, will provide that music; while again Mr. Jacchia returns to lead it. By this time his tireless energy with band and music, his zest for instrumental melody, his fire of rhythm, his communicating verve are an old story. Orchestra and audience alike answer nightly to him.

As in the past, the conductor will make more various and interesting programmes than have any of his predecessors. Operatic overtures, waltzes and marches, occasional vivid fragments from symphonies, frequent fantasias from familiar operas, solo-pieces, miniatures, ballet music and a generally pleasing miscellany will all figure upon them. Thus the list for Monday includes fragments of "Lohengrin" and "Der Freischütz" with the Polonaise from Chaikovsky's Third Suite for novel piece. On Tuesday, to note the centenary of the first performance of "Home, Sweet Home," Mr. Jacchia's orchestral arrangement of the ballad will be heard. Wednesday will bring Chabrier's "Espana" and bits of Bizet's music to "L'Arlésienne." The programme for Thursday lists a horn-solo for Mr. Hess and a "selection" from Kalmán's new and vivid Hungarian operetta, "The Yankee Princess." A "Southern Night," on Friday wanders from Strauss's waltz, "Soutnern Roses" to arrangements of negro folk-tunes. The usual light miscellany fills Saturday; while for the first Sunday evening, May 13, Russian composers will divide a notable programme from the Tartar dances in "Prince Igor" to Salome's dance according to Glazunov. By familiar custom The Transcript will print each day the programme of the evening. On Monday evening, for the first time, a Pop Concert will be sent broadcast by radio—through the Shepard Stores.

TRANS. MAY 5

POPS BEGIN 38TH SEASON MAY 7 AT SYMPHONY HALL

AGIDE JACCHIA

The opening night of the Pops is always one of the biggest of the Pop season and the first Pop concert, which will be given next Monday evening, May 7, promises to be no exception.

The usual accompaniment of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony will add to the popular programs which Agide Jacchia, who will again conduct the orchestra, will present nightly at Symphony hall. The second night at the Pops, Tuesday, May 8, coincides with the hundredth annivery of the first performance of "Home Sweet Home" and Mr. Jacchia has made a special arranggement of this immortal air for the occasion.

Opening program (May 7) follows:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin, Wagner; Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Waltz No. 15, Brahams-Gericke; Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia), Chopin; Waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; Polonaise from Suit No. 3, Tschaikowsky; Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; Parade of the Wooden Soldiers, Jessel; Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen," Bizet.

TELE-MAY. 5.

Concluding Concert of the Boston Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its twenty-fourth concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program:

Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3
Chausson, "Soir de Fête"
Respighi, "Fountains of Rome"
Saint-Saëns, Symphony in C minor

This concert, both in the interest of the music played and in the quality of the playing, brought the season to a fitting close. It brought out, perhaps, more clearly than any other program of the season Mr. Monteux's powers as an interpreter of both modern and "classic" music, for whatever the date of the composition of Saint-Saëns' Symphony it belongs unquestionably to the music of a past generation.

Mr. Monteux has many times given proof of his understanding and sympathetic feeling for the music of Beethoven. From the beginning of his term as conductor of the orchestra here he may be said to have restored the music of the Flemish-German-Austrian master which had under the batons of preceding conductors often suffered from a false and artificial "tradition." Mr. Monteux has never sought to give individual readings of Beethoven; rather has he endeavored to bring out the inherent beauty and grandeur of the music, content to let its message speak unhampered, and when all is said and done this is the quality which distinguishes the real interpretative artist. Unfortunately this quality is often unappreciated by the general public, who are ever inclined to applaud the sensational and the spectacular as in many other forms of art. Yet as time goes on the public of the symphony concerts, often strangely provincial in its judgment, will realize more and more what an artist, in the highest sense of the word, Mr. Monteux is, and will recall with admiration and respect such a performance as was given yesterday afternoon of the "Leonore" overture.

It may not be altogether out of place to cite a few of its most obvious perfections: the dramatic opening, the masterly reading of the few mysterious measures immediately preceding the Allegro; the beginning of the latter with its pulsing rhythm, the carefully prepared entry of the trumpet call off stage, which has never sounded with more effect, and the truly Bethovian joy of the exultant finish. This was Beethoven's music as he must have imagined it, for no one who had read his letters or contemporary accounts of him as a musician can have failed to realize yesterday afternoon how completely characteristic of the man was this music and Mr. Monteux's interpretation of it.

Chausson's "Soir de Fête," save in its reflective middle portion, scarcely reaches the high level of his symphony, yet it is agreeable, effective [illegible]

[illegible] repertory. [illegible] Respighi's "Fountains of Rome," which is picturesque, imaginative, though somewhat facile.

Saint-Saëns' symphony grows with each hearing. Before such nobility of conception and style, such perfection and command of technical resources we can but mutely wonder. It is a work for all time, one of those marvels of almost more than human genius which is given to the world but seldom. To say that the performance was worthy of the music is granting the greatest praise, praise justified a hundred fold.

S. M.

MONITOR MAY. 5.

Patronesses for "Pop's Night"

Mmes. George W. Vaillant, George H. Burrage, George P. Baker, John S. Penman, Roger B. Merriman, Arthur G. Everett, Alexander Steinert and John F. Moors are among the patronesses for Radcliffe night at the "Pops." This event which comes on Tuesday, the 15th, will bring out a large audience of Radcliffe graduates and friends of the college as it is the last big affair of the season to benefit the endowment fund which now lacks but $65,000 of completion. A large portion of this sum belongs to the Boston quota and must be raised before July 1.

The concert is under the auspices of the Radcliffe Club of Boston which Mrs. Frederick L. Day is president. Miss Lucie A. Kramer is chairman of the committee in charge. Songs by Mrs. Laura Comstock Littlefield, Radcliffe 1904, who is well known from her numerous appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Handel and Haydn, and Cecelia clubs will add greatly to the program. College songs will be sung by the Radcliffe Choral Society.

Tickets are now on sale at the Radcliffe endowment headquarters, 603 Boylston street and at Herrick's.

ADVTSR. MAY. 6

Another Season of the "Pops" Opens Tomorrow

Tomorrow night in Symphony Hall the 38th season of the famous Pop Concerts will open with what is likely to be one of the largest of Pops audiences. This Summer version of Symphony Hall concerts will continue every week-day evening and on alternate Sundays.

The popular programs of Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra will be supplemented by refreshments served at the tables which cover the floor of Symphony Hall and in the first balcony.

Mr Jacchia is the most applauded and admired of all Pops conductors, and has made for the opening week a particularly attractive series of programs.

At the concert Tuesday, May 8, students and alumnae of Smith College will be present and the conductor will pay homage to the composer of "Home Sweet Home" by performing his own arrangement of the modern melody at the 100th anniversary of its first performance, which falls on this day.

Wednesday, May 9, members of the Durant, Inc, will celebrate, while Friday, May 11, will bring a program featuring Southern melodies.

Sunday the first of the newly instituted series of Sunday pop concerts will take place on May 13, with a Russian-Tschaikowsky program.

The opening program for Monday night follows: Introduction to act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Waltz No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; Second Hungarian rhapsody, Liszt; Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia), Chopin; waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tschaikowsky; suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; gypsy dance, from "Carmen," Bizet.

Boston Symphony Season

The orchestra, under Mr Monteux, has occasionally given very fine performances of particular works, such as "Scheherezade," "Till Eulenspeigel" and a few others with which he seemingly feels deep sympathy. But in general the instrument now exceeds in subtlety the conductor whose business it is to play upon it.

The loss of Mr Neumann's unequalled talent at the kettle drums has been felt at every concert, though the man who has taken his place is thoroughly competent. There has fortunately been no other important change in personnel. All the symphony concerts have drawn very large audiences. The success of the People's Symphony concerts, in a different field, has also been gratifying.

GLOBE-MAY. 6.

POP CONCERTS OPEN 38TH SEASON TONIGHT

The 38th season of pop concerts will open tonight with what will probably be one of the biggest audiences of the year. Agide Jacchia, who is to begin his 7th season as pops conductor, has made the following program for this occasion:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Waltz No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia), Chopin; Waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tschaikowsky; Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen," Bizet.

HERALD MAY. 7.

RADIO PROGRAMS FOR TODAY

(Daylight Saving Time)

Station WNAC, Boston

286 Meters

12:58 P M—Time signals.

1:05 P M—Weather report.

4 P M—Dance music by the Shepard Colonial Orchestra; Organ recital, broadcast direct from The Modern Theatre.

6:30 P M—Children's Half-hour.

8:15 P M—"Pops" Concert, broadcast direct from Symphony Hall; Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Overture to "Dear Freischutz," Weber; Waltz, No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; intermission; "Second Hungarian Rhapsody," Liszt; Prelude op 28, No. 6, Chopin; (Arranged by Agide Jacchia). Waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tchaikovsky; intermission; Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; "Morning Mood," "Anitra's Dance," "In the Hall of the Mountain King," "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; Gypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet; encores announced.

GLOBE-MAY. 7.

POPS OPEN TONIGHT

Agide Jacchia has chosen the following program for the Pop concert opening tonight:—

Introduction, Act 3, "Lohengrin"... Wagner

Overture, "Der Freischutz".......Weber

Waltz No. 15............Brahms-Gericke

Fantasia, "La Gioconda"......Ponchielli

Second Hungarian Rhapsody......Liszt

Prelude, op. 28, No. 6............Chopin

Waltz, "Espana"...............Waldteufel

Polonaise from Suite No. 3.Tschaikowsky

Suite, "Peer Gynt"...............Grieg

Parade of the Wooden Soldiers....Jessel

Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen"....Bizet

ADVTSR-MAY. 7.

POPS OPEN TONIGHT IN SYMPHONY HALL

The thirty-eighth season of Pop concerts will open tonight with what will probably be one of the biggest audiences of the year. Agide Jacchia, who is to begin his seventh season as Pops conductor, has made the following program for this occasion:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin" Wagner

Overture to "Der Freischutz" ......Weber

Waltz No. 15 ....Brahms-Gericke

Fantasia "La Gioconda" ....Ponchielli

Second Hungarian Rhapsody ....Liszt

Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia) ....Chopin

Waltz "Espana" ....Waldteufel

Polonaise from Suite No. 3 ..Tschaikowsky

Suite "Peer Gynt" ....Grieg

Parade of the Wooden Soldiers ......Jessel

Gypsy Dance from "Carmen" ....Bizet

AMER. MAY. 7.

8:15 P. M.—"Pops" concert, broadcast direct from Symphony hall; 80 members of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Agide Jacchia, conductor.

1—Introduction to act 3, "Lohengrin" ... Wagner

2—Overture to "Der Freischutz"......Weber

3—Waltz, No 15 ....Brahms-Gericke

4—Fantasia "La Gioconda" .....Ponchielli

Intermission

5—"Second Hungarian Rhapsody......Liszt

6—Prelude op. 28, No. 6..............Chopin (Arranged by Agide Jacchia)

7—Waltz, "Espana"..............Waldteufel

8—Polonaise from Suite No. 3. Tschaikovsky

Intermission

9—Suite, "Peer Gynt" ....Grieg
a—"Morning Mood"
b—"Anitra's Dance"
c—"In the Hall of the Mountain King"

10—"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"..Jessel

11—Gypsy dance from Carmen.........Bizet

Encores announced

HERALD-MAY. 7.

8:15 p. m.—"Pops" Concert. Broadcast direct from Symphony Hall. 80 members of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Agide Jacchia conductor. 1. Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; 2. Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; 3. Waltz, No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; 4. Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli. Intermission— 5. "Second Hungarian Rhapsody," Liszt; 6. Prelude op. 28, No. 6, Chopin, (Arranged by Agide Jacchia). 7. Waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel, 8. Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tschaikovsky. Intermission—9. Suite, "Peer Gynt," Greig, (a) "Morning Mood," (b) "Anitra's Dance," (c) "In the Hall of the Mountain King," 10. "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; 11. Gypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet; Encores announced.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

OPENING NIGHT

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin" Wagner

Overture to "Der Freischütz"...Weber

Waltz No. 15........Brahms-Gericke

Fantasia, "La Gioconda"..Ponchielli

Second Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt

Prelude, Op. 28, No. 6.......Chopin (Arranged by Agide Jacchia)

Waltz, "España"..........Waldteufel

Polonaise from Suite No. 3 ...... Tschaikowsky

Suite, "Peer Gynt"..............Grieg

Parade of the Wooden Soldiers.Jessel

Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen"...Bizet

MONITOR MAY 7

American temperament.

Salzedo's Tone-Colors

The pieces of Rimsky-Korsakoff belong to his least interesting compositions. Mr. Salzedo is a curious phenomenon. He is cursed with a most acute sense of tone color, which must make him highly dissatisfied with most of the music he hears today. His compositions are formless, though one always listens in hope of a new tone-tint, and is often rewarded.

The Tcherepnin concerto, based on a single theme, is brilliant, kaleidoscopic, but does not go very deep. There was a certain Russian—Tschaikowsky by name—who wrote a concerto in B flat minor. Many have attempted but few have succeeded in emulating him in this form. The composition that emerges with the Bloch piece from all this welter of names is Vaughan Williams' "Fantasia on the Theme of Tallis."

It is a fine, gray piece of music, poetic and deeply emotional. The composer adopts a harmonic style which has an inspired appropriateness to the theme. There is ancestral spirit in this piece, the thought of a man of today speaking with the tongues of his forefathers, interpreting their visions for the living generation. No other living English composer impresses us as deeply as Vaughan Williams.

One hundred compositions were heard at these 24 concerts. Spanish, German, American, Irish, French, Swiss, Italian, Hungarian, Bohemian, Roumanian, Belgian, Austrian, Russian and Finnish composers were represented. Twelve of the composers were German and Austrian. There were nine Frenchmen, four Russians, six Italians, eight Americans and lesser groups—on the whole, a very notable dispensation, and all these nationalities and schools were represented, and their music brilliantly performed without the aid of a Musical Union such as is now throttling the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

POST-MAY 6.

Pops Opening

Monday evening, May 7th, the thirty-eighth season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall. A large Symphony Orchestra will provide popular programs every night, with the usual additional attraction of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony.

An innovation will be Sunday Night Pop Concerts, to be given on alternate Sundays, beginning May 13th. This first Sunday Pop Concert will have a Russian-Tchaikovsky program.

Agide Jacchia will again be the Pops conductor, and this will be his seventh season at this post. This celebrity has devoted the larger part of his career to the conducting of opera, in which field he was preeminent in his native Italy before he came to this country. He conducted several opera companies in the United States, particularly the Century Theatre Opera in New York and the Boston National Opera Company. At the head of the Pops he has given a new importance to their musical aspect, while making them more popular than ever before.

Mr. Jacchia's opening program, which will mingle old Pops favorites with numbers to be heard for the first time at the Pops, follows: Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Overature to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Waltz No. 5, Brahms-Gericke; Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Prelude opera 28, No. 6, Chopin; Waltz, "Espana," Chabrier; Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tchaikovsky; Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; Cypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet.

JEWI-ADVOCATE, MAY 3

Pops Season Opens Monday—Plan Sunday Evening Concerts

The opening night of the Pops is always one of the biggest of the Pop season, and the first concert, which will be given next Monday evening, May 7, promises to be no exception.

This spring and summer edition of Symphony hall concerts is entering on its 38th season, and it is the seventh under the leadership of Agide Jacchia, most popular of all Pops conductors.

The usual accompaniment of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony will add to the programs. The second night at the Pops, Tuesday, May 8, coincides with the 100th anniversary of the first performance of "Home Sweet Home," and Mr. Jacchia has made a special arrangement of this immortal air for the occasion.

Sunday, May 13, will be the first of the Sunday evening Pop concerts, the principal new feature of this season, and this concert will have a Russian-Tschaikovsky program.

Opening program (May 7) follows:

MONDAY

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin"
Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz"...Weber
Waltz No. 15........Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"...Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia)..............Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"..........Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3
Tschaikowsky
[illegible] "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"...........Jessel
[illegible] Bizet

TUESDAY

Prelude to "Carmen"..........Bizet
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"..............Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"..................J. Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Suite, "Nutcracker"....Tschaikovsky
Organ solo......Prof. H. D. Sleeper
Liebesfreud ....Kreisler
Overture to "Tannhauser"....Wagner
Selection, "Orange Blossoms".Herbert
Volga Bargemen's Song
arranged by Agide Jacchia
"Home, Sweet Home"..Bishop-Jacchia

WEDNESDAY

Coronation March from "The Prophet"..................Meyerbeer
Overture, "Il Guarany".......Gomez
Waltz, "1001 Nights"..........Strauss
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly".Puccini
Tempest Scene, "Otello" ....Verdi
Prelude to "Lohengrin"......Wagner
Tarantelle ....Jacchia
Rhapsody, "Espana"..........Chabrier
"L'Arlesienne" Suite No. 2....Bizet
Tango ....Albeniz
Hungarian Dance No. 1 in G minor
Brahms

THURSDAY

Procession of Bacchus........Delibes
Overture to "Mignon"........Thomas
Waltz, "Wine, Women and Song"
Strauss
Fantasia, "La Tosca"..........Puccini
Hymn to the Sun, from "Iris"
Mascagni
Romance, (Horn solo, Max Hess)
Sinigaglia
Aragonaise, from "Le Cid"...Massenet
Overture to "Tannhauser"....Wagner
Selection, "The Yankee Princess"
Kalman
Largo, (solo violin, harp, strings and organ)..................Handel
Slavonic Dance, No. 1.........Dvorak

FRIDAY

Southern Night

Military March...............Schubert
Overture to "Oberon"..........Weber
Deep River..........Burleigh-Jacchia
Dixie's Land.............Dan Emmet
Fantasia, "Aida"................Verdi
Suite, "Scenes de Ballet"..Glazounov
Afro-American Folk Songs
arranged by Agide Jacchia
Scherzo, "Midsummer - Night's Dream"...............Mendelssohn
Ride of the Valkyries.........Wagner
Hungarian March..............Berlioz
Waltz, "Roses from the South"
Strauss
Selection of Southern Airs....Bendix

SATURDAY

Charge of the Hussars......Spindler
Overture to "William Tell"..Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"..Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda"......................Ponchielli
Little Suite.......................Bizet
Procesion to the Cathedral, from "Lohengrin" Act 2.........Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"....Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville"......................Albeniz
Fantasia "Cavalleria Rusticana"
Mascagni
Dubinushka.....arr. by Agide Jacchia
Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager
Stars and Stripes Forever......Sousa

TRAV. MAY. 5.

AGAIN THE POPS

A New Series of the Familiar Concerts to Begin on Monday Under the Usual Conditions—Mr. Jacchia for Conductor and Programme-Maker—Occasional Sundays

FOR a thirty-eighth spring and summer, the Pop Concerts will begin on Monday at Symphony Hall to continue there on every secular evening and, by exception, on four alternate Sundays, well into July. Once more the floor will be cleared of rows of seats, and tables and chairs will replace them. Again it will be possible (except on Sundays) to eat at them, to drink at them—whatever the law allows; to smoke at them (Sundays again excepted) unmolested. Furthermore, for those who prefer liquid refreshment apart from music, a bar—as bars go nowadays—stands as heretofore at the back of the first balcony. Food and drink at The Pops have long been of the best, and this spring there will be no departure from standard. According to custom also, the two balconies will be reserved for those who would take their pleasure as at any other concert. The Symphony Orchestra, seventy or eighty strong, as need may require, will provide that music; while again Mr. Jacchia returns to lead it. By this time his tireless energy with band and music, his zest for instrumental melody, his fire of rhythm, his communicating verve are an old story. Orchestra and audience alike answer nightly to him.

As in the past, the conductor will make more various and interesting programmes than have any of his predecessors. Operatic overtures, waltzes and marches, occasional vivid fragments from symphonies, frequent fantasias from familiar operas, solo-pieces, miniatures, ballet music and a generally pleasing miscellany will all figure upon them. Thus the list for Monday includes fragments of "Lohengrin" and "Der Freischütz" with the Polonaise from Chaikovsky's Third Suite for novel piece. On Tuesday, to note the centenary of the first performance of "Home, Sweet Home," Mr. Jacchia's orchestral arrangement of the ballad will be heard. Wednesday will bring Chabrier's "Espana" and bits of Bizet's music to "L'Arlésienne." The programme for Thursday lists a horn-solo for Mr. Hess and a "selection" from Kalmán's new and vivid Hungarian operetta, "The Yankee Princess." A "Southern Night," on Friday wanders from Strauss's waltz, "Soutnern Roses" to arrangements of negro folk-tunes. The usual light miscellany fills Saturday; while for the first Sunday evening, May 13, Russian composers will divide a notable programme from the Tartar dances in "Prince Igor" to Salome's dance according to Glazunov. By familiar custom The Transcript will print each day the programme of the evening. On Monday evening, for the first time, a Pop Concert will be sent broadcast by radio—through the Shepard Stores.

TRANS. MAY. 5

POPS BEGIN 35TH SEASON MAY 7 AT SYMPHONY HALL

AGIDE JACCHIA

The opening night of the Pops is always one of the biggest of the Pop season and the first Pop concert, which will be given next Monday evening, May 7, promises to be no exception.

The usual accompaniment of refreshments served at the tables and in the first balcony will add to the popular programs which Agide Jacchia, who will again conduct the orchestra, will present nightly at Symphony hall. The second night at the Pops, Tuesday, May 8, coincides with the hundredth annivery of the first performance of "Home, Sweet Home" and Mr. Jacchia has made a special arranggement of this immortal air for the occasion.

Opening program (May 7) follows:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin, Wagner; Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Waltz No. 15, Brahams-Gericke; Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia), Chopin; Waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; Polonaise from Suit No. 3, Tschailkowsky; Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; Parade of the Wooden Soldiers, Jessel; Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen," Bizet.

TELE-MAY. 5.

Concluding Concert of the Boston Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, gave its twenty-fourth concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program:

Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore" No. 3
Chausson, "Soir de Fête"
Respighi, "Fountains of Rome"
Saint-Saëns, Symphony in C minor

This concert, both in the interest of the music played and in the quality of the playing, brought the season to a fitting close. It brought out, perhaps, more clearly than any other program of the season Mr. Monteux's powers as an interpreter of both modern and "classic" music, for whatever the date of the composition of Saint-Saëns' Symphony it belongs unquestionably to the music of a past generation.

Mr. Monteux has many times given proof of his understanding and sympathetic feeling for the music of Beethoven. From the beginning of his term as conductor of the orchestra here he may be said to have restored the music of the Flemish-German-Austrian master which had under the batons of preceding conductors often suffered from a false and artificial "tradition." Mr. Monteux has never sought to give individual readings of Beethoven; rather has he endeavored to bring out the inherent beauty and grandeur of the music, content to let its message speak unhampered, and when all is said and done this is the quality which distinguishes the real interpretative artist. Unfortunately this quality is often unappreciated by the general public, who are ever inclined to applaud the sensational and the spectacular as in many other forms of art. Yet as time goes on the public of the symphony concerts, often strangely provincial in its judgment, will realize more and more what an artist, in the highest sense of the word, Mr. Monteux is, and will recall with admiration and respect such a performance as was given yesterday afternoon of the "Leonore" overture.

It may not be altogether out of place to cite a few of its most obvious perfections: the dramatic opening, the masterly reading of the few mysterious measures immediately preceding the Allegro; the beginning of the latter with its pulsing rhythm, the carefully prepared entry of the trumpet call off stage, which has never sounded with more effect, and the truly Bethovian joy of the exultant finish. This was Beethoven's music as he must have imagined it, for no one who had read his letters or contemporary accounts of him as a musician can have failed to realize yesterday afternoon how completely characteristic of the man was this music and Mr. Monteux's interpretation of it.

Chausson's "Soir de Fête," save in its reflective middle portion, scarcely reaches the high level of his symphony, yet it is agreeable, effective music and a welcome addition to the repertory. More cannot be said of Respighi's "Fountains of Rome," which is picturesque, imaginative, though somewhat facile.

Saint-Saëns' symphony grows with each hearing. Before such nobility of conception and style, such perfection and command of technical resources we can but mutely wonder. It is a work for all time, one of those marvels of almost more than human genius which is given to the world but seldom. To say that the performance was worthy of the music is granting the greatest praise, praise justified a hundred fold.

S. M.

MONITOR MAY. 5.

Patronesses for "Pop's Night"

MMES. GEORGE W. VAILLANT, George H. Burrage, George P. Baker, John S. Penman, Roger B. Merriman, Arthur G. Everett, Alexander Steinert and John F. Moors are among the patronesses for Radcliffe night at the "Pops." This event which comes on Tuesday, the 15th, will bring out a large audience of Radcliffe graduates and friends of the college as it is the last big affair of the season to benefit the endowment fund which now lacks but $65,000 of completion. A large portion of this sum belongs to the Boston quota and must be raised before July 1.

The concert is under the auspices of the Radcliffe Club of Boston which Mrs. Frederick L. Day is president. Miss Lucie A. Kramer is chairman of the committee in charge. Songs by Mrs. Laura Comstock Littlefield, Radcliffe 1904, who is well known from her numerous appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Handel and Haydn, and Cecelia clubs will add greatly to the program. College songs will be sung by the Radcliffe Choral Society.

Tickets are now on sale at the Radcliffe endowment headquarters, 603 Boylston street and at Herrick's.

ADVTSR. MAY 6

Another Season of the "Pops" Opens Tomorrow

Tomorrow night in Symphony Hall the 38th season of the famous Pop Concerts will open with what is likely to be one of the largest of Pops audiences. This Summer version of Symphony Hall concerts will continue every week-day evening and on alternate Sundays.

The popular programs of Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra will be supplemented by refreshments served at the tables which cover the floor of Symphony Hall and in the first balcony.

Mr Jacchia is the most applauded and admired of all Pops conductors, and has made for the opening week a particularly attractive series of programs.

At the concert Tuesday, May 8, students and alumnae of Smith College will be present and the conductor will pay homage to the composer of "Home Sweet Home" by performing his own arrangement of the modern melody at the 100th anniversary of its first performance, which falls on this day.

Wednesday, May 9, members of the Durant, Inc, will celebrate, while Friday, May 11, will bring a program featuring Southern melodies.

Sunday the first of the newly instituted series of Sunday pop concerts will take place on May 13, with a Russian-Tschaikowsky program.

The opening program for Monday night follows: Introduction to act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Waltz No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; Second Hungarian rhapsody, Liszt; Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia), Chopin; waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tschaikowsky; suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; gypsy dance, from "Carmen," Bizet.

Boston Symphony Season

The orchestra, under Mr Monteux, has occasionally given very fine performances of particular works, such as "Scheherezade," "Till Eulenspeiegel" and a few others with which he seemingly feels deep sympathy. But in general the instrument now exceeds in subtlety the conductor whose business it is to play upon it.

The loss of Mr Neumann's unequalled talent at the kettle drums has been felt at every concert, though the man who has taken his place is thoroughly competent. There has fortunately been no other important change in personnel. All the symphony concerts have drawn very large audiences. The success of the People's Symphony concerts, in a different field, has also been gratifying.

GLOBE-MAY. 5

POP CONCERTS OPEN 38TH SEASON TONIGHT

The 38th season of pop concerts will open tonight with what will probably be one of the biggest audiences of the year. Agide Jacchia, who is to begin his 7th season as pops conductor, has made the following program for this occasion:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Waltz No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia), Chopin; Waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tschaikowsky; Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; Gpysy Dance, from "Carmen," Bizet.

HERALD MAY. 7.

RADIO PROGRAMS FOR TODAY

(Daylight Saving Time)

Station WNAC, Boston

286 Meters

12:53 P M—Time signals.
1:05 P M—Weather report.
4 P M—Dance music by the Shepard Colonial Orchestra; Organ recital, broadcast direct from The Modern Theatre.
6:30 P M—Children's Half-hour.
8:15 P M—"Pops" Concert, broadcast direct from Symphony Hall; Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Overture to "Dear Freischutz," Weber; Waltz, No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; intermission; "Second Hungarian Rhapsody," Liszt; Prelude op 28, No. 6, Chopin; (Arranged by Agide Jacchia); Waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tchaikovsky; intermission; Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; "Morning Mood," "Anitra's Dance," "In the Hall of the Mountain King," "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; Gypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet; encores announced.

GLOBE. MAY. 7.

POPS OPEN TONIGHT

Agide Jacchia has chosen the following program for the Pop concert opening tonight:—

Introduction, Act 3, "Lohengrin"...
Wagner
Overture, "Der Freischutz"......Weber
Waltz No. 15..........Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda".....Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.......Liszt
Prelude, op. 28, No. 6...........Chopin
Waltz, "Espana"................Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3.Tschaikowsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"...............Grieg
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers....Jessel
Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen".....Bizet

ADVTSR-MAY 7.

POPS OPEN TONIGHT IN SYMPHONY HALL

The thirty-eighth season of Pop concerts will open tonight with what will probably be one of the biggest audiences of the year. Agide Jacchia, who is to begin his seventh season as Pops conductor, has made the following program for this occasion:

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischutz" ......Weber
Waltz No. 15 ....Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia "La Gioconda" ....Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ....Liszt
Prelude op. 28, No. 6 (arranged by Agide Jacchia) .... Chopin
Waltz "Espana" .... Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3 ..Tschaikowsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt" .... Grieg
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers ......Jessel
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen" ....Bizet

AMER. MAY 7.

8:15 P. M.—"Pops" concert, broadcast direct from Symphony hall; 80 members of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Agide Jacchia, conductor.

1—Introduction to act 3, "Lohengrin"
Wagner
2—Overture to "Der Freischutz.......Weber
3—Waltz, No 15 ....Brahms-Gericke
4—Fantasia, "La Gioconda" ....Ponchielli
Intermission
5—"Second Hungarian Rhapsody......Liszt
6—Prelude op. 28, No. 6............Chopin
(Arranged by Agide Jacchia) ....Waldtenfel
7—Waltz, "Espana"............Tschaikovsky
8—Polonaise from Suite No. 3.
Intermission
9—Suite, "Peer Gynt" ....Grieg
a—"Morning Mood"
b—"Anitra's Dance"
c—"In the Hall of the Mountain King"
10—"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"..Jessel
11—Gypsy dance from Carmen.........Bizet
Encores announced

HERALD MAY 7.

8:15 p. m.—"Pops" Concert. Broadcast direct from Symphony Hall. 80 members of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Agide Jacchia conductor. 1. Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; 2. Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; 3. Waltz, No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; 4. Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchinelli. Intermission— 5. "Second Hungarian Rhapsody," Liszt; 6. Prelude op. 28, No. 6, Chopin, (Arranged by Agide Jacchia); 7. Waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel, 8. Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tchaikovsky. Intermission—9. Suite, "Peer Gynt," Greig, (a) "Morning Mood," (b) "Anitra's Dance," (c) "In the Hall of the Mountain King;" 10. "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; 11. Gypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet; Encores announced.

[illegible] (360 Meters)—[illegible]

[illegible] by Uncle

"Pops" Program for Tonight

OPENING NIGHT

Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin"
Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischütz"....Weber
Waltz No. 15.........Brahms-Gericke
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"..Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Prelude, Op. 28, No. 6.......Chopin
(Arranged by Agide Jacchia)
Waltz, "España".........Waldteufel
Polonaise from Suite No. 3
Tschaikowsky
Suite, "Peer Gynt"..............Grieg
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers.Jessel
Gypsy Dance, from "Carmen"...Bizet

MONITOR MAY 7

At the Pops Tonight

Opening Concert

Introduction to the Third Act of "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Overture to "Der Freischütz"....Weber
Waltz, No. 15....................Brahms
(Arranged for Orchestra by W. Gericke)
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"......Ponchielli
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.......Liszt
Prelude, Opus 28, No. 6..........Chopin
(Arranged for Orchestra by A. Jacchia)
Waltz, "España"..............Waldteufel
Polonaise from the Third Suite, Chaikovsky
Suite from the Music to "Peer Gynt" ....Grieg
Parade of Wooden Soldiers.......Jessel
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen."......Bizet

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS MAY. 7.

LEAVE-TAKINGS TO FILL SPRING SUNDAY

Mr. Monteux and the Symphony Orchestra Share a Stirred Audience—Discoveries by The Flute-Players—Eighteenth-Century Music with Illusion — Babes, Sucklings and Wisdom — Impending [illegible]

WITH the Symphony Orchestra Mr. Monteux is as generous in reward as he is exacting in accomplishment. As soon as he appeared on his way to his place at the final concert of Saturday evening, the audience began to clap him. Arrived at his stand, he quickly bade the orchestra rise and share with him the multiplying plaudits—a touch of courtesy, a sign of consideration, unknown hitherto at the beginning of a Symphony Concert and, evidently, as unexpected as it was grateful to the players. So stirred, they excelled themselves alike in the larger vigors and the calmer splendors of the third "Leonora" Overture; while no stage, struggling with the limitations of flesh and blood, may gain the suspense and the frenzy that Beethoven alternately compasses in these tones. Actors indeed through such measures were conductor and orchestra—with an exhaustless music for their theatre. And in 1923, they must also summon at need the ears of poets, the eyes of painters. Into the horizon-glow vanishes in "Fountains of Rome," Respighi's train of sea-gods. Behind them, the parted waters foam and curl, ripple and smooth. The motion of the music is the motion of those waves stilled; the colors of the music are those spray-tints sun-shot and glistening. Without imagination, no band may play these pages as twice did Mr. Monteux's orchestra.

Long in their places did the applause of the company hold conductor and men at the intermission. For in the ears of the audience, as at the hands of the band, were the toil and the testing of three arduous, baffling years at last fulfilled. As often through the ending season, the Symphony Orchestra stood again four-square with its best standards. In such voices, the withering pages of Saint-Saëns's "Organ Symphony" almost bloomed again. Yet slight relatively was the applause at the interval dividing them. So did the house distinguish between music and performance; and so did it double its clapping at the end. Not until, standing, it had twice and thrice renewed it, was parting done. H. T. P.

TRANS. MAY 7.

8:15 p.m.—"Pops" Concert, Broadcast direct from Symphony hall, 80 members of Boston Symphony orchestra, Agide Jacchia, conductor. (1) Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner; (22 Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; (3) Waltz, No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; (4) Fantasia, "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; (5) "Second Hungarian Rhapsody," Liszt; (6) Prelude op. 28, No. 6, Chopin (Arranged by Agide Jacchia); (7) Waltz, "Espana," Waldteufel; (8) Polonaise from Suite No. 3, Tchaikovsky; (9) Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg, (a) "Morning Mood," (b) "Anitra's Dance," (c) "In the Hall of the Mountain King;" (10) "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; (11) Gypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet. Encores announced.

TELEGRAM MAY. 7.

8:15 P. M.—"Pops" concert, broadcast direct from Symphony hall; 80 members of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Agide Jacchia, conductor.

1—Introduction to act 3, "Lohengrin ....Wagner
2—Overture to "Der Freischutz.......Weber
3—Waltz, No 15 ....Brahms-Gericke
4—Fantasia, "La Gioconda" .....Ponchielli
Intermission
5—"Second Hungarian Rhapsody.......Liszt
6—Prelude op. 28, No. 6............Chopin
(Arranged by Agide Jacchia)
11 7—Waltz, "Espana"..........Waldtenfel
8—Polonaise from Suite No. 3..Tschaikovsky
Intermission
9—Suite, "Peer Gynt" ....Grieg
a—"Morning Mood"
b—"Anitra's Dance"
c—"In the Hall of the Mountain King"
10—"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"..Jessel
11—Gypsy dance from Carmen..........Bizet
Encores announced

TRAV. MAY. 7.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

SMITH COLLEGE NIGHT

Prelude to "Carmen"..............Bizet
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"....................Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"................J. Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Suite, "Nutcracker"....Tschaikowsky
Organ solo....(Prof. H. D. Sleeper)
Liebesfreud ....Kreisler
Overture to "Tannhäuser"...Wagner
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .....Herbert
Volga Bargemen's Song ....
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
"Home, Sweet Home" Bishop-Jacchia

MONITOR MAY. 8.

"HOME, SWEET HOME" CENTENNIAL AT POPS

On May 8, 1823, "Home, Sweet Home" was first sung in the opera "Clari," by Bishop, in London. This centennial will be observed at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight. A special arrangement of the immortal melody has been made by Agide Jacchia. The program follows:

Prelude to "Carmen"..............Bizet
Overture "Merry Wives of Windsor"....Nicolai
Waltz, "Beautiful Blue Danube"......J. Straus
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" ......Leoncavallo
Suite, "Nutcracker" ......Tschaikovsky
Organ Solo, (Prof. H. D. Sleeper)......
Liebesfreud ....Kreisler
Overture, "Tannhauser" ....Wagner
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" ..Herbert
Volga Bargemen's Song ....
"Home, Sweet Home" ..Bishop Jacchia

ADVISR-MAY 8.

POPS OPENING IS BRILLIANT OCCASION

By ZOE FABER

Tinkling ice, bright colored drinks, sandwiches and clouds of smoke helped to make the opening night of the Pops the outstanding success that the very large audience voted it. In the enforced absence of Mr. Jacchia, his place was filled by Jacques Hofmann, whose work was very evidently to the marked pleasure of the audience.

Mr. Jacchia had set for the evening a program that was well balanced and calculated to suit the taste of the varied crowd that flocks to the concerts. Mr. Holmann did full justice to the music in hand and added to it many extras that were popular. Among these, one heard with increasing delight, Schubert's "Moment Musical," the "Volga Bargeman's Song," "Tarantelle" by Jacchia and Grieg, "Death of Ase" and others.

The concert tonight is the second annual Smith College program with the feature number an organ suite played by Professor H. D. Sleeper The public ,as alyaws, is welcome.

If last night is any barometer, this season of the Pops will equal, if not supersede others in response from the public.

"HOME, SWEET HOME" AT TONIGHT'S "POP"

On May 8, 1823, "Home, Sweet Home" had its first performance, as a number in the opera "Clari," by Bishop, in London. This centennial will be observed at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall tonight by a special arrangement of the immortal melody made by Agide Jacchia. The program follows:

Prelude to "Carmen" ....Bizet
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ....Nicoloi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" ....J Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" ....Leon avallo
Suite, "Nutcracker" ....Tschaikovsky
Organ Solo (Professor H. D. Sleeper)
Liegesfreud ....Kreisler
Overture to "Tannhauser" ....Wagner
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .....Herbert
Volga Bargemen's Song
Arranged by Agide Jacchio
"Home, Sweet Home" ......Bishop-Jacchia

AMER-MAY 8.

[102]

As the World Wags

By PHILIP HALE

Mr. Monteux has completely dispelled one illusion: that only a German or an Austrian can conduct sympathetically and effectively the orchestral works of Beethoven. We say "completely"; yet, no doubt, there are still some misguided souls who believe that only a German "understands" Beethoven, Brahms, Richard Strauss et al.

It is not extravagant to say that the symphonies and the overtures of Beethoven have never been more effectively and musically performed in Boston than under the leadership of Mr. Monteux. The same may be said of the performance of Brahms's music under his direction.

Mr. Stuart Mason, a composer of indisputable talent and the accomplished music critic of the Christian Science Monitor, wrote as follows about the performance of the "Leonore" overture last week:

"Mr. Monteux has many times given proof of his understanding and sympathetic feeling for the music of Beethoven. From the beginning of his term as conductor of the orchestra here he may be said to have restored the music of the Flemish-German-Austrian master which had under the batons of preceding conductors often suffered from a false and artificial 'tradition.' Mr. Monteux has never sought to give individual readings of Beethoven; rather has he endeavored to bring out the inherent beauty and grandeur of the music, content to let its message speak unhampered, and when all is said and done this is the quality which distinguishes the real interpretative artist. Unfortunately this quality is often unappreciated by the general public, who are ever inclined to applaud the sensational and the spectacular as in many other forms of art. Yet, as time goes on, the public of the Symphony concerts, often strangely provincial in its judgment, will realize more and more what an artist, in the highest sense of the word, Mr. Monteux is, and will recall with admiration and respect such a performance as was given yesterday afternoon of the 'Leonore' overture."

MR. MONTEUX'S CATHOLICITY

That Mr. Monteux should be so successful as an interpreter of Beethoven is not surprising. Years ago Richard Wagner was enthusiastic over performances of Beethoven's symphonies by the Paris Conservatory orchestra, led by Habeneck. The long line of Parisian conductors since Habeneck has maintained the glorious reputation. And so to hear instrumental music of Bach sanely performed one must hear French organists and pianists.

Thank the Lord, Mr. Monteux is not a "specialist." He does not assert himself as the divinely inspired interpreter of Mozart, Strauss, Franck, Debussy or any other composer. His taste is most catholic—it is true, that like most Frenchmen, he prefers the music of Rimsky-Korsakov to that of Tchaikovsky. It matters not whether the composer be French or American, British or German, a Finn or an Italian, a Trojan or a Tyrian, Mr. Monteux brings out whatever strength or beauty, whatever decorative or emotional quality there may be in the composition. And all this so modestly that it escapes the notice of those who attend a concert to see the conductor and not primarily to hear the music.

Mr. Monteux's contract calls for one year more of service. May this contract be extended for many years!

MR. MONTEUX'S PROGRAMS

Does any one say in a carping spirit: "We have had too much French music"? and say this without regard to the quality of the works performed? Thirty-seven compositions by Germans, not counting the two Hungarians, Liszt and Dohnanyi; the Bohemians Dvorak and Smetana, the Finn Sibelius, the Roumanian Enesco, were performed. Beethoven and Mozart led with six performances each; Wagner came next with five.

There were only 18 performances of French works, while there were 13 of works by Americans. Other nationalities represented other than those already mentioned were Italian, English, Russian and Spanish.

Does some ultra-conservative, some reactionary, who would enjoy a piano concerto by Moscheles or an overture by Lachner, protest, not without a show of anger, at the performance of a contemporary work in an unfamiliar idiom? Is it not the duty of a conductor to acquaint his audiences with what is going on in the musical world of today? In this respect, Mr. Monteux has shown marked moderation.

As Mr. Reiner, the conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra, said recently when he was asked why he performed certain ultra-modern works: "I feel it my duty. It will at least give the audience the opportunity of knowing what they don't like." And the Cincinnati audience applauds him for his courage.

THE ORCHESTRA HIS CREATION

Nor should it be forgotten that the Boston Symphony orchestra which today is unrivaled in technical proficiency, in euphony, in plasticity, is wholly the creation of Pierre Monteux. By his skill and force as a disciplinarian which won the respect and affection of the players, by his patience and courage exercised indefatigably since the dark days of March, 1920, he has shaped and moulded the magnificent orchestra that is now justly the pride of this city. And he has done this without the sensational display that is so dear to what are loosely called "virtuoso conductors."

"Great captains with their guns and drums,
Disturb our judgment for the hour,
But at last silence comes:
These all are gone, and standing like a tower,
• • •
The kindly-earnest, brave, foreseeing man."

HERALD-MAY 8.

POPS OPEN WITH FULL SPLENDOR

Orchestra Under Baton of Hoffman— Jacchia Indisposed

One of the sure signs of change of season in Boston is the beginning of the Pop concerts; and last night at Symphony Hall—the beginning of the 38th season of this famous institution—recalled old times as these opening nights usually do. It is the seventh season under the very successful leadership of Agide Jacchia.

HOFFMAN CONDUCTS

It was, therefore, particularly unfortunate that a sudden indisposition should have prevented him from appearing last night. Jacques Hoffman proved a capable assistant, and under his baton the concert moved along smoothly.

There was the usual large attendance of an opening night and the usual good spirits. The fact remains that these Pop concerts are attended by a faithful public which loves good music, and which comes to these concerts for that purpose. Such an audience is always in a good mood, provided only that the music served it is good. And it is regularly good at these concerts.

Orchestra Ample as Usual

It was good last night and promises to become better throughout this season. The orchestra, composed mostly of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—seventy or eighty strong—is large enough and of good enough quality to play the best music well. Mr. Hoffman conducted last night with enthusiasm and at times brilliance, in spite of the handicap of unpreparedness.

The programme last night contained the usual miscellany of familiar and popular music—selections from operas, arrangements of piano pieces, good marches. The applause was very prolonged and there were the usual number of extra pieces. These Pop concerts usually include two programmes in one. There are other attractions than the music.

Food and Drinks

There are served good food, hot and cold drinks of one sort or another—all good in their way—and smokes—the familiar trappings of the Pops. There is the usual gay chatter, and the colorful crowd. All of the features of the Pops, so well known and so firmly established, are back, and obviously for a successful season.

The programme for tonight contains among other pieces the "Nutcracker" suite of Tchaikowsky, a suite in F minor for organ solo, with the composer, Professor D. H. Sleeper, at the organ, and an arrangement of "Home, Sweet Home," by Mr. Jacchia, played in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the first performance of that song in London on May 8, 1823.

POST-MAY 8.

POPS BEGIN THEIR 38TH SEASON

Large Audience Greets Mr Jacchia for Opening Performance of Light Music

Nothing in Symphony Hall last night went to show that prohibition has had any effect on the Pop concerts. They began their 38th season—the seventh with Agide Jacchia wielding the baton—before a house filled to the last table, and with all the traditional trimmings. The most noticeable, as always during the past few years, was the scattering of old-timers, mournfully drinking their ginger pop and trying to get away with their pretzels. Owing to the indisposition of Mr Jacchia, the orchestra was conducted by Mr Jacques Hoffmann.

Maybe there was a smaller percentage of evening clothes; maybe the bourgeois had a majority in the hall larger than ever. But the people liked the music and loved the well-drilled smoothness and response of the great orchestra.

The opening program was entirely modern, beginning with the introduction to the third act of Lohengrin; then came the "Freischutz" overture, a little Bramhs waltz and a "Giaconda" fantasia. Mr Hoffmann promptly began to be generous with the second number, playing as encores during the evening Schubert's "Moment Musical," a Kreisler composition, Jacchia's "Tarantella" and his arrangement of the mournful boatman's song from the Volga River, and the fourth number in the Peer Gynt suite.

A Liszt rhapsody, a Chopin prelude, a Waldteufel waltz and a Tschaikowsky polonaise made up the second section of the program. The final part included the Peer Gynt suite and—it seems to be "of course" just now—the "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," ending all with the Carmen gypsy dance.

The men of the Symphony orchestra played with fine spirit, and seemed to be contentedly sitting in for the pleasant part of their year. The excellence of this band is never slackened simply because the less formal music is in hand and their performance of these lighter works and fragments is just as masterly and pleasant to hear as the more serious concerts of Winter are. The attendance, which starts off at top speed, proves that people care more and more for orchestral evenings and with a good conductor and well chosen programs, the Pops seem established in Boston as firmly as the Symphony itself.

Tonight, of course, is the centenary of the first performance of "Home, Sweet Home," and it appears duly in the program, arranged by Mr Jacchia with a trumpet solo for Georges Magee. This 100th anniversary is being celebrated tonight in several English cities and probably in many parts of the world.

Smith College has its second annual night at the Pops tonight and two numbers on the program are by Prof H. S. Sleeper. The first is a suite in D minor for organ; the second the Smith College song "O Fairest Alma Mater!" An unusually fine program includes the prelude to Carmen, a fantasia on the Pagliacci themes, the "Merry Wives of Windsor" overture, the Nutcracker suite, the overture to Tannhauser and selections from Herbert's "Orange Blossoms."

Every night this week has been taken by some organization. Pop parties are going to be fashionable this year again.

GLOBE-MAY. 8.

THE CHANGING POPS

Sober Compositions Before a Silently Attentive Audience — Another Season Opens Less Festively Than of Old—Mr. Hoffmann Rises to the Occasion

A BOSTONIAN absent from his native city for a decade or so, chancing upon the Pop Concert last evening, would have found an unfamiliar atmosphere. To be sure, the orchestra was essentially that of former years, though considerably larger, and the listening audience occupied, as before, tables on the floor and chairs in the balconies, and like audiences of former years that of last night—or at least, a portion of it—ate, drank and smoked as well as listened. But, aside from such details as the substitution of waitresses for waiters, the decking of the stage with green, or even the elimination of mild intoxicants from the list of beverages, the general aspect of the Pops has undeniably altered. Once, these concerts had a festive, at times a hilarious, air. Never might the conductor begin a quiet piece until he had rapped for silence, and but rarely was this silence complete once the music had begun—nearly always was there the undertone of conversation that at times made hearing difficult in the rear of the hall. Seldom in those distant days was a "classical" piece much applauded: rather it was the lighter numbers that provoked the then somewhat infrequent "extras."

Last evening, however, the gradually growing tendency toward greater attention to the music, with the consequent lessening in importance of the other elements of these concerts, seemed somehow to have crystalized. Throughout a programme of no special interest the audience—as large a company as the hall would hold—sat engrossed and absorbed in the orchestra and its playing. Not a single piece, save those at the end of each of the three sections of the programme, failed to win applause sufficient to bring forth an extra number. Not once was it necessary for Mr. Hoffmann—conducting in place of Mr. Jacchia, temporarily indisposed—to summon this audience to attention; instead, his mere presence at the conductor's desk sufficed to bring a hush of anticipation. Orchestral concerts in the broader sense have the Pops become, and watching the company of last evening it was possible to surmise that the barring of refreshments at the new Sunday Pops will make less difference in the size of the audience and in its general temper than would once have been the case.

Not easy was the task confronting Mr. Hoffmann last evening. At short notice he must conduct a programme not of his own choosing, and he must face a company of listeners asembled in the expectation of hearing another and exceedingly popular leader. Nor in all these years that Mr. Hoffmann has sat among the first violins of the Symphony Orchestra has he been given much opportunity to practice the arts of the conductor, whatever may have been his former experience in that capacity. Yet every test that was presented to him last evening Mr. Hoffmann met successfully. He gave no hint of unaccustomedness, and conducting without flourish or external show, he led the band to an always adequate and often eloquent performance of the music in hand.

A rather sober list was that which Mr. Jacchia had prepared, less inviting than most of those announced for this opening week. An air of appropriate festiveness was given in the initial number, the Prelude to the third act of "Lohengrin" but upon it followed the often sombre Overture to "Der Freischutz," Mr. Gericke's transcription of the languid A-flat major Waltz from Brahm's Opus 39, and a Fantasia from "La Gioconda"—dull gleanings from a dreary opera. In the next division of the programme came the Second Hungarian Rhapsody of Liszt, Mr. Jacchia's felicitous arrangement of the B Minor Prelude of Chopin, Waldteufel's "Espana" Waltz, and the ponderous Polonaise from Chaikovsky's Third Suite. More engaging were the three final numbers—the charming first "Peer Gynt" Suite of Grieg, "The Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" made famous by the "Chauve Souris" and the irresistible "Gypsy Dance" from the second act of "Carmen," and certain of the "extras" brought too, the lighter, gayer note that some still expect and always relish in the Pops. But, as has been said before and may perhaps bear repeating, if Mr. Jacchia's programmes seem to favor overmuch compositions that are neither of real consequence nor, on the other hand, frankly diverting, these programmes have yet received the stamp of popular approval, and it is Mr. Jacchia's programmes as well as his conducting of them that have made the Pops a haunt of earnest seekers after musical enjoyments.

W. S. S.

At the Pops Tonight

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Waltz, "Blue Danube"	J. Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"	Leoncavallo
Suite from the Ballet, "Nutcracker,"	Chaikovsky
Organ Solo.
Liebesfreud	Kreisler
Overture to "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"	Herbert
Volga Bargemen's Song,	Arranged by Jacchia
Home, Sweet Home	Bishop-Jacchia

Conductor: J. Hoffmann
Soloist: Professor H. D. Sleeper

TRANS. MAY. 8.

DURANT MEMBERS AT POPS TONIGHT

The third Pop concert of the season will take place in Symphony Hall tonight at which members of the Durant, Inc., will be numerously represented. This night, however, and all nights of the Pops, are open to the public. The program follows:

Coronation March from "The Prophet"	Meyerbeer
Overture, "Il Guarany"	Gomez
Waltz, "1001 Nights"	Strauss
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"	Puccini
Tempest Scene, "Othello"	Verdi
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Tarantelle	Jacchia
Rhapsody Espana	Chabrier
"L'Arlesienne" Suite, o. 2	Bizet
Tango	Albeniz
Hungarian Fance No. 1 in G minor	Brahms

AMER MAY. 9.

The "Pops" Season Opens

The "Pops" began their thirty-eighth season last night, and devotees of symphonic music in its less severe moods thronged Symphony Hall. Here were no stately dowagers attending for fashion's sake, or reserved gentlemen of middle age, to whom the slightest show of emotion partakes of vulgarity. Yet audiences are often the most important part of a performance (artistically speaking and not from the box-office point of view alone), and many a concert of the regular symphony season just past has been marred by the over reserved attitude of the listeners. Last night all came to enjoy the music and were not slow in giving evidence of their pleasure. The hearty and spontaneous applause after every number had evident effect on the orchestra, which played with more than its usual ardor and enthusiasm. The program contained many old favorites and still others were added as encores, of which there was a generous number.

Mr. Jacchia, conductor for the last seven years, being unavoidably absent, was replaced by Jacques Hoffmann of the first violins. Mr. Hoffmann's activities as quartet leader, conductor of the Boston Music School Settlement Orchestra, and in various other directions are well known to the musical public. Last night he conducted gracefully and effectively, with excellent command of his forces and with musicianly instinct. He was warmly received by the audience. A more auspicious opening for the "Pops" could hardly be imagined.

S. M.

MONITOR-MAY. 8

POPS PROGRAM TONIGHT

The third Pops concert of the season will take place in Symphony hall tonight, at which members of the Durant, Inc., will be numerously represented. This night, however, and all other nights at the Pops will be open to the public. Program follows:

Coronation March from "The Prophet.	Meyerbeer
Overture, "Il Guarany"	Gomez
Waltz, "1001 Nights"	Strauss
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"	Puccini
Tempest Scene, "Othello"	Verdi
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Tarantelle	Jacchia
Rhapsody Espana	Chabrier
"L'Arlesienne" Suite No. 2	Bizet
Tango	Albeniz
Hungarian Fance No 1 in Gminor	Brahms

TRAV. MAY. 9.

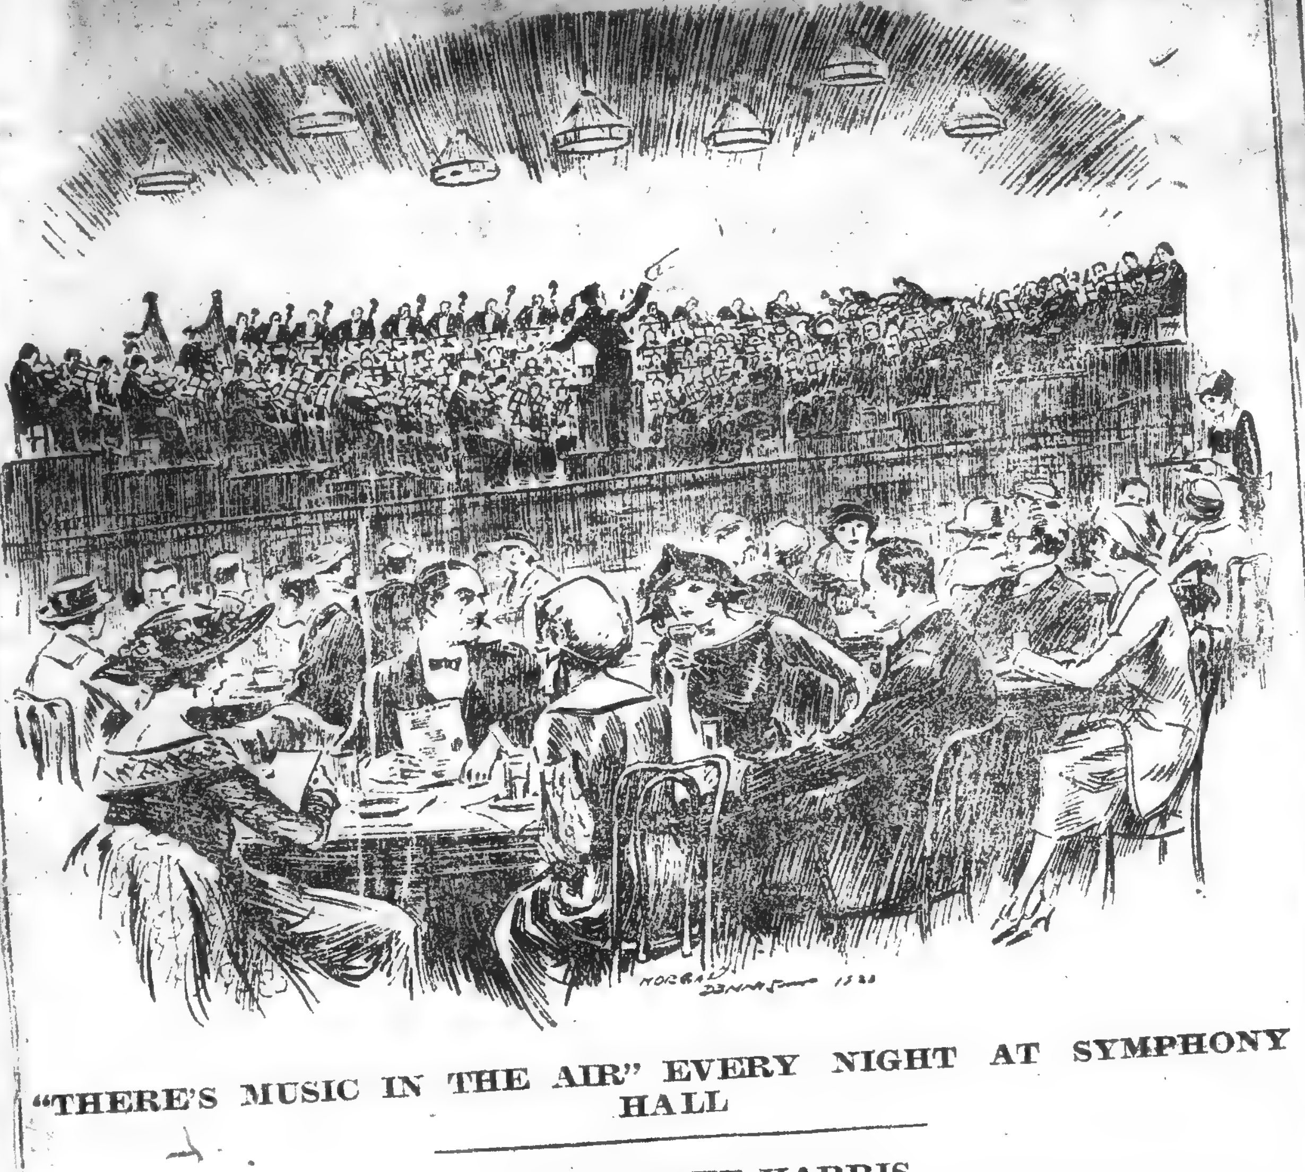
POPS PROGRAM TONIGHT

The Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight will offer the following program:

Coronation March, "The Prophet", Meyerbeer; Overture, "Il Guarany," Gomez; Waltz, "1001 Nights," Strauss; Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly," Puccini; Tempest Scene, "Othello," Verdi; Prelude, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Tarantelle, Jacchia; Rhapsody Espana, Chabrier; "L'Arlesienne" Suite, No. 2, Bizet; Tango, Albeniz; Hungarian Dance, No. 1, Brahms.

AD VTSR-MAY. 9

The Pops Are With Us Again With Jacchia in Command



"THERE'S MUSIC IN THE AIR" EVERY NIGHT AT SYMPHONY HALL

By MARGARET HARRIS

Ginger ale, women and orchestral song made a colorful background for the spontaneous enthusiasm of the large audience which thronged to Symphony hall last evening to enjoy the intial Pop concert of 1923.

To Jacques Hoffman, who conducted the orchestra, owing to the indisposition of Mr. Jacchia, they extended a royal welcome, reminding one of a student carnival in France, where abandon and pleasure reign. It was a sincere and friendly welcome.

The performance itself indicated that both conductor and players caught the attitude of their auditors, for Mr. Hoffman's reading of the scores at hand were elastic and full of verve and color. From the serious music of Wagner's "Lohengrin" to the capricious Gypsy Dance from Bizet's "Carmen," the moods of both audience and players changed.

For several years past, Mr. Jacchia has proven himself a master "builder of programs." That which he offered last evening fulfilled the hopes of the most exacting. There were unhackneyed selections from well known operas, German, Italian and French. In contrast to a Liszt Rhapsody was a Chopin prelude, a short work, orginially one of the composer's improvisations. Greig's "Peer Gynt," always new, and the popular "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers. Who could leave dissatisfied?

A veteran member of the Boston Symphony, Mr. Hoffman lent to his work his keen sense of rhythm and tone coloring.

The program this evening is arranged for the 100th anniversary of the first performance of "Home Sweet Home."

TELE. MAY 8

"POPS" DRAWS A CAPACITY HOUSE

Opening Night Finds S. R. O. Sign Out Early

"Pops" is a Boston institution. No music lover thinks the season complete without attending several of these very fine concerts. Nowhere else can one hear just the kind of music one is delighted with at Symphony hall during the "Pops" season.

That is why a representative gathering attended the opening concert last evening. Jacques Hoffman conducted because of the indisposition of Agide Jacchia.

The S. R. O. sign was necessary very early in the evening. The program was varied and pleasing and there was a generous number of extras.

PROGRAM PLEASES

The opening number was the introduction to act 3 of "Lohengrin," and it was delightfully played. In Weber's overture to "Der Freischutz," which followed, the violins were especially effective in the sweeping majestic passages which faded away into trembling stillness.

The popular Second Hungarian Rhapsody was warmly applauded. It has a merry lilt to its cadences which holds a universal appeal. Chopin's plaintive Prelude, op. 28, No. 6, as arranged by Mr. Jacchia, won delighted applause.

Other selections eliciting general appreciation were "Espana" and Tchaikovsky's Polonaise from Suite No. 3. The descriptive offering from the Peer Gynt suite was one of the most brilliant numbers of the evening.

MANY EXTRAS

The familiar "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" proved a happy choice near the end. Every one seemed to enjoy it. For the finale, the well known "Gypsy Dance" from Carmen was given.

The extras included the Kreisler favorite, "Liebesfreud," "Tarantelle," by Jacchia; the "Cruiser Harvard"; "Death of Ase," from Peer Gynt, and the "Boatman's Song" as arranged by Jacchia.

Mr. Hoffman's conducting was marked with colorful skill, and with a fine restraint which made the more delicate passages of a selection appealing.

It is to be regretted that some members of the audience felt it necessary to chat during the numbers. This should be discouraged. Even though the "Pops" are informal, there is real music offered, and for the sake of those who go to hear it, the others should converse between the numbers.

TRAV. MAY. 8.

At the Pops Tonight

"Southern Night"

Military March	Schubert
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber
Deep River	Burleigh-Jacchia
Dixie Land	Emmet
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
Ballet Suite	Glazunov
Afro-American Folk Songs (Arranged for Orchestra by Jacchia)
Scherzo from the Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream,"	Mendelssohn
Ride of the Valkyrs	Wagner
Hungarian March	Berlioz
Waltz, "Southern Roses"	J. Strauss
	J. Strauss
Southern Airs	Bendix

Conductor: J. Hoffmann

TRANS-MAY. 11

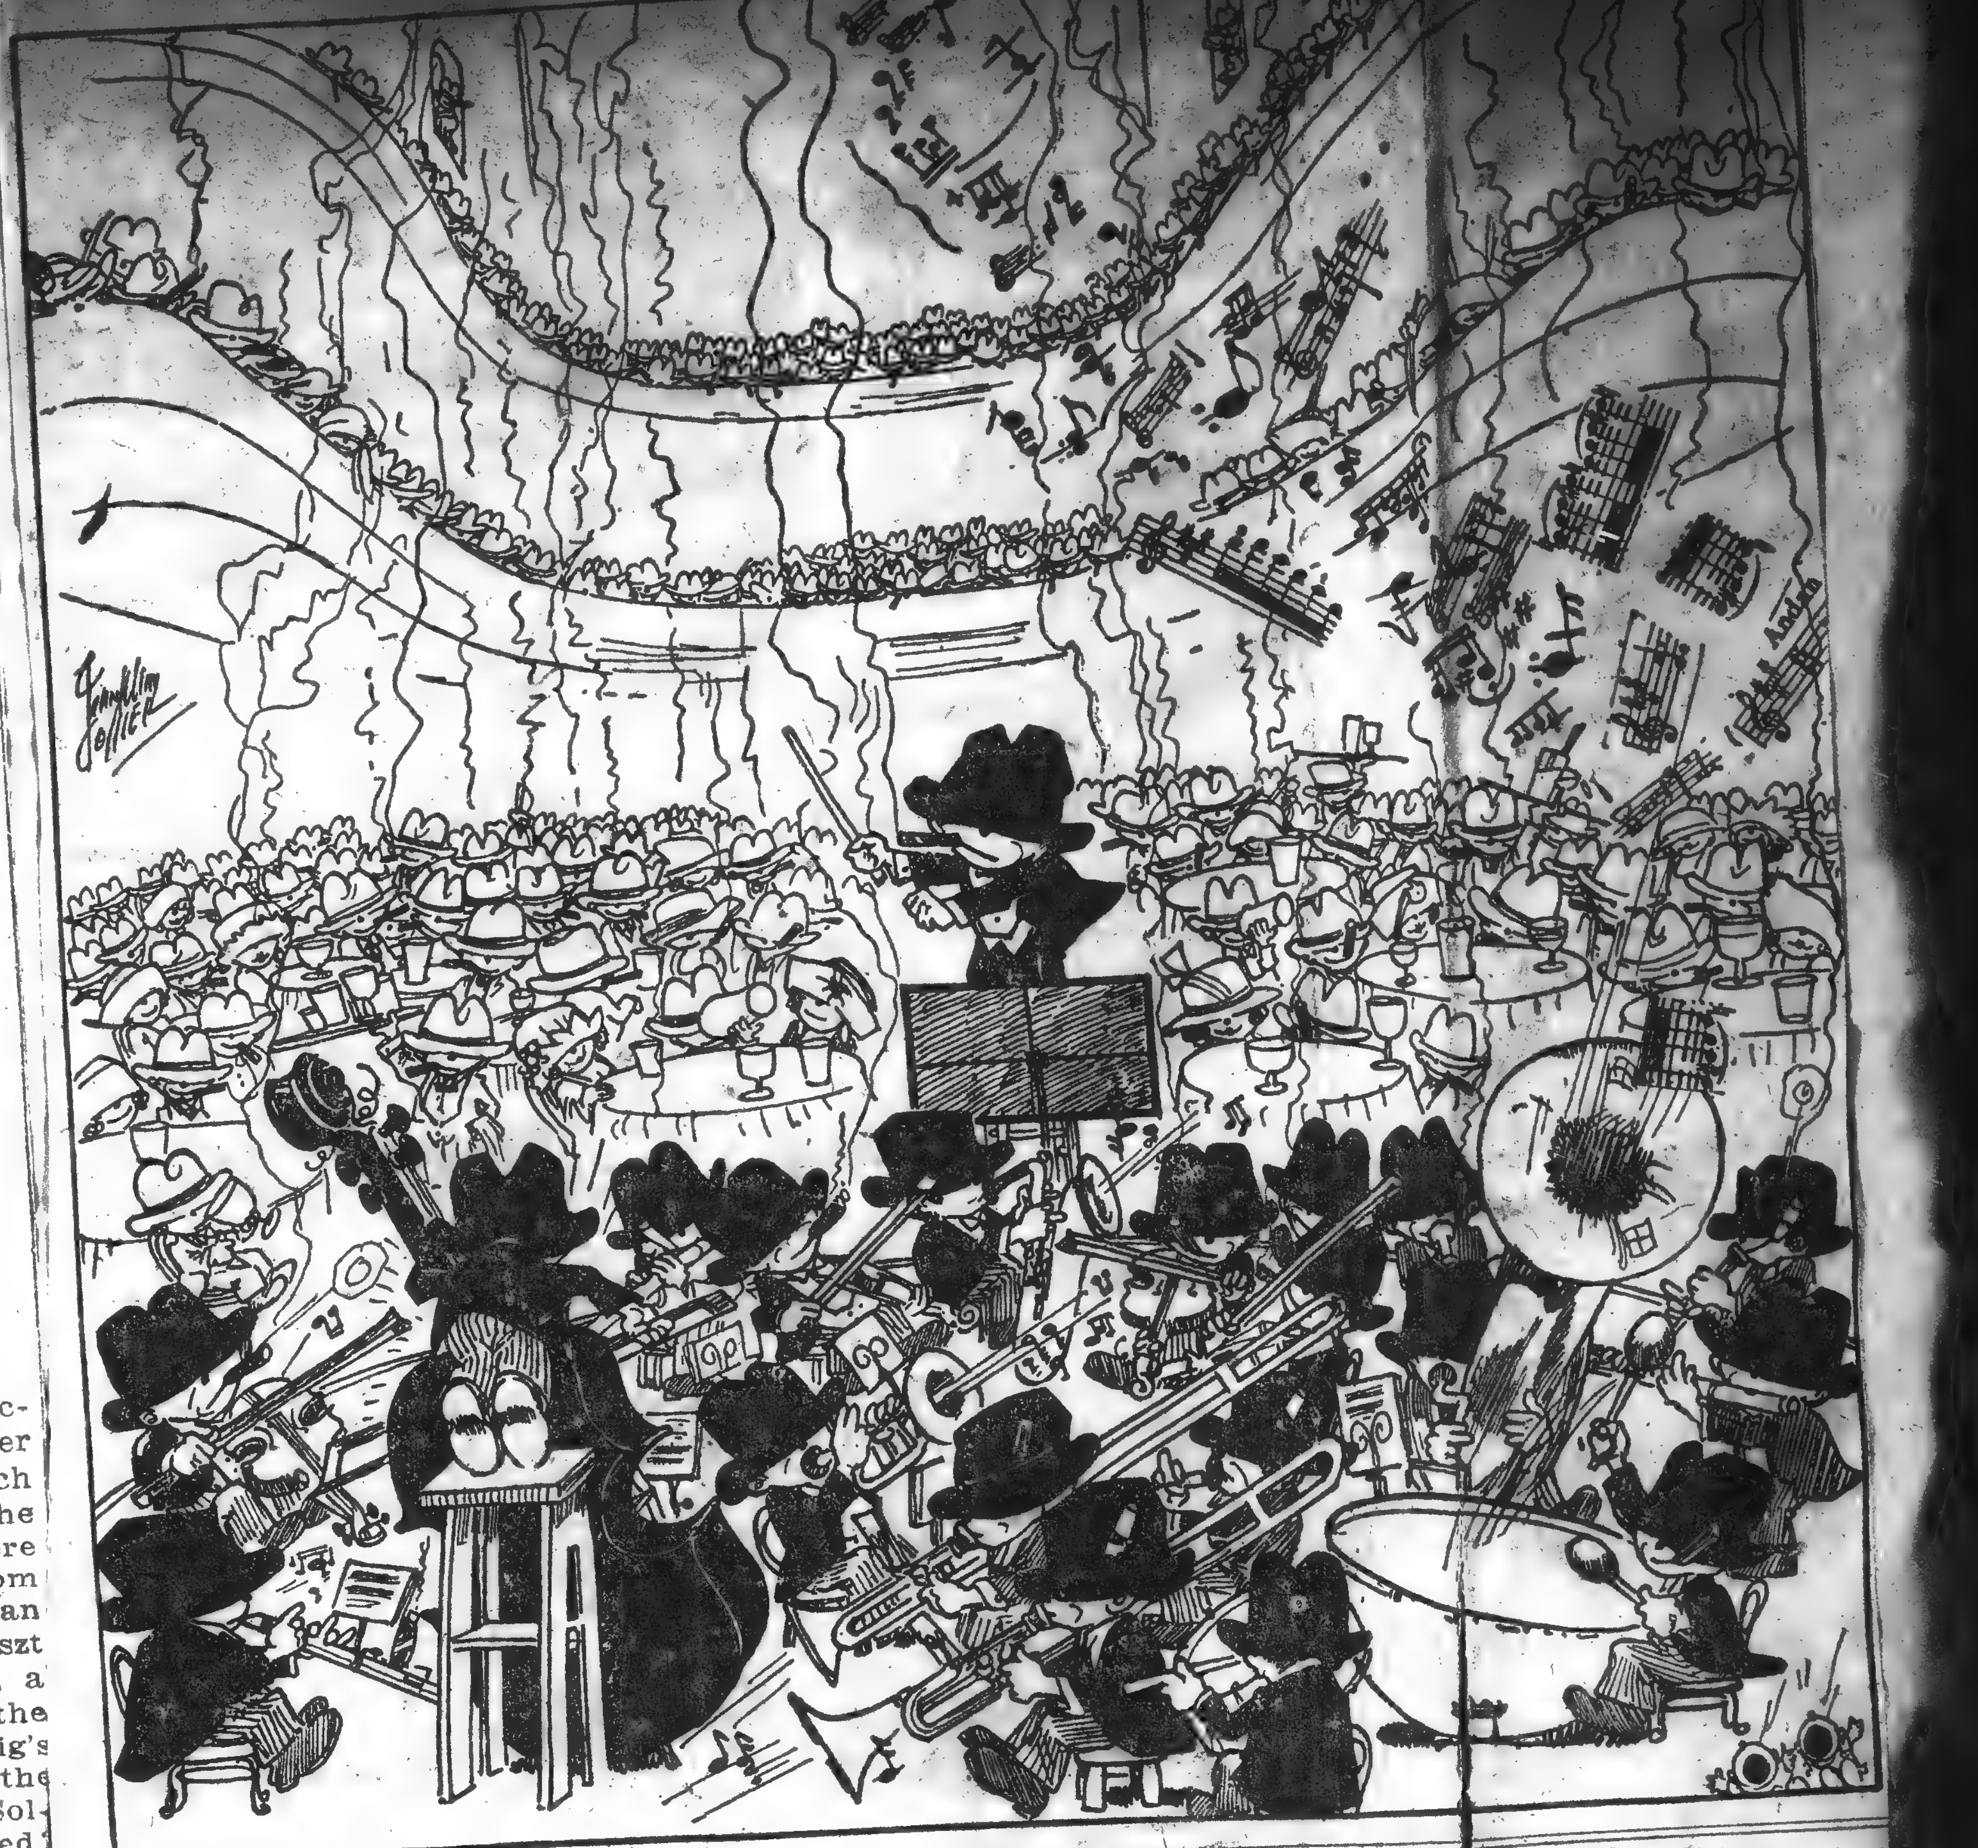
THE POPS TONIGHT

Southern night will be featured at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The program follows:

Military March, Schubert; Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Deep River, Burleigh-Jacchia; Dixie's Land, Dan Emmet; Fantasia, "Aida," Verdi; Suite, "Scenes de Ballet," Glazounov; Afro-American Folk Songs, arranged by Agide Jacchia; Scherzo, "Midsummer-Night's Dream" Mendelssohn; Ride of the Valkyries, Wagner; Hungarian March, Berlioz; Waltz, "Roses from the South," Strauss; Selection of Southern Airs, Bendix.

TELE. MAY 11

OTTO GROW'S FIRST-NIGHT POP DREAM



"POPS" START IN ON 38TH SEASON

Not Quite Like in Years Gone by; but Music Is There

"A waltz by Strauss or a glass of beer was not out of keeping." This excerpt from an informing note in the program book of the Symphony hall "Pops," referring to the early days of this now annual fixture, is at once a prod to memory, and a solace to those of us who are againg. For it was in those merry summers of the late eighties and early nineties that the "Pops" were at their merriest. In the old Music hall, for instance, there was suwdust on the floor, just enough to give fitting atmosphere; on the stage a band of musicians far smaller than the impressive near threescore of today, and at the tables nightly groups of many ages, but all athirst for sprightly tunes, properly played, and alike athirst for such honest brews as were on tap—and there were many. Yet it was not merely a students' rendezvous. The musically-elect and the socially-select were there as well.

Modes have changed, restrictions have increased, but the "Pops," entering last night on their 38th year, have never lost their vogue. The programs have become yearly more elaborate, the number of musicians augmented. Carbonated waters of various pretty colors, but lacking the tang of the olden beverages, and other properly legalized refreshments are served by soft-moving girls in uniform, replacing the lads who used to work down-town days and at the "Pops" nights, and who never were without towels with which to mop the tables. But at those tables, and in the balconies as well, still sit the musically-elect and the socially-select, and the students, a more decorous brand. And we still may hear a waltz by Strauss.

Last evening Mr. Jacchia was unable to conduct, owing to a recent illness, not of serious nature, and Mr. Jacques Hoffmann, who serves as concert master during the season of "Pops," and is a brilliant violinist with the Symphony orchestra, held the baton. If he lacked Mr. Jacchia's restless fervor, he possessed his own talents of fine discretion, absolute knowledge of the works at hand and the confidence of his men. In certain ways he reminded one of that popular conductor of other seasons, Gustav Strube—genial, human and broad in musical mind and matter. The program comprised works of Wagner, Weber, Brahms-Gericke, Liszt, Chopin, Grieg, Ponchielli, Tchaikovsky, Bizet—names of substance; Waldteufel, for a waltz, Jessel for the one novelty of the printed program, "The Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," from "Chauve Souris." Mr. Hoffmann bravely refrained from making this spirited piece a quickstep, and played it as written, for automatons feeling their way, yet always in rhythmic step. The audience was hungry for this and could have stood its repetition. The old Music hall crowd would have yelled for more—and got it.

For the rest there were many extras, including Schubert's "Moment Musical," Kreisler's "Liebesfreud," Jacchia's "Tarantelle," the "Volga Bargemen's Song," Strube's rousing "Cruiser Harvard" march, the barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffman," and, to complete, the "Peer Gynt" suite, "The Death of Ase."

The "Pops" have started auspiciously.

There is every indication that nightly they will prosper exceedingly, and Sunday nights as well, even though on these latter nights there may be no near-beer nor yet smoking. Such is the whimsical law.

W. E. G.

"HOME, SWEET HOME" AT THE POPS TONIGHT

On May 8, 1823, "Home Sweet Home" had its first performance as a number in the opera "Clari," by Bishop in London. This centennial will be observed at the Pops' concert in Symphony hall tonight by a special arrangement of the immortal melody made by Agide Jacchia, the program:

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"	J. Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"	Leoncavalle
Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tschaikovsky
Organ solo (Prof. H. D. Sleeper)
Liebesfreud	Kreisler
Overture to "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Selection, "Organe Blossoms"	Herbert
Volga Bargemen's Song	arranged by Agide Jacchia
"Home, Sweet Home"	Bishop-Jacchia

HERALD-MAY. 6.

Pops Programs

The Pop concerts in Symphony hall will close their first week tonight. Again Jacchia will present the following program:

Charge of the Hussars, Spindler; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Waltz "The Barcarolle," Waldteufel; Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; "Little Suite," Bizet; Procession to the Cathedral, from "Lohengrin," Act 2, Wagner; "Whispering of the Flowers," Blon; Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville," Albeniz; Fantasia "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; Dubinushka, arranged by Agide Jacchia, Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager; Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa.

A new experiment at the Pop concerts in Symphony hall, will be Sunday night Pops, of which the first will be given tomorrow. The feature of this concert will be a Russian-Tschaikovsky program. The numbers follow:

Cortege from "Mlada," Rimsky Korsakov; Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin," Tschaikovsky; "Kammenoi Ostrow," Rubinstein; Waltz, "Dornroeschen," Tschaikovsky; Finale, Fourth Symphony, Tschaikovsky; Introduction and Dance of Salome, Glazounov; "Elli, Elli," arranged by Agide Jacchia, Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager; Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor," Borodin; Song Without Words, Tschaikovsky; Ouverture Solennelle "1812," Tschaikovsky.

TELE. MAY. 12.

Jacchia to Conduct

Agide Jacchia, conductor for the seventh season of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall, will take the baton tonight for the first time this year. The first Sunday evening concert will be given tomorrow night.

MONITOR. MAY. 12

Veek-End "Pops" P

TONIGHT

Charge of the Hussars....
Overture to "William Tell"...
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"..W
Dance of the Hours from Gioconda" ....
"Little Suite" ....
Procession to the Cathedra
"Lohengrin" ....
"Whispering of the Flowers
Spanish Rhapsody, "A N Seville" ....
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rust

Dubinushka
Arranged by Agide
(Solo trumpet, Georges M
"Stars and Stripes Forever"

SUNDAY EVENING

Cortège from "Mlada"
Rimsky-
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"
Tscha
"Kammenoi Ostrow"......Ru
Waltz, "Dornroeschen".Tscha
Finale, Fourth Symphony
Tscha
Introduction and Dance of

"Elli, Elli"
Arranged by Agide
(Solo trumpet, Georges
Polovtsian Dances from "Pr

Song Without Words...Tscha
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"

MONITOR-M

Tchaikovsky Pr First Sunda Concer

Tomorrow evening in the Pop concerts will op week with a Sunday conc tion at the Pops.

The opening week of season, has proved one in the long and venera Pop concerts.

The programs which A has made for the second clude on Monday college songs to be sung by the Har man Glee Club. The Rus kovsky program for tomorrow lows:

Cortege from "Mlada"
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"
"Kammenoi Ostrow"
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"
Finale, Fourth Symphony
Introduction and Dance of Sa
"Elli, Elli".............Arr.
(Solo trumpet, Georges
Polovtsian Dances from "Prin
Song Without Words
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"

MONDAY, MAY

March, "Veritas"
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"
Fantasia, "Faust"
College Songs by Harvard Fre
(A. W. Wright, le
Finale of "Scheherazade"
Spanish Dance—Granados
Parade of the Wooden Soldie
Ride of the Valkyries
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"
"Entrance of the Gladiators"

TUESDAY, MAY

Wedding March from "A M
Night's Dream"
Overture to "The Flying Dutc
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"
Choral Pieces by Radcliffe
Radcliffe Choral Society.
(Conductor, Dr. Archibald
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia"
Intermezzo from "William Rat
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from Butterfly"
(Laura Littlefield,
Roumanian Rhapsody
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"
Waltz, "Artist's Life"
Hungarian Dance No. 5

WEDNESDAY, M

Overture to "The

At the Pops Tonight

Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" .... Nicolai
Waltz, "Blue Danube" .... J. Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" .... Leoncavallo
Suite from the Ballet, "Nutcracker," Chaikovsky

Organ Solo.
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
Overture to "Tannhäuser" .... Wagner
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" ... Herbert
Volga Bargemen's Song, Arranged by Jacchia
Home, Sweet Home ...... Bishop-Jacchia

Conductor: J. Hoffmann
Soloist: Professor H. D. Sleeper

TRANS. MAY. 8

DURANT MEMBERS AT POPS TONIGHT

The third Pop concert of the season will take place in Symphony Hall tonight at which members of the Durant, Inc., will be numerously represented. This night, however, and all nights of the Pops, are open to the public. The program follows:

Coronation March from "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
Overture, "Il Guarany" .... Gomez
Waltz, "1001 Nights" .... Strauss
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly" .... Puccini
Tempest Scene, "Othello" .... Verdi
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Rhapsody Espana .... Chabrier
"L'Arlesienne" Suite, o. 2 .... Bizet
Tango .... Albeniz
Hungarian Fance No. 1 in G minor .. Brahms

AMER. MAY. 9.

The "Pops" Season Opens

The "Pops" began their thirty-eighth season last night, and devotees of symphonic music in its less severe moods thronged Symphony Hall. Here were no stately dowagers attending for fashion's sake, or reserved gentlemen of middle age, to whom the slightest show of emotion partakes of vulgarity. Yet audiences are often the most important part of a performance (artistically speaking and not from the box-office point of view alone), and many a concert of the regular symphony season just past has been marred by the over reserved attitude of the listeners. Last night all came to enjoy the music and were not slow in giving evidence of their pleasure. The hearty and spontaneous applause after every number had evident effect on the orchestra, which played with more than its usual ardor and enthusiasm. The program contained many old favorites and still others were added as encores, of which there was a generous number.

Mr. Jacchia, conductor for the last seven years, being unavoidably absent, was replaced by Jacques Hoffmann of the first violins. Mr. Hoffmann's activities as quartet leader, conductor of the Boston Music School Settlement Orchestra, and in various other directions are well known to the musical public. Last night he conducted gracefully and effectively, with excellent command of his forces and with musicianly instinct. He was warmly received by the audience. A more auspicious opening for the "Pops" could hardly be imagined.

S. M.

MONITOR - MAY. 8

POPS PROGRAM TONIGHT

The third Pops concert of the season will take place in Symphony hall tonight, at which members of the Durant, Inc., will be numerously represented. This night, however, and all other nights at the Pops will be open to the public. Program follows:

Coronation March from "The Prophet. Meyerbeer
Overture, "Il Guarany" .... Gomez
Waltz, "1001 Nights" .... Strauss
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly" .... Puccini
Tempest Scene, "Othello" .... Verdi
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Rhapsody Espana .... Chabrier
"L'Arlesienne" Suite No. 2. .... Bizet
Tango .... Albeniz
Hungarian Fance No 1 in Gminor ...... Brahms

TRAV. MAY. 9.

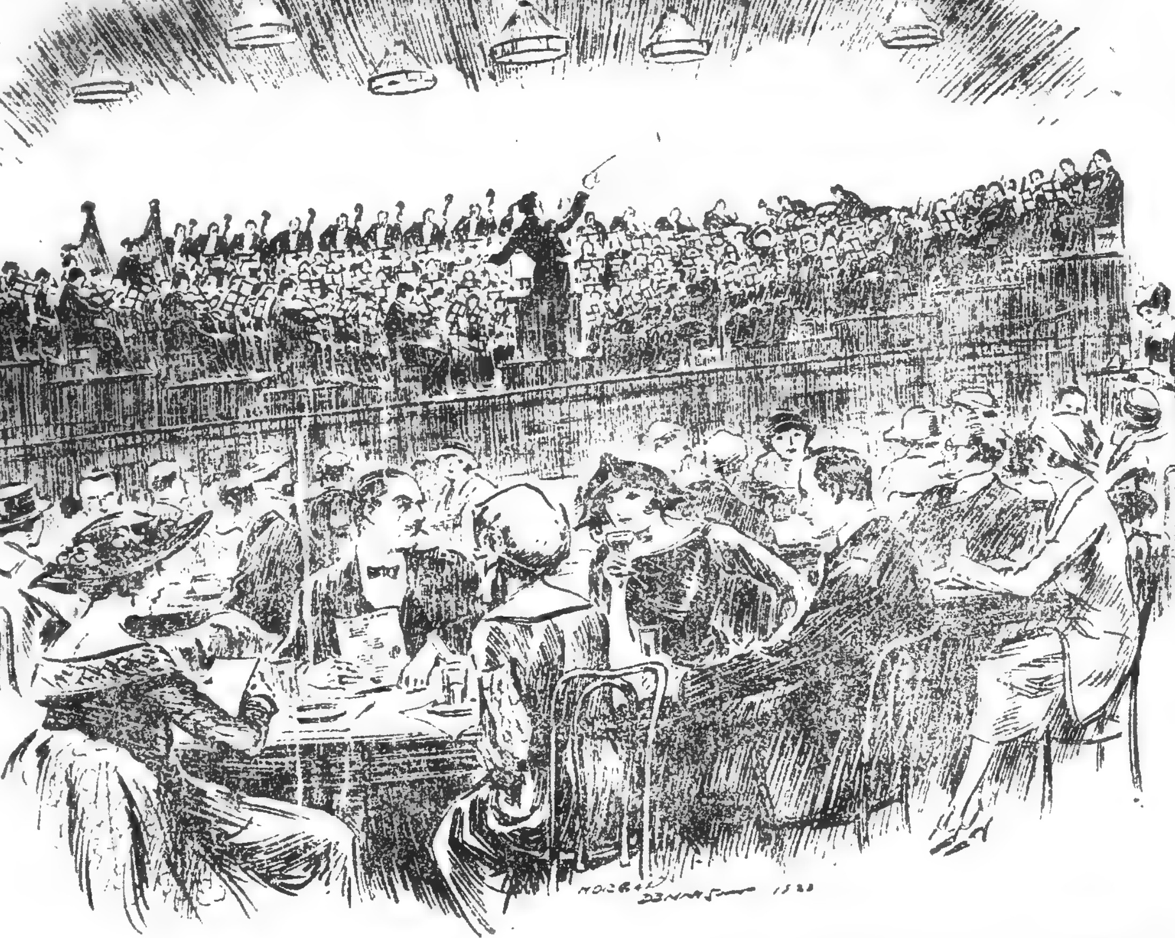
POPS PROGRAM TONIGHT

The Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight will offer the following program:

Coronation March, "The Prophet", Meyerbeer; Overture, "Il Guarany," Gomez; Waltz, "1001 Nights," Strauss; Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly," Puccini; Tempest Scene, "Othello," Verdi; Prelude, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Tarantelle, Jacchia; Rhapsody Espana, Chabrier; "L'Arlesienne" Suite, No. 2, Bizet; Tango, Albeniz; Hungarian Dance, No. 1, Brahms.

ADVTSR - MAY. 9.

The Pops Are With Us Again With Jacchia in Command



"THERE'S MUSIC IN THE AIR" EVERY NIGHT AT SYMPHONY HALL

By MARGARET HARRIS

Ginger ale, women and orchestral song made a colorful background for the spontaneous enthusiasm of the large audience which thronged to Symphony hall last evening to enjoy the intial Pop concert of 1923.

To Jacques Hoffman, who conducted the orchestra, owing to the indisposition of Mr. Jacchia, they extended a royal welcome, reminding one of a student carnival in France, where abandon and pleasure reign. It was a sincere and friendly welcome.

The performance itself indicated that both conductor and players caught the attitude of their auditors, for Mr. Hoffman's reading of the scores at hand were elastic and full of verve and color. From the serious music of Wagner's "Lohengrin" to the capricious Gypsy Dance from Bizet's "Carmen," the moods of both audience and players changed.

For several years past, Mr. Jacchia has proven himself a master "builder of programs." That which he offered last evening fulfilled the hopes of the most exacting. There were unhackneyed selections from well known operas, German, Italian and French. In contrast to a Liszt Rhapsody was a Chopin prelude, a short work, orginially one of the composer's improvisations. Greig's "Peer Gynt," always new, and the popular "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers. Who could leave dissatisfied?

A veteran member of the Boston Symphony, Mr. Hoffman lent to his work his keen sense of rhythm and tone coloring.

The program this evening is arranged for the 100th anniversary of the first performance of "Home Sweet Home."

TELE. MAY. 8

"POPS" DRAWS A CAPACITY HOUSE

Opening Night Finds S. R. O. Sign Out Early

"Pops" is a Boston institution. No music lover thinks the season complete without attending several of these very fine concerts. Nowhere else can one hear just the kind of music one is delighted with at Symphony hall during the "Pops" season.

That is why a representative gathering attended the opening concert last evening. Jacques Hoffman conducted because of the indisposition of Agide Jacchia.

The S. R. O. sign was necessary very early in the evening. The program was varied and pleasing and there was a generous number of extras.

PROGRAM PLEASES

The opening number was the introduction to act 8 of "Lohengrin," and it was delightfully played. In Weber's overture to "Der Freischutz," which followed, the violins were especially effective in the sweeping majestic passages which faded away into trembling stillness.

The popular Second Hungarian Rhapsody was warmly applauded. It has a merry lilt to its cadences which holds a universal appeal. Chopin's plaintive Prelude, op. 28, No. 6, as arranged by Mr. Jacchia, won delighted applause.

Other selections eliciting general appreciation were "Espana" and Tchaikovsky's Polonaise from Suite No. 3. The descriptive offering from the Peer Gynt suite was one of the most brilliant numbers of the evening.

MANY EXTRAS

The familiar "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" proved a happy choice near the end. Every one seemed to enjoy it. For the finale, the well known "Gypsy Dance" from Carmen was given.

The extras included the Kreisler favorite, "Liebesfreud," "Tarantelle," by Jacchia; the "Cruiser Harvard"; "Death of Ase," from Peer Gynt, and the "Boatman's Song" as arranged by Jacchia.

Mr. Hoffman's conducting was marked with colorful skill, and with a fine restraint which made the more delicate passages of a selection appealing.

It is to be regretted that some members of the audience felt it necessary to chat during the numbers. This should be discouraged. Even though the "Pops" are informal, there is real music offered, and for the sake of those who go to hear it, the others should converse between the numbers.

TRAV. MAY. 8.

At the Pops Tonight

"Southern Night"

Military March .... Schubert
Overture to "Oberon" .... Weber
Deep River .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Dixie Land .... Emmet
Fantasia, "Aida" .... Verdi
Ballet Suite .... Glazunov
Afro-American Folk Songs (Arranged for Orchestra by Jacchia)
Scherzo from the Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn
Ride of the Valkyrs .... Wagner
Hungarian March .... Berlioz
Waltz, "Southern Roses" .... J. Strauss
J. Strauss
Southern Airs .... Bendix

Conductor: J. Hoffmann

TRANS - MAY. 11

THE POPS TONIGHT

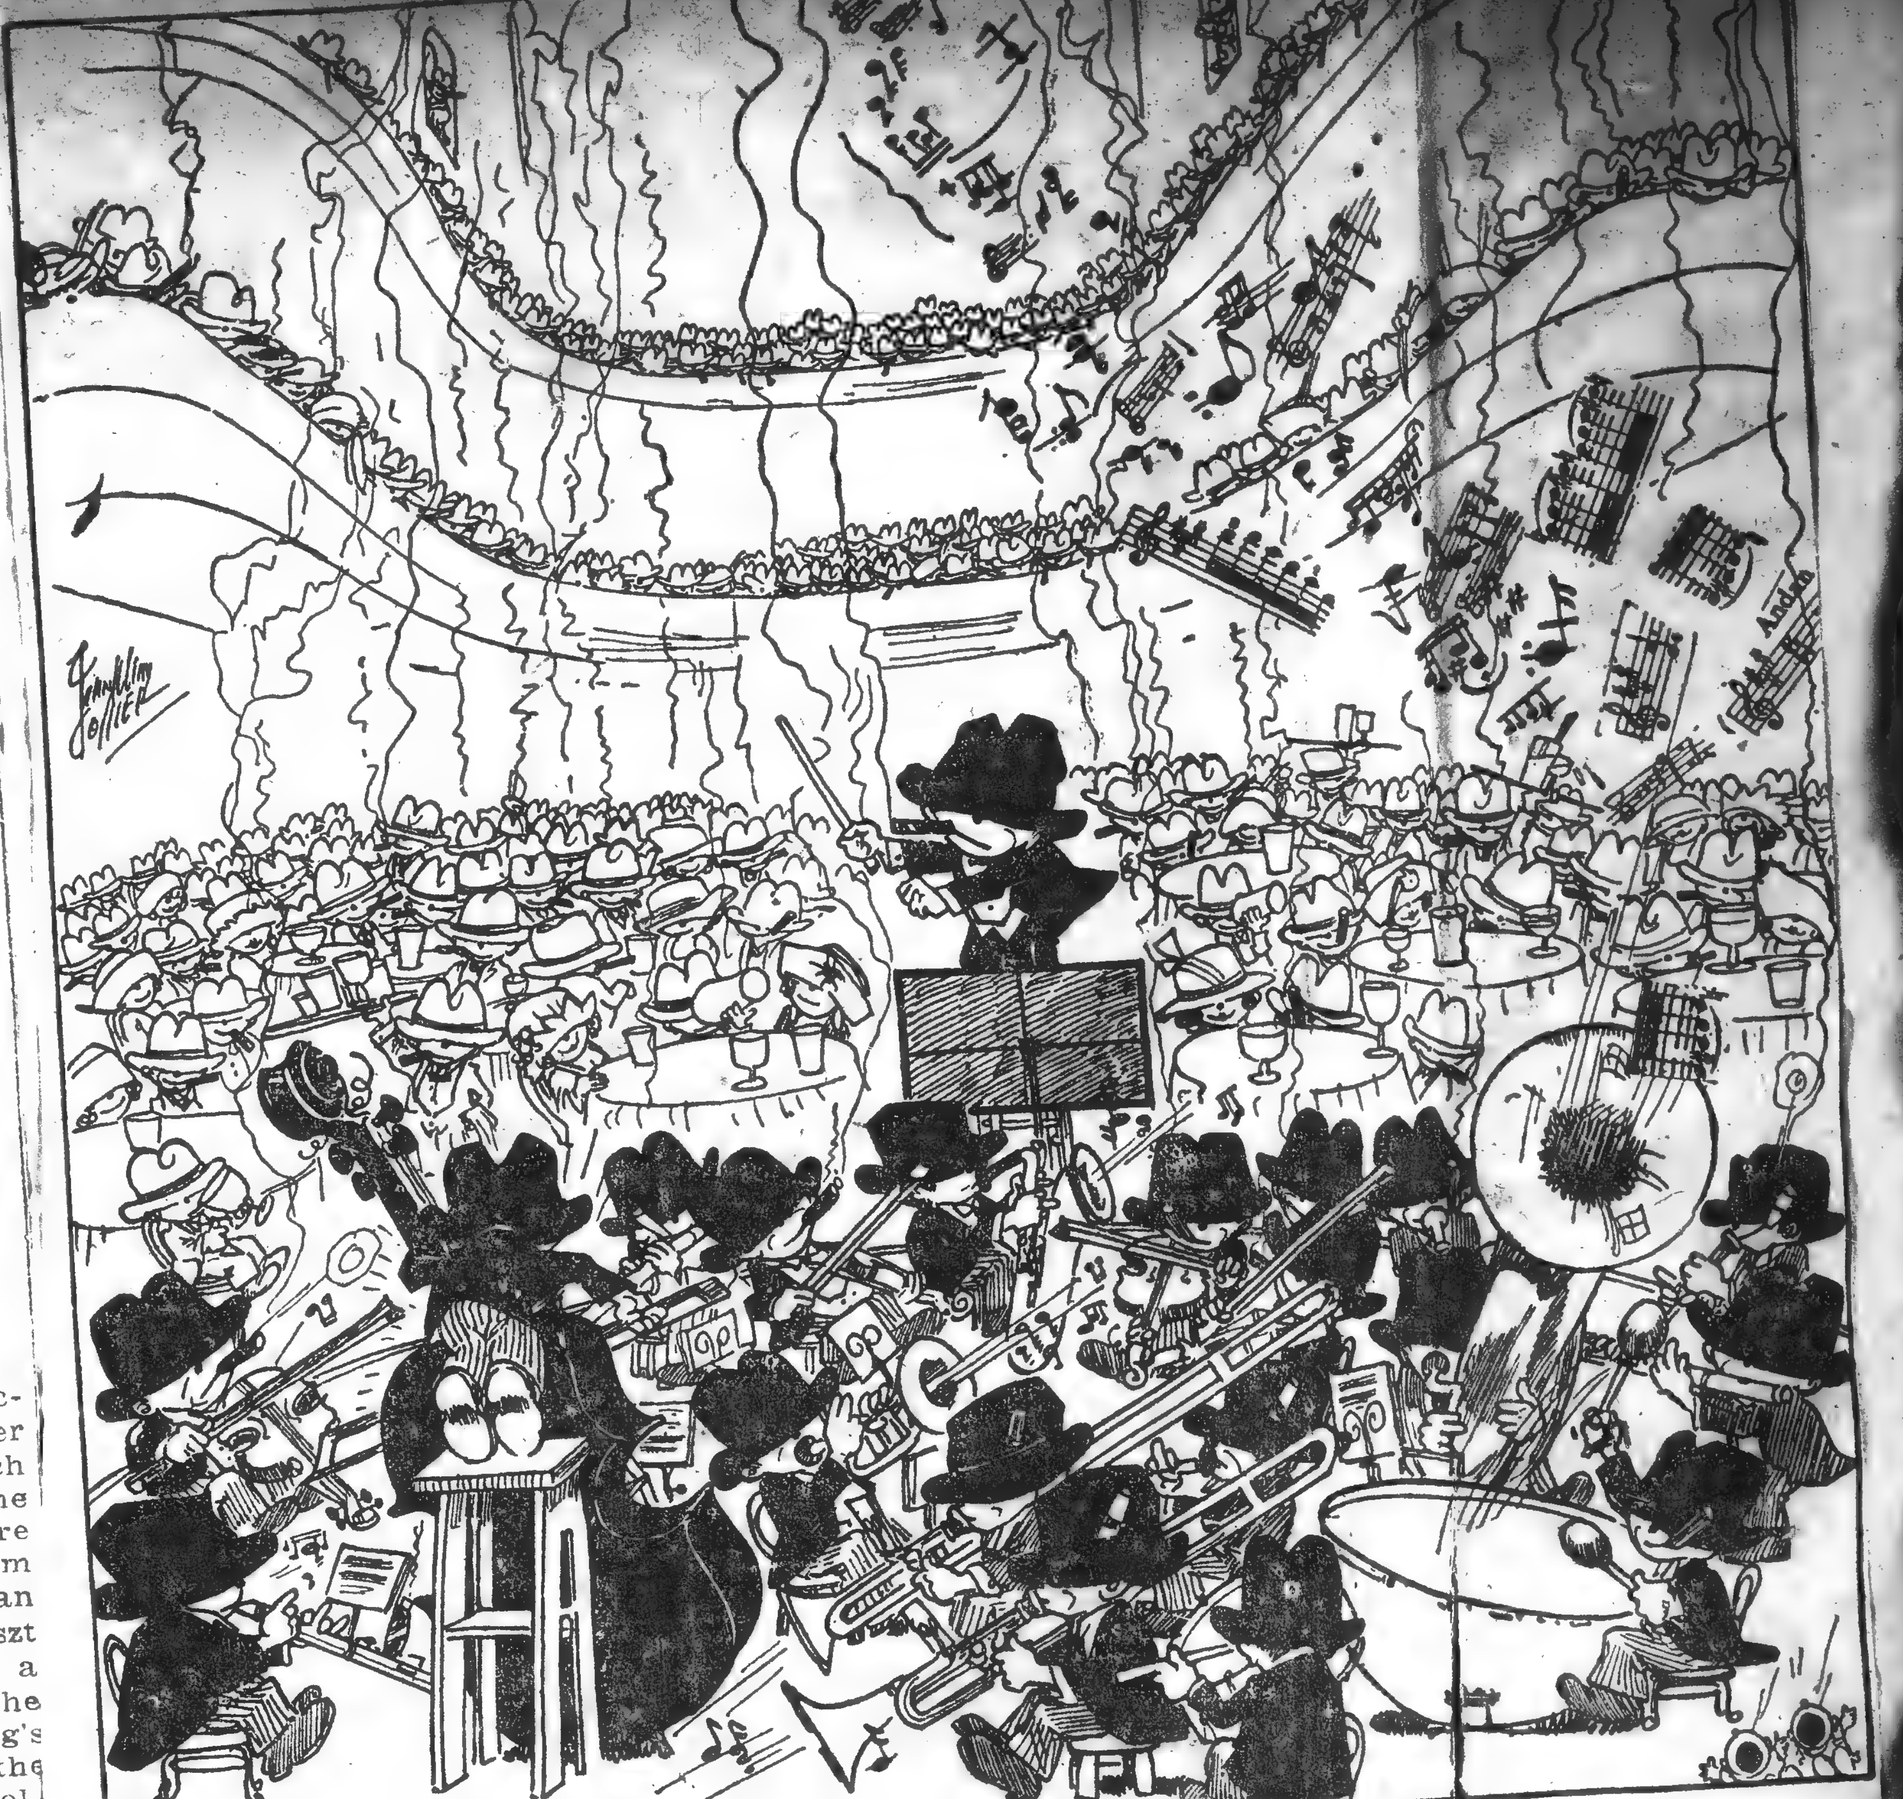
Southern night will be featured at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The program follows:

Military March, Schubert; Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Deep River, Burleigh-Jacchia; Dixie's Land, Dan Emmet; Fantasia, "Aida," Verdi; Suite, "Scenes de Ballet," Glazounov; Afro-American Folk Songs, arranged by Agide Jacchia; Scherzo, "Midsummer-Night's Dream" Mendelssohn; Ride of the Valkyries, Wagner; Hungarian March, Berlioz; Waltz, "Roses from the South," Strauss; Selection of Southern Airs, Bendix.

TELE. MAY. 11

OTTO GROW'S FIRST-NIGHT POP DREAM

By Collier



"POPS" START IN ON 38TH SEASON

Not Quite Like in Years Gone by; but Music Is There

"A waltz by Strauss or a glass of beer was not out of keeping." This excerpt from an informing note in the program book of the Symphony hall "Pops," referring to the early days of this now annual fixture, is at once a prod to memory, and a solace to those of us who are againg. For it was in those merry summers of the late eighties and early nineties that the "Pops" were at their merriest. In the old Music hall, for instance, there was suwdust on the floor, just enough to give fitting atmosphere; on the stage a band of musicians far smaller than the impressive near three-score of today, and at the tables nightly groups of many ages, but all athirst for sprightly tunes, properly played, and alike athirst for such honest brews as were on tap—and there were many. Yet it was not merely a students' rendezvous. The musically-elect and the socially-select were there as well.

Modes have changed, restrictions have increased, but the "Pops," entering last night on their 38th year, have never lost their vogue. The programs have become yearly more elaborate, the number of musicians augmented. Carbonated waters of various pretty colors, but lacking the tang of the olden beverages, and other properly legalized refreshments are served by soft-moving girls in uniform, replacing the lads who used to work down-town days and at the "Pops" nights, and who never were without towels with which to mop the tables. But at those tables, and in the balconies as well, still sit the musically-elect and the socially-select, and the students, a more decorous brand. And we still may hear a waltz by Strauss.

Last evening Mr. Jacchia was unable to conduct, owing to a recent illness, not of serious nature, and Mr. Jacques Hoffmann, who serves as concert master during the season of "Pops," and is a brilliant violinist with the Symphony orchestra, held the baton. If he lacked Mr. Jacchia's restless fervor, he possessed his own talents of fine discretion, absolute knowledge of the works at hand and the confidence of his men. In certain ways he reminded one of that popular conductor of other seasons, Gustav Strube—genial, human and broad in musical mind and matter. The program comprised works of Wagner, Weber, Brahms-Gericke, Liszt, Chopin, Grieg, Ponchielli, Tchaikovsky, Bizet—names of substance; Waldteufel, for a waltz, Jessel for the one novelty of the printed program, "The Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," from "Chauve Souris." Mr. Hoffmann bravely refrained from making this spirited piece a quickstep, and played it as written, for automatons feeling their way, yet always in rhythmic step. The audience was hungry for this and could have stood its repetition. The old Music hall crowd would have yelled for more—and got it.

For the rest there were many extras, including Schubert's "Moment Musical," Kreisler's "Liebesfreud," Jacchia's "Tarantelle," the "Volga Bargemen's Song," Strube's rousing "Cruiser Harvard" march, the barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffman," and, to complete the "Peer Gynt" suite, "The Death of Ase."

The "Pops" have started auspiciously. There is every indication that nightly they will prosper exceedingly, and Sunday nights as well, even though on these latter nights there may be no near-beer nor yet smoking. Such is the whimsical law.

W. E. G.

"HOME, SWEET HOME" AT THE POPS TONIGHT

On May 8, 1823, "Home Sweet Home" had its first performance as a number in the opera "Clari," by Bishop in London. This centennial will be observed at the Pops' concert in Symphony hall tonight by a special arrangement of the immortal melody made by Agide Jacchia, the program:

Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" .... Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" .... J. Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" .... Leoncavallo
Suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tschaikovsky
Organ solo (Prof. H. D. Sleeper)
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
Overture to "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Selection, "Organe Blossoms" ..... Herbert
Volga Bargemen's Song arranged by Agide Jacchia
"Home, Sweet Home" ...... Bishop-Jacchia

HERALD - MAY. 8.

Pops Programs

The Pop concerts in Symphony hall will close their first week tonight. Again Jacchia will present the following program:

Charge of the Hussars, Spindler; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Waltz "The Barcarolle," Waldteufel; Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; "Little Suite," Bizet; Procession to the Cathedral, from "Lohengrin," Act Wagner; "Whispering of the Flowers" Blon; Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville," Albeniz; Fantasia "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; Dubinushka, arranged by Agide Jacchia, Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager; Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa.

A new experiment at the Pop concerts in Symphony hall, will be Sunday night Pops, of which the first will be given tomorrow. The feature of this concert will be a Russian-Tschaikovsky program. The numbers follow:

Cortege from "Mlada," Rimsky Korsakov; Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin," Tschaikovsky; "Kammenoi Ostrow," Rubinstein; Waltz, "Dornroeschen," Tschaikovsky; Finale, Fourth Symphony, Tschaikovsky; Introduction and Dance of Salome, Glazounov; "Elli, Elli," arranged by Agide Jacchia, Solo Trumpet, George Mager; Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor," Borodin; Song Without Words, Tschaikovsky; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Tschaikovsky.

TELE. MAY. 12

Jacchia to Conduct

Agide Jacchia, conductor for the seventh season of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall, will take the baton tonight for the first time this year. The first Sunday evening concert will be given tomorrow night.

MONITOR. MAY. 12

Veek-End "Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

Charge of the Hussars....... Spindler
Overture to "William Tell".. Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle".. Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchi
"Little Suite" ....
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers".... Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville" .... Albeniz
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Dubinushka Arranged by Agide
(Solo trumpet, Georges Ma
"Stars and Stripes Forever".

SUNDAY EVENING

Cortège from "Mlada" Rimsky-Korsakoff
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin" Tscha
"Kammenoi Ostrow"...... Ru
Waltz, "Dornroeschen". Tscha
Finale, Fourth Symphony Tscha
Introduction and Dance of Sa
"Elli, Elli" Arranged by Agide
(Solo trumpet, Georges
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince
Song Without Words... Tschaiko
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tschaiko

MONITOR - MA

Tchaikovsky Pro First Sunda Concer

Tomorrow evening in the Pop concerts will op week with a Sunday conc tion at the Pops.

The opening week of season, has proved one in the long and venera Pop concerts.

The programs which has made for the second clude on Monday college songs to be sung by the Ha man Glee Club. The Rus kovsky program for tomorrow lows:

Cortege from "Mlada"
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"
"Kammenoi Ostrow"
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"
Finale, Fourth Symphony
Introduction and Dance of Sa
"Elli, Elli" .... Arr.
(Solo trumpet, George
Polovtsian Dances from "Prin
Song Without Words
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"

MONDAY, MAY

March, "Veritas"
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"
Fantasia, "Faust"
College Songs by Harvard Fre
(A. W. Wright, le
Finale of "Scheherazade"
Spanish Dance—Granados
Parade of the Wooden Soldi
Ride of the Valkyries
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"
"Entrance of the Gladiators"

TUESDAY, MAY

Wedding March from "A Night's Dream"
Overture to "The Flying Du
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"
Choral Pieces by Radcliffe Radcliffe Choral Society.
(Conductor, Dr. Archibald
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia"
Intermezzo from "William Ra
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from Butterfly"
(Laura Littlefield
Roumanian Rhapsody
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"
Waltz, "Artist's Life"
Hungarian Dance No. 5

WEDNESDAY, MA

Overture to "The Queen of Overture, "Light C Waltz, "

[103]

By Collier

Week-End "Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

Charge of the Hussars......Spindler
Overture to "William Tell"...Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"..Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" ....Ponchielli
"Little Suite" ....Bizet
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"....Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville" ....Albeniz
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Dubinushka Arranged by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
"Stars and Stripes Forever"...Sousa

SUNDAY EVENING

Cortège from "Mlada" Rimsky-Korsakoff
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin" Tschaikowsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow"......Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen".Tschaikowsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony Tschaikowsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome Glazounoff
"Eili, Eili" Arranged by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor" Borodin
Song Without Words...Tschaikowsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tschaikowsky

MONITOR-MAY.12

Tchaikovsky Program for First Sunday Pop Concert

Tomorrow evening in Symphony hall the Pop concerts will open their second week with a Sunday concert, an innovation at the Pops.

"The opening week of this, the 38th season, has proved one of the biggest in the long and venerable history of Pop concerts.

The programs which Agide Jacchia has made for the second week will include on Monday college and football songs to be sung by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club. The Russian-Tchaikovsky program for tomorrow night follows:

Cortege from "Mlada".......Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"......Tschaikovsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow"..............Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"........Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony........Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome..Glazounov
"Eili, Eili".............Arr. by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager.)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"..Borodin
Song Without Words..............Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"......Tchaikovsky

MONDAY, MAY 14.

March, "Veritas"..................Densmore
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"..........Suppe
Fantasia, "Faust"......................Gounod
College Songs by Harvard Freshman Glee Club
(A. W. Wright, leader.)
Finale of "Scheherazade"...Rimsky-Korsakov
Spanish Dance—Granados....Kreisler-Seinigen
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers..........Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries...................Wagner
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"........Tchaikovsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"...............Vollstedt
"Entrance of the Gladiators"...........Fucik

TUESDAY, MAY 15.

Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"...............Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"....Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda".............Ponchielli
Choral Pieces by Radcliffe Club Chorus and Radcliffe Choral Society.
(Conductor, Dr. Archibald T. Davison.)
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia"....................Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff"..Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from "Madame Butterfly"..........................Puccini
(Laura Littlefield.)
Roumanian Rhapsody...................Enesco
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"..........Herbert
Waltz, "Artist's Life"....................Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5.................Brahms

WEDNESDAY, MAY 16.

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba"....Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"..............Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina"................Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"...Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque....................Massenet
(a) Angelus
(b) Fete Boheme
Spring ....Grieg
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"..Wagner
Rhapsody, "Italia"......................Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore"...............Verdi
Love's Dream After the Ball.........Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory"............Ganne

THURSDAY, MAY 17.

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin"...Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Phedre"..................Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden"...............Komzak
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann"......Offenbach
"Finlandia" ....Sibelius
Spanish Dance "Panaderos"..........Glazounov
First Hungarian Rhapsody.................Liszt
The Huntsman's Farewell.........Mendelssohn
John Peel (Old English Hunting Song)..Andrews
Oh, Trust in the Lord (Largo, with organ) Handel
(Boston City Club Glee Club, Frank H. Luker, conductor.)
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Waltz, "Miner's Lights..................Zeller
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, Act II, "Tannhauser"................Wagner

FRIDAY, MAY 18.

Pomp and Circumstance....................Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"..Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida"..........................Verdi
March Slave......................Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria................Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Anitra's Dance............................Grieg
Rhapsody Espana......................Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance........Weber-Berlioz
Prelude ....Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar.....Ippolitov-Ivanov

SATURDAY, MAY 19.

Triumphal March from "Aida"...........Verdi
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"..Mozart
Waltz, "The Skaters"..............Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Lohengrin"....................Wagner
Danse Macabre......................Saint-Saens
Largo from "New World" Symphony...Dvorak
Minuet ....Boccherini
Carnival in Paris......................Svendsen
Two Indian Dances......................Skilton
(a) Deer Dance
(b) War Dance
Spring Song.....................Mendelssohn
Bacchanale from "Philemon et Baucis".Gounod

TRAV. MAY.12

PROGRESS OF THE POPS

A Concert Tomorrow for First Sunday Venture Under Limitations—Programmes for Next Week—Assisting Choruses

TOMORROW evening, for the first time in thirty-eight years of The Pops, Sunday will be added to the usual week-day schedule. The public has given the management many a hint of its inclination to a concert on the first evening of the week; but hitherto the orchestra has also wished Sunday for holiday. Now the difference has been compromised and through the spring there will be a Pop on alternate Sunday evenings. Unfortunately, an absurd regulation of the State Constabulary—singularly in charge of "Entertainments on the Lord's Day"—forbids the usual service of food and drink and even bans the other vice of smoking. Hence, whether at table on the floor or in seat in the balconies, the Sunday audience may only look, listen and whisper. Otherwise, the Sunday Pops will be even as are weekday Pops. For tomorrow a Russian programme, with Mr. Jacchia conducting, stands:

Procession from "Mlada".....Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onégin".........Chaikovsky
Kammenoi Ostrow ....Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"—Finale from the Fourth Symphony ....Chaikovsky
Dance of Salome Glazunov, "Eili, Eili"
(Arranged for Orchestra by Jacchia)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"..Borodin
Song without Words—Overture, Solennelle, "1012" ....Chaikovsky

Through next week, the programmes at The Pops will run usual and approved course—diversified on Monday by songs from the Freshman Glee Club of Harvard; on Tuesday by the voices of the Radcliffe Choral Society, and on Thursday by the song-birds of the Boston City Club. Orchestrally, Mr. Jacchia's list for Monday promises the swelling finale to Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade"; for Tuesday, Wagner's Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody"; for Wednesday, Gounod's Overture to "The Queen of Sheba," and Casella's vivid "Italia"; for Thursday and the City Club, the Bacchanal Ballet from Saint-Saens's "Samson and Delilah"; for Friday, Chabrier's "Espana," and Weber's "Invitation to the Dance"; for Saturday, Mr. Skilten's tangful Indian dances; the slow movement of Dvorâk's Symphony, "From The New World"; Mozart's overture to "Figaro's Wedding."

TRANS-MAY.12

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

Tonight's Pop concert in Symphony hall will be in the nature of a welcome to Agide Jacchia, the celebrated Pops conductor, who has been prevented until now by illness from conducting the Pops. He has completely recovered, however, and will resume his leadership tonight. The program follows:

"Charge of the Hussars"............Spindler
Overture to "William Tell"..........Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"..........Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours" from "La Gioconda" ....Ponchielli
"Little Suite" ....Bizet
"Procession to the Cathedral" from "Lohengren," act II..................Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"..........Blon
Spanish rhapsody, "A Night in Seville" Albeniz
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana"....Mascagni
"Dubinushka"...............Arr. by Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager.)
"Stars and Stripes Forever"........Sousa

HERALD-MAY.

POP CONCERT PROGRAM

At the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight Agide Jacchia will present the following program:

Charge of the Hussars ....Spindler
Overture, "William Tell" ....Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"........Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours, "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli
"Little Suite" ....Bizet
Procession, "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers" ......Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville".. Albeniz
Fantasia "Cavalleria Rusticana"......... Mascagni
Dubinushka ....by Agide Jacchia
Dubinushka ....arr. by Agide Jacchia
Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager
Stars and Stripes Forever ....Sousa

ADVTSR-MAY.12

SUNDAY POPS SEASON'S NOVELTY

The first of the Sunday night Pops is scheduled for tomorrow evening at Symphony Hall. This will be the first time during the thirty-eight seasons of these popular programs that a Sunday concert has been given. The week just closing gives every promise that the presnt season will outrival all its predecessors in attendance and indicates that the unique blend of light music, superbly performed, refreshments and friendly social intercourse is very much the fashion of the hour.

The program which Agide Jacchia has arranged for the second week, beginning Monday, will include college and football songs to be sung by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club.

The Russian-Tchaikovsky program for tomorrow night is as follows:

Cortege from "Mlada" ....Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin" ....Tchaikovsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow" ....Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen" ....Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony ......Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome Glazounov
"Eili, Eili ......Arranged by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
Rlo Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor" Borodin
Song Without Words ....Tchaikovsky
Overture Solennelle, "1812" ...Tchaikovsky

TONIGHT'S POP

The Pops concerts in Symphony Hall will close their first week tonight. Agide Jacchia will present the following program:

Charge of the Hussars ....Spindler
Overture to "William Tell" ....Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle" ....Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours from "La Giocanda" Ponchielli
"Little Sute" ....Bizet
Procession to the Cathedral, from "Lohengrin" Act 2 ....Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers" ......Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A night in Seville" Albeniz
Fantasio, "Cavellria Rusticana" Mascagni
Dubinushka ..arranged by Agide Jacchia
Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager
Stars and Stripes Forever ....Sousa

AMER MAY 12.

MUSIC HEARD AND UNHEARD

Thoroughgoing research into the subject of music heard and unheard in Boston during the past season could only result in a series of tabulations wearying alike to compiler and readers. But certain things heard and unheard are on the mind of the professional frequenter of local musical entertainments.

This column has again and again bewailed the absence of Mozart, Gluck and the modern French and Italian operatic writers from the repertories, this season otherwise satisfactory, of our various visiting opera companies. Mozart, we are now told, we are to hear next season from the Wagnerian company. But nobody promises us Debussy, Ravel, or the modern Italians one really wants to hear.

Puccini is still alive, it is true, but then, so is Kipling, whom nobody could accuse of modernism. Montemezzi's "Love of Three Kings" has never been hailed in Italy as an equivalent of Pizzetti's "Fedra" or his new "Debora e Jaele." The future of music seems nowadays to rest more with the younger Italians than with either Germans or Frenchmen.

If we only had a ballet company not addicted to barnstorming tours we might hear Respighi et al represented elsewhere than at Symphony concerts and an occasional song recital. But as it is we lack chances to know the work of the really significant Italian contemporary composers.

The Symphony programs under Mr Monteux have shown a commendable catholicity of taste and a freedom from Nationalists bias. This French conductor has obviously tried to be scrupulously fair to all schools of music past and present, in making up his programs.

Mr Monteux' Good Programs

If he has a failing it is the natural and pardonable one of liking to see his Parisian acquaintances represented on his programs, and of preferring short pieces to long ones, ballet excerpts to symphonies. Yet there has been no unreasonable profusion of French music, no more than under Dr Muck, and no lack of present day music from German, Italian and British writers. The American composer has also had generous opportunities at the Symphony concerts.

No conductor past or possible could make Symphony programs impeccable with no sins of omission or commission to be held against him by critically-minded listeners. Mr Monteux's fault is not in the main his programs, but his frequent lack of deep imaginative sympathy with the music he conducts, a subject already perhaps too much labored in the Globe's reviews of this year's concerts.

Mr Monteux has certainly fought shy of such living musical radicals as Schoenberg, Bela Bartok, Stravinsky and other less notoriouus "cacophonists," as the elder generation deems them. But that is plainly the fault of the audience. There were many protests from subscribers over Honegger's "Horace Victorieux," and again and again the vast majority have sat in obviously pained silence at the end of finely painstaking performances of modernist pieces.

This same audience not so many years ago was equally pained at Wagner, Brahms and Franck, now accepted as "immortals," or at least as routine classics. One wishes he would disregard what the elder generation wants rather more often in the interest of musical progress, but the continuance of these concerts depends, among other things, upon the presence of very large audiences, whose wishes cannot therefore be left wholly out of account. Mr Monteux himself seems to prefer modern to ancient music.

One wishes that more Beethoven symphonies could be played, up to half a dozen a season. More Wagner, more Schubert and more Mozart would not be amiss, nor would more Bach. The greatest classics are, after all, the chief reason for being of orchestral concerts

First of Sunday "Pops" Opens Second Week Tonight

The Pop concerts in Symphony Hall having just closed the first week of their 38th season as one of the biggest weeks in all Pops history, will open the second week tonight with a Sunday concert, the innovation of the year.

These concerts uniquely combine light programs performed by a full symphony orchestra, with refreshments and the chance of pleasant social intercourse.

Features of the second week will be a series of college and football songs tomorrow night by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club (not to be confused with the regular Harvard night, which comes later in the season.) Radcliffe College will celebrate Tuesday and Northeastern University Wednesday. Agide Jacchia has prepared the following Russian-Tchaikovsky program tonight: Cortege from "Mlada," Rimsky-Korsakov; Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin," Tchaikovsky; "Kammenoi Ostrow," Rubinstein; waltz "Dornroeschen," and finale, Fourth Symphony, Tchaikovsky; introduction and "Dance of Salome," Glazunov; "Eili, Eili," arranged by Agide Jacchia; Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor," Borodin; "Song Without Words," and Overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky.

GLOBE-MAY.13

POPS TONIGHT

The Pop concerts in Symphony hall, having just closed the first week of their 38th season, one of the biggest weeks in all Pops history, will open the second week tonight with a Sunday concert—the innovation of the year.

These concerts combine light programs superbly performed by a full Symphony orchestra, with refreshments and the chance of pleasant social intercourse.

Features of the second week will be a series of college and football songs tomorrow night by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club (not to be confused with the regular Harvard night, which comes later in the season). Radcliffe College will celebrate on Tuesday and Northeastern University on Wednesday and Maine Friday. Agide Jacchia has prepared the following programs of interest for this week beginning with the Russian-Tchaikovsky program tonight:

Cortege from "Mlada"........Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"........Tchaikovsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow"..................Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"...........Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony..........Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome....Glazounov
"Eili, Eili"..........................Arr. by Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Mr. Mager.)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor".Borodin
Song without words.................Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1912"......Tchaikovsky

MONDAY

March, "Veritas"......................Densmore
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"...........Suppe
Fantasia, "Faust"......................Gounod
College songs by Harvard Freshman Glee Club
(A. W. Wright, leader.)
Finale of "Scheherazade"....Rimsky-Korsakov
Spanish Dance—Granados......Kreisler-Seiniger
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers..........Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries...................Wagner
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"........Tchaikovsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"...............Vollstedt
"Entrance of the Gladiators"...........Fucik

TUESDAY

Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"..................Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"..Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"............Ponchielli
Choral pieces by Radcliffe Club Chorus, Radcliffe Choral Society.
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia"....................Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff"..Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from "Madame Butterfly" ....Puccini
(Mrs. Littlefield.)
Roumanian Rhapsody..................Enesco
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"..........Herbert
Waltz, "Artist's Life"....................Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5...................Brahms

WEDNESDAY

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba"....Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"..............Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina"...............Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"...Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque.....................Massenet
(a) Angelus
(b) Fete Boheme
Spring ....Grieg
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"..Wagner
Rhapsody, "Italia".......................Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore".................Verdi
Love's Dream After the Ball.........Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory"..............Ganne

THURSDAY

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin"....Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Phedre"..................Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden"................Komzak
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
"Finlandia" ....Sibelius
Spanish Dance "Panaderos"..........Glazounov
First Hungarian Rhapsody.................Liszt
The Huntsman's Farewell.......Mendelssohn
John Peel (Old English Hunting Song).Andrews
Oh, Trust in the Lord (Largo, with organ) Handel
(Boston City Club Glee Club, Frank H. Luker, conductor.)
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Waltz, "Miner's Lights..................Zeller
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, Act II, "Tannhauser"..................Wagner

FRIDAY

Pomp and Circumstance....................Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"..Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida"............................Verdi
March Slave.......................Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria..................Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Anitra's Dance..............................Grieg
Rhapsody Espana.........................Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance.........Weber-Berlioz
Prelude ....Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar.....Ippolitov-Ivanov

SATURDAY

Triumphal March from "Aida"............Verdi
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"..Mozart
Waltz, "The Skaters"..............Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Lohengrin"....................Wagner
Danse Macabre......................Saint-Saens
Largo from "New World" Symphony..Dvorak
Minuet ....Boccherini
Carnival in Paris.......................Svendsen
Two Indian Dances.......................Skilton
(a) Der Dance
(b) War Dance
Spring Song........................Mendelssohn
Bacchanale from "Philemon et Baucis".Gounod

HERALD-MAY 13 V

GOOD MUSIC MUCH MORE COMMON THAN MANY THINK—OLIN DOWNES

Now that the more solemn of the musical performances of the season are over, it is interesting to glance at the programmes of the Pop concerts, the vaudeville theatres and dance orchestras, which are presumed to minister to the tastes of that great mass of people who "don't know the technique of music, but know the technic of music, but

It would surprise those who only know the inside of austere concert halls and opera houses to discover the percentage of good music on a number of these programmes, in which respect, of course, the programmes of the Pop concerts, given by Boston Symphony players and conducted by Mr. Jacchia, are richest. The composers represented this evening at the first of the Sunday night Pop concerts, for example, are Rimsky-Korsakoff, Tchaikowsky, Rubinstein and Borodin—an all-Russian programme, with perhaps three compositions which would be thought too light for the subscription concerts of the winter.

Blames Educators

All the other works to be heard this evening have been played at the Symphony concerts, a fact hardly realized by the Pops public. When one says to this public that the Symphony programmes are often no more substantial in contents than the one of tonight, and that many of those programmes are even more engrossing to the average listener, he will be met with incredulity. Nevertheless, that is the fact.

We believe that the blame for misconceptions of what good music means lies primarily with professional and music critics. Like other specialists, these people are inclined to compose, play, talk, write for each other. It has not yet impressed the average music reviewer that if George Bernard Shaw, who thinks he knows a great deal about music, and as a matter of fact knows only a little, were to write a musical article, it would be read by thousands of people who never read Mr. Critic, and that when artists like Paderewski or Chaliapin appear, those who systematically avoid most concerts flock to listen to them.

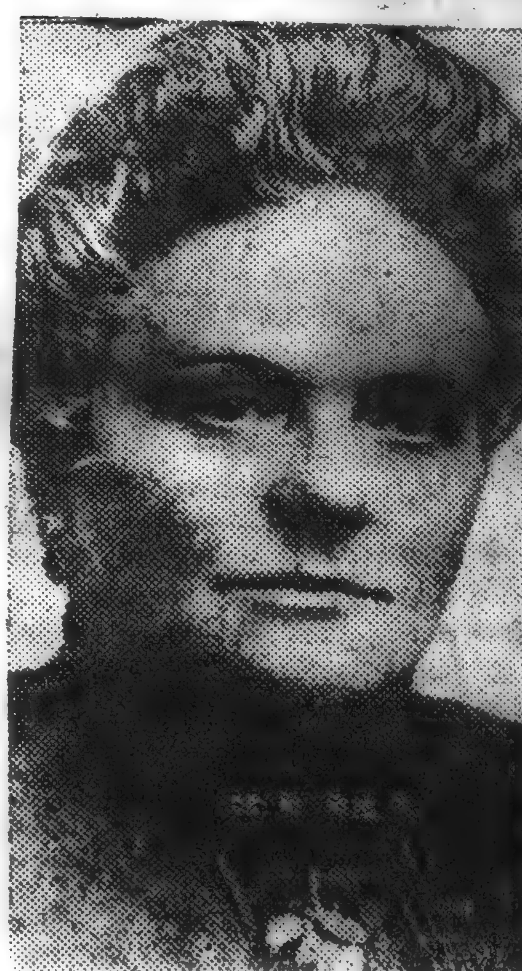
There is a moral in this which artists and art lovers are going to have to heed. The people who listen to Paderewski or Rachmaninoff or Chaliapin and get real inspiration and delight from them, do so because such interpreters are more than highly trained specialists. They have the imagination, the sensibility and broad, fundamental humanity to reach their listeners with the inspired human messages of great masters. Similarly with writers.

Mr. Shaw has learned, or his genius has taught him, how not to write in a pedantic manner of music, drama or other subjects. He may make a certain superficial appeal, at times, and sacrifice thereto a modicum of substantiality. That is a shortcoming which in no way invalidates our contention. Shaw, and a few others like him, have proved that not only highly educated people, but also people who have not had the time or the opportunity for education, can be interested in and set thinking of serious questions. It is the obligation of anyone who creates, interprets, or comments upon art to go and to the best of his ability do likewise.

This is not easy. It is infinitely less trouble to employ set technical terms and expressions of the trade, and leave it to your listener or reader to do everything for himself. But that is not the creative way, and it is not the way for anyone to do who believes in the spirit of democracy.

The Vice-President of the United States put this very well at the recent

Mother of Agide Jacchia Leader of the Pops



"The light of heavenly beauty Shines in your tender face."

—Margaret E. Sangster.

The members of St. Mary's Catho
Total Abstinence Society of Malden w present their annual show "Savag land," a comedy with music, writ
by Walter B. Hare, in Columbus H
Malden, on Monday evening.
Miss Marie Bellefontaine, a memb of the society, is directing the sho
The settings and costumes are mo elaborate, and the play is on a m

POST-MAY 13

[164

Week-End "Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

Charge of the Hussars......Spindler
Overture to "William Tell"...Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"..Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" ....Ponchielli
"Little Suite" ....Bizet
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"....Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville" ....Albeniz
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Dubinushka Arranged by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
"Stars and Stripes Forever"...Sousa

SUNDAY EVENING

Cortège from "Mlada" Rimsky-Korsakoff
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin" Tschaikowsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow"......Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen".Tschaikowsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony Tschaikowsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome Glazounoff
"Eili, Eili" Arranged by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor" Borodin
Song Without Words...Tschaikowsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tschaikowsky

MONITOR-MAY. 12

Tchaikovsky Program for First Sunday Pop Concert

Tomorrow evening in Symphony ha[ll] the Pop concerts will open their secon[d] week with a Sunday concert, an innovation at the Pops.

"The opening week of this, the 38th season, has proved one of the biggest in the long and venerable history of Pop concerts.

The programs which Agide Jacchia has made for the second week will include on Monday college and football songs to be sung by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club. The Russian-Tchaikovsky program for tomorrow night follows:

Cortege from "Mlada".......Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin".......Tschaikovsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow"..............Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"...........Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony.........Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome..Glazounov
"Eili, Eili"..............Arr. by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager.)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor". Borodin
Song Without Words..............Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"......Tchaikovsky

MONDAY, MAY 14.

March, "Veritas"......................Densmore
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"..............Suppe
Fantasia, "Faust"........................Gounod
College Songs by Harvard Freshman Glee Club
(A. W. Wright, leader.)
Finale of "Scheherazade"...Rimsky-Korsakov
Spanish Dance—Granados....Kreisler-Seiniger
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers..........Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries..................Wagner
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"..........Tchaikovsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"...............Vollstedt
"Entrance of the Gladiators"..............Fucik

TUESDAY, MAY 15.

Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"...............Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"....Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"...............Ponchielli
Choral Pieces by Radcliffe Club Chorus and Radcliffe Choral Society.
(Conductor, Dr. Archibald T. Davison.)
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia"...................Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff". Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from "Madame Butterfly"..............................Puccini
(Laura Littlefield.)
Roumanian Rhapsody....................Enesco
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"...........Herbert
Waltz, "Artist's Life"....................Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5..................Brahms

WEDNESDAY, MAY 16.

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba"...Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"..............Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina"................Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"...Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque.......................Massenet
(a) Angelus
(b) Fete Boheme
Spring ....Grieg
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"..Wagner
Rhapsody, "Italia"........................Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore"....................Verdi
Love's Dream After the Ball..........Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory"...............Ganne

THURSDAY, MAY 17.

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin"...Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Phedre"...................Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden"..................Komzak
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
"Finlandia" ....Sibelius
Spanish Dance "Panaderos".........Glazounov
First Hungarian Rhapsody......................Liszt
The Huntsman's Farewell.........Mendelssohn
John Peel (Old English Hunting Song). Andrews
Oh, Trust in the Lord (Largo, wih organ) Handel
(Boston City Club Glee Club, Frank H. Luker, conductor.)
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Waltz, "Miner's Lights.................Zeller
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, Act II, "Tannhauser"..................Wagner

FRIDAY, MAY 18.

Pomp and Circumstance....................Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor". Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida"..............................Verdi
March Slave.......................Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria.....................Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Anitra's Dance.................................Grieg
Rhapsody Espana........................Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance..........Weber-Berlioz
Prelude ....Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar.....Ippolitov-Ivanov

SATURDAY, MAY 19.

Triumphal March from "Aida".........Verdi
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro". Mozart
Waltz, "The Skaters"..............Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Lohengrin"....................Wagner
Danse Macabre......................Saint-Saens
Largo from "New World" Symphony...Dvorak
Minuet ....Boccherini
Carnival in Paris.........................Svendsen
Two Indian Dances........................Skilton
(a) Deer Dance
(b) War Dance
Spring Song........................Mendelssohn
Bacchanale from "Philemon et Baucis". Gounod

TRAV. MAY. 12

PROGRESS OF THE POPS

A Concert Tomorrow for First Sunday Venture Under Limitations—Programmes for Next Week—Assisting Choruses

TOMORROW evening, for the first time in thirty-eight years of The Pops, Sunday will be added to the usual week-day schedule. The public has given the management many a hint of its inclination to a concert on the first evening of the week; but hitherto the orchestra has also wished Sunday for holiday. Now the difference has been compromised and through the spring there will be a Pop on alternate Sunday evenings. Unfortunately, an absurd regulation of the State Constabulary—singularly in charge of "Entertainments on the Lord's Day"—forbids the usual service of food and drink and even bans the other vice of smoking. Hence, whether at table on the floor or in seat in the balconies, the Sunday audience may only look, listen and whisper. Otherwise, the Sunday Pops will be even as are weekday Pops. For tomorrow a Russian programme, with Mr. Jacchia conducting, stands:

Procession from "Mlada".....Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onégin"..........Chaikovsky
Kammenoi Ostrow ....Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"—Finale from the Fourth Symphony ....Chaikovsky
Dance of Salome Glazunov, "Eili, Eili"
(Arranged for Orchestra by Jacchia)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"..Borodin
Song without Words—Overture, Solennelle, "1012" ....Chaikovsky

Through next week, the programmes at The Pops will run usual and approved course—diversified on Monday by songs from the Freshman Glee Club of Harvard; on Tuesday by the voices of the Radcliffe Choral Society, and on Thursday by the song-birds of the Boston City Club. Orchestrally, Mr. Jacchia's list for Monday promises the swelling finale to Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade"; for Tuesday, Wagner's Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody"; for Wednesday, Gounod's Overture to "The Queen of Sheba," and Casella's vivid "Italia"; for Thursday and the City Club, the Bacchanal Ballet from Saint-Saens's "Samson and Delilah"; for Friday, Chabrier's "Espana," and Weber's "Invitation to the Dance"; for Saturday, Mr. Skilten's tangful Indian dances; the slow movement of Dvořák's Symphony, "From The New World"; Mozart's overture to "Figaro's Wedding."

TRANS-MAY. 12

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

Tonight's Pop concert in Symphony hall will be in the nature of a welcome to Agide Jacchia, the celebrated Pops conductor, who has been prevented until now by illness from conducting the Pops. He has completely recovered, however, and will resume his leadership tonight. The program follows:

"Charge of the Hussars"..............Spindler
Overture to "William Tell"...........Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"...........Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours" from La Gioconda" ....Ponchielli
"Little Suite" ....Bizet
"Procession to the Cathedral" from "Lohengren," act II.......................Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"...............Blon
Spanish rhapsody, "A Night in Seville" Albeniz
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana"....Mascagni
"Dubinushka"....................Arr. by Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager.)
"Stars and Stripes Forever"..............Sousa

HERALD-MAY. 1

POP CONCERT PROGRAM

At the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight Agide Jacchia will present the following program:

Charge of the Hussars ....Spindler
Overture, "William Tell" ....Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"........Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours, "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli
"Little Suite" ....Bizet
Procession, "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers" ......Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville".. Albeniz
Fantasia "Cavalleria Rusticana".......... Mascagni
Dubinushka ....by Agide Jacchia
Dubinushka ....arr. by Agide Jacchia
Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager
Stars and Stripes Forever ....Sousa

ADVTSR-MAY. 12

SUNDAY POPS SEASON'S NOVELTY

The first of the Sunday night Pops is scheduled for tomorrow evening at Symphony Hall. This will be the first time during the thirty-eight seasons of these popular programs that a Sunday concert has been given. The week just closing gives every promise that the presnt season will outrival all its predecessors in attendance and indicates that the unique blend of light music, superbly performed, refreshments and friendly social intercourse is very much the fashion of the hour.

The program which Agide Jacchia has arranged for the second week, beginning Monday, will include college and football songs to be sung by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club.

The Russian-Tchaikovsky program for tomorrow night is as follows:

Cortege from "Mlada" ....Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin" ....Tchaikovsky
"Kamenoi Ostrow" ....Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen" ....Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony ......Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome Glazounov
"Eili, Eili ......Arranged by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
Rlo Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor" Borodin
Song Without Words ....Tchaikovsky
Overture Solennelle, "1812" ...Tchaikovsky

TONIGHT'S POP

The Pops concerts in Symphony Hall will close their first week tonight. Agide Jacchia will present the following program:

Charge of the Hussars ....Spindler
Overture to "William Tell" ....Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle" ....Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours from "La Giocanda" Ponchielli
"Little Sute" ....Bizet
Procession to the Cathedral, from "Lohengrin" Act 2 ....Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers" ......Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A night in Seville" Albeniz
Fantasio, "Cavellria Rusticana" Mascagni
Dubinushka ..arranged by Agide Jacchia
Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager
Stars and Stripes Forever ....Sou[sa]

AMER. MAY. 12.

MUSIC HEARD AND UNHEARD

Thoroughgoing research into the subject of music heard and unheard in Boston during the past season could only result in a series of tabulations wearying alike to compiler and readers. But certain things heard and unheard are on the mind of the professional frequenter of local musical entertainments.

This column has again and again bewailed the absence of Mozart, Gluck and the modern French and Italian operatic writers from the repertories, this season otherwise satisfactory, of our various visiting opera companies. Mozart, we are now told, we are to hear next season from the Wagnerian company. But nobody promises us Debussy, Ravel, or the modern Italians one really wants to hear.

Puccini is still alive, it is true but then, so is Kipling, whom nobody could accuse of modernism. Montemezzi's "Love of Three Kings" has never been hailed in Italy as an equivalent of Pizzetti's "Fedra" or his new "Debora e Jaele." The future of music seems nowadays to rest more with the younger Italians than with either Germans or Frenchmen.

If we only had a ballet company not addicted to barnstorming tours we might hear Respighi et al represented elsewhere than at Symphony concerts and an occasional song recital. But as it is we lack chances to know the work of the really significant Italian contemporary composers.

The Symphony programs under Mr Monteux have shown a commendable catholicity of taste and a freedom from Nationalists bias. This French conductor has obviously tried to be scrupulously fair to all schools of music past and present, in making up his programs.

Mr Monteux' Good Programs

If he has a failing it is the natural and pardonable one of liking to see his Parisian acquaintances represented on his programs, and of preferring short pieces to long ones, ballet excerpts to symphonies. Yet there has been no unreasonable profusion of French music, no more than under Dr Muck, and no lack of present day music from German, Italian and British writers. The American composer has also had generous opportunities at the Symphony concerts.

No conductor past or possible could make Symphony programs impeccable with no sins of omission or commission to be held against him by critically-minded listeners. Mr Monteux's fault is not in the main his programs, but his frequent lack of deep imaginative sympathy with the music he conducts, a subject already perhaps too much labored in the Globe's reviews of this year's concerts.

Mr Monteux has certainly fought shy of such living musical radicals as Schoenberg, Bela Bartok, Stravinsky and other less notoriouus "cacophonists," as the elder generation deems them. But that is plainly the fault of the audience. There were many protests from subscribers over Honegger's "Horace Victorieux," and again and again the vast majority have sat in obviously pained silence at the end of finely painstaking performances of modernist pieces.

This same audience not so many years ago was equally pained at Wagner, Brahms and Franck, now accepted as "immortals," or at least as routine classics. One wishes he would disregard what the elder generation wants rather more often in the interest of musical progress, but the continuance of these concerts depends, among other things, upon the presence of very large audiences, whose wishes cannot therefore be left wholly out of account. Mr Monteux himself seems to prefer modern to ancient music.

One wishes that more Beethoven symphonies could be played, up to half a dozen a season. More Wagner, more Schubert and more Mozart would not be amiss, nor would more Bach. The greatest classics are, after all, the chief [illegible] for being of orchestral concerts

[Fir]st of Sunday "Pops" Opens Second Week Tonight

The Pop concerts in Symphony Hall, having just closed the first week of their 38th season as one of the biggest weeks in all Pops history, will open the second week tonight with a Sunday concert, the innovation of the year.

These concerts uniquely combine light programs performed by a full symphony orchestra, with refreshments and the chance of pleasant social intercourse.

Features of the second week will be a series of college and football songs tomorrow night by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club (not to be confused with the regular Harvard night, which comes later in the season.) Radcliffe College will celebrate Tuesday and Northeastern University Wednesday. Agide Jacchia has prepared the following Russian-Tchaikovsky program tonight: Cortege from "Mlada," Rimsky-Korsakov; Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin," Tchaikovsky; "Kammenoi Ostrow," Rubinstein; waltz "Dornroeschen," and finale, Fourth Symphony, Tchaikovsky; introduction and "Dance of Salome," Glazunov; "Eili, Eili," arranged by Agide Jacchia; Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor," Borodin; "Song Without Words," and Overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky.

GLOBE-MAY. 13

POPS TONIGHT

The Pop concerts in Symphony hall, having just closed the first week of their 38th season, one of the biggest weeks in all Pops history, will open the second week tonight with a Sunday concert—the innovation of the year.

These concerts combine light programs superbly performed by a full Symphony orchestra, with refreshments and the chance of pleasant social intercourse.

Features of the second week will be a series of college and football songs tomorrow night by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club (not to be confused with the regular Harvard night, which comes later in the season). Radcliffe College will celebrate on Tuesday and Northeastern University on Wednesday and Maine Friday. Agide Jacchia has prepared the following programs of interest for this week beginning with the Russian-Tchaikovsky program tonight:

Cortege from "Mlada".......Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin".......Tchaikovsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow"................Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"............Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony.........Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome....Glazounov
"Eili, Eili.......................Arr. by Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Mr. Mager.)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor". Borodin
Song without words................Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1912"......Tchaikovsky

MONDAY

March, "Veritas".........................Densmore
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"............Suppe
Fantasia, "Faust"..........................Gounod
College songs by Harvard Freshman Glee Club
(A. W. Wright, leader.)
Finale of "Scheherazade"....Rimsky-Korsakov
Spanish Dance—Granados......Kreisler-Seinlger
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers...........Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries....................Wagner
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"........Tchaikovsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"...............Vollstedt
"Entrance of the Gladiators"..............Fucik

TUESDAY

Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"..................Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"..Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"...............Ponchielli
Choral pieces by Radcliffe Club Chorus, Radcliffe Choral Society.
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia"........................Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff"..Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from "Madame Butterfly" ....Puccini
(Mrs. Littlefield.)
Roumanian Rhapsody......................Enesco
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"..........Herbert
Waltz, "Artist's Life"......................Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5...................Brahms

WEDNESDAY

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba"....Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"...................Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina"..................Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"....Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque.........................Massenet
(a) Angelus
(b) Fete Boheme
Spring ....Grieg
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"..Wagner
Rhapsody, "Italia"...........................Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore"......................Verdi
Love's Dream After the Ball.........Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory"................Ganne

THURSDAY

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin"....Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Phedre"......................Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden"....................Komzak
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
"Finlandia" ....Sibelius
Spanish Dance "Panaderos"..........Glazounov
First Hungarian Rhapsody.......................Liszt
The Huntsman's Farewell........Mendelssohn
John Peel (Old English Hunting Song). Andrews
Oh, Trust in the Lord (Largo, with organ) Handel
(Boston City Club Glee Club, Frank H. Luker, conductor.)
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Waltz, "Miner's Lights.....................Zeller
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, Act II, "Tannhauser".....................Wagner

FRIDAY

Pomp and Circumstance......................Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor". Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida"................................Verdi
March Slave.........................Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria...................Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Anitra's Dance.................................Grieg
Rhapsody Espana........................Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance..........Weber-Berlioz
Prelude ....Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar.....Ippolitov-Ivanov

SATURDAY

Triumphal March from "Aida"..........Verdi
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro". Mozart
Waltz, "The Skaters"...............Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Lohengrin"......................Wagner
Danse Macabre.........................Saint-Saens
Largo from "New World" Symphony. Dvorak
Minuet ....Boccherini
Carnival in Paris...........................Svendsen
Two Indian Dances.........................Skilton
(a) Der Dance
(b) War Dance
Spring Song............................Mendelssohn
Bacchanale from "Philemon et Baucis". Gounod

HERALD-MAY 13 V

GOOD MUSIC MUCH MORE COMMON THAN MANY THINK—OLIN DOWNES

Now that the more solemn of the musical performances of the season are over, it is interesting to glance at the programmes of the Pop concerts, the vaudeville theatres and dance orchestras, which are presumed to minister to the tastes of that great mass of people who "don't know the technique of music, but know the technic of music, but

It would surprise those who only know the inside of austere concert halls and opera houses to discover the percentage of good music on a number of these programmes, in which respect, of course, the programmes of the Pop concerts, given by Boston Symphony players and conducted by Mr. Jacchia, are richest. The composers represented this evening at the first of the Sunday night Pop concerts, for example, are Rimsky-Korsakoff, Tchaikowsky, Rubinstein and Borodin—an all-Russian programme, with perhaps three compositions which would be thought too light for the subscription concerts of the winter.

Blames Educators

All the other works to be heard this evening have been played at the Symphony concerts, a fact hardly realized by the Pops public. When one says to this public that the Symphony programmes are often no more substantial in contents than the one of tonight, and that many of those programmes are even more engrossing to the average listener, he will be met with incredulity. Nevertheless, that is the fact.

We believe that the blame for misconceptions of what good music means lies primarily with professional and music critics. Like other specialists, these people are inclined to compose, play, talk, write for each other. It has not yet impressed the average music reviewer that if George Bernard Shaw, who thinks he knows a great deal about music, and as a matter of fact knows only a little, were to write a musical article, it would be read by thousands of people who never read Mr. Critic, and that when artists like Paderewski or Chaliapin appear, those who systematically avoid most concerts flock to listen to them.

There is a moral in this which artists and art lovers are going to have to heed. The people who listen to Paderewski or Rachmaninoff or Chaliapin and get real inspiration and delight from them, do so because such interpreters are more than highly trained specialists. They have the imagination, the sensibility and broad, fundamental humanity to reach their listeners with the inspired human messages of great masters. Similarly with writers.

Mr. Shaw has learned, or his genius has taught him, how not to write in a pedantic manner of music, drama of other subjects. He may make a certain superficial appeal, at times, and sacrifice thereto a modicum of substantiality. That is a shortcoming which in no way invalidates our contention. Shaw, and a few others like him, have proved that not only highly educated people, but also people who have not had the time or the opportunity for education, can be interested in and set thinking of serious questions. It is the obligation of anyone who creates, interprets, or comments upon art to go and to the best of his ability do likewise.

This is not easy. It is infinitely less trouble to employ set technical terms and expressions of the trade, and leave it to your listener or reader to do everything for himself. But that is not the creative way, and it is not the way for anyone to do who believes in the spirit of democracy.

The Vice-President of the United States put this very well at the recent

Mother of Agide Jacchia Leader of the Pops

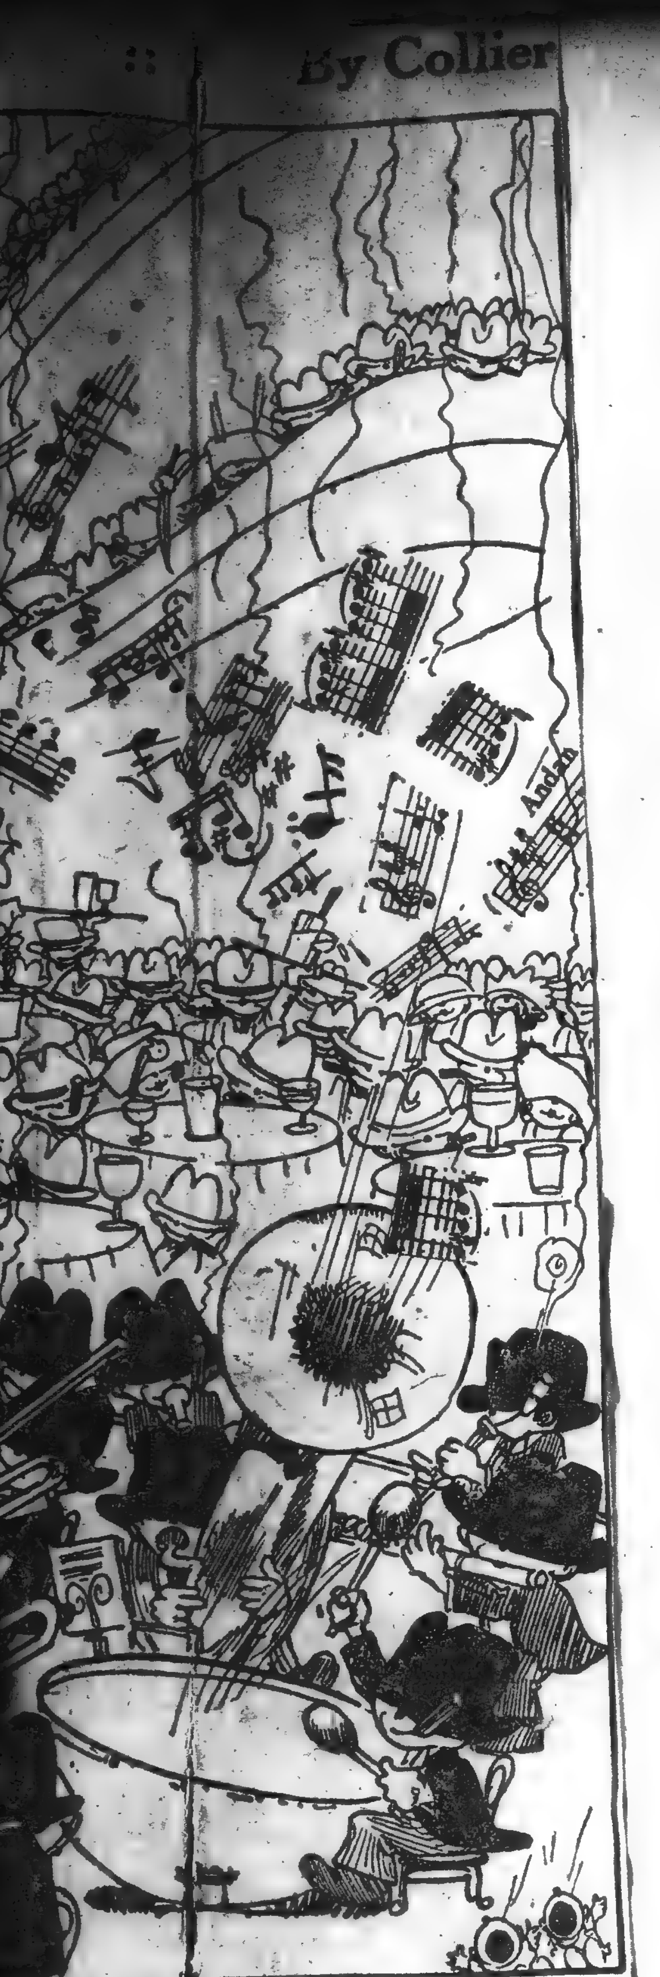
"The light of heavenly beauty Shines in your tender face."

—Margaret E. Sangster.

[104]

POST-MAY. 13

By Collier



Week-End "Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

Charge of the Hussars	Spindler
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
"Little Suite"	Bizet
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin"	Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"	Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville"	Albeniz
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
Dubinushka	Arranged by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
"Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

SUNDAY EVENING

Cortège from "Mlada"	Rimsky-Korsakoff
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"	Tschaikowsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow"	Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"	Tschaikowsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony	Tschaikowsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome	Glazounoff
"Eili, Eili"	Arranged by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"	Borodin
Song Without Words	Tschaikowsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tschaikowsky

MONITOR MAY. 12

Tchaikovsky Program for First Sunday Pop Concert

Tomorrow evening in Symphony hall the Pop concerts will open their second week with a Sunday concert, an innovation at the Pops.

The opening week of this, the 38th season, has proved one of the biggest in the long and venerable history of Pop concerts.

The programs which Agide Jacchia has made for the second week will include on Monday college and football songs to be sung by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club. The Russian-Tchaikovsky program for tomorrow night follows:

Cortege from "Mlada"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"	Tschaikovsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow"	Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"	Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony	Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome	Glazounov
"Eili, Eili"	Arr. by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager.)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"	Borodin
Song Without Words	Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky

MONDAY, MAY 14.

March, "Veritas"	Densmore
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Fantasia, "Faust"	Gounod
College Songs by Harvard Freshman Glee Club (A. W. Wright, leader.)
Finale of "Scheherazade"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Spanish Dance—Granados	Kreisler-Seiniger
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers	Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tchaikovsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
"Entrance of the Gladiators"	Fucik

TUESDAY, MAY 15.

Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Choral Pieces by Radcliffe Club Chorus and Radcliffe Choral Society. (Conductor, Dr. Archibald T. Davison.)
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia"	Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff"	Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from "Madame Butterfly"	Puccini
(Laura Littlefield.)
Roumanian Rhapsody	Enesco
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"	Herbert
Waltz, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5	Brahms

WEDNESDAY, MAY 16.

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque	Massenet
(a) Angelus
(b) Fete Boheme
Spring	Grieg
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Rhapsody, "Italia"	Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Love's Dream After the Ball	Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory"	Ganne

THURSDAY, MAY 17.

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin"	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Phedre"	Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden"	Komzak
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann"	Offenbach
"Finlandia"	Sibelius
Spanish Dance "Panaderos"	Glazounov
First Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
The Huntsman's Farewell	Mendelssohn
John Peel (Old English Hunting Song)	Andrews
Oh, Trust in the Lord (Largo, wih organ)	Handel
(Boston City Club Glee Club, Frank H. Luker, conductor.)
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens
Waltz, "Miner's Lights"	Zeller
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, Act II, "Tannhauser"	Wagner

FRIDAY, MAY 18.

Pomp and Circumstance	Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"	Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
March Slave	Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria	Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Anitra's Dance	Grieg
Rhapsody Espana	Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance	Weber-Berlioz
Prelude	Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar	Ippolitov-Ivanov

SATURDAY, MAY 19.

Triumphal March from "Aida"	Verdi
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"	Mozart
Waltz, "The Skaters"	Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Danse Macabre	Saint-Saens
Largo from "New World" Symphony	Dvorak
Minuet	Boccherini
Carnival in Paris	Svendsen
Two Indian Dances	Skilton
(a) Deer Dance
(b) War Dance
Spring Song	Mendelssohn
Bacchanale from "Philemon et Baucis"	Gounod

TRAV. MAY. 12.

PROGRESS OF THE POPS

A Concert Tomorrow for First Sunday Venture Under Limitations—Programmes for Next Week—Assisting Choruses

TOMORROW evening, for the first time in thirty-eight years of The Pops, Sunday will be added to the usual week-day schedule. The public has given the management many a hint of its inclination to a concert on the first evening of the week; but hitherto the orchestra has also wished Sunday for holiday. Now the difference has been compromised and through the spring there will be a Pop on alternate Sunday evenings. Unfortunately, an absurd regulation of the State Constabulary—singularly in charge of "Entertainments on the Lord's Day"—forbids the usual service of food and drink and even bans the other vice of smoking. Hence, whether at table on the floor or in seat in the balconies, the Sunday audience may only look, listen and whisper. Otherwise, the Sunday Pops will be even as are weekday Pops. For tomorrow a Russian programme, with Mr. Jacchia conducting, stands:

Procession from "Mlada"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onégin"	Chaikovsky
Kammenoi Ostrow	Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"—Finale from the Fourth Symphony	Chaikovsky
Dance of Salome Glazunov, "Eili, Eili" (Arranged for Orchestra by Jacchia)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"	Borodin
Song without Words—Overture, Solennelle, "1012"	Chaikovsky

Through next week, the programmes at The Pops will run usual and approved course—diversified on Monday by songs from the Freshman Glee Club of Harvard; on Tuesday by the voices of the Radcliffe Choral Society, and on Thursday by the song-birds of the Boston City Club. Orchestrally, Mr. Jacchia's list for Monday promises the swelling finale to Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade"; for Tuesday, Wagner's Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," and Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody"; for Wednesday, Gounod's Overture to "The Queen of Sheba," and Casella's vivid "Italia"; for Thursday and the City Club, the Bacchanal Ballet from Saint-Saens's "Samson and Delilah"; for Friday, Chabrier's "Espana," and Weber's "Invitation to the Dance"; for Saturday, Mr. Skilten's tangful Indian dances; the slow movement of Dvoràk's Symphony, "From The New World"; Mozart's overture to "Figaro's Wedding."

TRANS-MAY. 12

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

Tonight's Pop concert in Symphony hall will be in the nature of a welcome to Agide Jacchia, the celebrated Pops conductor, who has been prevented until now by illness from conducting the Pops. He has completely recovered, however, and will resume his leadership tonight. The program follows:

"Charge of the Hussars"	Spindler
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours" from La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
"Little Suite"	Bizet
"Procession to the Cathedral" from "Lohengren," act II	Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"	Blon
Spanish rhapsody, "A Night in Seville"	Albeniz
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
"Dubinushka"	Arr. by Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager.)
"Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

HERALD-MAY. 1

POP CONCERT PROGRAM

At the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight Agide Jacchia will present the following program:

Charge of the Hussars	Spindler
Overture, "William Tell"	Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours, "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
"Little Suite"	Bizet
Procession, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"	Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A Night in Seville"	Albeniz
Fantasia "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
Dubinushka	by Agide Jacchia
Dubinushka	arr. by Agide Jacchia
Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager
Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa

ADVTSR-MAY. 12

SUNDAY POPS SEASON'S NOVELTY

The first of the Sunday night Pops is scheduled for tomorrow evening at Symphony Hall. This will be the first time during the thirty-eight seasons of these popular programs that a Sunday concert has been given. The week just closing gives every promise that the presnt season will outrival all its predecessors in attendance and indicates that the unique blend of light music, superbly performed, refreshments and friendly social intercourse is very much the fashion of the hour.

The program which Agide Jacchia has arranged for the second week, beginning Monday, will include college and football songs to be sung by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club.

The Russian-Tchaikovsky program for tomorrow night is as follows:

Cortege from "Mlada"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"	Tchaikovsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow"	Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"	Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony	Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome	Glazounov
"Eili, Eili	Arranged by Agide Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
Rlo Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"	Borodin
Song Without Words	Tchaikovsky
Overture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky

TONIGHT'S POP

The Pops concerts in Symphony Hall will close their first week tonight. Agide Jacchia will present the following program:

Charge of the Hussars	Spindler
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Waltz, "The Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
Dance of the Hours from "La Giocanda"	Ponchielli
"Little Sute"	Bizet
Procession to the Cathedral, from "Lohengrin" Act 2	Wagner
"Whispering of the Flowers"	Blon
Spanish Rhapsody, "A night in Seville"	Albeniz
Fantasio, "Cavellria Rusticana"	Mascagni
Dubinushka	arranged by Agide Jacchia
Solo Trumpet, Georges Mager
Stars and Stripes Forever	Sou

AMER. MAY. 12.

MUSIC HEARD AND UNHEARD

Thoroughgoing research into the subject of music heard and unheard in Boston during the past season could only result in a series of tabulations wearying alike to compiler and readers. But certain things heard and unheard are on the mind of the professional frequenter of local musical entertainments.

This column has again and again bewailed the absence of Mozart, Gluck and the modern French and Italian operatic writers from the repertories, this season otherwise satisfactory, of our various visiting opera companies. Mozart, we are now told, we are to hear next season from the Wagnerian company. But nobody promises us Debussy, Ravel, or the modern Italians one really wants to hear.

Puccini is still alive, it is true, but then, so is Kipling, whom nobody could accuse of modernism. Montemezzi's "Love of Three Kings" has never been hailed in Italy as an equivalent of Pizzetti's "Fedra" or his new "Debora e Jaele." The future of music seems nowadays to rest more with the younger Italians than with either Germans or Frenchmen.

If we only had a ballet company not addicted to barnstorming tours we might hear Respighi et al represented elsewhere than at Symphony concerts and an occasional song recital. But as it is we lack chances to know the work of the really significant Italian contemporary composers.

The Symphony programs under Mr Monteux have shown a commendable catholicity of taste and a freedom from Nationalists bias. This French conductor has obviously tried to be scrupulously fair to all schools of music past and present, in making up his programs.

Mr Monteux' Good Programs

If he has a failing it is the natural and pardonable one of liking to see his Parisian acquaintances represented on his programs, and of preferring short pieces to long ones, ballet excerpts to symphonies. Yet there has been no unreasonable profusion of French music, no more than under Dr Muck, and no lack of present day music from German, Italian and British writers. The American composer has also had generous opportunities at the Symphony concerts.

No conductor past or possible could make Symphony programs impeccable with no sins of omission or commission to be held against him by critically-minded listeners. Mr Monteux's fault is not in the main his programs, but his frequent lack of deep imaginative sympathy with the music he conducts, a subject already perhaps too much labored in the Globe's reviews of this year's concerts.

Mr Monteux has certainly fought shy of such living musical radicals as Schoenberg, Bela Bartok, Stravinsky and other less notoriouus "cacophonists," as the elder generation deems them. But that is plainly the fault of the audience. There were many protests from subscribers over Honegger's "Horace Victorieux," and again and again the vast majority have sat in obviously pained silence at the end of finely painstaking performances of modernist pieces.

This same audience not so many years ago was equally pained at Wagner, Brahms and Franck, now accepted as "immortals," or at least as routine classics. One wishes he would disregard what the elder generation wants rather more often in the interest of musical progress, but the continuance of these concerts depends, among other things, upon the presence of very large audiences, whose wishes cannot therefore be left wholly out of account. Mr Monteux himself seems to prefer modern to ancient music.

One wishes that more Beethoven symphonies could be played, up to half a dozen a season. More Wagner, more Schubert and more Mozart would not be amiss, nor would more Bach. The greatest classics are, after all, the chief reason for being of orchestral concerts

First of Sunday "Pops" Opens Second Week Tonight

The Pop concerts in Symphony Hall, having just closed the first week of their 38th season as one of the biggest weeks in all Pops history, will open the second week tonight with a Sunday concert, the innovation of the year.

These concerts uniquely combine light programs performed by a full symphony orchestra, with refreshments and the chance of pleasant social intercourse.

Features of the second week will be a series of college and football songs tomorrow night by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club (not to be confused with the regular Harvard night, which comes later in the season.) Radcliffe College will celebrate Tuesday and Northeastern University Wednesday. Agide Jacchia has prepared the following Russian-Tchaikovsky program tonight: Cortege from "Mlada," Rimsky-Korsakov; Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin," Tchaikovsky; "Kammenoi Ostrow," Rubinstein; waltz "Dornroeschen," and finale, Fourth Symphony, Tchaikovsky; introduction and "Dance of Salome," Glazunov; "Eili, Eili," arranged by Agide Jacchia; Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor," Borodin; "Song Without Words," and Overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky.

GLOBE-MAY. 13.

POPS TONIGHT

The Pop concerts in Symphony hall, having just closed the first week of their 38th season, one of the biggest weeks in all Pops history, will open the second week tonight with a Sunday concert—the innovation of the year.

These concerts combine light programs superbly performed by a full Symphony orchestra, with refreshments and the chance of pleasant social intercourse.

Features of the second week will be a series of college and football songs tomorrow night by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club (not to be confused with the regular Harvard night, which comes later in the season). Radcliffe College will celebrate on Tuesday and Northeastern University on Wednesday and Maine Friday. Agide Jacchia has prepared the following programs of interest for this week beginning with the Russian-Tchaikovsky program tonight:

Cortege from "Mlada"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Eugen Onegin"	Tchaikovsky
"Kammenoi Ostrow"	Rubinstein
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"	Tchaikovsky
Finale, Fourth Symphony	Tchaikovsky
Introduction and Dance of Salome	Glazounov
"Eili, Eili	Arr. by Jacchia
(Solo trumpet, Mr. Mager.)
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"	Borodin
Song without words	Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solennelle, "1912"	Tchaikovsky

MONDAY

March, "Veritas"	Densmore
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Fantasia, "Faust"	Gounod
College songs by Harvard Freshman Glee Club (A. W. Wright, leader.)
Finale of "Scheherazade"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Spanish Dance—Granados	Kreisler-Seiniger
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers	Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tchaikovsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
"Entrance of the Gladiators"	Fucik

TUESDAY

Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
Choral pieces by Radcliffe Club Chorus, Radcliffe Choral Society.
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia"	Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff"	Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from "Madame Butterfly"	Puccini
(Mrs. Littlefield.)
Roumanian Rhapsody	Enesco
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"	Herbert
Waltz, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5	Brahms

WEDNESDAY

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilaa"	Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque	Massenet
(a) Angelus
(b) Fete Boheme
Spring	Grieg
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Rhapsody, "Italia"	Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Love's Dream After the Ball	Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory"	Ganne

THURSDAY

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin"	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Phedre"	Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden"	Komzak
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann"	Offenbach
"Finlandia"	Sibelius
Spanish Dance "Panaderos"	Glazounov
First Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
The Huntsman's Farewell	Mendelssohn
John Peel (Old English Hunting Song)	Andrews
Oh, Trust in the Lord (Largo, with organ)	Handel
(Boston City Club Glee Club, Frank H. Luker, conductor.)
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens
Waltz, "Miner's Lights	Zeller
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, Act II, "Tannhauser"	Wagner

FRIDAY

Pomp and Circumstance	Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"	Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
March Slave	Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria	Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Anitra's Dance	Grieg
Rhapsody Espana	Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance	Weber-Berlioz
Prelude	Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar	Ippolitov-Ivanov

SATURDAY

Triumphal March from "Aida"	Verdi
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"	Mozart
Waltz, "The Skaters"	Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Danse Macabre	Saint-Saens
Largo from "New World" Symphony	Dvorak
Minuet	Boccherini
Carnival in Paris	Svendsen
Two Indian Dances	Skilton
(a) Der Dance
(b) War Dance
Spring Song	Mendelssohn
Bacchanale from "Philemon et Baucis"	Gounod

HERALD-MAY 13 ✓

GOOD MUSIC MUCH MORE COMMON THAN MANY THINK—OLIN DOWNES

Now that the more solemn of the musical performances of the season are over, it is interesting to glance at the programmes of the Pop concerts, the vaudeville theatres and dance orchestras, which are presumed to minister to the tastes of that great mass of people who "don't know the technique of music, but know the technic of music, but

It would surprise those who only know the inside of austere concert halls and opera houses to discover the percentage of good music on a number of these programmes, in which respect, of course, the programmes of the Pop concerts, given by Boston Symphony players and conducted by Mr. Jacchia, are richest. The composers represented this evening at the first of the Sunday night Pop concerts, for example, are Rimsky-Korsakoff, Tchaikowsky, Rubinstein and Borodin—an all-Russian programme, with perhaps three compositions which would be thought too light for the subscription concerts of the winter.

Blames Educators

All the other works to be heard this evening have been played at the Symphony concerts, a fact hardly realized by the Pops public. When one says to this public that the Symphony programmes are often no more substantial in contents than the one of tonight, and that many of those programmes are even more engrossing to the average listener, he will be met with incredulity. Nevertheless, that is the fact.

We believe that the blame for misconceptions of what good music means lies primarily with professional and music critics. Like other specialists, these people are inclined to compose, play, talk, write for each other. It has not yet impressed the average music reviewer that if George Bernard Shaw, who thinks he knows a great deal about music, and as a matter of fact knows only a little, were to write a musical article, it would be read by thousands of people who never read Mr. Critic, and that when artists like Paderewski or Chaliapin appear, those who systematically avoid most concerts flock to listen to them.

There is a moral in this which artists and art lovers are going to have to heed. The people who listen to Paderewski or Rachmaninoff or Chaliapin and get real inspiration and delight from them, do so because such interpreters are more than highly trained specialists. They have the imagination, the sensibility and broad, fundamental humanity to reach their listeners with the inspired human messages of great masters. Similarly with writers.

Mr. Shaw has learned, or his genius has taught him, how not to write in a pedantic manner of music, drama or other subjects. He may make a certain superficial appeal, at times, and sacrifice thereto a modicum of substantiality. That is a shortcoming which in no way invalidates our contention. Shaw, and a few others like him, have proved that not only highly educated people, but also people who have not had the time or the opportunity for education, can be interested in and set thinking of serious questions. It is the obligation of anyone who creates, interprets, or comments upon art to go and to the best of his ability do likewise.

This is not easy. It is infinitely less trouble to employ set technical terms and expressions of the trade, and leave it to your listener or reader to do everything for himself. But that is not the creative way, and it is not the way for anyone to do who believes in the spirit of democracy.

The Vice-President of the United States put this very well at the recent Chickering banquet in Boston, when he accused those whom he called "the nobility" of music lovers of direct pushing away from a familiar knowledge and love of the treasures of the musical art the millions of people who needed its ministrations, perhaps more than any others.

That is why we have still in this country a public with no particular enthusiasm for the higher forms of art. That is why such institutions as the pop concerts, the vaudeville theatres, the records and radio, and the dance orchestra are doing so much to make our great public musical, and the most distinguished musicians the most scholarly and highly reputed of musical commentators, so little. Too many of them are limiting and shirking their responsibility to their art.

Mother of Agide Jacchia Leader of the Pops

"The light of heavenly beauty Shines in your tender face."

—Margaret E. Sangster.

[104]

3

MAY 13 1923
Times
NEW YORK CITY

The Boston Orchestra ended its forty-second season with the twenty-fourth concert thereof. The summary of the season showed that there was one piece, Edward Ballantine's "From the Garden of Hellas," played for the first time; eight for the first time in America, by Chansson, Davico, Dohnanyi, Goossens, Honegger, Koechlin, Stravinsky and Turina; and eighteen for the first time in Boston. Next season Mr. Monteux enters on the last year of his present term as conductor. All the seats for the Friday afternoon concerts are subscribed for, and only tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be put on sale.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAY 13 1923

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ended its forty-second season on Saturday, May 5. Mr. Parker, of "The Boston Evening Transcript," calls its last season "a year of fulfillment" and praises the work of Pierre Monteux in bringing the orchestra almost, he thinks, up to its former standards during his three years of leadership. "Even doubting New York," he remarks, "has at last discovered the change, the regeneration."

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

The brilliant Pops Symphony Orchestra, under Agida Jacchia, will be heard in Symphony Hall tonight in the following program, with songs by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club:—

March, "Veritas" ....Densmore
Overture, "Poet and Peasant".....Suppe
Fantasia, "Faust" ....Gounod
College Songs ....Glee Club
A. W. Wright, Leader.
Finale, "Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov
Spanish Dance—Granados Kreisler-Seiniger
Parade of Wooden Soldiers........Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries...........Wagner
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" Tschaikovsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".........Vollstedt
Entrance of the Gladiators......Fucik

ADVTSR. MAY. 14.

MUSIC

Mr. Jacchia Returns

Agide Jacchia, for the past seven years the conductor of the "Pops," made his first appearance of the season in that capacity Saturday evening. His program included, among other pieces of lesser importance, the overture to "William Tell"; the march, "The Top" and the final galop from Bizet's "Little Suite"; the procession to the cathedral from "Lohengrin, and Albeniz's Spanish Rhapsody. The extra numbers included his own Tarantelle and orchestral transcription of "Eili, Eili."

Once again it was possible to appreciate Mr. Jacchia's many qualities as a conductor—his excellent musicianship, the authority of his interpretations, his arresting personality. Under his leadership the "Pop" concerts have made remarkable musical progress. Many of his programs, save occasional pieces of a popular nature, are almost symphonic in character and under his direction the orchestra often achieves performances of real musical worth, far removed from the somewhat perfunctory playing into which it has been known to lapse on occasion.

Mr. Jacchia's presence in this city has been a distinct addition to its musical life. As conductor of the Cecilia Society he seems in a fair way to revive interest in choral singing hereabouts. As director of the Boston conductor of the "Pops" he is exerting an influence for good on the rising generation of musicians, and lastly as conductor of the "Pips" he is exerting that same good influence on a larger and less special public. In this latter capacity he is inculcating a love of the best in music by means of carefully chosen programs, programs which do not shun the lighter and less intellectually taxing phases of the art, but which never descend to the unrefined and commonplace. His mere presence at the conductor's desk insures an evening of artistic enjoyment, and whatever the piece in hand, be it a sugar-plum by Bion or Wagner's "Procession to the Cathedral," it is sure to receive an interpretation in which good taste and imagination are conspicuous.

S. M.

A New Field for the "Pops"

The Sunday "Pops" are a success. For the first time in 38 years, a Sunday evening "Pop" concert was ventured last night at Symphony Hall. There had been much speculation as to the appeal it might make, for under the laws of Massachusetts it is not permitted to serve refreshments at such entertainments on Sunday, and smoking also is forbidden. How would the public of the "Pops" take to an evening of music without the usual accompaniments?

The answer was evident before the visitor penetrated within the doors. The lobby was crowded. Inside, more than the usual number of tables had been set, each with a vase of spring flowers in place of the famil- [illegible] Five and six persons, [illegible] many tables. Upstairs, all standing room was taken before the concert began.

What were the reasons for this response? The program no doubt carried its own appeal. It was made up of the works of Russian composers, always favorites with "Pops" audiences. Too, Mr. Jacchia was back at the dais, to animate the players with his musicianship and his vigor. Then, no doubt, there are many who find it more convenient to visit Symphony Hall on a Sunday evening. But doubtless there were other factors. Not many years ago, wines and beer were considered a necessary part of the "Pops." Yet when they were eliminated "Pops" audiences grew larger. There has always been a section of the public, how numerous nobody knows, who have found their enjoyment of the "Pops" program diluted by the occasional sound of crashing glass and the pervading fog of tobacco smoke. These, perhaps, were present in force last night. They may constitute a new public for the new series of "Pops."

"Pops" Program for Tonig

March, "Veritas"..........Densmor
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"..Supp
Fantasia, "Faust"............Gounc
College songs by Harvard Freshma Glee Club (A. W. Wright, leader
a. "Schneider's Band" (Arranged by Mason).......A. J. Mund
b. "O Mister Moon"............ Smith and Bowman
c. "Australia" ....Hancock
Finale of "Schéhérazade"............ Rimsky-Korsakoff
Spanish dance, "Granados".......... Kreisler-Seiniger
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers..Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries........Wagner
"Up the Street"...............Morse
"Ten Thousand Men of Harvard".... Taylor
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"......... Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Entrance of the Gladiators....Fucik
"Fair Harvard"

MONITOR-MAY. 14

SUNDAY NIGHT POPS PROVE SUCCESS

By ZOE FABER.

Last night saw the initiation of the forthcoming series of Sunday night Pops in Boston. The enormous gathering and vigorous applause testified to the fact that this series of extra concerts was nothing short of an inspiration on the part of the management. Mr. Jacchia, recovered from a recent illness, conducted for the first time this season on Saturday night and last night was a repetition of his success on that occasion.

The program was all Russian, with Tchaikovsky holding the first place in point of numbers and importance. Mr. Jacchia's arrangement of Eili brought a perfect rifle-crack of applause. The audience obviously wished it repeated, but the conductor wisely enough chose another number, Dubinishka, which would give the soloist of the first-mentioned number, Georges Mager, another opportunity wherewith to impress his hearers with the beauty of the solo trumpet well played.

The fact that the city fathers forbid eating, drinking or smoking at the Sunday night concerts seemed to have rather less effect on the enjoyment of the audience than might have been suspected.

AMER. MAY. 14

At the Pops Tonight

"Harvard Freshman Night"

March, "Veritas"............Densmore
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"...Suppé
Fantasia, "Faust"..............Gounod
College Songs by Harvard Freshman Glee Club.
Finale of "Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov
Spanish Dance (Granados) Kreisler-Seiniger
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers...Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries..........Wagner
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker".Tschaikovsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".......Vollstedt
Entrance of the Gladiators.......Fucik

Conductor: Agide Jacchia

TRANS-MAY. 14.

CHORUS AT POPS

The chorus of Radcliffe College will add special numbers to the Pops program in Symphony hall tonight. The program follows:

Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" .... Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda" ..... Ponchielli
Songs of Radcliffe—
a Just on the Other Side
b Cherry Ribbon
c The Annex Song
Radcliffe Choral Society
Mary Olmstead, College Song Leader
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia" .... Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff" Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from "Madame Butterfly" .... Puccini
Laura Littlefield
Roumanian Rhapsody .... Enesco
Songs by Radcliffe Choral Society
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" ... Herbert
Waltz, "Artist's Life" .... Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5 .... Brahms

HERALD-MAY. 15

"Pops" Program for Tonight

RADCLIFFE COLLEGE NIGHT

Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"..,Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"..Ponchielli
Choral Pieces by Radcliffe Club Chorus and Radcliffe Choral Society
Conductor, Dr. Archibald T. Davison
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia".......Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff" Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un del di," from "Madame Butterfly"........Puccini
(Laura Littlefield)
Rumanian Rhapsody ....Enesco
Choral Pieces
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" Herbert
Choral Pieces:
Waltz, "Artist's Life".......Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5....Brahms

MONITOR MAY. 15.

At the Pops Tonight

"Radcliffe College Night"

Wedding March from the Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"....Ponchielli
Choral Pieces ....
(Sung by the Radcliffe Choral Society)
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia".........Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff". Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from "Madama Butterfly"..........Puccini
Roumanian Rhapsody..........Enesco
Songs ....
(Sung by the Radcliffe Choral Society)
Selections, "Orange Blossoms"..Herbert
Waltz, "Artist's Life".....J. Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5........Brahms

Conductors:
A. Jacchia A. T. Davison
Soloist: Laura Littlefield.

TRANS. MAY. 15.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Agide Jacchia will present the following program at the pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba" Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"..........Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina" ...... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque ....Massenet
(a) Angeleus. (b) Fete Boheme.
Spring .... Grieg
Introduction to Act III. "Lohengrin" Wagner
Rhapsody "Italia" ....Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore" ....Verdi
Love Dream After the Ball...Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory"......Ganne

HERALD MAY. 16.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Agide Jacchia will present the following program at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture—"Queen of Sheba".....Gounod
Overture—"Light Cavalry" ....Suppe
Waltz—"Estudiantina" ....Waldteufel
Fantasia—"Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque ....Massenet
Spring .... Grieg
Introduction, Act 3, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Rhapsody "Italia" ....Casella
Selection—"Il Trovatore"..........Verdi
Love-Dreams After the Ball....Caibulka
March—"Father of Victory"......Ganne

ADVTSR-MAY. 16

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Agide Jacchia will present the following programme at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba"...Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"............Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina" ....Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"..Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque ....Massenet
a. Angelus. b. Fete Boheme
Spring ....Grieg
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Rhapsody "Italia" ....Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore" ....Verdi
Love-Dream after the Ball ....Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory" ....Ganne

POST-MAY. 16.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

NORTHEASTERN UNIVERSITY NIGHT

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba" Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"....Suppé
Waltz, "Estudiantina"....Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saëns
"Scènes Pittoresque" ......Massenet
Spring ....Grieg
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Rhapsody, "Italia" ....Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore" ......Verdi
"Loves Dream After the Ball" Czibulka
March "Father of Victory"....Ganne

MONITOR-MAY. 16.

AT THE POP[illegible]

Agide Jacchia will present the following program at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba," Gounod; Overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; Waltz, "Estudiantina," Waldteufel; Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Scenes Pittoresque, (a) Angelus, (b) Fete Boheme, Massenet; Spring, Grieg; introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Rhapsody, "Italia," Casella; Selection, "Il Trovatore," Verdi; Love Dream After the Ball, Czibulka; March, "Father of Victory," Ganne.

TELE. MAY. 16.

At the Pops Tonight

March from "The Queen of Sheba." Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"......Suppé
Waltz, "Estudiantina"......Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saëns
Scènes Pittoresques..........Massenet
Spring .... Grieg
Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin," Wagner
Rhapsody, "Italia"..............Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore".......Verdi
Love's Dream After the Ball..Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory"....Ganne

Conductor: A. Jacchia.

TRANS. MAY. 16.

POP CONCERT

The Pops Symphony orchestra under Agide Jacchia will be heard in the following program in Symphony hall tonight:

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin," Tchaikovsky; overture to "Phedre," Massenet; waltz, "Girls of Baden," Komzak; fantasia, "Tales of Hoffman," Offenbach; "Finlandia," Sibelius; intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rustincana," Mascagni; First Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; songs by Boston City Club Glee club, Frank H. Luker, conductor; Bachanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; waltz, "Miner's Lights," Zeller; Entrance of the Guests Into the Wartburg, Act II, "Tannhauser," Wagner.

TELE. MAY. 17.

At the Pops Tonight

"Boston City Club Night"

Polonaise from "Eugen Onégin," Chaikovsky
Overture to "Phædra"........Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".......Komzàk
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann," Offenbach
Tone Poem, "Finlandia"......Sibelius
Spanish Dance, 'Panaderos"..Glazunov
First Hungarian Rhapsody........Liszt
Songs by the Glee Club of the City Club
Bacchanal from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saëns
Waltz, "Miner's Lights"........Zeller
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from Act II., "Tannhäuser," Wagner

Conductors:
A. Jacchia F. H. Luker

TRANS. MAY. 17

POP CONCERT PROGRAM

The Pops concert program for tonight follows:—

Polonaise, "Eugen Onegin"..Tchaikovsky
Overture, "Phedre" ....Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".........Komzak
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffman"...Offenbach
"Finland" ....Sibelius
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
First Hungarian Rhapsody.........Liszt
Songs, Boston City Glee Club.
Bacchanale, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Waltz, "Minor's Lights"...........Zeller
Guests.
Selection, Act II., "Tannhaeuser" Wagner

ADVTSR-MAY. 17.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

BOSTON CITY CLUB NIGHT

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin" Tschaikowsky
Overture to "Phèdre"......Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden"....Komzak
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann" Offenbach
"Finlandia" ....Sibelius
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
First Hungarian Rhapsody.....Liszt
(a) "The Huntsman's Farewell" Mendelssohn
(b) "John Peel" (Old English Hunting Song) ....Andrews
(c) "Oh, Trust in the Lord" (Largo) (with organ) ....Handel
Boston City Club Glee Club
(Frank H. Luker, conductor)
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" ....Saint-Saëns
Waltz, "Miners' Lights"........Zeller
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, "Tannhäuser"..Wagner

MONITOR-MAY. 17.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Agide Jacchia will conduct the following program at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:—

Pomp and Circumstance ....Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor" Nicolai
Waltz, "Beautiful Blue Danube"...Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida" ....Verdi
Marche Slave................Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria............Schubert-Wilhelm
Anitra's Dance ....Grieg
Rhapsody Espana ....Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance....Weber-Berlioz
Prelude ....Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar Ippolitov-Ivanov

ADVTSR-MAY. 18

TONIGHT'S POPS

Agide Jacchia will conduct the following program at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Pomp and Circumstance ....Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor" Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida" ....Verdi
Marche Slave ....Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria ....Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo, violin, harp, organ and strings)
Anitra's Dance ....Grieg
Rhapsody Espana ....Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance...Weber-Berlioz
Prelude ....Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar..Ippolitov-Ivanov

HERALD-MAY. 18

THIRD WEEK OF POPS

Agide Jacchia and the Pops orchestra have been greeted by record audiences during the first two weeks of the Pops season at Symphony hall. These concerts, which afford the sole opportunity to hear good music in Boston at this time of year, will have numerous points of interest during the third week. The new project of Sunday Pop concerts will be continued next Sunday evening with an all-Wagner program, while the following Monday (May 28) brings the annual Harvard night.

The programs of the week follow:

MONDAY

Military Polonaise..........................Chopin
Overture, "Oberon"..........................Weber
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"...........Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Carmen"..........................Bizet
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" ....Mascagni
Love—Death from "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
Waltz, No. 15..................Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "Espana"......................Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyries......................Wagner
Ave Maria..........................Bach-Gounod
(Solo violin, harp, strings and organ.)
Pomp and Circumstance..................Elgar

TUESDAY

(Simmons College night.)

Entrance of the Boyards.............Halvorsen
Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri"....Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos".........Glazounov
(a) Marching Song............Emma Burchenal
(b) Here's to Simmons............Ruth Scully
(c) Stand by Simmons...........Marion Fitch
Second Hungarian Rhapsody..............Liszt
Hindu Song from "Sadko"....Rimsky-Korsakov
March of the Toys........................Herbert
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"..........Puccini
Selection, "The Yankee Princess"......Kalman
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen"........................Bizet

WEDNESDAY

March, "El Capitan"........................Sousa
Overture, "Masaniello".....................Auber
Waltz, "Espana".......................Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Mefistofele"......................Boito
First Hungarian Rhapsody.................Liszt
Largo ....Handel
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Children at Play................van Westerhout
Introduction and Dance of Salome..Glazounov
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"..............Herbert
Intermezzo, Act III, "The Jewels of the Madonna" ....Wolf-Ferrari
American Patrol........................Meacham

THURSDAY

(Amherst College night.)

Coronation March from "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit"...........Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana"....Mascagni
College Songs
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker".......Tchaikovsky
"Indian Summer," an American Idyll Herbert
Overture to "Tannhaeuser"..............Wagner
College Songs
Selection, "Apple Blossoms"....Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance..................Brahms

FRIDAY

Hungarian March..........................Berlioz
Overture to "William Tell"..............Rossini
Liebesfreud ....Kreisler
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"........................Leoni
Finale of "Scheherazade"....Rimsky-Korsakov
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Valse Triste..............................Sibelius
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"......Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"...........Herbert
"Eili, Eili"......................Arr. by Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever................Sousa

SATURDAY

March, "Lorraine"..........................Ganne
Overture to "Sakuntala"...............Goldmark
Waltz, "The Sirens"...................Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto"........................Verdi
Marche Slave.......................Tchaikovsky
Violin Solo (Mr. Theodorowicz)
Gavotte, "Camellia"........................Jacchia
Roumanian Rhapsody......................Enesco
Suite from "Carmen"..........................Bizet
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers...........Jessel
Dance of the Hours.....................Ponchielli

SUNDAY

(Wagner program.)

Rienzi Overture.
Tannaeuser Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus" Act I.
Tristan and Isolde—"Love-Death," Act III.
Lohengrin—Fantasia.
The Mastersingers of Nuremberg—Prelude.
Parsifal—Entrance of the Knights Into the Temple of the Grail, Act I.
Siegfried—"Forest Murmurs," Act II.
The Valkyrie—Magic Fire Music, Act III.

HERALD-MAY. 20

TONIGHT'S POPS

Agide Jacchia will conduct the following programme at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Pomp and Circumstance ....Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor" Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida" ....Verdi
Marche Slave ....Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria ....Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings)
Anitra's Dance ....Grieg
Rhapsody Espana ....Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance ....Weber-Berlioz
Prelude ....Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar ....Ippolitov-Ivanov

POST-MAY. 18.

MAY 13 1923
Times
NEW YORK CITY

The Boston Orchestra ended its forty-second season with the twenty-fourth concert thereof. The summary of the season showed that there was one piece, Edward Ballantine's "From the Garden of Hellas," played for the first time; eight for the first time in America, by Chansson, Davico, Dohnanyi, Goossens, Honegger, Koechlin, Stravinsky and Turina; and eighteen for the first time in Boston. Next season Mr. Monteux enters on the last year of his present term as conductor. All the seats for the Friday afternoon concerts are subscribed for, and only tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be put on sale.

NEW YORK
TRIBUNE
MAY 13 1923

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ended its forty-second season on Saturday, May 5. Mr. Parker, of "The Boston Evening Transcript," calls its last season "a year of fulfillment" and praises the work of Pierre Monteux in bringing the orchestra almost, he thinks, up to its former standards during his three years of leadership. "Even doubting New York," he remarks, "has at last discovered the change, the regeneration."

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

The brilliant Pops Symphony Orchestra, under Agida Jacchia, will be heard in Symphony Hall tonight in the following program, with songs by the Harvard Freshman Glee Club:—

March, "Veritas" ....Densmore
Overture, "Poet and Peasant" ....Suppe
Fantasia, "Faust" ....Gounod
College Songs ....Glee Club
A. W. Wright, Leader.
Finale, "Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov
Spanish Dance—Granados Kreisler-Seinizer
Parade of Wooden Soldiers.......Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries..........Wagner
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" Tschaikovsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"........Vollstedt
"Entrance of the Gladiators".....Fucik

ADVTSR MAY 14

MUSIC

Mr. Jacchia Returns

Agide Jacchia, for the past seven years the conductor of the "Pops," made his first appearance of the season in that capacity Saturday evening. His program included, among other pieces of lesser importance, the overture to "William Tell"; the march, "The Top" and the final galop from Bizet's "Little Suite"; the procession to the cathedral from "Lohengrin, and Albeniz's Spanish Rhapsody. The extra numbers included his own Tarantelle and orchestral transcription of "Eili, Eili."

Once again it was possible to appreciate Mr. Jacchia's many qualities as a conductor—his excellent musicianship, the authority of his interpretations, his arresting personality. Under his leadership the "Pop" concerts have made remarkable musical progress. Many of his programs, save occasional pieces of a popular nature, are almost symphonic in character and under his direction the orchestra often achieves performances of real musical worth, far removed from the somewhat perfunctory playing into which it has been known to lapse on occasion.

Mr. Jacchia's presence in this city has been a distinct addition to its musical life. As conductor of the Cecilia Society he seems in a fair way to revive interest in choral singing hereabouts. As director of the Boston conductor of the "Pops" he is exerting an influence for good on the rising generation of musicians, and lastly as conductor of the "Pips" he is exerting that same good influence on a larger and less special public. In this latter capacity he is inculcating a love of the best in music by means of carefully chosen programs, programs which do not shun the lighter and less intellectually taxing phases of the art, but which never descend to the unrefined and commonplace. His mere presence at the conductor's desk insures an evening of artistic enjoyment, and whatever the piece in hand, be it a sugar-plum by Blon or Wagner's "Procession to the Cathedral," it is sure to receive an interpretation in which good taste and imagination are conspicuous.

S. M.

A New Field for the "Pops"

The Sunday "Pops" are a success. For the first time in 38 years, a Sunday evening "Pop" concert was ventured last night at Symphony Hall. There had been much speculation as to the appeal it might make, for under the laws of Massachusetts it is not permitted to serve refreshments at such entertainments on Sunday, and smoking also is forbidden. How would the public of the "Pops" take to an evening of music without the usual accompaniments?

The answer was evident before the visitor penetrated within the doors. The lobby was crowded. Inside, more than the usual number of tables had been set, each with a vase of spring flowers in place of the familiar card. Five and six persons, many tables. Upstairs, all standing room was taken before the concert began.

What were the reasons for this response? The program no doubt carried its own appeal. It was made up of the works of Russian composers, always favorites with "Pops" audiences. Too, Mr. Jacchia was back at the dais, to animate the players with his musicianship and his vigor. Then, no doubt, there are many who find it more convenient to visit Symphony Hall on a Sunday evening. But doubtless there were other factors. Not many years ago, wines and beer were considered a necessary part of the "Pops." Yet when they were eliminated "Pops" audiences grew larger. There has always been a section of the public, how numerous nobody knows, who have found their enjoyment of the "Pops" program diluted by the occasional sound of crashing glass and the pervading fog of tobacco smoke. These, perhaps, were present in force last night. They may constitute a new public for the new series of "Pops."

"Pops" Program for Tonig

March, "Veritas"..........Densmor
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"..Supp
Fantasia, "Faust"...........Gounc
College songs by Harvard Freshma
Glee Club (A. W. Wright, leader
a. "Schneider's Band" (Arranged by Mason)......A. J. Munc
b. "O Mister Moon"........... Smith and Bowman
c. "Australia" ....Hancock
Finale of "Schéhérazade"........... Rimsky-Korsakoff
Spanish dance, "Granados"........ Kreisler-Seiniger
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers..Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries........Wagner
"Up the Street"..............Morse
"Ten Thousand Men of Harvard".... Taylor
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"......... Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Entrance of the Gladiators....Fucik
"Fair Harvard"

MONITOR-MA

SUNDAY NIGHT POPS PROVE SUCCESS

By ZOE FABER.

Last night saw the initiation of the forthcoming series of Sunday night Pops in Boston. The enormous gathering and vigorous applause testified to the fact that this series of extra concerts was nothing short of an inspiration on the part of the management. Mr. Jacchia, recovered from a recent illness, conducted for the first time this season on Saturday night and last night was a repetition of his success on that occasion.

The program was all Russian, with Tchaikovsky holding the first place in point of numbers and importance. Mr. Jacchia's arrangement of Eili brought a perfect rifle-crack of applause. The audience obviously wished it repeated, but the conductor wisely enough chose another number, Dubinishka, which would give the soloist of the first-mentioned number, Georges Mager, another opportunity wherewith to impress his hearers with the beauty of the solo trumpet well played.

The fact that the city fathers forbid eating, drinking or smoking at the Sunday night concerts seemed to have rather less effect on the enjoyment of the audience than might have been suspected.

NER MAY 14

At the Pops Tonight

"Harvard Freshman Night"

March, "Veritas"............Densmore
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"...Suppé
Fantasia, "Faust"...............Gounod
College Songs by Harvard Freshman Glee Club.
Finale of "Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov
Spanish Dance (Granados) Kreisler-Seiniger
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers...Jessel
Ride of the Valkyries..........Wagner
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker".Tschaikovsky
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".......Vollstedt
Entrance of the Gladiators.......Fucik

Conductor: Agide Jacchia

TRANS-MAY 14.

CHORUS AT POPS

The chorus of Radcliffe College will add special numbers to the Pops program in Symphony hall tonight. The program follows:

Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" .... Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda" ..... Ponchielli
Songs of Radcliffe—
a Just on the Other Side
b Cherry Ribbon
c The Annex Song
Radcliffe Choral Society
Mary Olmstead, College Song Leader
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia" .... Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff" Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from "Madame Butterfly" .... Puccini
Laura Littlefield
Roumanian Rhapsody .... Enesco
Songs by Radcliffe Choral Society
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" ... Herbert
Waltz, "Artist's Life" .... Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5 .... Brahms

HERALD-MAY.15

"Pops" Program for Tonight

RADCLIFFE COLLEGE NIGHT

Wedding March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"...Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"..Ponchielli
Choral Pieces by Radcliffe Club Chorus and Radcliffe Choral Society
Conductor, Dr. Archibald T. Davison
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia".......Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff" Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un del di," from "Madame Butterfly".......Puccini
(Laura Littlefield)
Rumanian Rhapsody ....Enesco
Choral Pieces
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" Herbert
Choral Pieces:
Waltz, "Artist's Life"......Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5....Brahms

MONITOR MAY.15.

At the Pops Tonight

"Radcliffe College Night"

Wedding March from the Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Fantasia, "La Gioconda"....Ponchielli
Choral Pieces ....
(Sung by the Radcliffe Choral Society)
Ballet Suite, "Sylvia"..........Delibes
Intermezzo from "William Ratcliff". Mascagni
Soprano Solo, "Un bel di" from "Madama Butterfly"..........Puccini
Roumanian Rhapsody..........Enesco
Songs ....
(Sung by the Radcliffe Choral Society)
Selections, "Orange Blossoms"..Herbert
Waltz, "Artist's Life"......J. Strauss
Hungarian Dance No. 5........Brahms

Conductors:
A. Jacchia A. T. Davison
Soloist: Laura Littlefield.

TRANS. MAY. 15.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Agide Jacchia will present the following program at the pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba" Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry".........Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina" ...... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque ....Massenet
(a) Angeleus. (b) Fete Boheme.
Spring ....Grieg
Introduction to Act III. "Lohengrin" Wagner
Rhapsody "Italia" ....Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore" ....Verdi
Love Dream After the Ball....Czibulka
March. "Father of Victory"......Ganne

HERALD MAY. 16.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Agide Jacchia will present the following program at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture—"Queen of Sheba"......Gounod
Overture—"Light Cavalry" ....Suppe
Waltz—"Estudiantina" ....Waldteufel
Fantasia—"Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque ....Massenet
Spring .... Grieg
Introduction, Act 3, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Rhapsody "Italia" ....Casella
Selection—"Il Trovatore"..........Verdi
Love-Dreams After the Ball....Caibulka
March—"Father of Victory"......Ganne

ADVTSR-MAY. 16

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Agide Jacchia will present the following programme at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba"...Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"............Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina" ....Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"..Saint-Saens
Scenes Pittoresque ....Massenet
a. Angelus. b. Fete Boheme
Spring ....Grieg
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Rhapsody "Italia" ....Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatcre" ....Verdi
Love-Dream after the Ball ....Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory" ....Ganne

POST-MAY 16.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

NORTHEASTERN UNIVERSITY NIGHT

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba" Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"....Suppé
Waltz, "Estudiantina"....Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saëns
"Scènes Pittoresque" ......Massenet
Spring ....Grieg
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Rhapsody, "Italia" ....Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore" ......Verdi
"Loves Dream After the Ball" Czibulka
March "Father of Victory"....Ganne

MONITOR-MAY. 16.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Agide Jacchia will present the following program at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Overture to "The Queen of Sheba," Gounod; Overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; Waltz, "Estudiantina," Waldteufel; Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Scenes Pittoresque, (a) Angelus, (b) Fete Boheme, Massenet; Spring, Grieg; introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Rhapsody, "Italia," Casella; Selection, "Il Trovatore," Verdi; Love Dream After the Ball, Czibulka; March, "Father of Victory," Ganne.

TELE. MAY. 16.

At the Pops Tonight

March from "The Queen of Sheba," Gounod
Overture, "Light Cavalry"......Suppé
Waltz, "Estudiantina"......Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saëns
Scènes Pittoresques............Massenet
Spring .... Grieg
Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin," Wagner
Rhapsody, "Italia"..............Casella
Selection, "Il Trovatore".......Verdi
Love's Dream After the Ball..Czibulka
March, "Father of Victory"....Ganne

Conductor: A. Jacchia.

TRANS. MAY. 16.

POP CONCERT

The Pops Symphony orchestra under Agide Jacchia will be heard in the following program in Symphony hall tonight:

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin," Tchaikovsky; overture to "Phedre," Massenet; waltz, "Girls of Baden," Komzak; fantasia, "Tales of Hoffman," Offenbach; "Finlandia," Sibelius; intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rustincana," Mascagni; First Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; songs by Boston City Club Glee club, Frank H. Luker, conductor; Bachanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; waltz, "Miner's Lights," Zeller; Entrance of the Guests Into the Wartburg, Act II, "Tannhauser," Wagner.

TELE. MAY. 17

At the Pops Tonight

"Boston City Club Night"

Polonaise from "Eugen Onégin," Chaikovsky
Overture to "Phædra"........Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden".......Komzàk
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann," Offenbach
Tone Poem, "Finlandia"......Sibelius
Spanish Dance, 'Panaderos"..Glazunov
First Hungarian Rhapsody........Liszt
Songs by the Glee Club of the City Club
Bacchanal from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saëns
Waltz, "Miner's Lights"........Zeller
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from Act II., "Tannhäuser," Wagner

Conductors:
A. Jacchia F. H. Luker

TRANS. MAY. 17

POP CONCERT PROGRAM

The Pops concert program for tonight follows:—

Polonaise, "Eugen Onegin"..Tchaikovsky
Overture, "Phedre" ....Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden"........Komzak
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffman"...Offenbach
"Finland" ....Sibelius
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
First Hungarian Rhapsody.........Liszt
Songs, Boston City Glee Club.
Bacchanale, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Waltz, "Minor's Lights"..........Zeller
Guests.
Selection, Act II., "Tannhaeuser" Wagner

ADVTSR-MAY. 17.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

BOSTON CITY CLUB NIGHT

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin" Tschaikowsky
Overture to "Phèdre"......Massenet
Waltz, "Girls of Baden"....Komzak
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann" Offenbach
"Finlandia" ....Sibelius
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
First Hungarian Rhapsody.....Liszt
(a) "The Huntsman's Farewell" Mendelssohn
(b) "John Peel" (Old English Hunting Song) ....Andrews
(c) "Oh, Trust in the Lord" (Largo) (with organ) ....Handel
Boston City Club Glee Club
(Frank H. Luker, conductor)
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" ....Saint-Saëns
Waltz, "Miners' Lights".......Zeller
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, "Tannhäuser"..Wagner

MONITOR-MAY. 17.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Agice Jacchia will conduct the following program at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:—

Pomp and Circumstance...........Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor" Nicolai
Waltz, "Beautiful Blue Danube"...Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida"..................Verdi
Marche Slave...............Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria...............Schubert-Wilhelm
Anitra's Dance ....Grieg
Rhapsody Espana ....Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance...Weber-Berlioz
Prelude ....Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar Ippolitov-Ivanov

ADVTSR-MAY. 18

TONIGHT'S POPS

Agide Jacchia will conduct the following program at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Pomp and Circumstance ....Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor" Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida" ....Verdi
Marche Slave ....Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria ....Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo, violin, harp, organ and strings)
Anitra's Dance ....Grieg
Rhapsody Espana ....Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance...Weber-Berlioz
Prelude .... Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar..Ippolitov-Ivanov

HERALD-MAY. 18

THIRD WEEK OF POPS

Agide Jacchia and the Pops orchestra have been greeted by record audiences during the first two weeks of the Pops season at Symphony hall. These concerts, which afford the sole opportunity to hear good music in Boston at this time of year, will have numerous points of interest during the third week. The new project of Sunday Pop concerts will be continued next Sunday evening with an all-Wagner program, while the following Monday (May 28) brings the annual Harvard night.

The programs of the week follow:

MONDAY

Military Polonaise.......................Chopin
Overture, "Oberon"......................Weber
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"...........Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Carmen".......................Bizet
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" ....Mascagni
Love—Death from "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
Waltz, No. 15.................Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "Espana"......................Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyries......................Wagner
Ave Maria..........................Bach-Gounod
(Solo violin, harp, strings and organ.)
Pomp and Circumstance.................Elgar

TUESDAY

(Simmons College night.)

Entrance of the Boyards............Halvorsen
Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri"....Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos"........Glazounov
(a) Marching Song...........Emma Burchenal
(b) Here's to Simmons............Ruth Scully
(c) Stand by Simmons...........Marion Fitch
Second Hungarian Rhapsody..............Liszt
Hindu Song from "Sadko"....Rimsky-Korsakov
March of the Toys........................Herbert
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"..........Puccini
Selection, "The Yankee Princess"......Kalman
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen"......................Bizet

WEDNESDAY

March, "El Capitan".......................Sousa
Overture, "Masaniello"....................Auber
Waltz, "Espana"......................Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Mefistofele"...................Boito
First Hungarian Rhapsody................Liszt
Largo ....Handel
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Children at Play................van Westerhout
Introduction and Dance of Salome..Glazounov
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"..............Herbert
Intermezzo, Act III, "The Jewels of the Madonna" .... Wolf-Ferrari
American Patrol........................Meacham

THURSDAY

(Amherst College night.)

Coronation March from "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit"...........Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana"....Mascagni
College Songs
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"........Tchaikovsky
"Indian Summer," an American Idyll Herbert
Overture to "Tannhaeuser"............Wagner
College Songs
Selection, "Apple Blossoms"....Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance..................Brahms

FRIDAY

Hungarian March..........................Berlioz
Overture to "William Tell"..............Rossini
Liebesfreud ....Kreisler
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo".....................Leoni
Finale of "Scheherazade"....Rimsky-Korsakov
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Valse Triste...............................Sibelius
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"......Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"..........Herbert
"Eili, Eili"......................Arr. by Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever...............Sousa

SATURDAY

March, "Lorraine".........................Ganne
Overture to "Sakuntala"...............Goldmark
Waltz, "The Sirens".................Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto"......................Verdi
Marche Slave........................Tchaikovsky
Violin Solo (Mr. Theodorowicz)
Gavotte, "Camellia"......................Jacchia
Roumanian Rhapsody......................Enesco
Suite from "Carmen".......................Bizet
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers..........Jessel
Dance of the Hours......................Ponchielli

SUNDAY

(Wagner program.)

Rienzi Overture.
Tannhaeuser Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus" Act I.
Tristan and Isolde—"Love-Death," Act III.
Lohengrin—Fantasia.
The Mastersingers of Nuremberg—Prelude.
Parsifal—Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail, Act I.
Siegfried—"Forest Murmurs," Act II.
The Valkyrie—Magic Fire Music, Act III.

HERALD-MA

TONIGHT'S POPS

Agide Jacchia will conduct the following programme at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Pomp and Circumstance ....Elgar
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor" Nicolai
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Fantasia, "Aida" ....Verdi
Marche Slave ....Tchaikovsky
Ave Maria ....Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings)
Anitra's Dance ....Grieg
Rhapsody Espana ....Chabrier
Invitation to the Dance ....Weber-Berlioz
Prelude ....Rachmaninov
Procession of the Sardar ......Ippolitov-Ivanov

POST-MAY 18

NO concert on Sunday evening alters the familiar course of The Pops at Symphony Hall next week. Not until Sunday evening, May 27, will the second befall—no doubt to be thronged as was the first. By clear proof of that occasion no hampering "verbotens," State-imposed, may lessen the zest of the public for pleasure on the first day of the week. Another change in routine and far slighter frequenters of the concerts have also noticed. They now begin at 8.15 and end about 10.45, since orchestra, conductor and hearers all are content with two and a half hours of music through a programme invariably multiplied by extra pieces.

Mr. Jacchia—almost needless to say—is conducting again in familiar form to familiar plaudits. As usual he dots his programmes with fresh or exceptional pieces—on Monday, the closing scene from Wagner's "Tristan"; on Tuesday, Rossini's Overture to his light opera, "L'Italiana in Algeri"; on Wednesday, Glazunov's "Dance of Salome"; on Thursday, Delibes's seldom heard overture to his opéra-comique, "Le Roi l'a Dit"; on Saturday, Goldmark's overture, "Sakountala." The second Sunday concert will bring a programme drawn wholly from Wagner's operas—"Lohengrin," "Tannhäuser," "Die Meistersinger," "Die Walküre," "Tristan," "Parsifal." On Tuesday and Thursday evenings songs of Simmons and Amherst College respectively will diversify the programme.

At the Pops Tonight

March from "Aida" .... Verdi
Overture to "Figaro's Wedding" . Mozart
Waltz, "The Skaters" ...... Waldteufel
Fantasia "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Danse Macabre .... Saint-Saëns
Largo from the Symphony, "From the New World" .... Dvořák
Minuet .... Boccherini
Carnival in Paris .... Svendsen
Two Indian Dances .... Skilton
Spring Song .... Mendelssohn
Bacchanal from "Philemon and Baucis" Gounod

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS-MAY 19

Pop Concerts to Offer Special Programs for College Nights

The Pop concerts in Symphony hall, which are about to enter their third week, are having, under the leadership of Agide Jacchia, what will be a record season in every way. There will be numerous points of interest in the programs of next week, including Amherst night, with college songs, on Thursday, May 24, the second Sunday concert with an all-Wagner program on May 27, and Harvard night, with numbers by the Harvard Glee Club, on May 28. The programs of the coming week follow:

MONDAY

Military Polonaise .... Chopin
Overture, "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Dornroeschen" .... Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Carmen" .... Bizet
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
Waltz, No. 15 .... Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "Espana" .... Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyries .... Wagner
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
(Solo violin, harp, strings and organ.)
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar

TUESDAY

(Simmons College night.)

Entrance of the Boyards .... Halvorsen
Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri" ... Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" ...... Glazonov
(a) Marching Song .... Emma Burchenal
(b) Here's to Simmons .... Ruth Scully
(c) Stand by Simmons .... Marion Fitch
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Hindu Song from "Sadko" ... Rimsky-Korsakov
March of the Toys .... Herbert
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly" .... Puccini
Selection, "The Yankee Princess" .... Kalman
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet

WEDNESDAY

March, "El Capitan" .... Sousa
Overture, "Massaniello" .... Auber
Waltz, "Espana" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Mefistofele" .... Boito
First Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Largo .... Handel
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Children at Play .... van Westerhout
Introduction and Dance of Salome . Glazounov
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste" .... Herbert
Intermezzo, Act III, "The Jewels of the Madonna" .... Wolf-Ferrari
American Patrol .... Meacham

THURSDAY

(Amherst College night.)

Coronation March from "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit" .... Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" ... Muscagni
College Songs
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tchaikovsky
"Indian Summer," An American Idyll. Herbert
Overture to "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
College Songs
Selection, "Apple Blossoms" ... Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

FRIDAY

Hungarian March .... Berlioz
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
Fantasia, "L' Oracolo" .... Leoni
Finale of "Scheherazade" .. Rimsky-Korsakov
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Valse Triste .... Sibelius
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" ..... Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .... Herbert
"Eili, Eili" .... Arr. by Agide Jacchia
"Stars and Stripes Forever" .... Sousa

SATURDAY

March, "Lorraine" .... Ganne
Overture to "Sakuntala" .... Goldmark
Waltz, "The Sirens" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto" .... Verdi
Marche Slave .... Tchaikovsky
Violin Solo (Jubius Theodorowicz)
Gavotte, "Camellia" .... Jacchia
Roumanian Rhapsody .... Enesco
Suite from "Carmen" .... Bizet
"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" ...... Jessel
Dance of the Hours .... Ponchielli

SUNDAY

(Wagner program.)

Rienzi Overture.
Tannhaeuser Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act I.
Tristan and Isolde—"Love-Death," Act III.
Lohengrin—Fantasia.
The Mastersingers of Nuremberg—Prelude.
Parsifal—Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail, Act I.
Siegfried—"Forest Murmurs," Act II.
The Valkyrie—Magic Fire Music, Act III.

TRAN. MAY. 19.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Triumphal March from "Aida," Verdi
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" .... Mozart
Waltz, "The Skaters" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Danse Macabre .... Saint-Saëns
Largo from the "New World" Symphony .... Dvořák
Minuet .... Boccherini
Carnival in Paris .... Svendsen
Two Indian Dances .... Skilton
Spring Song .... Mendelssohn
Bacchanale from "Philémon et Baucis" .... Gounod

MONITOR-MAY 19-

POPS PROGRAM

The following numbers will be played at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Triumphal March from "Aida," Verdi; overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Mozart; waltz, "The Skaters," Waldteufel; fantasia, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Danse Macabre, Saint-Saens; largo from the "New World" Symphony, Dvorak; Minuet, Boccherini; Carnival in Paris, Svandeen; Two Indian Dances, (a) Deer Dance, (b) War Dance, Skilton; Spring Song, Mendelssohn; Bacchanale from "Philemon et Baucis," Gounod.

TELE-MAY. 19-

THIRD WEEK OF POPS

The Pops Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Agide Jacchia, will open its third week tomorrow.

On Sunday, May 27, the second Sunday evening Pop Concert will be given, with an all-Wagner programme, featuring excerpts from the "Ring." On Monday, May 28, will come Harvard night, with numbers by the Harvard Glee Club.

POST-MAY. 20.

Third Week of "Pops" Offers Good Music

The Pops Symphony Orchestra, the performances of which are so fine under the leadership of their conductor, Agide Jacchia, will open their third week tomorrow.

These concerts at Symphony Hall, which comprise the sole opportunity to hear good music at this time of year in Boston, will have numerous points of interest during the coming week.

Monday there will be played Chabrier's "Espana" and numbers from Wagner's "Tristan" and "The Valkyries," on Tuesday Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody, on Wednesday his first, and also Handel's Largo and Glazounov's "Dance of Salome."

Thursday will be Amherst College Night, with the addition of college songs which will be of interest to the general public. Friday the finale of "Scheherazade," the "William Tell" overture and "Eili, Eili," will be played, and on Saturday the "Sakuntala" overture and the "Roumanian Rhapsody."

Sunday, May 27, the second Sunday evening pop concert, will be given with an all-Wagner program featuring excerpts from the "Ring." Monday, May 28, will come Harvard Night, with numbers by the Harvard Glee Club.

Music Notes and Comment

The Pops Sunday night concert last week was so great a success, with no less than 1300 admissions and all the reserved seats sold, that it is a pity the desire of the players in the orchestra for an occasional evening off prevents Sunday pops being offered every week during the season. There is no concert tonight. Would not it be better to give the players some other night, such as Monday or Tuesday off, instead of Sunday?

GLOBE-MAY. 20.

POP CONCERTS IN THIRD WEEK.

The Pops open their third week tomorrow night with Chabrier's "Espana" and numbers from Wagner's "Tristan" and "The Valkyrie" as features. Thursday will be Amherst College night, with college songs added to the regular orchestral program directed by Agide Jacchia. Next Sunday night, the second Sunday evening Pop Concert will be given, with an All-Wagner program, featuring excerpts from the "Ring." On Monday, May 28, will come Harvard Night with Glee Club numbers.

ADVTSR-MAY 20

POP CONCERT

The programme for the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight follows:

Military Polonaise .... Chopin
Overture, "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Dornroeschen .... Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Carmen" .... Bizet
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
Waltz, No. 15 .... Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "Espana" .... Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyries .... Wagner
Ave Maria (Solo violin, harp, organ and strings) .... Bach-Gounod
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar

POST-MAY. 21.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Military Polonaise .... Chopin
Overture, "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Dornroechen" .... Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Carmen" .... Bizet
Selection from "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Love-Death, "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
Waltz, No. 15 .... Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "Espana" .... Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyries .... Wagner
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar

ADVTSR-MAY.21.

POP CONCERT

The program for the Pop Concert in Symphony hall tonight follows:

1—Military Polonaise .... Chopin
2—Overture, "Oberon" .... Weber
3—Waltz, "Dornroeschen" ...... Tchaikovsky
4—Fantasia, "Carmen" .... Bizet
5—Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana," .... Mascagni
6—Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
7—Waltz, No. 15 .... Brahms-Gericke
8—Rhapsody, "Espana" .... Chabrier
9—Ride of the Valkyries .... Wagner
10—Ave Maria (solo violin, harp, organ and strings) .... Bach-Gounod
11—Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar

HERALD-MAY. 21.

POP CONCERT

The program for the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight follows:

"Military Polonaise," Chopin; overture, "Oberon," Weber; waltz, "Dornroeschen," Tchaikovsky; fantasia "Carmen," Bizet; prelude from Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; "Love-Death" from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; Waltz No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; rhapsody, "Espana," Chabrier; "Ride of the Valkyrie," Wagner; "Ave Maria" (solo violin, harp, organ and strings), Bach-Gounod; "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar.

TELE. MAY-21.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Military Polonaise .... Chopin
Overture, "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Dornroeschen" Tschaikowsky
Fantasia, "Carmen" .... Bizet
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
Love-Death from "Tristan und Isolde" .... Wagner
Waltz, No. 15 .... Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "España" .... Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyries .... Wagner
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
"Pomp and Circumstance" ..... Elgar

MONITOR-MAY.21

At the Pops Tonight

Military Polonaise .... Chopin
Overture to "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Dornröschen" ...... Chaikovsky
Fantasia, "Carmen" .... Bizet
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
Final Scene from "Tristan and Isolde" .... Wagner
Waltz, No. 15 .... Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "España" .... Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyrs .... Wagner
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar

Conductor: A. Jacchia.

TRANS. MAY 21

TONIGHT'S POPS

The Pops Symphony orchestra, under Agide Jacchia, will be heard in the following program at Symphony hall tonight:

Hungarian March, Berlioz; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Liebesfroud, Kreisler; Fantasia, "L'Oracolo," Leoni; Finale of "Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakov; Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin," Wagner; Valse Triste, Sibelius; Overture Solennelle, Tchiakovsky; Selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; "Eili, Eili," Arranged by Agide Jacchia; Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa.

FROM MAY 20 1923

NEW YORK CITY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra started duly its thirty-eighth season of "pop" concerts. Mr. Jacchia is to conduct, as in recent seasons, but was prevented by illness from appearing at the first concert. So Jacques Hoffmann, concert master in the "pop" series, conducted. A writer in The Boston Herald recalls that it was in "the merry Summers of the late '80s and early '90s that the 'Pops' were at their merriest. In the old Music Hall, for instance, there was sawdust on the floor, just enough to give fitting atmosphere; on the stage a band of musicians far smaller than the impressive near threescore of today, and at the tables nightly groups of many ages, but all athirst for sprightly tunes, properly played, and alike athirst for such honest news as were on [illegible] and there were many. Yet it was not merely a students' rendezvous. The musically elect and the socially elect were there as well. Modes have changed, restrictions have increased, but the 'Pops,' entering last night on their thirty-eighth year, have never lost their vogue. The programs have become yearly more elaborate, the number of musicians augmented."

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Entrance of the Boyards ..... Halvorsen
Overture, "L'Italiana in Algeri" .. Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" .. Glazounov
Songs by Simmons Glee Club
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Hindu Song, "Sadko" .. Rimsky-Korsakov
March of the Toys .... Herbert
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly" .. Puccini
Selection, "The Yankee Princess," Kalman
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" .... Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet

ADVTSR-MAY.22

Simmons at Pops Tonight

Simmons College will celebrate at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight. This concert, which is open to the public, will have the following programme:

Entrance of the Boyards ...... Halvorsen
Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri" . Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" .... Glazounov
Songs by Simmons Glee Club.
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Hindu Song from "Sadko" .. Rimsky-Korsakov
March of the Toys .... Herbert
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly" ...... Puccini
Selection, "The Yankee Princess" ... Kalman
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet

POST-MAY. 22.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

SIMMONS COLLEGE NIGHT

Entrance of the Boyards .. Halvorsen
Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri" Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" Glazounoff
Songs by Simmons Glee Club
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .. Liszt
Hindu Song from "Sadko" Rimsky-Korsakoff
March of the Toys .... Herbert
Fantasia, "Madam Butterfly" Puccini
Selection "The Yankee Princess" Kalman
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" .... Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet

MONITOR-MAY 22

At the Pops Tonight

"Simmons College Night"

Entrance of the Boyards ..... Halvorsen
Overture to the Opera, "L'Italiana in Algeri" .... Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" . Glazounov
Simmons Songs ....
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Hindu Song from "Sadko" ...... Rimsky-Korsakov
March of the Toys .... Herbert
Fantasia, "Madama Butterfly" .. Puccini
Selection, "The Yankee Princess" .. Kalmán
Waltz, "Blue Danube" ...... J. Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet

Conductor: A. Jacchia
Assisting: Simmons College Glee Club

TRANS-MAY. 22

Simmons Night at "Pops"

Simmons College will celebrate tonight at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall. The program will be as follows: "Entrance of the Boyards," Halvorsen; Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri," Rossini; Spanish Dance, "Panaderos," Glazounov; Songs by Simmons College Glee Club; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Hindu Song from "Sadko," Rimsky-Korsakov; "March of the Toys," Herbert; Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly," Puccini; selection, "The Yankee Princess," Kalman; waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," Strauss; Prelude to "Carmen," Bizet.

GLOBE-MAY. 22.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

March, "El Capitan" .... Sousa
Overture, "Masaniello" .... Auber
Waltz, "España" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Mefistofele" .... Boito
First Hungarian Rhapsody ..... Liszt
Largo .... Handel
"Children at Play" .. Van Westerhout
Introduction and Dance of Salomé Glazounoff
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste" .... Herbert
Intermezzo, Act III, "Jewels of the Madonna" .... Wolf-Ferrari
"American Patrol" .... Meacham

MONITOR-MAY. 23

At the Pops Tonight

March, "El Capitan" .... Sousa
Overture to "Masaniello" .... Auber
Waltz, "España" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Mefistofele" .... Boito
First Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Largo .... Handel
Children at Play ...... van Westerhout
Introduction and Dance of Salomé Glazunov
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste" ...... Herbert
Introduction to Act III. from "The Jewels of the Madonna" .. Wolf-Ferrari
American Patrol .... Meacham

Conductor, A. Jacchia

TRANS-MAY 23

At The Pops Tonight

"Amherst College Night"

Coronation March from "The Prophet" .... Meyerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a Dit" .... Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni
Amherst College Songs.
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" ... Chaikovsky
Indian Summer .... Herbert
Overture to "Tannhäuser" ..... Wagner
Amherst College Songs.
Selection, "Apple Blossoms," Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "Blue Danube" ...... J. Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS-MAY. 24

"Pops" Program for Tonight

AMHERST COLLEGE NIGHT

Coronation March from "The Prophet" .... Meyerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit" .. Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
College Songs
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" Tschaikowsky
"Indian Summer, an American Idyll" Herbert
Overture to "Tannhäuser" ... Wagner
College Songs
Selections, "Apple Blossoms" Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" .... Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance ...... Brahms

MAY.24. MONITOR

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

College songs will be added to the Pops programme in Symphony Hall tonight, at which Amherst College will be represented. This concert is open to the public, however. The numbers follow:

Coronation March from "The Prophet" .... Mayerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit" .... Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" ... Mascagni
College Songs.
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" ...... Tchaikovsky
Indian Summer, An American Idyll .. Herbert
Overture to "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
College Songs.
Selection, "Apple Blossoms" ... Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" ... Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

POST-MAY. 24.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

College songs will be added to the Pops program in Symphony hall tonight, at which Amherst College will be represented. This concert is open to the public, however. The numbers follow:

Coronation March from "The Prophet" .. Mayerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit" .... Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
College Songs ....
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tchaikovsky
"Indian Summer, An American Idyll" .. Herbert
Overture to "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
College Songs ....
Selection, "Apple Blossoms" ... Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" . Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

HERALD-MAY 24-

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

College songs will be added to the Pops' program in Symphony Hall tonight, with Amherst represented. The numbers follow:—

Coronation March, "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" ..... Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
College Songs.
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .. Tchaikovsky
Indian Summer, Idyll .... Herbert
Overture, "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
College Songs.
Selection, "Apple Blossoms" Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

ADVTSR-MAY. 24.

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

The Pops Symphony Orchestra, under Agide Jacchia, will be heard in the following programme at Symphony Hall tonight:

Hungarian March .... Berlioz
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo" .... Leoni
Finale of "Scheherazade" .. Rimsky-Korsakov
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Valse Triste .... Sibelius
Overture Solennelle, "1812" ... Tschaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" ...... Herbert
"Eili, Eili" ..... Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa

POST-MAY. 25.

TONIGHT'S POPS

The Pops Symphony Orchestra, under Agide Jacchia, will be heard in the following program at Symphony hall tonight:

Hungarian March .... Berlioz
Overture to "William Tell" ...... Rossini
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo" .... Leoni
Finale of Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Valse Triste .... Sibelius
Overture Solennelle, "1812" .. Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .... Herbert
"Eili, Eili" .. Arranged by Agida Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa

HERALD-MAY. 25.

TONIGHT'S POPS PROGRAM

Hungarian March .... Berlioz
Overture, "William Tell" .... Rossini
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo" .... Leoni
Finale, "Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov
Procession, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Valse Triste .... Sibelius
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" ... Herbert
"Eili, Eili" .. Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa

ADVTSR-MAY. 25

No concert on Sunday evening alters the familiar course of The Pops at Symphony Hall next week. Not until Sunday evening, May 27, will the second befall—no doubt to be thronged as was the first. By clear proof of that occasion no hampering "verbotens," State-imposed, may lessen the zest of the public for pleasure on the first day of the week. Another change in routine and far slighter frequenters of the concerts have also noticed. They now begin at 8.15 and end about 10.45, since orchestra, conductor and hearers all are content with two and a half hours of music through a programme invariably multiplied by extra pieces.

Mr. Jacchia—almost needless to say—is conducting again in familiar form to familiar plaudits. As usual he dots his programmes with fresh or exceptional pieces—on Monday, the closing scene from Wagner's "Tristan"; on Tuesday, Rossini's Overture to his light opera, "L'Italiana in Algeri"; on Wednesday, Glazunov's "Dance of Salome"; on Thursday, Delibes's seldom heard overture to his opéra-comique, "Le Roi l' a Dit"; on Saturday, Goldmark's overture, "Sakountala." The second Sunday concert will bring a programme drawn wholly from Wagner's operas—"Lohengrin," "Tannhäuser," "Die Meistersinger," "Die Walküre," "Tristan," "Parsifal." On Tuesday and Thursday evenings songs of Simmons and Amherst College respectively will diversify the programme.

At the Pops Tonight

March from "Aida"..............Verdi
Overture to "Figaro's Wedding".Mozart
Waltz, "The Skaters"......Waldteufel
Fantasia "Lohengrin".........Wagner
Danse Macabre.............Saint-Saëns
Largo from the Symphony, "From the New World"............Dvořák
Minuet ....Boccherini
Carnival in Paris............Svendsen
Two Indian Dances.............Skilton
Spring Song..................Mendelssohn
Bacchanal from "Philemon and Baucis" Gounod

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS - MAY 19

Pop Concerts to Offer Special Programs for College Nights

The Pop concerts in Symphony hall, which are about to enter their third week, are having, under the leadership of Agide Jacchia, what will be a record season in every way. There will be numerous points of interest in the programs of next week, including Amherst night, with college songs, on Thursday, May 24, the second Sunday concert with an all-Wagner program on May 27, and Harvard night, with numbers by the Harvard Glee Club, on May 28. The programs of the coming week follow:

MONDAY

Military Polonaise.......................Chopin
Overture, "Oberon"........................Weber
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"...........Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Carmen"...........................Bizet
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" ....Mascagni
Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
Waltz, No. 15................Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "Espana"........................Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyries.....................Wagner
Ave Maria...............................Bach-Gounod
(Solo violin, harp, strings and organ.)
Pomp and Circumstance.......................Elgar

TUESDAY

(Simmons College night.)

Entrance of the Boyards.............Halvorsen
Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri"....Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos"..........Glazonov
(a) Marching Song..............Emma Burchenal
(b) Here's to Simmons............Ruth Scully
(c) Stand by Simmons............Marion Fitch
Second Hungarian Rhapsody..................Liszt
Hindu Song from 'Sadko"....Rimsky-Korsakov
March of the Toys..........................Herbert
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"..........Puccini
Selection, "The Yankee Princess".....Kalman
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen"..............................Bizet

WEDNESDAY

March, "El Capitan".............................Sousa
Overture, "Massaniello"........................Auber
Waltz, "Espana"...........................Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Mefistofele"............................Boito
First Hungarian Rhapsody.......................Liszt
Largo ....Handel
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Children at Play..................van Westerhout
Introduction and Dance of Salome..Glazounov
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"...............Herbert
Intermezzo, Act III, "The Jewels of the Madonna" ....Wolf-Ferrari
American Patrol..............................Meacham

THURSDAY

(Amherst College night.)

Coronation March from "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit"..........Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana"....Muscagni
College Songs
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"........Tchaikovsky
"Indian Summer," An American Idyll.Herbert
Overture to "Tannhauser"................Wagner
College Songs
Selection, "Apple Blossoms"....Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance......................Brahms

FRIDAY

Hungarian March..............................Berlioz
Overture to "William Tell"...............Rossini
Liebesfreud ....Kreisler
Fantasia, "L' Oracolo"..........................Leoni
Finale of "Scheherazade"...Rimsky-Korsakov
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Valse Triste..Sibelius
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"......Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"............Herbert
"Elli, Elli"................Arr. by Agide Jacchia
"Stars and Stripes Forever"..................Sousa

SATURDAY

March, "Lorraine"...................................Ganne
Overture to "Sakuntala"..................Goldmark
Waltz, "The Sirens"........................Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto".................................Verdi
Marche Slave................................Tchaikovsky
Violin Solo (Jubius Theodorowicz)
Gavotte, "Camellia"...........................Jacchia
Roumanian Rhapsody..........................Enesco
Suite from "Carmen"................................Bizet
"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"..........Jessel
Dance of the Hours........................Ponchielli

SUNDAY

(Wagner program.)

Rienzi Overture.
Tannhaeuser Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act I.
Tristan and Isolde—"Love-Death," Act III.
Lohengrin—Fantasia.
The Mastersingers of Nuremberg—Prelude.
Parsifal—Entrance of the Knights Into the Temple of the Grail, Act I.
Siegfried—"Forest Murmurs," Act II.
The Valkyrie—Magic Fire Music, Act III.

TRAN. MAY 19.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Triumphal March from "Aida," Verdi
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ....Mozart
Waltz, "The Skaters".......Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Danse Macabre ....Saint-Saëns
Largo from the "New World" Symphony ....Dvořák
Minuet ....Boccherini
Carnival in Paris..............Svendsen
Two Indian Dances ....Skilton
Spring Song ....Mendelssohn
Bacchanale from "Philémon et Baucis" ....Gounod

MONITOR-MAY 19.

POPS PROGRAM

The following numbers will be played at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Triumphal March from "Aida," Verdi; overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Mozart; waltz, "The Skaters," Waldteufel; fantasia, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Danse Macabre, Saint-Saens; largo from the "New World" Symphony, Dvorak; Minuet, Boccherini; Carnival in Paris, Svandeen; Two Indian Dances, (a) Deer Dance, (b) War Dance, Skilton; Spring Song, Mendelssohn; Bacchanale from "Philemon et Baucis," Gounod.

TELE - MAY. 19 -

THIRD WEEK OF POPS

The Pops Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Agide Jacchia, will open its third week tomorrow.

On Sunday, May 27, the second Sunday evening Pop Concert will be given, with an all-Wagner programme, featuring excerpts from the "Ring." On Monday, May 28, will come Harvard night, with numbers by the Harvard Glee Club.

POST - MAY. 20.

Third Week of "Pops" Offers Good Music

The Pops Symphony Orchestra, the performances of which are so fine under the leadership of their conductor, Agide Jacchia, will open their third week tomorrow.

These concerts at Symphony Hall, which comprise the sole opportunity to hear good music at this time of year in Boston, will have numerous points of interest during the coming week.

Monday there will be played Chabrier's "Espana" and numbers from Wagner's "Tristan" and "The Valkyries," on Tuesday Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody, on Wednesday his first, and also Handel's Largo and Glazounov's "Dance of Salome."

Thursday will be Amherst College Night, with the addition of college songs which will be of interest to the general public. Friday the finale of "Scheherazade," the "William Tell" overture and "Eili, Eili," will be played, and on Saturday the "Sakuntala" overture and the "Roumanian Rhapsody."

Sunday, May 27, the second Sunday evening pop concert, will be given with an all-Wagner program featuring excerpts from the "Ring." Monday, May 28, will come Harvard Night, with numbers by the Harvard Glee Club.

Music Notes and Comment

The Pops Sunday night concert last week was so great a success, with no less than 1300 admissions and all the reserved seats sold, that it is a pity the desire of the players in the orchestra for an occasional evening off prevents Sunday pops being offered every week during the season. There is no concert tonight. Would not it be better to give the players some other night, such as Monday or Tuesday off, instead of Sunday?

GLOBE - MAY. 20.

POP CONCERTS IN THIRD WEEK.

The Pops open their third week tomorrow night with Chabrier's "Espana" and numbers from Wagner's "Tristan" and "The Valkyrie" as features. Thursday will be Amherst College night, with college songs added to the regular orchestral program directed by Agide Jacchia. Next Sunday night, the second Sunday evening Pop Concert will be given, with an All-Wagner program, featuring excerpts from the "Ring." On Monday, May 28, will come Harvard Night with Glee Club numbers.

ADVTSR - MAY 20.

POP CONCERT

The programme for the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight follows:

Military Polonaise .... Chopin
Overture, "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Dornroeschen .... Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Carmen" .... Bizet
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
Waltz, No. 15............ Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "Espana" .... Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyries .... Wagner
Ave Maria (Solo violin, harp, organ and strings) .... Bach-Gounod
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar

POST - MAY. 21.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Military Polonaise ....Chopin
Overture, "Oberon"..................Weber
Waltz, "Dornroeschen"....Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Carmen" ....Bizet
Selection from "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Love-Death, "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
Waltz, No. 15.........Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "Espana"..............Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyries..............Wagner
Ave Maria.......................Bach-Gounod
Pomp and Circumstance ....Elgar

ADVTSR - MAY. 21.

POP CONCERT

The program for the Pop Concert in Symphony hall tonight follows:

1—Military Polonaise.....................Chopin
2—Overture, "Oberon"....................Weber
3—Waltz, "Dornroeschen"........Tchaikovsky
4—Fantasia, "Carmen"......................Bizet
5—Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana," ....Mascagni
6—Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
7—Waltz, No. 15...........Brahms-Gericke
8—Rhapsody, "Espana"................Chabrier
9—Ride of the Valkyries..............Wagner
10—Ave Maria (solo violin, harp, organ and strings) ....Bach-Gounod
11—Pomp and Cidcumstance ....Elgar

HERALD - MAY. 21.

POP CONCERT

The program for the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight follows:

"Military Polonaise," Chopin; overture, "Oberon," Weber; waltz, "Dornroeschen," Tchaikovsky; fantasia "Carmen," Bizet; prelude from Siciliana from "Cavalleria usticana," Mascagni; "Love-Death" from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; Waltz No. 15, Brahms-Gericke; rhapsody, "Espana," Chabrier; "Ride of the Valkyrie," Wagner; "Ave Maria" (solo violin, harp, organ and strings), Bach-Gounod; "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar.

TELE - MAY - 21

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Military Polonaise ....Chopin
Overture, "Oberon"...........Weber
Waltz, "Dornroeschen" Tschaikowsky
Fantasia, "Carmen"...........Bizet
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana".........Mascagni
Love-Death from "Tristan und Isolde" ....Wagner
Waltz, No. 15 ....Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "España".......Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyries........Wagner
Ave Maria ....Bach-Gounod
"Pomp and Circumstance".....Elgar

MONITOR - MAY. 21

At the Pops Tonight

Military Polonaise..............Chopin
Overture to "Oberon"..........Weber
Waltz, "Dornröschen"......Chaikovsky
Fantasia, "Carmen"..............Bizet
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" ....Mascagni
Final Scene from "Tristan and Isolde" ....Wagner
Waltz, No. 15........Brahms-Gericke
Rhapsody, "España".........Chabrier
Ride of the Valkyrs...........Wagner
Ave Maria ....Bach-Gounod
March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar

Conductor: A. Jacchia.

TRANS. MAY 21

TONIGHT'S POPS

The Pops Symphony orchestra, under Agide Jacchia, will be heard in the following program at Symphony hall tonight:

Hungarian March, Berlioz; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Liebesfroud, Kreisler; Fantasia, "L'Oracolo," Leoni; Finale of "Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakov; Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin," Wagner; Valse Triste, Sibelius; Overture Solennelle, Tchiakovsky; Selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; "Eili, Eili," Arranged by Agide Jacchia; Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa.

FROM MAY 20 1923

NEW YORK CITY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra started duly its thirty-eighth season of "pop" concerts. Mr. Jacchia is to conduct, as in recent seasons, but was prevented by illness from appearing at the first concert. So Jacques Hoffmann, concert master in the "pop" series, conducted. A writer in The Boston Herald recalls that it was in "the merry Summers of the late '80s and early '90s that the 'Pops' were at their merriest. In the old Music Hall, for instance, there was sawdust on the floor, just enough to give fitting atmosphere; on the stage a band of musicians far smaller than the impressive near threescore of today, and at the tables nightly groups of many ages, but all athirst for sprightly tunes, properly played, and alike athirst for such honest brews as were on [illegible] and there were many. Yet it was not merely a students' rendezvous. The musically elect and the socially elect were there as well. Modes have changed, restrictions have increased, but the 'Pops,' entering last night on their thirty-eighth year, have never lost their vogue. The programs have become yearly more elaborate, the number of musicians augmented."

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Entrance of the Boyards......Halvorsen
Overture, "L'Italiana in Algeri"..Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos"..Glazounov
Songs by Simmons Glee Club
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.......Liszt
Hindu Song, "Sadko"..Rimsky-Korsakov
March of the Toys.............Herbert
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"...Puccini
Selection, "The Yankee Princess," Kalman
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" ....Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen"...............Bizst

ADVTSR - MAY. 22

[106]

Simmons at Pops Tonight

Simmons College will celebrate at the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight. This concert, which is open to the public, will have the following programme:

Entrance of the Boyards .... Halvorsen
Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri"..Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" ....Glazounov
Songs by Simmons Glee Club.
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ....Liszt
Hindu Song from "Sadko"..Rimsky-Korsakov
March of the Toys ....Herbert
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly".......Puccini
Selection, "The Yankee Princess"....Kalman
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet

POST - MAY. 22.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

SIMMONS COLLEGE NIGHT

Entrance of the Boyards..Halvorsen
Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri" Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" Glazounoff
Songs by Simmons Glee Club
Second Hungarian Rhapsody..Liszt
Hindu Song from "Sadko" Rimsky-Korsakoff
March of the Toys.............Herbert
Fantasia, "Madam Butterfly" Puccini
Selection "The Yankee Princess" Kalman
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"..................Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen" ....Bizet

MONITOR - MAY 22

At the Pops Tonight

"Simmons College Night"

Entrance of the Boyards.....Halvorsen
Overture to the Opera, "L'Italiana in Algeri"...................Rossini
Spanish Dance, "Pañaderos".Glazounov
Simmons Songs................
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.......Liszt
Hindu Song from "Sadko"...... Rimsky-Korsakov
March of the Toys.............Herbert
Fantasia, "Madama Butterfly"..Puccini
Selection, "The Yankee Princess".. Kalmán
Waltz, "Blue Danube"......J. Strauss
Prelude to "Carmen"............Bizet

Conductor: A. Jacchia
Assisting: Simmons College Glee Club

TRANS - MAY. 22

Simmons Night at "Pops"

Simmons College will celebrate tonight at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall. The program will be as follows: "Entrance of the Boyards," Halvorsen; Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri," Rossini; Spanish Dance, "Panaderos," Glazounov; Songs by Simmons College Glee Club; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Hindu Song from "Sadko," Rimsky-Korsakov; "March of the Toys," Herbert; Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly," Puccini; selection, "The Yankee Princess," Kalman; waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," Strauss; Prelude to "Carmen," Bizet.

GLOBE - MAY. 22.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

March, "El Capitan"...........Sousa
Overture, "Masaniello"........Auber
Waltz, "España".........Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Mefistofele".........Boito
First Hungarian Rhapsody.....Liszt
Largo ....Handel
"Children at Play"..Van Westerhout
Introduction and Dance of Salomé Glazounoff
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"....Herbert
Intermezzo, Act III, "Jewels of the Madonna" ....Wolf-Ferrari
"American Patrol" ....Meacham

MONITOR - MAY. 23

At the Pops Tonight

March, "El Capitan"............Sousa
Overture to "Masaniello"........Auber
Waltz, "España"..........Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Mefistofele"...........Boito
First Hungarian Rhapsody........Liszt
Largo ....Handel
Children at Play......van Westerhout
Introduction and Dance of Salomé Glazunov
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"......Herbert
Introduction to Act III. from "The Jewels of the Madonna"..Wolf-Ferrari
American Patrol ....Meacham

Conductor, A. Jacchia

TRANS - MAY 23 -

At The Pops Tonight

"Amherst College Night"

Coronation March from "The Prophet"...............Meyerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a Dit"....Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni
Amherst College Songs.
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"...Chaikovsky
Indian Summer...................Herbert
Overture to "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Amherst College Songs.
Selection, "Apple Blossoms," Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "Blue Danube".......J. Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance..........Brahms

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS - MAY. 24.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

AMHERST COLLEGE NIGHT

Coronation March from "The Prophet" ....Meyerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit"..Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
College Songs
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" Tschaikowsky
"Indian Summer, an American Idyll" Herbert
Overture to "Tannhäuser"...Wagner
College Songs
Selections, "Apple Blossoms" Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" ....Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance.......Brahms

MAY. 24. MONITOR

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

College songs will be added to the Pops programme in Symphony Hall tonight, at which Amherst College will be represented. This concert is open to the public, however The numbers follow:

Coronation March from "The Prophet"... Mayerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit".........Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana"...Mascagni
College Songs.
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker".......Tchaikovsky
Indian Summer, An American Idyll...Herbert
Overture to "Tannhauser"...........Wagner
College Songs.
Selection, "Apple Blossoms"...Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"... Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance..............Brahms

POST - MAY. 24.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

College songs will be added to the Pops program in Symphony hall tonight, at which Amherst College will be represented. This concert is open to the public, however. The numbers follow:

Coronation March from "The Prophet".. Mayerbeer
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit".........Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana".......Mascagni
College Songs...................................
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"........Tchaikovsky
"Indian Summer, An American Idyll"..Herbert
Overture to "Tannhauser"...........Wagner
College Songs...................................
Selection, "Apple Blossoms"....Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube".Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance...............Brahms

HERALD - MAY 24.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

College songs will be added to the Pops' program in Symphony Hall tonight, with Amherst represented. The numbers follow:—

Coronation March, "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit".....Delibes
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
College Songs.
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"..Tchaikovsky
Indian Summer, Idyll.............Herbert
Overture, "Tannhauser"..........Wagner
College Songs.
Selection, "Apple Blossoms" Kreisler-Jacobi
Waltz, "Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss
Sixth Hungarian Dance.........Brahms

ADVTSR - MAY. 24

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

The Pops Symphony Orchestra, under Agide Jacchia, will be heard in the following programme at Symphony Hall tonight:

Hungarian March .... Berlioz
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo" .... Leoni
Finale of "Scheherazade" .. Rimsky-Korsakov
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Valse Triste .... Sibelius
Overture Solennelle, "1812" ...Tschaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" ...... Herbert
"Eili, Eili" .....Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever ....Sousa

POST - MAY. 25.

TONIGHT'S POPS

The Pops Symphony Orchestra, under Agide Jacchia, will be heard in the following program at Symphony hall tonight:

Hungarian March.....................Berlioz
Overture to "William Tell".......Rossini
Liebesfreud ....Kreisler
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"..................Leoni
Finale of Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov
Procession to the Cathedral from "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Valse Triste.........................Sibelius
Overture Solennelle, "1812"...Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms".....Herbert
"Eili, Eili"..Arranged by Agida Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever..............Sousa

HERALD - MAY. 25.

TONIGHT'S POPS PROGRAM

Hungarian March...............Berlioz
Overture, "William Tell"........Rossini
Liebesfreud ....Kreisler
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"............Leoni
Finale, "Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov
Procession, "Lohengrin".........Wagner
Valse Triste ....Sibelius
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"...Herbert
"Eili, Eili"..Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever........Sousa

ADVTSR - MAY. 25

At the Pops Tonight

March, "Lorraine" .... Ganne
Overture to "Sakuntala" ..... Goldmark
Waltz, "The Sirens" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto" .... Verdi
Slavic March .... Chaikovsky
Solo for Violin.
Gavotte, "Camellia" .... Jacchia
Roumanian Rhapsody .... Enesco
Suite from "Carmen" .... Bizet
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers .... Jessel
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli

Conductor: A. Jacchia
Soloist: Julius Theodorowicz

PROGRESS OF THE POPS

Changing Audiences Bring Changing Ways—Still and Serious Listening—Wagner for Sunday—Programmes of Next Week

THROUGH another week, from tomorrow over next Saturday, go The Pops a wonted way. True, they have lost not a little of old informality, freedom and gaiety. True also, an essentially different public from that within easy memory, now frequents them. Since, however, the newcomers make the main body of the audience and since they prefer to listen to the music as closely and undisturbedly as at any concert of the winter, they have clear right to take their pleasure in their own way. Five years ago The Pops were agreeable place for evening lounging. To smoke, to drink, to chatter was as essential part of pleasure as the music. Other days, other ways—until now the preponderant public merely goes to hear a concert of light pieces and heavy as well played as Mr. Jacchia and his orchestra can compass. Clearer than ever this spring runs such change, particularly at the concerts of Sunday evening—smokeless, drinkless, broken by only one intermission. Fragments from Wagner's operas will fill the programme tomorrow, viz.:

Overture to "Rienzi,"
Venusberg Music from "Tannhäuser,"
Closing Scene from "Tristan,"
Fantasia from "Lohengrin,"
Prelude to "The Mastersingers,"
Procession of the Grail Knights from "Parsifal,"
Forest Murmurs from "Siegfried,"
Fire-Music from "The Valkyr."

In the week to come, Monday brings "Harvard Night," with Dr. Davison and the Glee Club assisting in accompanied and unaccompanied numbers from its recent concerts. Two from Holst and Converse add a brass choir to the voices. On Tuesday, Mr. Jacchia takes over from the Symphony Concerts eighteenth-century dances by Grétry. On Wednesday, he sets Smetana's Overture, "The Bartered Bride," snapping and whirling. On Thursday, a Rhapsody, "Midsummer," by the Swedish composer, Alfven, will be played for the first time hereabouts. Friday brings a resurrection of the overture to Verdi's forgotten opera, "Joan of Arc," while Saturday assembles the usual miscellany. More wary than last year seems Mr. Jacchia of too frequent repetitions.

TRANS-MAY. 26.

POP CONCERT

The program for the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight follows:

March, "Lorraine," Ganne; Overture to "Sakuntala," Goldmark; Waltz, "The Sirens," Waldteufel; Fantasia, "Rigoletto," Verdi; March Slave, Tchaikovsky; violin solo (Julius Theodorovicz); Gavotte, "Camellia," Jacchia; Roumanian Rhapsody, Enesco; Suite from "Carmen," Bizet; Parade of the Wooden Soldiers, Jessel; Dance of the Hours, Ponchielli.

The second Sunday concert of the Pops season will take place in Symphony hall tomorrow evening. The program, consisting entirely of Wagner's music, follows:

Rienzi Overture; Tannhauser Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act 1; Tristan and Isolde, "Love-Death," Act 3; Lohengrin Fantasia; The Maestersingers of Nuremberg, Prelude; Parsifal, Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail, Act 1; Siegfried, "Forest Murmurs," Act 2; The Valkyrie, Magic Fire Music, Act 3.

TELE-MAY. 26.

Week-End "Pops" Program

TONIGHT

March, "Lorraine" .... Ganne
Overture to "Sakuntala" .. Goldmark
Waltz, "The Sirens" ...... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto" .... Verdi
March Slave .... Tschaikowsky
Violin Solo (Julius Theodorowicz)
Gavotte, "Camellia" .... Jacchia
Rumanian Rhapsody .... Enesco
Suite from "Carmen" .... Bizet
"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel
"Dance of the Hours" ..... Ponchielli

SUNDAY EVENING
Wagner Program

"Rienzi" Overture
"Tannhäuser," Bacchanale
"Tristan and Isolde," "Love-Death"
"Lohengrin" Fantasia
Prelude to "Meistersinger"
"Parsifal," Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail
"Siegfried," "Forest Murmurs"
"Walküre," Magic Fire Music

MONITOR-MAY. 26

WAGNER AT POPS

The second Sunday concert of the Pops season will take place in Symphony Hall tonight. The programme, consisting entirely of Wagner's music, follows:

Rienzi Overture.
Tannhauser Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act I.
Tristan and Isolde, "Love-Death," Act III.
Lohengrin Fantasia.
The Mastersingers of Nuremberg—Prelude.
Parsifal—Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail (Act I.)
Siegfried—"Forest Murmurs" (Act II.)
The Valkyrie—Magic Fire Music (Act III.)

POST-MAY. 27.

Wagner Program for Sunday Pops

The fourth week of the Pops season in Symphony hall opens tomorrow night with the second of the Sunday concerts and an all-Wagner program.

Monday will bring the annual Harvard night, with additional numbers by the Harvard Glee Club under Dr. Archibald T. Davison.

The all-Wagner program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

Rienzi .... Overture
Tannhauser—Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act I.
"Tristan and Isolde" ... "Love-Death," Act III
Lohengrin .... Fantasia
"The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" .... Prelude
Parsifal—"Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail," Act I.
Siegfried .... "Forest Murmurs," Act II
The Valkyrie .... "Magic Fire Music," Act III

TRAV. MAY 26

WAGNER PROGRAM AT POPS TONIGHT

The second Sunday concert of the Pops season will take place in Symphony Hall tonight. The program, consisting entirely of Wagner's music, follows:

Rienzi Overture.
Tannhauser Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act I.
Tristan and Isolde—"Love-Death," Act III.
The Mastersingers of Nuremberg—Prelude.
Parsifal—Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail (Act I.)
Siegfried—"Forest Murmurs" (Act II.)
The Valkyrie—Magic Fire Music (Act III.)

ADVTSR-MAY 27

WAGNER PROGRAM TONIGHT

The second of the new Sunday night Pops tonight offers a Wagner program with nothing from any other composer. It should prove an even more overwhelming popular success than was the recent Russian program. The management has been unable to get permission to sell refreshments Sunday nights, so that this evening's concert will be free from the interruptions caused some listeners by waitresses and the clinking of glasses.

It is perhaps a pity that much of the

It is perhaps a pity that muc hof the old informality is gone from these concerts. People can no longer make remarks to their table companions during the music without incurring stony stares from their neighbors. Everybody takes the music with extraordinary seriousness, and of course much of it is worth so taking. But the carefree, comfortable atmosphere of the European cafe or beer garden is gone from the Pops, if indeed it was ever there.

The floor has now become almost as solemn as the baloncies. But in New England we always seem to take our pleasures strenuously and soberly.

The rest of the week offers as usual many special features:

Tomorrow night will be the annual Harvard Night, with numbers by the Harvard Glee Club, Dr Achibald T. Davison, conductor. Tuesday's program will include the "Oberon" Overture, "Tosca" Fantasia, Prelude to "Tristan," Sixth Rhapsody of Liszt, a ballet suite of Gretry, and other numbers.

Wednesday a Memorial Day program will include, besides music appropriate to the day, the overtures to "The Bartered Bride" and "William Tell," also the Prelude to "Lohengrin," and "The Lost Chord" for solo trumpet.

Thursday, there may be mentioned among other numbers the march from "Tannhauser," "Vienna Blood" Waltz, "Othello," Fantasia, 1812" Overture, 'Carmen" Suite, etc.

Friday, June 1, will bring a flute solo by Arthur Brooke, the "Mastersingers" Prelude, the Finale of Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, "Mignon" overture; for Saturday, June 2, "Pomp and Circumstance," "Samson and Delilah" Fantasia, Bizet's First L'Arlesienne Suite, the Bach-Gounod Ave Maria, "Espana" Rhapsody, and other numbers.

GLOBE-MAY. 27.

WAGNER AT THE POPS

The fourth week of the Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall will open tonight with the second Sunday concert of the season and an All-Wagner program, while tomorrow will bring the annual Harvard Night, at which the Harvard Glee Club will assist.

The programs of the week, to be presented by Mr. Jacchia and his celebrated Pops Symphony Orchestra, follow:

TONIGHT—ALL-WAGNER PROGRAM

Rienzi .... Overture
Tannhaeuser—Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act I.
"Tristan and Isolde" ... "Love-Death," Act III
Lohengrin .... Fantasia
"The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" .... Prelude
Parsifal—"Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail," Act I.
Siegfried .... "Forest Murmurs," Act II
The Valkyrie .... "Magic Fire Music," Act III

MONDAY—HARVARD NIGHT

Coronation March .... Svendsen
Overture to "Orpheus" .... Offenbach
Fantasia, "La Boheme" .... Puccini
Harvard Glee Club with Orchestra (Dr. Davison, conductor)—
(a) A Dirge for Two Veterans .... Holst
(b) Laudate Dominum .... Converse, '93
Excerpts from "The Mastersingers," Act III .... Wagner
Introduction—
"Dance of the Apprentices."
"Homage to Hans Sachs."
"Hymn to the Sun" .... Rimsky-Korsakov
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Harvard Glee Club—
(a) "Fire, Fire, My Heart" .... Morley
(b) Russian Folksongs, "Song of the Lifeboat Men," "Fireflies," "At Father's Door."
(c) Bedouin Song .... Foote
Ballet Suite, "Coppelia" .... Delibes
Serenade .... Pierne
Cruiser Harvard .... Strube
"Fair Harvard."

TUESDAY

Military Polonaise .... Chopin
Overture to "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Sleeping Beauty" .... Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Tosca" .... Puccini
Prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner
Capriccio .... Scarlatti
(Arranged for strings by Jacchia.)
Impromptu (Op. 90, No. 2) ... Schubert-Jacchia
Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
From the Ballet "Cephale et Procris"—
(a) Tambourin, (b) Gigue ..... Gretry-Mettl
Intermezzo, "L'Amico Fritz" .... Mascagni
Slavonic Dance No. 1 .... Dvorak

MEMORIAL DAY, WEDNESDAY

Military March .... Saint-Saens
Overture to "The Bartered Bride" .... Snetana
Waltz, "Pomone" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor" ..... Donizetti
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Marche Miniature .... Tchaikovsky
"The Lost Chord" .... Sullivan
(Solo trumpet, Mr. Mager.)
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
American Military Fantasy .... Rollinson
"By the Waters of Minnetonka" ..... Lieurance
"Stars and Stripes Forever" .... Sousa

THURSDAY

March from "Tannhaeuser" .... Wagner
Overture to "La Gazza Ladra" .... Rossini
Waltz, "Vienna Blood" .... Strauss
Fantasia, "Othello" .... Verdi
Rhapsody, "Midsomarvaka" .... Alfven
Reve Angelique .... Rubinstein
Norwegian Dance .... Grieg
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" ..... Tchaikovsky
Suite from "Carmen," (a) Habanera, b) Toreador's Song, (c) Gypsy Dance . Bizet
Serenade, "The Millions of Harlequin" . Drigo
Third Slavonic Dance .... Dvorak

FRIDAY

"Entrance of the Gladiators" .... Fucik
Overture to "Jeanne d'Arc" .... Verdi
Waltz, "Tres Jolie" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet" .... Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers" .... Wagner
Flute Solo .... (Arthur Brooke)
Waltz, "Souvenir" .... Krogman
Finale, "Fourth Symphony" .... Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Mignon" .... Thomas
Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffmann" . Offenbach
March, "King Cotton" .... Sousa

SATURDAY

Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar
Overture, "Maxmilian Robespierre" ...... Litolff
Waltz from "Eugen Onegin" .... Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah" ... Saint-Saens
Suite No. 1 ("L'Arlesienne") (a) Prelude, (b) Carillon .... Bizet
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Prelude to Act III, "La Traviata" .... Verdi
"Ride of the Valkyries" .... Wagner
Rhapsody, "Espagna" .... Chabrier
... du Bal .... Gillet
... from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli

HERALD-MAY. 27.

HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS

The anual Harvard night at the Pops in Symphony hall will take place tonight, numbers to be added by the Harvard Glee club under Dr. Archiblad T. Davison. The program follows:

"Coronation March," Svendsen; overture to "Orpheus," Offenbach; fantasia, "La Boheme," Puccini; songs by Harvard Glee club with orchestra; excerpts from "The Meistersingers," Wagner; "Hymn to the Sun," Rimsky-Korsakov; Second Hungarian rhapsody, Liszt; songs by Harvard Glee club, Morley, Foote; ballet suite, "Coppellia," Delibea; "Serenade," Pierne; "Cruiser Harvard," Strube; "Fair Harvard."

TELE.-MAY 28.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

HARVARD NIGHT

"Coronation March" .... Svendsen
Overture to "Orpheus" ..... Offenbach
Fantasia, "La Bohème ...... Puccini
Songs by Harvard Glee Club With Orchestra
Excerpts from "Meistersinger" Wagner
Hymn to the Sun .. Rimsky-Korsakoff
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ... Liszt
Songs by Harvard Glee Club
Ballet Suite, "Coppélia" ...... Delibes
Serenade .... Pierné
"Cruiser Harvard" .... Strube
"Fair Harvard"

MONITOR-MAY. 28

HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS

The annual Harvard night at the Pops in Symphony Hall will take place tonight, numbers to be added by the Harvard Glee Club under Dr. Archibald T. Davison. The program follows:

Coronation March .... Svendsen
Overture to "Orpheus" .... Offenbach
Fantasia, "La Boheme" .... Puccini
Harvard Glee Club with Orchestra.
Songs by Holst and Converse.
Excerpts from "The Mastersingers" .... Wagner
Hymn to the Sun .... Rimsky-Korsakov
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Harvard Glee Club.
Fire, Fire, My Heart .... Morley
Russian Folk Songs, Song of the Lifeboat Men
Fireflies.
At Father's Door.
Bedouin Song .... Foote
Ballet Suite, "Copellia" .... Delibes
Serenade .... Pierne
Cruiser Harvard .... Strube
Fair Harvard.

HERALD-MAY. 28.

HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS

This is Harvard Night at the Pops, with numbers added by the Harvard Glee Club. The program follows:—

Coronation March .... Svendsen
Overture to "Orpheus" .... Offenbach
Harvard Glee Club with Orchestra.
Excerpts from "The Mastersingers" Wagner
Hymn to the Sun .... Rimsky-Korsakov
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Harvard Glee Club.
Bellet Suite, "Copellia" .... Delibes
Serenade .... Pierne
Cruiser Harvard .... Strube
FAIR HARVARD.

ADVTSR-MAY. 28

HUGE THRONG AT 'POPLESS' CONCERT

The edict of the state commissioner of public safety against smoking and eating at the Sunday Pop concerts again failed to keep a large audience from enjoying the Wagner program offered last night.

There apparently was no one ignorant of the public safety commissioner's regulation, as no one attempted to smoke. On the occasion of Boston's first Sunday night Popless and smokeless concert two weeks ago, a few, in ignorance of the ukase, started to smoke. The ushers were alert in the interest of public safety and warned the violators. But last night the safety of thee commonwealth was not threatened once. Instead, during the intermission the real smokers crowded the lobbies and puffed furiously to make up for lost time and to strengthen themselves for privations through the second part of the program.

HERALD-MAY. 28

[107]

At The Pops Tonight

"Harvard Night"

Coronation March .... Svendsen
Overture to "Orpheus" ...... Offenbach
Fantasia, "La Bohème" .... Puccini
Choral Numbers:
Dirge for Veterans .... Holst
Laudate Dominum .... Converse
Introduction, Apprentices' Dance, Homage to Sachs from "Die Meistersinger" .... Wagner
Hymn to the Sun .... Rimsky-Korsakov
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ...... Liszt
Choral Numbers:
Fire, Fire, My Heart .... Morley
Folk-Songs .... Russian
Bedouin Love-Song .... Foote
Suite from the Ballet, "Coppélia" Delibes
Serenade .... Pierné
March, "Cruiser Harvard .... Strube

Conductors:
A. Jacchia A. T. Davison
Assisting:
The Harvard Glee Club

TRANS. MAY. 28.

"Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

Military Polonaise .... Chopin
Overture to "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Sleeping Beauty," Tschaikowsky
Fantasia, "Tosca" .... Puccini
Prelude to "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner
Capriccio .... Scarlatti
Impromptu (Op. 90, No. 2), Schubert-Jacchia
Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody ..... Liszt
From the Ballet, "Cephale et Procris" .... Gretry-Mottl
a. Tambourin b. Gigue
Intermezzo, "L'Amico Fritz" Mascagni
Slavonic Dance No. 1 .... Dvorak

TOMORROW NIGHT

Military March .... Saint-Saëns
Overture to "The Bartered Bride" Smetana
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor," Donizetti
The Bakule Chorus, Frantisek Bakule, Director
Prelude to "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
"Marche Miniature" ... Tschaikowsky
"The Lost Chord" .... Sullivan
(Solo Trumpet—Georges Mager)
Overture to "William Tell" .. Rossini
American Military Fantasy, Rollinson
"By the Waters of Minnetonka," Lieurance
"Stars and Stripes Forever" ... Sousa

MONITOR-MAY. 29.

POPS PROGRAM

The following program will be given by Conductor Agide Jacchia at the Pops in Symphony hall tonight:

Military Polonaise, Chopin; overture to "Oberon," Weber; waltz, "Sleeping Beauty," Tchaikovsky; fantasia, "Tosca," Puccini; prelude to "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; Capriccio, Scarlatti; Impromptu (Op. 90, No. 2), Schubert-Jacchia; Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; from the ballet "Cephale et Procris," a, Tambourin, b, Gigue, Gretry-Mottl; intermezzo, "L'Amico Fritz," Mascagni; Slavonic Dance No. 1, Dvorak.

TELE MAY. 29.

At the Pops Tonight

Military Polonaise .... Chopin
Overture to "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Sleeping Beauty" ... Chaikovsky
Fantasia, "Tosca" .... Puccini
Prelude to "Tristan and Isolde". Wagner
Capriccio for Strings ... Scarlatti-Jacchia
Impromptu (Op. 90, No. 2) .... Schubert-Jacchia
Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Two Dances from the Ballet, "Cephalus and Procris" .... Grétry-Mottl
Intermezzo, "L'Amico Fritz" .. Mascagni
Slavonic Dance No. 1 .... Dvo

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. MAY. 29.

BAKULE CHORUS AT THE POPS TONIGHT

The celebrated Bakule Chorus of Czecho-Slovakian children will appear at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall tonight. The program in full follows:

Military March .... Saint-Saens
Overture, "The Bartered Bride" .. Smetana
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor". Donizetti
Bakule Chorus, Frantisec Bakule, director.
Prelude, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Marche Miniature .... Tchaikovsky
"The Lost Chord" .... Sullivan
(Solo trumpet—Georges Mager)
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
American Military Fantasy .... Rollinson
"By the Waters of Minnetouka" .. Lieurance
"Stars and Stripes Forever" .... Sousa

ADVTSR-MAY. 30

BAKULE CHORUS AT POPS

The celebrated Bakule chorus of Czecho-Slovakian children will add numbers to the Pops program in Symphony hall tonight. Their singing will consist of folk songs of their own country and American songs appropriate to Memorial day. This will be their farewell Boston appearance. The program follows:

Military march .... Saint-Saens
Overture to "The Bartered Bride" Smetana
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor" Donizetti
The Bakule Chorus, Frantisec Bakule, director.
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Marche Miniature .... Tchaikovsky
"The Lost Chord" .... Sullivan
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
American Military Fantasy ...... Rollinson
"By the Waters of Minnetonka" Lieurance
Stars and Stripes Forever, march. Sousa

HERALD. MAY 30

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

March, "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Overture, "La Gazza Ladra" .... Rossini
Waltz, "Vienna Blood" .... Strauss
Fantasia, "Othello" .... Verdi
Rhapsody, "Midsomarvaka" .... Alfven
Reve Angelique .... Rubinstein
Norwegian dance .... Grieg
Overture, "1812" .... Tchaikovsky
Suite from "Carmen" .... Bizet
Serenade, "Millions of Harlequin" ... Drigo
Third Slavonic dance .... Dvorak

ADVTSR. MAY 3

TONIGHT'S POP CONCERT

In Symphony hall tonight the following Pops program will be given:

March from "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Overture to "La Gazza Ladra" .... Rossini
Waltz, "Vienna Blood" .... Strauss
Fantasia, "Othello" .... Verdi
Rhapsody, "Midsomarvaka" .... Alfven
Reve Angelique .... Rubinstein
Norwegian Dance .... Grieg
Overture Solennelle, "1812" .... Tchaikovsky
Suite from "Carmen" .... Bizet
(a), Habanera, (b), Toreador's Song, (c), Gypsy Dance.
Serenade, "The Millions of Harlequin" .. Drigo

The Saxophone solo which is typical of the "Innocent" in the Suite No. 1 of incidental music to "L'Arlesienne," is usually played here by a clarinet, and the effect is thereby greatly lessened. Next Saturday night when the Suite will be performed at a "Pop" concert, the solo will be played on a saxophone by Mr. Laus, the excellent first bassoon of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

HERALD-MAY. 31

POP CONCERT

In Symphony hall tonight the following program will be given:

March from "Tannhauser," Wagner; Overture to "La Gazza Ladra," Rossini; Waltz, "Vienna Blood," Strauss; Fantasia, "Othello," Verdi; Rhapsody, "Midsomarvaka," Alfven; Reve Angelique, Rubinstein; Norwegian Dance, Greig; Overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; Suite from "Carmen," a Habanera, b. Toreador Song, c. Gypsy Dance, Bizet; Serenade, "The Millions of Harlequin," Drigo; Third Slavonic Dance, Dvorak.

TELE. MAY 31

At the Pops Tonight

March from "Tannhäuser" ..... Wagner
Overture to "La Gazza Ladra" .. Rossini
Waltz, "Vienna Blood" .... Strauss
Fantasia, "Othello" .... Verdi
Rhapsody, "Midsummer" .... Alfven
Angel-Dream .... Rubinstein
Norwegian Dance .... Grieg
Overture, "1812" .... Chaikovsky
Suite from "Carmen" .... Bizet
Serenade from "Harlequin's Millions" Drigo
Slavonic Dance, No. 3 .... Dvorák

Conductor: A. Jacchia

"Playing Fair"

TAKING into consideration the demands of the classics, it is apparent that Mr. Monteux has paid due tribute to the American composer. If every orchestra followed the lead of the Boston Symphony the lament that the native composer suffers from lack of opportunity would no longer be so loud in the land. The ten pieces of last winter may not be much to look for in a season, and they happened to include only one novelty. But in a list which displays a catholicity of taste, a broad cosmopolitan viewpoint, Mr. Monteux has shown that he appreciates the existence of the American composer, and has conceded him generous representation. [Musical America

TRANS-MAY 31

POPS PROGRAM

The following music will be played at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

"Entrance of the Gladiators," Fucik; overture to "Jeanne d'Arc," Verdi; waltz, "Tres Jolie," Waldteufel; fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet," Gounod; prelude to "The Meistersingers," Wagners; flute solo, "Woodland Stream," Metzger, Arthur Brooke; "Valse Souvenir," Krogmann; finale, "Fourth Symphony," Tchaikowsky; overture to "Mignon," Thomas; "Bacarolle" from "Tales of Hoffmann,' Offenbach; march, "King Cotton," Sousa.

TELE-JUNE 1.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Entrance of the Gladiators .... Fucik
Overture to "Jeanne d'Arc" .... Verdi
Waltz, "Très Jolie" ...... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliette" Gounod
Prelude to "Meistersinger" .. Wagner
Flute solo, "Woodland Stream" Metzger
(Arthur Brooke)
"Valse Souvenir" .... Krogmann
Finale, Fourth Symphony Tschaikowsky
Overture to "Mignon" ...... Thomas
Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffmann" Offenbach
March, "King Cotton" .... Sousa

MONITOR-JUNE 1.

At the Pops Tonight

March, "Lorraine" .... Ganne
Overture to "Sakuntala" .... Goldmark
Waltz, "The Sirens" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto" .... Verdi
Slavic March .... Chaikovsky
Solo for Violin.
Gavotte, "Camellia" .... Jacchia
Roumanian Rhapsody .... Enesco
Suite from "Carmen" .... Bizet
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers.... Jessel
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli

Conductor: A. Jacchia
Soloist: Julius Theodorowicz

PROGRESS OF THE POPS

Changing Audiences Bring Changing Ways—Still and Serious Listening—Wagner for Sunday—Programmes of Next Week

THROUGH another week, from tomorrow over next Saturday, go The Pops a wonted way. True, they have lost not a little of old informality, freedom and gaiety. True also, an essentially different public from that within easy memory, now frequents them. Since, however, the newcomers make the main body of the audience and since they prefer to listen to the music as closely and undisturbedly as at any concert of the winter, they have clear right to take their pleasure in their own way. Five years ago The Pops were agreeable place for evening lounging. To smoke, to drink, to chatter was as essential part of pleasure as the music. Other days, other ways—until now the preponderant public merely goes to hear a concert of light pieces and heavy as well played as Mr. Jacchia and his orchestra can compass. Clearer than ever this spring runs such change, particularly at the concerts of Sunday evening—smokeless, drinkless, broken by only one intermission. Fragments from Wagner's operas will fill the programme tomorrow, viz.:

Overture to "Rienzi."
Venusberg Music from "Tannhäuser."
Closing Scene from "Tristan,"
Fantasia from "Lohengrin."
Prelude to "The Mastersingers,"
Procession of the Grail Knights from "Parsifal,"
Forest Murmurs from "Siegfried,"
Fire-Music from "The Valkyr."

In the week to come, Monday brings "Harvard Night," with Dr. Davison and the Glee Club assisting in accompanied and unaccompanied numbers from its recent concerts. Two from Holst and Converse add a brass choir to the voices. On Tuesday, Mr. Jacchia takes over from the Symphony Concerts eighteenth-century dances by Grétry. On Wednesday, he sets Smetana's Overture, "The Bartered Bride," snapping and whirling. On Thursday, a Rhapsody, "Midsummer," by the Swedish composer, Alfven, will be played for the first time hereabouts. Friday brings a resurrection of the overture to Verdi's forgotten opera, "Joan of Arc," while Saturday assembles the usual miscellany. More wary than last year seems Mr. Jacchia of too frequent repetitions.

TRANS-MAY.26.

POP CONCERT

The program for the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight follows:

March, "Lorraine," Ganne; Overture to "Sakuntala," Goldmark; Waltz, "The Sirens," Waldteufel; Fantasia, "Rigoletto," Verdi; March Slave, Tchaikovsky; violin solo (Julius Theodorovicz); Gavotte, "Camellia," Jacchia; Roumanian Rhapsody, Enesco; Suite from "Carmen," Bizet; Parade of the Wooden Soldiers, Jessel; Dance of the Hours, Ponchielli.

The second Sunday concert of the Pops season will take place in Symphony hall tomorrow evening. The program, consisting entirely of Wagner's music, follows:

Rienzi Overture; Tannhauser Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act 1; Tristan and Isolde, "Love-Death," Act 3; Lohengrin Fantasia; The Maestersingers of Nuremberg, Prelude; Parsifal, Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail, Act 1; Siegfried, "Forest Murmurs," Act 2; The Valkyrie, Magic Fire Music, Act 3.

TELE-MAY.26.

Week-End "Pops" Program

TONIGHT

March, "Lorraine" .... Ganne
Overture to "Sakuntala".. Goldmark
Waltz, "The Sirens"...... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto"........ Verdi
March Slave........ Tschaikowsky
Violin Solo (Julius Theodorowicz)
Gavotte, "Camellia"........ Jacchia
Rumanian Rhapsody........ Enesco
Suite from "Carmen"........ Bizet
"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel
"Dance of the Hours"..... Ponchielli

SUNDAY EVENING
Wagner Program

"Rienzi" Overture
"Tannhäuser," Bacchanale
"Tristan and Isolde," "Love-Death"
"Lohengrin" Fantasia
Prelude to "Meistersinger"
"Parsifal," Entrance of the Knights Into the Temple of the Grail
"Siegfried," "Forest Murmurs"
"Walküre," Magic Fire Music

MONITOR-MAY.26

WAGNER AT POPS

The second Sunday concert of the Pops season will take place in Symphony Hall tonight. The programme, consisting entirely of Wagner's music, follows:

Rienzi Overture.
Tannhauser Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act I.
Tristan and Isolde, "Love-Death," Act III.
Lohengrin Fantasia.
The Mastersingers of Nuremberg—Prelude.
Parsifal—Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail (Act I.)
Siegfried—"Forest Murmurs" (Act II.)
The Valkyrie—Magic Fire Music (Act III.)

POST-MAY.27.

Wagner Program for Sunday Pops

The fourth week of the Pops season in Symphony hall opens tomorrow night with the second of the Sunday concerts and an all-Wagner program.

Monday will bring the annual Harvard night, with additional numbers by the Harvard Glee Club under Dr. Archibald T. Davison.

The all-Wagner program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

Rienzi .... Overture
Tannhauser—Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act I.
"Tristan and Isolde"..."Love-Death," Act III
Lohengrin .... Fantasia
"The Mastersingers of Nuremberg".... Prelude
Parsifal—"Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail." Act I.
Siegfried........ "Forest Murmurs," Act II
The Valkyrie...."Magic Fire Music," Act III

TRAV. MAY 26

WAGNER PROGRAM AT POPS TONIGHT

The second Sunday concert of the Pops season will take place in Symphony Hall tonight. The program, consisting entirely of Wagner's music, follows:

Rienzi Overture.
Tannhauser Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act I.
Tristan and Isolde—"Love-Death," Act III.
The Mastersingers of Nuremberg—Prelude.
Parsifal—Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail (Act I.)
Siegfried—"Forest Murmurs" (Act II.)
The Valkyrie—Magic Fire Music (Act III.)

ADVTSR-MAY 27.

WAGNER PROGRAM TONIGHT

The second of the new Sunday night Pops tonight offers a Wagner program with nothing from any other composer. It should prove an even more overwhelming popular success than was the recent Russian program. The management has been unable to get permission to sell refreshments Sunday nights, so that this evening's concert will be free from the interruptions caused some listeners by waitresses and the clinking of glasses.

It is perhaps a pity that much of the It is perhaps a pity that muc hof the old informality is gone from these concerts. People can no longer make remarks to their table companions during the music without incurring stony stares from their neighbors. Everybody takes the music with extraordinary seriousness, and of course much of it is worth so taking. But the carefree, comfortable atmosphere of the European cafe or beer garden is gone from the Pops, if indeed it was ever there.

The floor has now become almost as solemn as the baloncies. But in New England we always seem to take our pleasures strenuously and soberly.

The rest of the week offers as usual many special features:

Tomorrow night will be the annual Harvard Night, with numbers by the Harvard Glee Club, Dr Achibald T. Davison, conductor. Tuesday's program will include the "Oberon" Overture, "Tosca" Fantasia, Prelude to "Tristan," Sixth Rhapsody of Liszt, a ballet suite of Gretry, and other numbers.

Wednesday a Memorial Day program will include, besides music appropriate to the day, the overtures to "The Bartered Bride" and "William Tell," also the Prelude to "Lohengrin," and "The Lost Chord" for solo trumpet.

Thursday, there may be mentioned among other numbers the march from "Tannhauser," "Vienna Blood" Waltz, "Othello," Fantasia, 1812" Overture, 'Carmen" Suite, etc.

Friday, June 1, will bring a flute solo by Arthur Brooke, the "Mastersingers" Prelude, the Finale of Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, "Mignon" overture; for Saturday, June 2, "Pomp and Circumstance," "Samson and Delilah" Fantasia, Bizet's First L'Arlesienne Suite, the Bach-Gounod Ave Maria, "Espana" Rhapsody, and other numbers.

GLOBE-MAY.27.

WAGNER AT THE POPS

The fourth week of the Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall will open tonight with the second Sunday concert of the season and an All-Wagner program, while tomorrow will bring the annual Harvard Night, at which the Harvard Glee Club will assist.

The programs of the week, to be presented by Mr. Jacchia and his celebrated Pops Symphony Orchestra, follow:

TONIGHT—ALL-WAGNER PROGRAM

Rienzi .... Overture
Tannhaeuser—Bacchanale, "The Hill of Venus," Act I.
"Tristan and Isolde"..."Love-Death," Act III
Lohengrin .... Fantasia
"The Mastersingers of Nuremberg".... Prelude
Parsifal—"Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail." Act I.
Siegfried........ "Forest Murmurs," Act II
The Valkyrie...."Magic Fire Music," Act III

MONDAY—HARVARD NIGHT

Coronation March........ Svendsen
Overture to "Orpheus"........ Offenbach
Fantasia, "La Boheme"........ Puccini
Harvard Glee Club with Orchestra (Dr. Davison, conductor)—
(a) A Dirge for Two Veterans........ Holst
(b) Laudate Dominum........ Converse, '93
Excerpts from "The Mastersingers," Act III........ Wagner
Introduction—
"Dance of the Apprentices."
"Homage to Hans Sachs."
"Hymn to the Sun"........ Rimsky-Korsakov
Second Hungarian Rhapsody........ Liszt
Harvard Glee Club—
(a) "Fire, Fire, My Heart"........ Morley
(b) Russian Folksongs, "Song of the Life-boat Men," "Fireflies," "At Father's Door."
(c) Bedouin Song........ Foote
Ballet Suite, "Coppelia"........ Delibes
Serenade .... Pierne
Cruiser Harvard........ Strube
"Fair Harvard."

TUESDAY

Military Polonaise........ Chopin
Overture to "Oberon"........ Weber
Waltz, "Sleeping Beauty"........ Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Tosca"........ Puccini
Prelude to "Tristan and Isolde"........ Wagner
Capriccio .... Scarlatti
(Arranged for strings by Jacchia.)
Impromptu (Op. 90, No. 2)... Schubert-Jacchia
Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody........ Liszt
From the Ballet "Cephale et Procris"—
(a) Tambourin, (b) Gigue..... Gretry-Mettl
Intermezzo, "L'Amico Fritz"........ Mascagni
Slavonic Dance No. 1........ Dvorak

MEMORIAL DAY, WEDNESDAY

Military March........ Saint-Saens
Overture to "The Bartered Bride".... Snetana
Waltz, "Pomone"........ Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor".... Donizetti
Prelude to "Lohengrin"........ Wagner
Marche Miniature........ Tchaikovsky
"The Lost Chord"........ Sullivan
(Solo trumpet, Mr. Mager.)
Overture to "William Tell"........ Rossini
American Military Fantasy........ Rollinson
"By the Waters of Minnetonka".... Lieurance
"Stars and Stripes Forever"........ Sousa

THURSDAY

March from "Tannhaeuser" .... Wagner
Overture to "La Gazza Ladra"........ Rossini
Waltz, "Vienna Blood"........ Strauss
Fantasia, "Othello"........ Verdi
Rhapsody, "Midsomarvaka"........ Alfven
Reve Angelique........ Rubinstein
Norwegian Dance........ Grieg
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"..... Tchaikovsky
Suite from "Carmen," (a) Habanera, b) Toreador's Song, (c) Gypsy Dance.. Bizet
Serenade, "The Millions of Harlequin".. Drigo
Third Slavonic Dance........ Dvorak

FRIDAY

"Entrance of the Gladiators"........ Fucik
Overture to "Jeanne d'Arc"........ Verdi
Waltz, "Tres Jolie"........ Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet"........ Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers"........ Wagner
Flute Solo........ (Arthur Brooke)
Waltz, "Souvenir"........ Krogman
Finale, "Fourth Symphony"..... Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Mignon"........ Thomas
Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffmann". Offenbach
March, "King Cotton"........ Sousa

SATURDAY

Pomp and Circumstance........ Elgar
Overture, "Maxmilian Robespierre"..... Litolff
Waltz from "Eugen Onegin"...... Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"... Saint-Saens
Suite No. 1 ("L'Arlesienne") (a) Prelude, (b) Carillon........ Bizet
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Prelude to Act III, "La Traviata"...... Verdi
Ride of the Valkyries"........ Wagner
[illegible]psody, "Espagna"........ Chabrier
[illegible] du Bal........ Gillet
[illegible] from "La Gioconda"....... Ponchielli

HERALD-MAY.27.

HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS

The anual Harvard night at the Pops in Symphony hall will take place tonight, numbers to be added by the Harvard Glee club under Dr. Archiblad T. Davison. The program follows:

"Coronation March," Svendsen; overture to "Orpheus," Offenbach; fantasia, "La Boheme," Puccini; songs by Harvard Glee club with orchestra; excerpts from "The Meistersingers," Wagner; "Hymn to the Sun," Rimsky-Korsakov; Second Hungarian rhapsody, Liszt; songs by Harvard Glee club, Morley, Foote; ballet suite, "Coppellia," Delibea; "Serenade," Pierne; "Cruiser Harvard," Strube; "Fair Harvard."

TELE.-MAY 28.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

HARVARD NIGHT

"Coronation March"........ Svendsen
Overture to "Orpheus"..... Offenbach
Fantasia, "La Bohème....... Puccini
Songs by Harvard Glee Club With Orchestra
Excerpts from "Meistersinger" Wagner
Hymn to the Sun.. Rimsky-Korsakoff
Second Hungarian Rhapsody... Liszt
Songs by Harvard Glee Club
Ballet Suite, "Coppélia"...... Delibes
Serenade .... Pierné
"Cruiser Harvard" .... Strube
"Fair Harvard"

MONITOR-MAY 28

HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS

The annual Harvard night at the Pops in Symphony Hall will take place tonight, numbers to be added by the Harvard Glee Club under Dr. Archibald T. Davison. The program follows:

Coronation March........ Svendsen
Overture to "Orpheus"........ Offenbach
Fantasia, "La Boheme" .... Puccini
Harvard Glee Club with Orchestra.
Songs by Holst and Converse.
Excerpts from "The Mastersingers".... Wagner
Hymn to the Sun........ Rimsky-Korsakov
Second Hungarian Rhapsody........ Liszt
Harvard Glee Club.
Fire, Fire, My Heart........ Morley
Russian Folk Songs, Song of the Lifeboat Men
Fireflies.
At Father's Door.
Bedouin Song .... Foote
Ballet Suite, "Copellia"........ Delibes
Serenade .... Pierne
Cruiser Harvard .... Strube
Fair Harvard.

HERALD-MAY.28.

HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS

This is Harvard Night at the Pops, with numbers added by the Harvard Glee Club. The program follows:—

Coronation March........ Svendsen
Overture to "Orpheus"....... Offenbach
Harvard Glee Club with Orchestra.
Excerpts from "The Mastersingers" Wagner
Hymn to the Sun...... Rimsky-Korsakov
Second Hungarian Rhapsody....... Liszt
Harvard Glee Club.
Bellet Suite, "Copellia"........ Delibes
Serenade .... Pierne
Cruiser Harvard .... Strube
FAIR HARVARD.

ADVTSR-MAY.28

HUGE THRONG AT 'POPLESS' CONCERT

The edict of the state commissioner of public safety against smoking and eating at the Sunday Pop concerts again failed to keep a large audience from enjoying the Wagner program offered last night.

There apparently was no one ignorant of the public safety commissioner's regulation, as no one attempted to smoke. On the occasion of Boston's first Sunday night Popless and smokeless concert two weeks ago, a few, in ignorance of the ukase, started to smoke. The ushers were alert in the interest of public safety and warned the violators. But last night the safety of thee commonwealth was not threatened once. Instead, during the intermission the real smokers crowded the lobbies and puffed furiously to make up for lost time and to strengthen themselves for privations through the second part of the program.

HERALD-MAY.28

[107]

At The Pops Tonight

"Harvard Night"

Coronation March .... Svendsen
Overture to "Orpheus"...... Offenbach
Fantasia, "La Bohème"...... Puccini
Choral Numbers:
Dirge for Veterans........ Holst
Laudate Dominum .... Converse
Introduction, Apprentices' Dance, Homage to Sachs from "Die Meistersinger" .... Wagner
Hymn to the Sun.... Rimsky-Korsakov
Second Hungarian Rhapsody...... Liszt
Choral Numbers:
Fire, Fire, My Heart........ Morley
Folk-Songs .... Russian
Bedouin Love-Song .... Foote
Suite from the Ballet, "Coppélia" Delibes
Serenade .... Pierné
March, "Cruiser Harvard........ Strube

Conductors:
A. Jacchia A. T. Davison
Assisting:
The Harvard Glee Club

TRANS. MAY.28

"Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

Military Polonaise........ Chopin
Overture to "Oberon"........ Weber
Waltz, "Sleeping Beauty," Tschaikowsky
Fantasia, "Tosca"........ Puccini
Prelude to "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner
Capriccio .... Scarlatti
Impromptu (Op. 90, No. 2), Schubert-Jacchia
Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody.... Liszt
From the Ballet, "Cephale et Procris" .... Gretry-Mottl
a. Tambourin b. Gigue
Intermezzo, "L'Amico Fritz" Mascagni
Slavonic Dance No. 1........ Dvorak

TOMORROW NIGHT

Military March........ Saint-Saëns
Overture to "The Bartered Bride" Smetana
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor," Donizetti
The Bakule Chorus, Frantisek Bakule, Director
Prelude to "Lohengrin"..... Wagner
"Marche Miniature"... Tschaikowsky
"The Lost Chord"........ Sullivan
(Solo Trumpet—Georges Mager)
Overture to "William Tell".. Rossini
American Military Fantasy, Rollinson
"By the Waters of Minnetonka," Lieurance
"Stars and Stripes Forever"... Sousa

MONITOR-MAY.29.

POPS PROGRAM

The following program will be given by Conductor Agide Jacchia at the Pops in Symphony hall tonight:

Military Polonaise, Chopin; overture to "Oberon," Weber; waltz, "Sleeping Beauty," Tchaikovsky; fantasia, "Tosca," Puccini; prelude to "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; Capriccio, Scarlatti; Impromptu (Op. 90, No. 2), Schubert-Jacchia; Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; from the ballet "Cephale et Procris," a, Tambourin, b, Gigue, Gretry-Mottl; intermezzo, "L'Amico Fritz," Mascagni; Slavonic Dance No. 1, Dvorak.

TELE MAY 29

At the Pops Tonight

Military Polonaise .... Chopin
Overture to "Oberon"........ Weber
Waltz, "Sleeping Beauty"... Chaikovsky
Fantasia, "Tosca" .... Puccini
Prelude to "Tristan and Isolde". Wagner
Capriccio for Strings... Scarlatti-Jacchia
Impromptu (Op. 90, No. 2)........ Schubert-Jacchia
Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody....... Liszt
Two Dances from the Ballet, "Cephalus and Procris".... Grétry-Mottl
Intermezzo, "L'Amico Fritz".. Mascagni
Slavonic Dance No. 1........ Dvo[illegible]

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. MAY.29.

BAKULE CHORUS AT THE POPS TONIGHT

The celebrated Bakule Chorus of Czecho-Slovakian children will appear at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall tonight. The program in full follows:

Military March .... Saint-Saens
Overture, "The Bartered Bride".. Smetana
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor". Donizetti
Bakule Chorus, Frantisec Bakule, director.
Prelude, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Marche Miniature .... Tchaikovsky
"The Lost Chord" .... Sullivan
(Solo trumpet—Georges Mager)
Overture to "William Tell"........ Rossini
American Military Fantasy........ Rollinson
"By the Waters of Minnetouka".. Lieurance
"Stars and Stripes Forever"........ Sousa

ADVTSR-MAY.30

BAKULE CHORUS AT POPS

The celebrated Bakule chorus of Czecho-Slovakian children will add numbers to the Pops program in Symphony hall tonight. Their singing will consist of folk songs of their own country and American songs appropriate to Memorial day This will be their farewell Boston appearance. The program follows:

Military march........ Saint-Saens
Overture to "The Bartered Bride" Smetana
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor" Donizetti
The Bakule Chorus, Frantisec Bakule, director.
Prelude to "Lohengrin"........ Wagner
Marche Miniature........ Tchaikovsky
"The Lost Chord"........ Sullivan
(Solo trumpet, Georges Mager)
Overture to "William Tell"....... Rossini
American Military Fantasy...... Rollinson
"By the Waters of Minnetonka". Lieurance
Stars and Stripes Forever, march. Sousa

HERALD. MAY 30

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

March, "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Overture, "La Gazza Ladra" ...... Rossini
Waltz, "Vienna Blood" .... Strauss
Fantasia, "Othello" .... Verdi
Rhapsody, "Midsomarvaka" .... Alfven
Reve Angelique .... Rubinstein
Norwegian dance .... Grieg
Overture, "1812" .... Tchaikovsky
Suite from "Carmen" .... Bizet
Serenade, "Millions of Harlequin" .. Drigo
Third Slavonic dance .... Dvorak

ADVTSR. MAY 3

TONIGHT'S POP CONCERT

In Symphony hall tonight the following Pops program will be given:

March from "Tannhauser"........ Wagner
Overture to "La Gazza Ladra"........ Rossini
Waltz, "Vienna Blood"........ Strauss
Fantasia, "Othello" .... Verdi
Rhapsody, "Midsomarvaka" .... Alfven
Reve Angelique .... Rubinstein
Norwegian Dance .... Grieg
Overture Solennelle, "1812"....... Tchaikovsky
Suite from "Carmen"........ Bizet
(a), Habanera, (b), Toreador's Song, (c), Gypsy Dance.
Serenade, "The Millions of Harlequin". Drigo

The Saxophone solo which is typical of the "Innocent" in the Suite No. 1 of incidental music to "L'Arlesienne," is usually played here by a clarinet, and the effect is thereby greatly lessened. Next Saturday night when the Suite will be performed at a "Pop" concert, the solo will be played on a saxophone by Mr. Laus, the excellent first bassoon of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

HERALD-MAY 31

POP CONCERT

In Symphony hall tonight the following program will be given:

March from "Tannhauser," Wagner; Overture to "La Gazza Ladra," Rossini; Waltz, "Vienna Blood," Strauss; Fantasia, "Othello," Verdi; Rhapsody, "Midsomarvaka," Alfven; Reve Angelique, Rubinstein; Norwegian Dance, Greig; Overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; Suite from "Carmen," a Habanera, b. Toreador Song, c. Gypsy Dance, Bizet; Serenade, "The Millions of Harlequin," Drigo; Third Slavonic Dance, Dvorak.

TELE. MA[illegible]

At the Pops Tonight

March from "Tannhäuser"..... Wagner
Overture to "La Gazza Ladra".. Rossini
Waltz, "Vienna Blood"........ Strauss
Fantasia, "Othello"........ Verdi
Rhapsody, "Midsummer"........ Alfven
Angel-Dream .... Rubinstein
Norwegian Dance........ Grieg
Overture, "1812"........ Chaikovsky
Suite from "Carmen"........ Bizet
Serenade from "Harlequin's Millions" Drigo
Slavonic Dance, No. 3........ Dvorák

Conductor: A. Jacchia

"Playing Fair"

TAKING into consideration the demands of the classics, it is apparent that Mr. Monteux has paid due tribute to the American composer. If every orchestra followed the lead of the Boston Symphony the lament that the native composer suffers from lack of opportunity would no longer be so loud in the land. The ten pieces of last winter may not be much to look for in a season, and they happened to include only one novelty. But in a list which displays a catholicity of taste, a broad cosmopolitan viewpoint, Mr. Monteux has shown that he appreciates the existence of the American composer, and has conceded him generous representation. [Musical America

TRA[illegible]

POPS PROGRAM

The following music will be played at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

"Entrance of the Gladiators," Fucik; overture to "Jeanne d'Arc," Verdi; waltz, "Tres Jolie," Waldteufel; fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet," Gounod; prelude to "The Meistersingers," Wagners; flute solo, "Woodland Stream," Metzger, Arthur Brooke; "Valse Souvenir," Krogmann; finale, "Fourth Symphony," Tchaikowsky; overture to "Mignon," Thomas; "Bacarolle" from "Tales of Hoffmann," Offenbach; march, "King Cotton," Sousa.

TELE-JUNE 1.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Entrance of the Gladiators.... Fucik
Overture to "Jeanne d'Arc".... Verdi
Waltz, "Très Jolie"...... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliette" Gounod
Prelude to "Meistersinger".. Wagner
Flute solo, "Woodland Stream" Metzger
(Arthur Brooke)
"Valse Souvenir"........ Krogmann
Finale, Fourth Symphony Tschaikowsky
Overture to "Mignon"....... Thomas
Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffmann" Offenbach
March, "King Cotton"........ Sousa

MONITOR-JUNE 1

Music Notes and Comment

Mr Monteux, with the consent of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as required by his contract, has generously undertaken to conduct this afternoon's concert of the People's Symphony Orchestra, at the St James Theatre, for which he has very properly chosen a program of French music, hitherto scantily represented on the programs of this orchestra. This ought finally to scotch all rumors to the effect that there is on either side any real rivalry or bitterness of feeling between the Boston Symphony and the People's Symphony. Any one who has read the programs of the two orchestras with care, must have observed that one of the trustees of the Boston Symphony, Mr E. Sohier Welch, is also a member of the advisory committee of the People's Symphony, something which would not happen if the People's Symphony were hostile to the great and famous orchestra. As a matter of fact, each organization is doing useful and invaluable work for music in Boston, without any perceptible overlapping of their different fields of endeavor.

NINTH SYMPHONY TO BE REPEATED

Although announced but a short time ago, the performance of Beethoven's choral symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the pension fund concert in Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon, March 30, is already sold out. A second performance has been arranged for Sunday evening, March 30. The Symphony Orchestra will combine forces for this occasion with the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

MONDAY SYMPHONY

Tomorrow evening at Symphony Hall the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the fourth concert of the Monday evening series. Felix Fox, pianist, the soloist, will be heard in Schumann's concerto. Pierre Monteux will also

FELIX FOX PLAYS WITH SYMPHONY

Heard in Schumann Piano Concerto as Soloist

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the fourth concert of its Monday evening series last night in Symphony Hall. Felix Fox, pianist, was the soloist. The programme comprised of Brahms Symphony in D major, the Schumann piano concerto and the Lalo Overture to "Le Roi d'Ys."

MR. FOX'S PLAYING

The symphony is not "popular" in the sense that Beethoven's Fifth or Schubert's "Unfinished" are popular. The melodic lines are quite different and at times difficult, yet the performance last night was so smooth, the phrasing so neatly turned as to entirely merit the generous applause accorded both orchestra and conductor.

One of the outstanding charms of Mr. Fox's playing lies in his respect for his instrument. He does not endeavor to compete with the orchestra, but rather to make himself a part of it. His tone is never superficial, yet at no time does he appear to force it. If occasionally one felt the lack of sentimental value, one simultaneously became aware of the absolute sincerity of the man. The enthusiasm of his audience belied the words of the old adage concerning the honor of the prophet in his own country.

A vivid performance of the Overture, with its beautiful violoncello solo, brought to a close a concert for which Mr. Monteux has reason to be proud.

9TH SYMPHONY REPEATED

Although announced but a short time ago, the coming performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony No. 9 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the pension fund concert in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, March 30, is already sold out. A second performance has been arranged for Sunday evening, March 30, at 8:30. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Mr. Monteux, will combine forces for this occasion with the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, and four noted soloists.

FLESCH SOLOIST

With Carl Flesch, violinist, as soloist the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its next concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, March 21 and 22. This week will be occupied by concerts in Greater New York.

Mr. Flesch will play Beethoven's D major concerto. Mr. Monteux will conduct Haydn's Symphony in C major (B. & H. No. 7), the second suite from the "Stevensonia" of Edward B. Hill, music suggested by the following poems from "A Child's Garden of Verse": "Armies in the Fire," "The Dumb Soldier," and "Pirate Song." The program will close with "The Ride of the Valkyries."

O'n

Music News

Mr. Schneevoigt Conducts Boston Symphony Concert

The eighteenth program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Georg Schneevoigt as guest conductor, given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, was:

Beethoven—Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, op. 72.
Mozart—"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik."
Strauss—"Don Juan."
Sibelius—Symphony No. 2 in D major, op. 43.

Of course, the main interest of the afternoon centered about the personality of the conductor. Although generally the guest conductor system, so prevalent in certain parts of Europe for the last few years, is hardly conducive to the highest state of perfection in orchestral playing, yet now and again an exception serves a good purpose. The exception of yesterday, if it served no other purpose, must have brought home to the audience of these Friday afternoon concerts how fortunate they have been in Mr. Monteux as a conductor, for it was he and he alone who formed the orchestra as it now is, and without his years of painstaking labor the magnificent instrument upon which Mr. Schneevoigt wrought his will would not now have been in existence.

Judging Mr. Schneevoigt's conducting by a single hearing it would be difficult to over-praise it. Playing music which has long been familiar, he nevertheless succeeded in arousing and maintaining interest in his reading of it. And this was never done through the spectacular means so often resorted to by a visiting conductor. Mr. Schneevoigt quite evidently is more deeply concerned with bringing about an adequate interpretation of the music than with using it for personal display. Hence we were favored yesterday with a performance of Beethoven's "Leonore" which was distinguished for its imaginative beauty and for a keen appreciation of its dramatic import; a performance of Strauss' bombastic tone poem no less effective; but above all for a rendering of Sibelius' second symphony that revealed unsuspected beauties in a work which, in spite of its comparative familiarity, has to a certain extent been enigmatic.

There is nothing of the virtuoso, nothing spectacular, about either Mr. Schneevoigt or his conducting. He plays upon the orchestra with the skill of a master, yet never seeks to make an effect for its own sake alone. To him the music itself is of supreme importance and to its proper interpretation he brings a truly remarkable wealth of imagination and poetic feeling. He is one of those few artists whom it is a real privilege to hear. Would that his stay among us might be prolonged.

S. M.

THIS WEEK

WJAZ, Chicago, 670 Kc, 448 Meters

11 P M to 2 A M—Program by the Medinah
Chanters, 25 men, and Oriole Orchestra: "Sonny Boy," "Blue Rose," "Jog Along," "Teach
Me to Love," "Sunshine of Mine," "Back in Hackensack, New Jersey," "Nine O'Clock
Sal," "Dream Moon," "Chimes Blues," "Pal of My Dreams."

WMAQ, Chicago, 670 Kc, 448 Meters

3:35 P M—Concert.
5:20 P M—Items of interest to women; Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs talk.
7:45 P M—Talk by Segfried Wagner.
8 P M—Boy Scouts' talk; auto talk; seventh of a series of lessons in golf.
9:40 P M—LaSalle Orchestra.
10 P M—Recreational talk; program from the faculty of music school.

WLW, Cincinnati, 970 Kc, 309 Meters

11 P M—Special concert by the Phi
Beta Sorority of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music: Violin, "1st Movement from Con-certe (De Beriot); voice, "My Field (V. Fok-olov) "Thou'rt Like the Dawn" (Baron V.
Vrangel), "From the Land of the Sky Blue
Water" (Cadman); piano, "Etude in minor"
(Chopin), "Etude in A flat major" (Chopin); violin, "Gavotte" (Eally), "Cansonetta" (d'Am-brosio); voice, groups of songs; ensemble,
"New World Symphony." Special selections by Emma Wellman Hoff, contralto, assisted at piano by Lydia Rockel. Popular dance program.

WOC, Davenport, 620 Kc, 484 Meters

6.45 P M—Chimes concert. Sandman's visit.

HUG PROM
BY A

Mrs. Britton Made of Cardinals A
Out Bre

BY MILLER HUGGINS

Manager World's Champion New York Yankees

It is very difficult to run a ball club with a woman as owner and active executive. Roger Bresnahan found this out soon after he got the St. Louis club going good. Later I also found it out.

THEN TROUBLE STARTED

The only woman owner we ever had in baseball was Mrs. Schuyler Britton. I find that fans often are under a wrong impression as to how she became the owner. The club was inherited by Mrs. Britton when Stanley Robinson died. At first she had men to run it, but finally decided to take the helm herself.

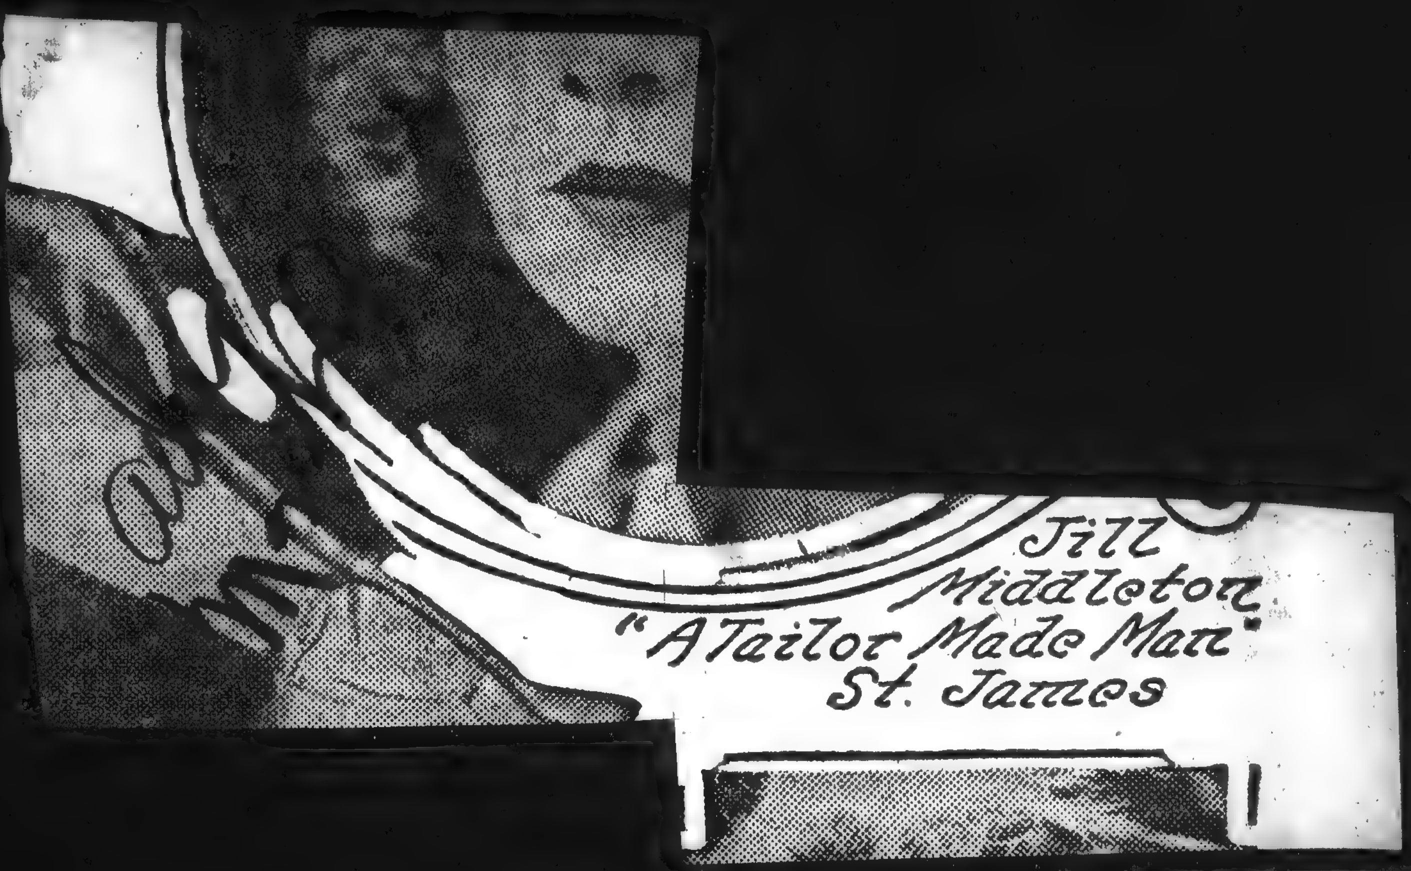
Beginning the 1911 season Mrs. Britton announced that she would take personal charge of the club's affairs and she began by making her attorney, J. C. Jones, president. Soon there was some friction. The details are not quite familiar to me, probably wouldn't be interesting at that.

I heard that a deal had been arranged by which I was to be traded back to Cincinnati for Mike Mitchell and McDonald. Mrs. Britton refused to approve this deal. A newspaper quoted her as saying:

"If Huggins is good enough to manage Cincinnati he is good enough to play second base for my Cardinals."

And that's all there was to it. We heard that Bresnahan demanded his release after that incident. This was not ranted.

The next fall, though, everybody was urprised with an announcement from



Jill Middleton
"A Tailor Made Man"
St. James

THEATRE PARK SQ.
EVES. 8:15 ~ MATS. WED. & SAT. 2:15
PHONE BEACH 193
FRED E WRIGHT ~ Manager

ITY WEEK!

E
R
Novel

The ONE OUTSTANDING DRAMATIC TRIUMPH OF THE SEASON

"ONE MOTHER IN A MILLION"

Some Folk Tales From Timbuktu

Tales from Timbuktu

By Constance Smedley. Illustrated by Maxwell Armfield. London: Chatto & Windus. Price 7s. 6d. net.

It is one of the hardest tasks in the world to mold your really authentic folk story into something which one can have no qualms about putting into the hands of children, and though a few incidents which might better have been kept out have inadvertently slipped into the "Tales From Timbuktu," Miss Constance Smedley has on the whole succeeded admirably not only in her choice of stories, but in her manner of telling them.

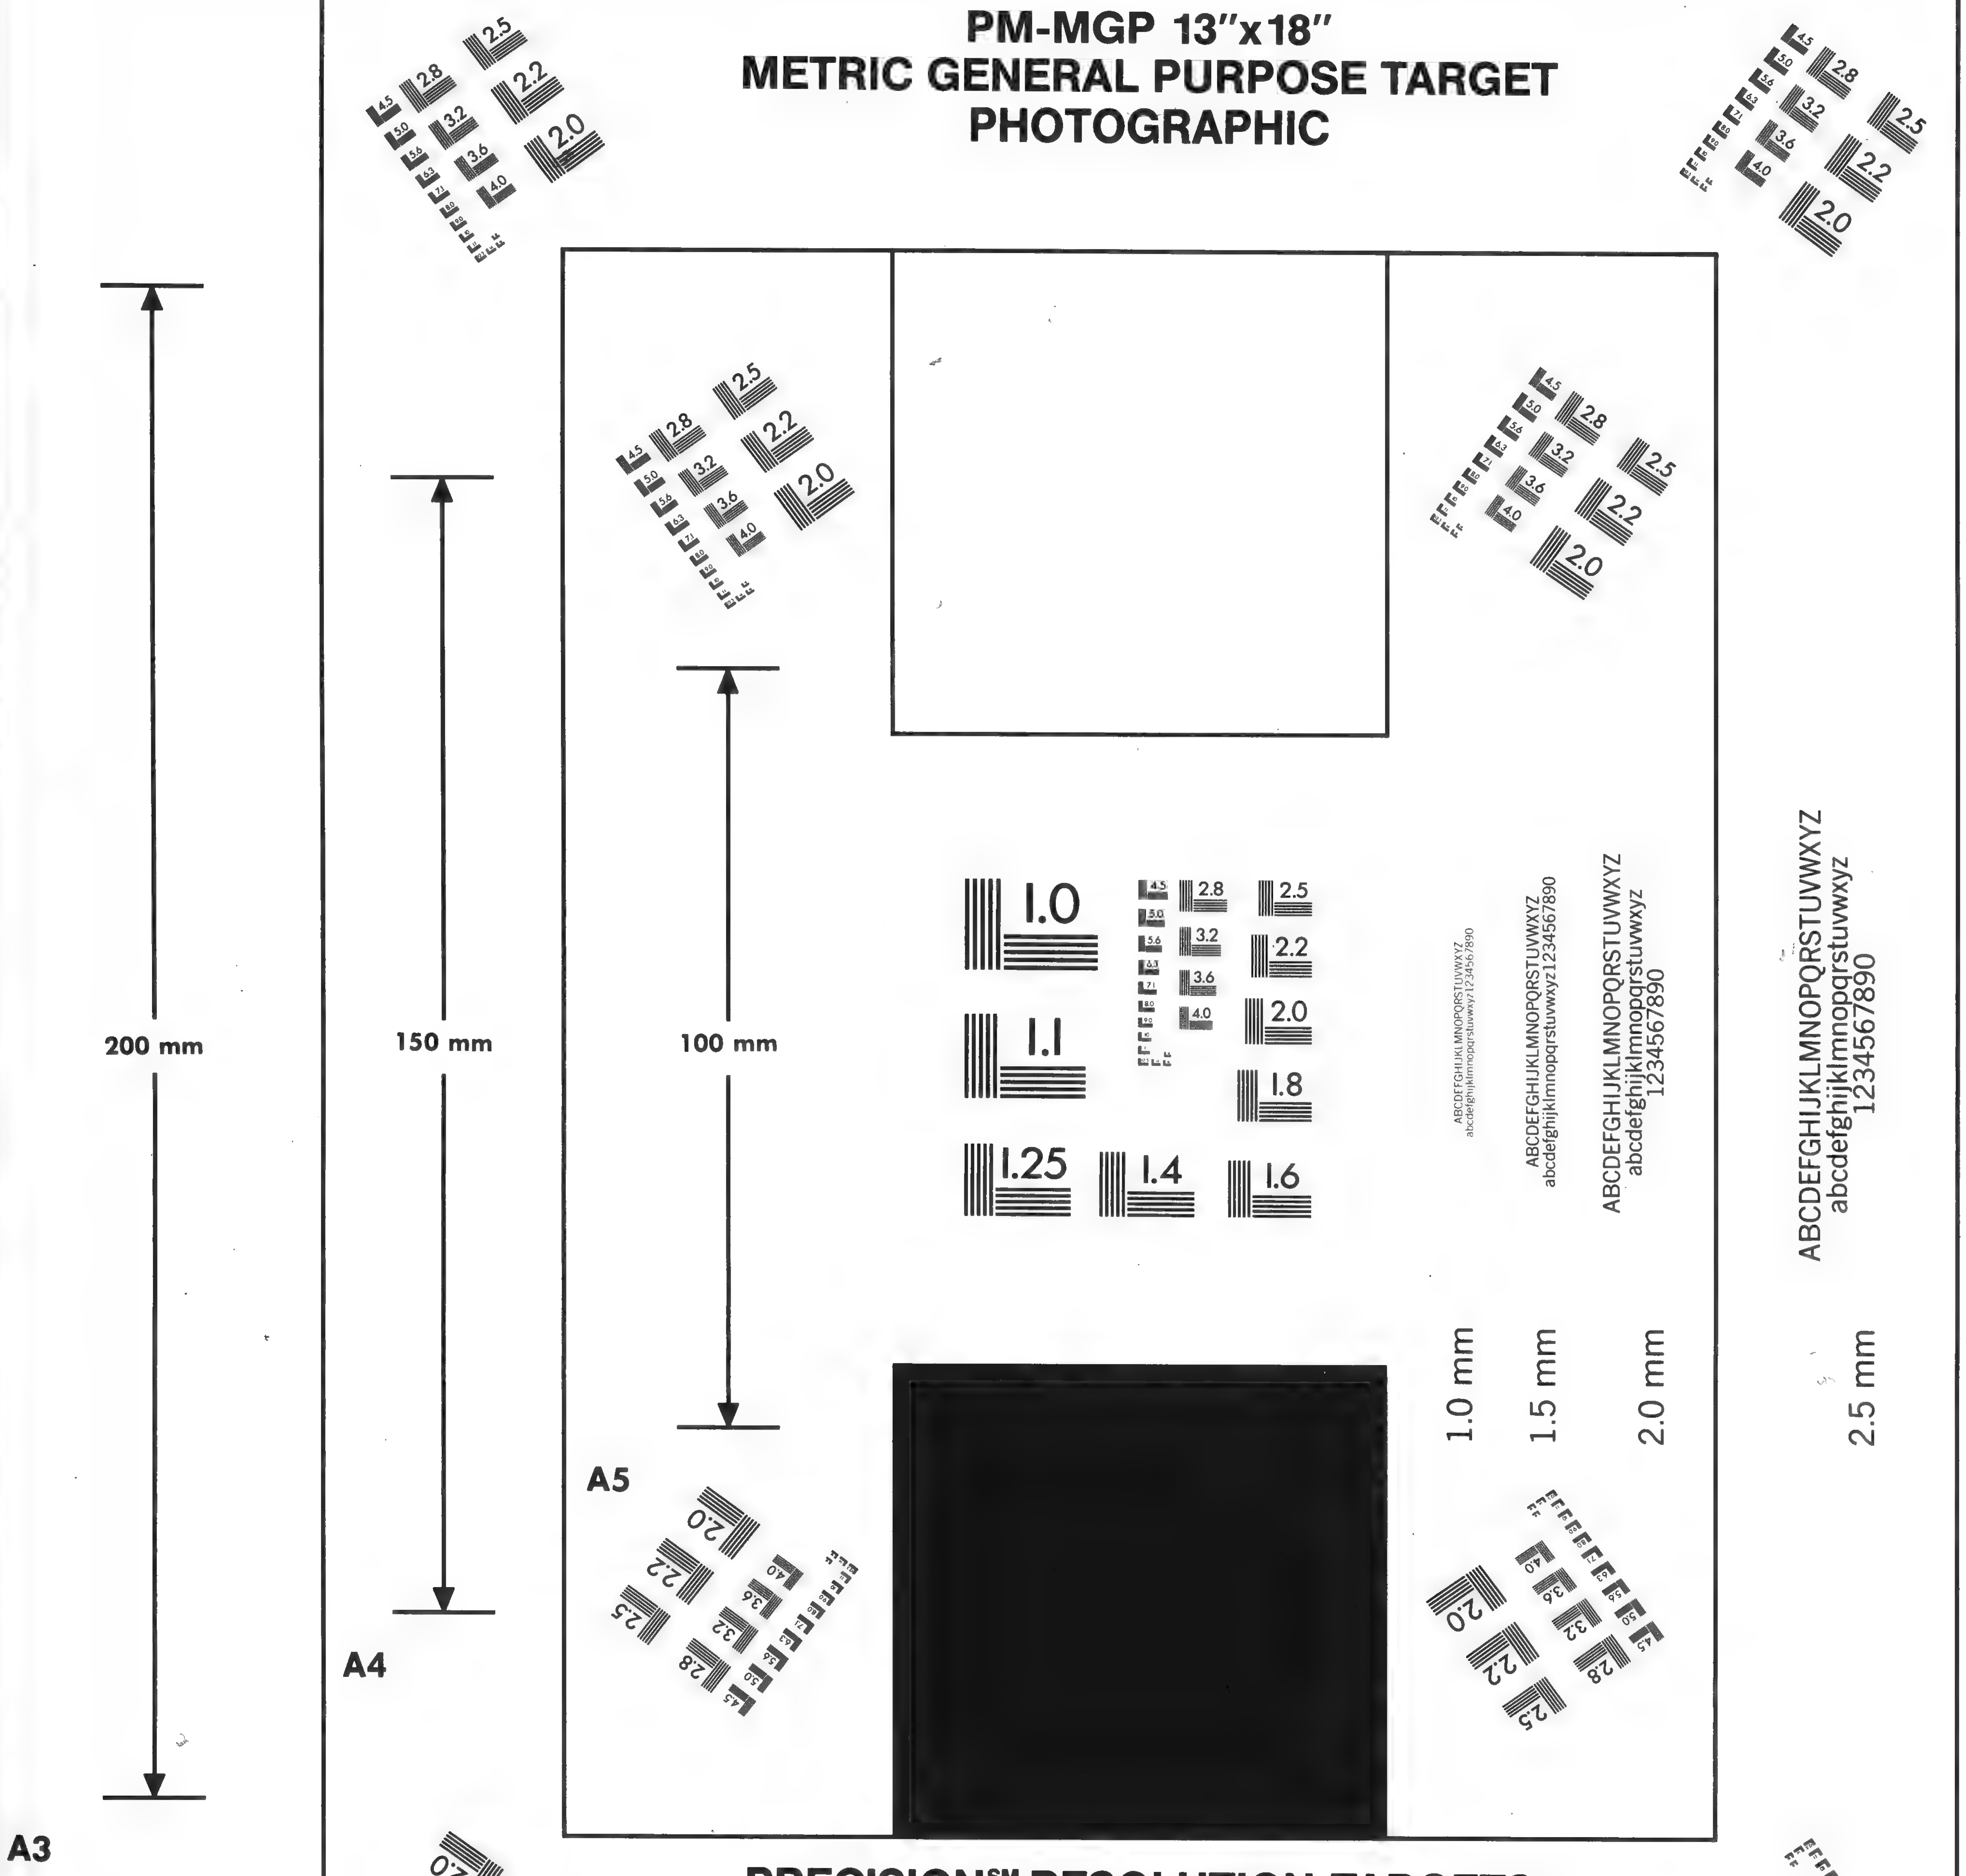
Almost all folk tales are variants in a new setting of a few original themes but Miss Smedley has actually succeeded in finding some stories which are likely to strike no chords of reminiscence. Even when the adventures are those of old friends in new dresses, the dresses are so strikingly new as to invest their wearers with a fresh glamour.

If asked to pick out the best of the stories the majority of people would probably vote for "The Faithful Friends," a charmingly natural story from Korea with not a little of the Cinderella flavor in it. But the tale of the little Chilean lady, Maraquita, who laughed pearls and combed threads of glistening gold from her hair would very likely run it close, although some sensitive children might need an assurance in the middle that all was coming right in the end. Yet another good story is "The Bird Who Gave Milk"—and who incidentally outwits a fascinatingly guileless Enormous Cannibal who takes the place of the more orthodox ogre.

Miss Smedley has ingeniously woven the tales she has chosen into one continuous story by the simple expedient of grouping them round a not very exciting Persian Prince. The Arabian Nights certainly provides a good precedent for this course, but unfortunately the mantle of romance which belongs to Haroun-al-Raschid has not fallen on the shoulders of his Persian counterpart. One might also grumble that the pictures, though works of art in their way and no doubt picturing certain national characteristics with inimitable accuracy, do not depict any of the fascinating scenes described in the letterpress. But after all these are minor criticisms and taken as a whole the book remains one of the most delightful

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
5.0
3.2
2.0
5.6
3.6
6.3
4.0
7.1
8.0
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm
A5
A4
A3

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

Firmness and Force

Georg Schneevoight

Guest-Conductor at the Symphony Concert

ONDUCTOR OF WILL, CONDUCTOR OF POWER, GEORG SCHNEEVOIGHT

GUEST LEADS THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

ossip, Rumor and a Confused Public—A Vehement Director Disposed to Wring the Last Drop From Every Measure—His Fortunes With Beethoven Dramatized, Strauss Blurred, Mozart Plain-Spoken and Sibelius Eloquently Tempered

WHATEVER the wisdom or the unwisdom of visiting conductors at the Symphony Concerts, the trustees and the management chose an unfortunate time to make Mr. Georg Schnéevoight their guest. So doing, they have unloosed a flood of gossip and rumor by which neither he nor they nor the orchestra is profiting. It is commonly believed that next May Mr. Monteux will end his term as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. So far as observers may discover, he is making the usual preparations for retirement. By announcement of the trustees made last September, Mr. Sergei Kusevitzky will succeed him from October next. Outside a few that have heard him in London or in Paris, he is an unknown quantity to the public of the Symphony Concerts. Report and repute herald him truly or untruly, as a "prima donna conductor," cultivating in particular th modernist composers. In some quarters, accordingly, there has been demur and question over him. It has even been said that he might not come to Boston after all.

While this gossip goes the rounds, Mr. Georg Schnéevoight of Stockholm, of Helsingfors, of Scheveningen, unexpectedly appears on the American scene and is invited to conduct as guest in Symphony Hall. For what other purposes, if any, he has come oversea is not made known. As present information stands, he is to be guest of no other orchestra in the United States. The "personnel" of the Boston band runs about singing his praises. The manager departs unexpectedly to Europe. Mr. Monteux, it appears, is to conduct as guest in Stockholm. Forthwith rumor buzzes and will not be stilled. In New York, in Boston, wherever there is interest in the Symphony Orchestra, it is freely and loudly said that the arrangement with Mr. Kusevitzky has fallen through; that Mr. Schnéevoight is on trial as successor to Mr. Monteux; that we of the public shall see—what we shall see. The truth or the error of these sayings is impossible to discover. One circumstance only stands clear: the obligation of the trustees of the orchestra to clarify this confusion as soon as it is in their power so to do. They owe such enlightenment to the public of concerts here and elsewhere, to the incoming conductor, to the prestige, present and future of the orchestra.

Second Wind

New Contributions to the Deficit of the Symphony Orchestra

THE Guarantee Fund to meet the deficit for the current year of the Symphony Concerts is stirring again. By report of the programme-book, yesterday afternoon, $1415 was subscribed during the past week and the sum total now stands at $81,218.34 of a desired $95,000. The subscribers were:

Alford, Mrs. O. H.
Anonymous
Beebe, C. Philip
Bramhall, Eleanor
Duff, Mr. and Mrs. John
Friend
Harwood, G. Fred
Jones, Margaret H.
Morse, Leonice S.
Peirce, Alice Foster

Mr. Georg Schnéevoight is a towering and displayful person—a Herculean Finn, seemingly six feet tall, broad in proportion, full-fleshed of body, aquiline of visage. He conducts with what elderly reviewers would call an "incomparable" vehemence. The ample tails of his morning coat sometimes stream in the gale of his motions; while those motions are nearly incessant. He swings almost ceaselessly from left to right, from right to centre, from centre to left again that he may pounce upon some choir, some particular player, for quality or quantity of tone, for emphasis or accent upon the passing period. Not even a solo-voice among the virtuosi of the band may escape this insistent guidance. As the music proceeds, Mr. Schnéevoight's right arm beats the measure with hammering and far-flung energy; while his left is as busy with contours and dynamics. He writes the curve of a melody upon the patient air. He wrings sustained song out of the singing instruments. He urges one voice into the tonal mass. He dismisses another from it. He is forever hushing or heightening the tone of the instant. His countenance is as busy as his arms, since in his glance he would have the players read his will with the music. At moments he is actually shaping it with his lips. In climax or at sudden contrast, he uprears his bulk, distends his stature, launches himself upon the orchestra, recedes like the ocean-wave only to up-curl again. Those who take joy in the physical exercises of conducting are already hailing Mr. Schnéevoight as a master.

With the music in hand Mr. Schnéevoight has apparently a single purpose—to wring something out of every measure and to transmit it to his hearers with the utmost possible emphasis. In his view no bars, no sequence, is merely transitional—"geting on," as it were, with the tonal story; rounding the chosen form; providing rest and recuperation in the zest of composition. Indeed, he exalts the composers of music beyond all other mortals, since he believes that at every instant they have something to say and are saying it forcefully. No more, seemingly, has it occurred to him that music may often move in flowing line and exfoliating arabesque; that in such motion and unfolding dwell quality, interest and beauty; that to break apart and isolate measures is to defeat the very purpose and flowering of the composer. The great god of "effect" is Mr. Schnéevoight's deity in music and upon its altars he would lay perpetual offering.

Similarly in his passion for emphatic and characterizing tone, the conductor seemed strangely deaf to its sensuous quality. Like Mr. Mengelberg and not at all in Mr. Longy's usual manner, Mr. Schnéevoight would sharpen and thin the voice of the oboe. He courts the shrillness of the flutes, the brazen note in trumpets, trombones and tuba. He hears gladly the bite of the strings, the metallic clang and clink of sundry instruments of percussion. As often as not in ensembles—say, yesterday, in the climaxes of Strauss's "Don Juan"—he mistakes for luminous power, a welter of hard tones. In this ceaseless quest for emphasis, proportion and shading almost necessarily go by the board. Mr. Schnéevoight hears a solo-instrument singing out of the orchestra—and forthwith urges it to sing the more intensely, while he half-stifles the essential and enhancing background. The conductor can reduce a pianissimo to a fleck of sound. He can release his orchestra in a climax to make the rafters sing. Yet the long, supple, artfully proportioned, infinitely varied gradient of tone escapes him; while no more has he mastered the secret of the climax in which momentary recession heightens returning surge. The gamut of half-tints he puts aside in his orchestral coloring; the might—not the modulation—of tonal mass warms him.

Received by a standing orchestra, heartily clapped by the audience, Mr. Schnéevoight first wreaked himself upon Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture. He divided and subdivided it until it seemed like a mosaic of measures laid side by side. Out of each division he sought to wring the last drop of "expression," by every musical and dramatizing means. He set in rhetorical pauses; multiplied contrasts; outspread songful measures in wire-drawn intensity; plunged through orchestral tumults; finally emerged—himself, his orchestra and his hearers dripping with excitement. One after another, the listening mind received twenty "effects" of force and fire for the moment applied. It hardly gained an impression of the spacious unfolding, the puissant upbuilding of Beethoven's magnificent overture. Here mate music and drama in an epitome that transcends many a whole opera. Mr. Scnnéevoight gave his hearers only the "theatre" of it.

Like-minded was the conductor with Strauss's tone-poem, "Don Juan." He rushed at it; he ploughed through it; he cried from it; he raged up and down it. He smeared Don Juan into life through a blowsy welter of Strauss's sharp-cut rhythms, flaming colors, ardent modulations. The songful measures, again wire-drawn, were acrid with sensuality, not aglow with sensuous warmth and lustres Not four but six horns—or may be eight—must Mr. Schnéevoight pile upon a celebrated passage, and even in 1889 Strauss knew and proportioned the power of an orchestra. The pages of tumult were hard orgies of vehemence. At almost every turn the characterizing voice of the music upon the hero was blurred. Only at the end did Mr. Schnéevoight gain the beauty that time and again haunts it. The conductor indeed let himself go; the orchestra did his full bidding. Yet it was possible to doubt how often Strauss and the finer quality of his music went with them.

With a Serenade of Mozart, Mr. Schnéevoight was able craftsman. The outline stood clear; the phrases were smooth-shaped; the figures and ornaments dexterously adjusted; the pace easy and aptly modulated. The letter of the music was lucidly read. The fancy, the elegance, the airy progress, the light lustres, which are its spirit, the conductor left to the imaginative hearer. Finally with Sibelius's Second Symphony, he seemed a more discerning, a better balanced, a more justly eloquent conductor than in all else of the day. Appreciably he softened; with perception, he measured. He was more regardful of the flow of the music. He was less urgent with contrasts, less hard-fisted with climax, less emphatic with all things. He permitted Sibelius unforced instrumental song. He did not blur or over-sharpen a bare and spare harmonic and instrumental coloring. The homely and musing, the melancholy or heroic moods of the symphony sounded clear and warm. The sympathies of the conductor deepened the glows of the composer. Yet revelation there was not—except of the finer abilities of Mr. Schnéevoight. So came and went this guest-conductor, a Max Fiedler glorified.

H. T. P.

and R

BEACON ST., No. 1028. Steam-heated, a tractively furnished room (twin beds); quie well kept house. Suitable for one or two. Ba on each floor. References. SMW: mh 8

BEACON ST., No. 109. Large, attractive furnished rooms; near Public Garden; ele tricity; continuous hot water; steam heat. Te Back Bay 0539. TuWS (880G) mh 4

BEACON ST., No. 1720—Attractively fu nished room in private family; about 2 minutes from Park st. Tel. Regent 6259. 6t (2291C) mh 5

BEACON ST., No. 900. Large room, close and running water; first floor; living quar ters for business people or doctor's office. SW4t (815D) mh 1

BEACON ST., No. 1077. Attractive furnished rooms, desirable for two; can do light housekeeping. Small room, $7. Large, $10. Phone Regent 5396. WS (1844B) mh 5

BEACON ST., No. 237—Near Dartmouth. Attractively furnished room, with hot and cold water; steam heat; electric lights; fireplace. WSM mh 5

BEACON ST., No. 853. Attractive, small room, all conveniences; $5 per week; eight minutes to Park st. Back Bay 7468.

BEACON ST., No. 914. Exceptional rooms and exceptional family table. References. 6t: mh 6

BOARD, room, garage for a business man. Front room, good board and space for car; in refined home; 20 minutes from city. Tel. Newton North 0741-R. WS: mh 5

BOARD FOR GIRL. Have good home for ambitious orphan girl 14-15 yrs., Protestant, as companion and daughter. Address K.R.S., Transcript, Boston 8.

BOARD. Would like to board an infant in private home where there are no other children. Call Regent 8459. FSW5t f 29

BOYLSTON ST., 905, Suite 2. Large, sunny room, steam heat, electricity, continuous hot water, elevator. Back Bay 2005. SMW: mh 8

BRIGHTON. Congenial business man can find real home comforts and privileges with party in private apartment, all modern, $7; 15 minutes to Park st. Brighton 1964-W. WSM (1845B) mh 5

BROOKLINE. Large, sunny corner room, furnished or unfurnished, also smaller room, in detached house; all modern conveniences. One who would appreciate home privileges. Regent 6225-W. SMW (1208F) mh 8

BROOKLINE—356 Harvard St. Beautifully furnished, large, front corner room; bath floor; Whitcomb twin brass beds; hair mattresses, custom made, dresser, etc.; $4.50 each for one or two business girls; laundry privileges. Phone Regent 0265. SMW: mh 8

BROOKLINE—Coolidge Corner—6 Shaller St., Suite 3. Congenial private family. One or two desirable furnished rooms, with or without private bathroom, in up-to-date apartment; constant hot water, etc. Light housekeeping privileges. WSTu mh 5

BROOKLINE, 338 Tappan St. Gentleman wanted for large, warm, newly decorated front room, near Beacon st. and Beaconsfield station; breakfast and dinner; reasonable rates. Tel. Regent 1508-W. SMW (1924B) mh 8

BROOKLINE—Coolidge Corner. Two pleasant furnished rooms on bath floor in a modern pretty home, suitable for business men; price reasonable. Tel. Aspinwall 1511. WThStc (2664D) o 10

BROOKLINE, Coolidge Corner. Large, pleasant room, with large closet, in family of four adults; to business woman. Can be seen any time Sunday. Suite 2, 54 Dwight st., Brookline. Tel. Regent 1667-W.

BROOKLINE—1410 and 1412 Beacon St.—The Lawrence. Attractively furnished, large, small and connecting rooms, with board; steam heat; continuous hot water. Tourists. Phone Regent 2905. 6t: mh 5

BROOKLINE. No. 29 Marion St. Near Coolidge Corner. Two large, sunny furnished rooms, near bath; one with continuous running water; 14 minutes to Park st. Tel. Regent 3200-R. WFS: mh 5

BROOKLINE, 25 Brook st. Attractive furnished room with board, on bathroom floor; 8 minutes to steam and electrics; all conveniences. Tel. Regent 6621-W. WFSW (2282C) mh 5

BROOKLINE, Coolidge Corner. Newly furnished double or single rooms with private bath. For appointment address F. L., 122 Park st., Suite 3, or call Regent 8543. SWF (800D) mh 1

BROOKLINE. No. 1049 Beacon St. Attractive home, with elevator, single and double rooms, bath each floor, home table, steam heat, continuous hot water; 10 minutes to Park st. Tel. Regent 7523. SW: mh 8

BROOKLINE—232 Aspinwall Ave. Suite of rooms, with private bath, in detached house; all home comforts; suitable for semi-invalid or elderly couple; best of food served. Tel. Regent 6217-R. 3t (1194F) mh 6

BROOKLINE. Young business lady would rent beautiful room or share apartment located in Brookline with a congenial business girl. References required. Address O.C.F., Transcript, Boston 8.

BROOKLINE. Two men, desirous of engaging with cultured people a HOME with all that that word implies. No other boarders. References exchanged. Address A.E.J., Transcript, Boston 8.

BROOKLINE—Gardner Cottage—No. 64 Sewall Ave., corner of Charles St. Furnished rooms, with board, in large house with piazza. Delightful atmosphere. Convenient location; superior home table. WS4t (1175F) mh 5

BROOKLINE—Coolidge Corner. A nicely furnished, front room in modern apartment; second floor; business or professional person preferred. 1353 Beacon st., Suite 2. Tel. Regent 6707. (394G)

BROOKLINE. One or two warm, sunny rooms; small, private family; refined home atmosphere; 17 minutes to Park st.; breakfast if desired. Regent 4206-M after 4.30 P. M. SWF (887D) mh 8

BROOKLINE. Attractive, large, double room; every convenience; home comforts; meals optional; also room for light housekeeping. 178 Naples road, near Commonwealth ave. Tel. Regent 3734-R. SMW: mh 8

BROOKLINE — Chestnut Hill District. Lady will share her apartment with some congenial couple or rent some rooms with kitchen and home privileges; very reasonable. Tel. Regent 4446-W. WS (1849B) mh 5

BROOKLINE. Beacon St. Young business woman would like to rent one-half of a two-room furnished apartment; price $10 per week; references required. Address K.W.W., Transcript, Boston 8. WS: mh 5

BROOKLINE, 1193 Beacon St., near Coolidge Corner, large front room, bay window; also side room in quiet pleasant home. References required. Tel. Regent 1137-W. 6t (497L) mh 8

BROOKLINE. 13 Garrison road, large sunny room, twin beds; also single room well heated; reduced prices to September; 20 minutes from Park St. Regent 3597-W. SMW (398G) mh 8

BROOKLINE, Coolidge Corner, 42 Vernon st. Three handsomely furnished connecting rooms, second floor, sunny corner house, electricity, hot water heat, continuous hot water, garage. Telephone Regent 1191-M. SWS: mh 1

BROOKLINE — Coolidge Corner. Gentleman appreciating exceptional room, with board, with homelike surroundings, in attractive apartment with small adult family. Tel. Aspinwall 1871. WS (1178F) mh 5

BROOKLINE—Coolidge Corner. Very attractive, large, front room with alcove. Furnished or unfurnished. Excellent board. Also smaller furnished room. 32 Centre st. Tel. Regent 3117. SWS: mh 1

BROOKLINE—60 Powell St. Large, sunny front room near light; excellent home table; [illegible] Corner; garage to let; [illegible] Tel. Regent 6735. Stc o 10

BROOKLINE, 54 Auburn St. To let with board, 2 large unusually attractive double rooms; furnishings entirely new; family table; all modern conveniences. Tel. Regent 6504. WSW (9930E) mh 5

BROOKLINE, No. 29 Winchester St. Large room and kitchenette, in detached house with piazzas, hot water heat, electric lights, continuous hot water. Tel. Regent 6024. WS: mh 5

BROOKLINE—133 Cypress St. To let, furnished room. Heated, pleasant room on car line, and two minutes to train. Lady preferred; $5 weekly. Telephone Regent 6502-W. SW (1202F) mh 8

BROOKLINE — Coolidge Corner. Furnished, steam-heated room; fine location. 69 Centre st. Tel. Aspinwall 3043. WThS (843D) mh 5

BROOKLINE. Coolidge Corner. One or two nicely furnished, warm, sunny rooms; 15 minutes from Park st. 31 Longwood ave. Tel. Aspinwall 0382. SW: mh 8

BROOKLINE. Coolidge Corner. Sunny front room, in modern apartment, suitable for a business man; an American; price reasonable. Tel. Aspinwall 1511. SWTh: mh 8

BROOKLINE—127 Winthrop Rd. Large, pleasant furnished room, next to tile bath; private home, no other roomers; business people preferred. Regent 2449-R. SMW (868D) mh 8

BROOKLINE—145 Naples Rd. Sunny front room, twin beds, alcove, large closet, on bathroom floor; also single room. Tel. Regent 8897. SMW: mh 8

BROOKLINE. Minute to Beacon St. Comfortable warm, sunny room; homelike surroundings; high class apartment; 20 minutes to Park st. Regent 6833-M.

BROOKLINE—11 Abbottsford Rd. Furnished or unfurnished housekeeping room; also small rooms; 3 baths, hot water heat; 12 minutes to Park st. Telephone Regent 6983-W.

BROOKLINE—Coolidge Corner; 15 minutes to Park st. Furnished room, bathroom floor, continuous hot water. 5 Wellman st., corner of Centre. Regent 5889-M. SW: mh 8

BROOKLINE, Beacon St., up one flight. Nicely furnished room next bath, 2 closets, twin beds, also small room. Prices reasonable; board optional. Regent 8490. 6t (863D) mh 7

BROOKLINE—Near Coolidge Corner. Rooms for rent in private home; business people preferred. Tel. Regent 7553. (62A)

sunny room in private residence. Tel. Aspinwall 1958. WS: mh 5

BROOKLINE. Bright, airy front room in modern apartment, conveniently located. Call Regent 2367-M.

BROOKLINE. Rooms on Naples Road. Private family. Tel. Aspinwall 0840.

CAMBRIDGE, Near Harvard Sq. Residential neighborhood, two sunny rooms, comfortable in every detail. Private family. Unexcelled dining-room service; with strictly home cooking. Tel. University 1800-J. SMW (1905B) mh 8

CAMBRIDGE, overlooking Harvard yard, large sunny corner room with bath adjoining, in exclusive apartment house; elevator service; family of two; no other guests; gentleman preferred. Call University 0833. MWS (44[illegible]) mh 3

CAMBRIDGE—117 Trowbridge St.—Near car line; 5 minutes' walk from Harvard sq. Comfortably furnished room with kitchen privileges if wanted. All modern conveniences. Tel. University 8571-J. S4t: mh 1

CAMBRIDGE—33 Kirkland St. Tel. University 7039-J. Two nice double rooms, sunny, heated, private bath, excellent home cooking. Price reasonable. Will rent singly. Tourists accommodated. 6t (477L) mh 7

CAMBRIDGE. Corner room in homelike guest house, sunny, quiet, well heated and furnished, for 2 business men or women; 7 minutes Harvard sq. University 9214-R. 12t (780D) mh 1

CAMBRIDGE. Sunny, front room; continuous hot water; steam heat; two closets. Home surroundings; privileges. Fine location. Near Harvard sq. Suitable for two. Phone Porter 1136-W. (1195F)

CAMBRIDGE. For rent, 10 minutes from Harvard Sq., large front room, modern improvements, bathroom floor; board if desired. 105 Orchard st., Somerville 0715-R. WFS: mh 5

CAMBRIDGE. Furnished front suite with kitchen privileges; also small sunny room, near bathroom, modern improvements; 5 minutes from Harvard sq., near library. Tel. University 0741-J. WFS: mh 5

CAMBRIDGE. One large room, also smaller room; both sunny and attractive; 5 minutes to Harvard sq.; gentlemen preferred. Call University 6327-W between 7 and 9 P. M. WSS mh 5

CAMBRIDGE, Harvard St., near the Square. Pleasant front room in well-furnished, private apartment, desirable for discriminating person; modern improvements. Tel. University 6430-R.

CAMBRIDGE—For 1 or 2 persons, large, well furnished rooms, 4 windows, steam heated, electric lights, corner Mass. ave. and Inman st. University 5058-M. (873D)

CAMBRIDGE. For one or two persons, large, well furnished room; four windows; steam heat; electric light; corner Massachusetts ave. and Inman st. Tel. University 5058-M.

CAMBRIDGE. Sunny room in new apartment near Central sq., for business person. Call University 5331-R Sunday or after 6 P. M.

Revere St. Desirable rooms with first-class table board; convenient to steam, elevated and trolley cars. Jamaica 2728. WS6t: f 20

JAMAICA PLAIN. Two large, unfurnished, front, connecting rooms, housekeeping privileges, heat, electric light; near cars and Arboretum. Phone Jamaica 0902-M.

JAMAICA PLAIN. For rent to Protestant man, furnished front room, overlooking Pond. Private family. No other roomers. Telephone Jamaica 8487.

JAMAICA PLAIN. Large, furnished, front room for gentleman, first floor. 431 South Huntington ave.

LAKE COCHITUATE. Room with bath and sleeping-porch, board furnished, in beautiful home. Address O.G.W., Transcript, Boston 8. (893D)

MARLBORO ST., 16. Large front room; open fireplace; adjoining bath; large bay window, overlooking Public Garden; suitable for two. Also sunny single room. Copley 5151-W. MWS mh 8

MARLBORO ST., No. 436. Newly furnished rooms; one kitchenette apartment; electricity; hot and cold water. SMW: mh 8

MARLBORO ST., No. 407, Suite 3. Cosy, warm room. Business gentlemen only. 6t: mh 3

NEWBURY ST., Nos. 211 and 219. Two large, front, sunny rooms, with twin beds; electric lights; hot and cold water; bathroom adjoining; good home table; tourists accommodated. Copley 3213-R. KATHERINE GEORGE. SW8t f 16

NEWBURY ST., No. 242. Near Fairfield St. Fine front and sunny back square rooms, one with private bath, in house completely renovated. Rooms newly papered and painted; electricity. WFS: mh 5

NEWBURY ST., No. 85. One large room on second floor. 288 Newbury St. Two front rooms, one large and one medium-sized; electricity. Back Bay 4542.

NEWBURY ST., No. 263. To let, large and small rooms, modern conveniences, electric lights, telephone; moderate rent. SMW6t: mh 1

NEWBURY ST., No. 229. Large, nicely-furnished room, well heated, electric lights; near Copley sq. Permanent or tourists. SMW (902D) mh 8

NEWBURY ST., No. 304. Very comfortable single room in well appointed house. Good location. Business gentleman only. Please apply in person. SMW: mh 8

NEWBURY ST., No. 14. Near Public Garden. For rent, large front room, with running water; tourists accommodated. SMW: mh 8

NEWBURY ST., 121. Large front room with hot and cold water; also single room. Tel. Back Bay 7231. SMW: mh 8

NEWBURY ST., No. 260. Large, front room and one small side room, nicely furnished and moderately priced. STuThtc f 16

NEWTON—The Hollis. Cor. Hollis and Centre Sts. Rooms with

Must be financially able to carry reasonable amount of merchandise. This is a real opportunity and offers a splendid future for the right man. Apply to AKRON HOUSE SUPPLY CO., 418 Tremont Bldg., Boston, Mass.

Real Salesmen

Needed to assist me in Greater Boston. Company in business over half a century, with wait ng lists in some cities. Good income on strictly commission basis. Want only a Mason about is an for large earnings nd to become identified with one of the largest national sales organizations, with its opportunities for broad sales experience and advancement. The successful applicant will be carefully trained and assisted from time to time y the Division Manager. This is a real opportunity for one who can qualify. See Mr. S. DAVIES, 100 Boylston St., Room 836, Boston, Mass.

---

SALESMEN

So NOW is the Time to Advertise that Camp, Cottage, Farm or Summer Home

Discerning families are planning to spend next summer at the Seashore or in the Country or at the Mountains, and are making final arrangements for their

Summer Cottages

They know from experience that early decision will give them

By advertising your cottage or su Evening Transcript you will no dou lessees and settle this important qu expense.

Telephone

Transcript
Mar. 10

nd Players

CURRENT COURSE OF ORCHESTRAS AND ENSEMBLES

"GUEST" CONDUCTORS, NEW OR FAMILIAR

Professor Schneevoigt in Retrospect—Mr. Monteux and the People's Band—Their Ways and Their Accomplishment—The Flute Players in Accustomed Fettle

LESS disposed, at the Symphony Concert of Saturday evening, was Mr. Schnéevoigt to overdo all things. He abated his vehemence of arm and body; described fewer crescents from left to right of the orchestra; persuaded it in moderation rather than drove it by excess. With a like temperance, while he drained Beethoven's third "Leonora" Overture of "dramatic effects," he also sustained the progress of the music—a detail he had overlooked on Friday afternoon. Audibly, too, he relaxed his hard tonal tumults in Strauss's "Don Juan," was less disposed to the blurs of excitement; better measured his contrasts. His Mozart also seemed lighter-footed in the "Kleine Nacht-Musik"; while his version of Sibelius's Second Symphony remained, as on Friday, spare, sharp, sonorous and impassioned within the plain content of the music. Heartily, but less excitedly, a second audience applauded; while yet more effusively he poured from outspread hands his thanks upon the orchestra.

Yet within these bounds Mr Schnéevoigt remained on Saturday intrinsically the conductor of Friday. He prefers power to beauty; vigor to finesse; incisiveness to gradation; excitement to lucidity. He must always be stressing—the pace till it drags or is over-sped; the accent until it hammers; the outline until it seems carved and blocked from period to period; the tone until it pierces or floods; the contrast until it whispers or rages; the climax until it volleys and thunders. He must wring something from every measure and every sequence; infuse it into the players; launch it intensified upon all within earshot. His hand is never off the music. His presence looms insistently before the composer. He plainly "feels" both orchestra and audience. Firmer is his beat than fine his ear.

Now all these are exciting processes after ten years of the quieter ways of Muck and Monteux. In the twinkling of an eye as it were M. Schnéevoigt launched upon Bostonian audiences the theory and practice of conducting à la Mengelberg. Sharp and deep upon many was the sensation. They clapped the hands of gladness; wagged the tongues of elation; thronged to the conductor's ante-room; named him forthwith to lead the Boston Orchestra; evoked the "good old German days" when there were no intruding Parisians, no troubling modernists. The trustees have indeed done their work well. They have set up a rival to Mr. Kusevitzky before he has beaten so much as one measure to their orchestra or their audience.

Continued on Following Page

H. T. P.

The Conductor Persuasive

When the announcement was made some time ago that Mr. Monteux was to conduct the People's Symphony yesterday afternoon, one rather suspected that a considerable number would turn out to see what he would do with that aspiring organization. As a matter of fact, the S[illegible] James Theatre was flooded, even to st[illegible]ding room, by an exceedingly eager [illegible]nd almost immoderately responsive audien[illegible]ce. It appeared very often [illegible] those who were there were bent on applauding the conductor with undiminished vigor, regardless of the manner in which a certain piece might be played. But to return: What Mr. Monteux did with the People's Orchestra was precisely what one expected him to do. He brought it into something more nearly approaching the proper relation to its conductor. The mildness of Mr. Mason, the imperturbability of Mr. Mollenhauer—all that was gone, and in its stead one saw the breadth and vision and downright understanding that has enabled Mr. Monteux to bring the Boston Symphony to its present level. Mr. Monteux conducts first of all with an eye to the musicians. His interest is for the moment and the instrument; he addresses himself no less squarely to one part than to another; and as he changes from group to group the listener is deeply conscious of how far a conductor may go beyond the prosaic reading of the score, and of what a delicately responsive thing an orchestra is even to a relatively strange hand.

The programme set for yesterday was not an easy one, and appeared rather in the vein of a programme for an orchestra playing under unusual and singularly auspicious conditions. The gloriously sounding Cesar Franck Symphony in D minor, with which the concert began, is a pretty rigid test for good playing. Oddly enough it found its best translation in the opening, lento and then allegro, movement. For the applause which greeted Mr. Monteux's initial entrance seemed insufficient, under the circumstances, to unquiet the players. On the contrary, it apparently keyed them up until the sonorities surrounding the first theme emerged very definitely and persuasively. In the woodwind interludes of this first movement, as in the majestic sweep of the greater part of it, there was prompter response and finer phrasing than this orchestra has probably ever shown. For the second movement, the stinging of the harps had no match at all in the pizzicato; additional illustration of the fact that in legato passages the players do well enough, but that in the more secretive times they are too self-conscious. Even Mr. Monteux could not give such instants the magic of individuality. Beyond that the gnomish muttering of strings, and the early, dry notes of the chief theme were excellently turned. One of the great charms, of course, of this Symphony is the recurrence of themes one and two in the final movement. Where they fell to the horns Mr. Monteux again was the catalytic and blender; where the woodwinds caught them he was once more the stimulant.

Saint-Saëns's "Suite Algérienne," though a trifle spotty, was pretty convincingly done. The element of the picturesque sticks mostly to the first two parts, where wind the mingled sounds of streets and people and perhaps animals, all agreeably curious and exotic. In the third part, the "Rêverie du soir à Blidah," Saint-Saëns is quite himself, and in a languid, impressionable mood. A good deal of poor violin playing at this point rather dampened the effect. The "Marche Militaire Française," naturally the most spirited, fared the best.

Delightful as even the outline of Debussy's "Prélude à l' Après Midi d'un Faune" may be, it was considerable of a venture to include it in yesterday's programme. To catch the delicate graduations of wood and flute and violin the most accomplished orchestra is none too apt. The pastoral of subtle intent—in particular the impressionistic pastoral—is rare stuff. "Nature cannot be surprised in undress," said Emerson. "Beauty breaks in everywhere." Debussy here came very near surprise; and that is precisely what renders the interpretation so difficult. At least the orchestra made a very creditable attempt, in which occasional brilliance was not absent. In conclusion Mr. Monteux gave a spirited rendition of Chabrier's "Fête Polonaise," from "Le Roi malgré Lui," taking particular pains with the strenuous rhythms which so richly interlace it.

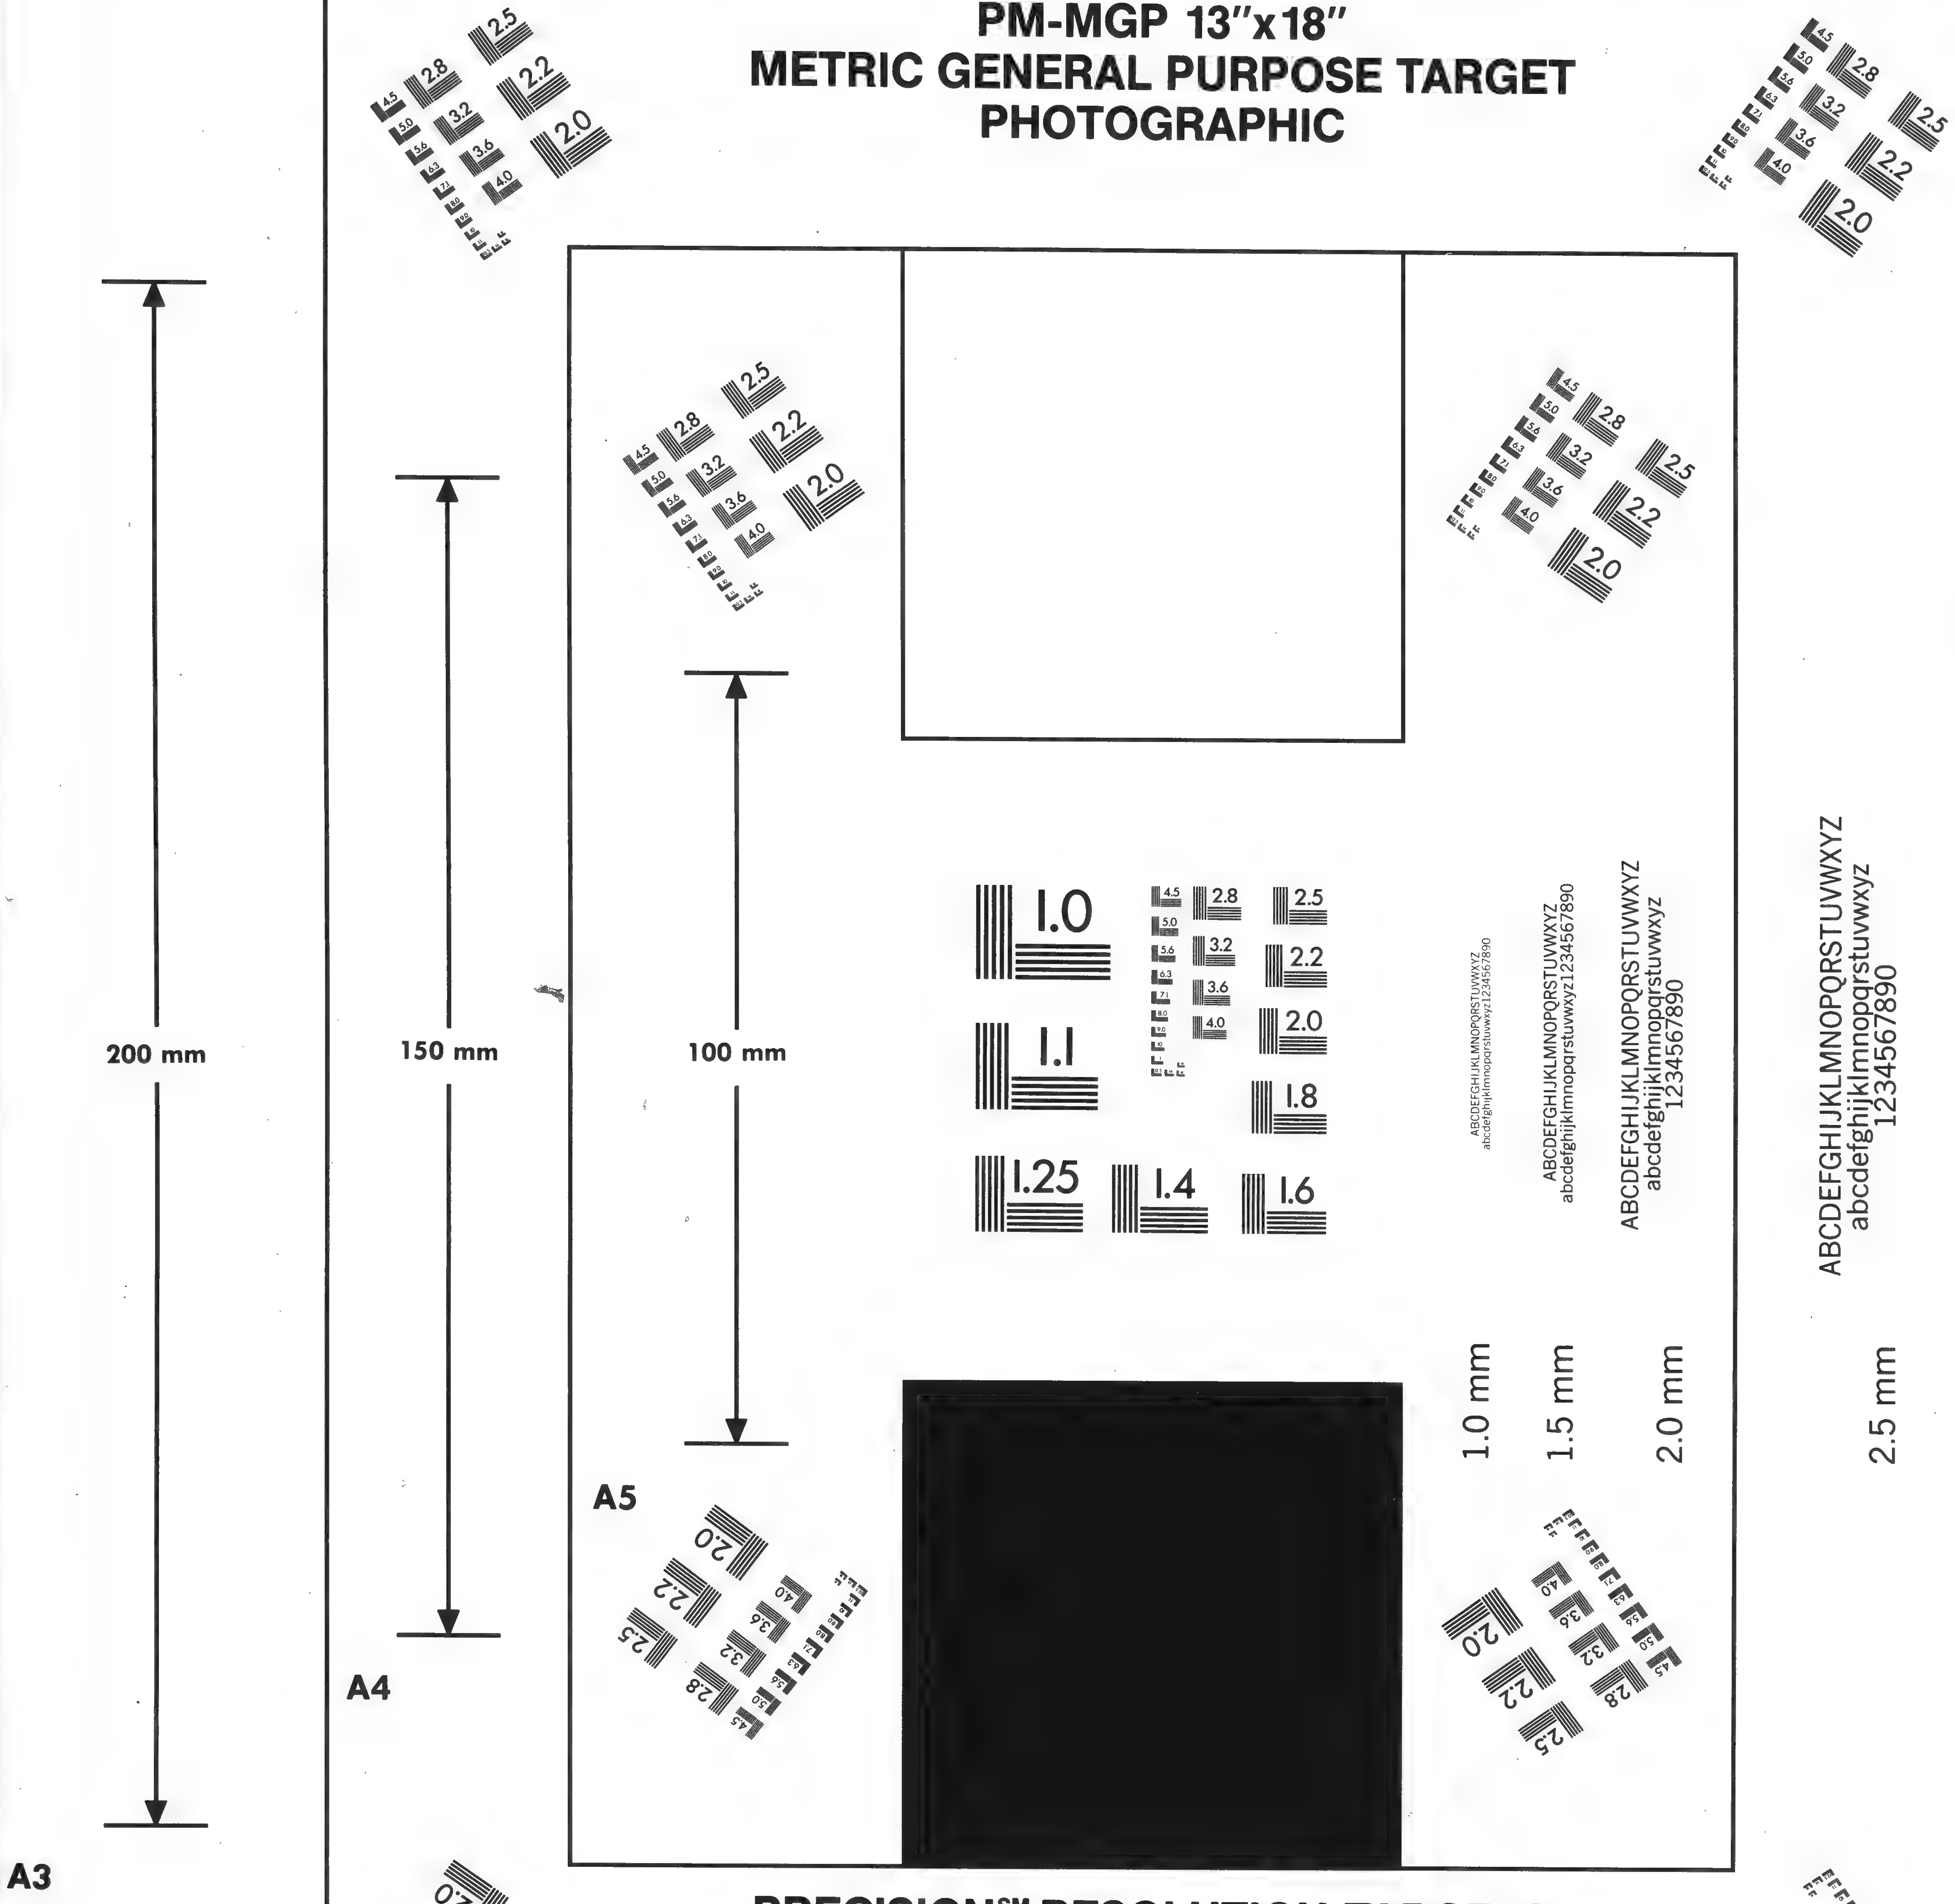
D. T. W. McC.

REDUCTION
RATIO
12x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
5.0
3.2
5.6
2.0
6.3
3.6
7.1
4.0
8.0
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm
A5
A4
A3

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

FRESH MUSIC AT THE POPS

A Swedish Rhapsody from Alfven for the First Time — Revived Overture from Rossini and New Transcriptions by Mr. Jacchia — "Deep River" as Orchestral Piece

GRIEG, Sinding and Svendsen aside, the composers of Scandinavia are but little known in this corner of the world. On occasion the name of one or another of these lesser Norwegians, Danes and Swedes appears on the programme of a song-recital; while once and again Miss Torpadie has been almost a propagandist for them. But their orchestral pieces are something of a rarity. Dr. Muck, it is true, had a discoverable fondness for the Northern music-makers. In 1907 he introduced to Boston a symphony by Victor Bendix; and the following year he did like service for a pair of short and sonorous pieces by Schjelderup. Then, toward the end of his second term as conductor of the Symphony Orchestra—in February, 1913—he played a Symphony in E major by Hugo Alfvén. No claim of completeness is made for this list, and purposely it does not reach back to the days when the now defunct symphonies and overtures of Gade ("Mrs. Mendelssohn") were still to be heard. Yet though we of New England do not know their pieces, within the last twenty-five years much music has come from the Scandinavian composers. Incidentally a far larger measure of it has been heard in Chicago and Minneapolis than in Symphony Hall.

At the Pop concert last evening, however, Mr. Jacchia brought to light a Swedish Rhapsody, "Midsomarvaka," by this same Alfvén—a composer born in Stockholm fifty-one years ago, the writer of three symphonies and of many other pieces in large form; a man much honored in his own country. Like most orchestral rhapsodies Alfvén's music has thematic basis in the songs and dances of the people, or in tunes written in the racial idiom. These Swedish melodies are agreeable to hear, and one or another of them has touch of Northern wildness. From them Alfvén has made his fantasia capably, with occasional flashes of orchestral imagination. Mr. Jacchia indeed seeking out and playing such a piece gives further proof of his effort to make the Pop programmes as unhackneyed as possible within the narrow limits established. But that the "Midsomarvaka" of itself proves Alfvén a composer who should be better among us may scarcely be said. Later in the evening a Norwegian Dance by Grieg put him quite in the shade.

On this same programme stood yet another piece not to be heard every day—Rossini's Overture to "La Gazza Ladra," almost forgotten opera produced at Milan in 1817. While not to be placed beside the Overtures to "Semiramide," "The Italian in Algiers" or the piece used as Overture to the "Barber of Seville," this Introduction to "The Thieving Magpie" contains many passages in the sparkling vein that is Rossini's own, and it furnishes renewed evidence of his rare mastery of the orchestra. That Berlioz should have so scorned the music of Rossini is something of a mystery since the Italian's ability to draw from the orchestra a brilliant, scintillating quality of tone—and in this he had no true precursor—should by every right have provoked the Frenchman's deepest admiration.

Since Mr. Jacchia may not readily find for his programmes all the new and suitable music that he desires, he is constrained to make some of his own—not in the form of original compositions, but in transcriptions of the pieces of others. His array of such transcriptions is now an imposing one, and he constantly adds to the list. During the past winter he turned his attention to the Preludes of Chopin and to certain Afro-American songs. Last evening his arrangement of H. T. Burleigh's version of "Deep River" was played as an extra number and proved an effective bit of scoring, emphasizing and enhancing the peculiar appeal of the music. This "Deep River" bids fair to rival in popularity Mr. Jacchia's transcription of the "Volga Boatmen's Song." And with due respect to Russian feelings, is not the Negro tune musically of greater worth and interest?

W. S. S.

At The Pops Tonight

Entrance of the Gladiators......Fucik
Overture to the Opera, "Joan of Arc" Verdi
Waltz, "Très-Jolie"........Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet"..Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers".Wagner
Flute Solo, "Woodland Stream".Wetzger
Waltz, "Souvenir"..........Krogmann
Finale to the Fourth Symphony Chaikovsky
Overture to "Mignon"..........Thomas
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann" ....Offenbach
March, "King Cotton"...........Sousa

Conductor: A. Jacchia
Soloist: Arthur Brooke

TRANS. JUNE. 1.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Entrance of the Gladiators...........Fucik
Overture, "Jeanne d'Arc"..............Verdi
Waltz, "Tres Jolie"..............Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet".....Gounod
Prelude, "Mastersingers"...........Wagner
Flute solo, "Woodland Stream".....Metzger
Arthur Brooke.
"Valse Souvenir"...............Krogmann
Finale, "Fourth Symphony"....Tchaikovsky
Overture, "Mignon"................Thomas
Barcarolle, "Tales of Hoffman"..Offenbach
March, "King Cotton"................Sousa

ADVTSR. JUNE. 1.

POPS PROGRAM

The following music will be played at the Pop Concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Entrance of the Gladiators........Fucik
Overture to "Jeanne d'Arc"........Verdi
Waltz, "Tres Jolie"............Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet".....Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersignes"..Wagner
Flute Solo: "Woodland Stream"..Metzger
Arthur Brooke
"Valse Souvenir"...............Krogmann
Finale, "Fourth Symphony"...Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Mignon"...........Thomas
Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffman" Offenbach
March, "King Cotton" ....Sousa

HERALD-JUNE 1.

PROGRESS OF THE POPS

"Norwegian Night" for Innovation—Mr. Jacchia Strews His Programmes with Fresh Pieces—Incidents of Next Week

A NEW species of "night" has been discovered for The Pops—to wit, a Norwegian Night, with a programme through which the composers of Norway predominate. It will befall on Wednesday next with pieces from Halvorsen, Grieg, Ole Bull, Svendsen, Sibelius (not too exactly a Norwegian) and a medley of folk-songs. Six items out of eleven are so allotted, leaving five to Mr. Jacchia's usual miscellany.

Throughout next week, indeed, the conductor's programmes abound in unexpected pieces. On Monday, for example, he lists Wagner's Overture to his opera, "The Flying Dutchman" and two numbers from Debussy's "Little Suite." For Tuesday, prompted no doubt by the recent revival of "L'Africaine" at the Metropolitan, he sets a fantasia from that opera; while Mr. Speyer will also be heard in the solo for English Horn that is Introduction to the third act of "Tristan." Meyerbeer versus Wagner even to The Pops. The programme for Thursday brings a novel piece, "Caribbean Legend," by Mr. Sequeira, young composer, now settled in Boston; more of Mr. Jacchia's skilful and sympathetic arrangements for orchestra of negro folk-pieces; and a Tarantella for Flute and Clarinet in duet between Mr. Brooke and Mr. Mimart. Saint-Saëns, who dabbled in everything, wrote the piece. Mr. Jacchia, it appears, has also scored for orchestra Mendelssohn's "Rondo Capriccioso" and sets it among his pieces for Friday, along with the barbaric Tartar dances from Borodin's opera, "Prince Igor." To Saturday evening is alloted the usual light miscellany, with Glazunov's little known "Finnish Rhapsody" for spice, while for the third of the concerts on Sunday evening—set for June 10—operatic numbers, Russian, Italian, French and German, are in order.

For the solo-numbers of the week besides those already specified, Mr. Theodorowicz, the violinist, will play on Tuesday the "Meditation" from Massenet's opera, "Thais;" Mr. Lunger will sing on Thursday Iago's sinister soliloquy from Verdi's "Othello;" and Mr. Keller, the violoncellist, will play on Friday Wolfram's ballad to the evening star in "Tannhäuser." Twice also on Monday, with Mr. Chadwick leading, the chorus of the New England Conservatory will sing.

At the Pops Tonight

March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar
Overture, "Robespierre".........Litolff
Waltz from "Eugen Onégin," Chaikovsky
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saëns
Prelude and Carillon from the Music to "L'Arlesienne"............Bizet
Ave Maria ....Bach-Gounod
Prelude to Act III. of "La Traviata," Verdi
Ride of the Valkyrs...........Wagner
Rhapsody, "España"..........Chabrier
Far From the Ball...............Gillet
Furlana from "La Gioconda"..Ponchielli

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 2

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The Pops Symphony Orchestra, under Agide Jacchia, will present the following program in Symphony Hall tonight:

Pomp and Circumstance..............Elgar
Overture, "Robespierre" ....Litolff
Waltz from "Eugen Onegin"....Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah".Saint-Saens
Suite, "L'Arlesienne" ....Bizet
Ave Maria (solo, violin, organ, harp and strings).....................Bach-Gounod
Prelude, Act 3, "Traviata"...........Verdi
Ride of the Valkyries.................Wagner
Rhapsody, "Espana" ....Chabrier
Loin du Bal............................Gillet
Furlana, "La Gioconda"............Ponchielli

ADVTSR. JUNE. 2.

Pops Program

There will be several features of interest at the Pop concerts in Symphony hall during the coming week.

On Wednesday, June 6, the music of Norway will be emphasized. The third Sunday Pop concert of the season will take place a week from tomorrow, June 10, with an operatic program.

The program for tonight follows: Pomp and Circumstance, Elgar; Overture, "Maximilian Robespierre," Litolff; Waltz from "Eugen Onegin," Tchaiskovsky; Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"; Suite No. 1 ("L'Arlesienne") (a) Prelude, (b) Carillon, Bizet; Ave Maria, solo violin, harp, organ and strings, Bach-Gounod; Prelude to Act 3, "La Traviata," Verdi; Ride of the Valkyries, Wagner; Rhapsody, "España," Chabrier; Loin du Bal, Gillet; Furlana from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli.

TELE. JUNE 2

"Pops" Program for Tonight

"Pomp and Circumstance"....Elgar
Overture, "Maximilian Robespierre" Litolff
Waltz, from "Eugen Onegin" Tschaikowsky
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saëns
Suite No. 1 "L'Arlésienne"....Bizet
"Ave Maria" ....Bach-Gounod
Prelude to Act III, "La Traviata" Verdi
Ride of the Valkyries......Wagner
Rhapsody, "España"......Chabrier
"Loin du Bal"...............Gillet
Furlana from "La Gioconda" Ponchielli

MONITOR. JUNE 2.

"POPS" PROGRAMS

There will be several features of interest at the Pop concert in Symphony hall the coming week.

In addition to the symphonic music to be offered by the Pops Symphony Orchestra under their noted leader, Agide Jacocchia, there will be solo numbers of interest on almost every night of the week.

On Wednesday, June 6, the music of Norway will be emphasized. The third Sunday Pop concert of the season will take place a week from tomorrow, June 10, with an operatic program.

The program for tonight follows:

Pomp and Circumstance............Elgar
Overture, "Maximilian Robespierre" Litolff
Waltz from "Eugen Onegin"..Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, Samson and Delilah
Suite No. 1 ("L'Arlesienne")........Bizet
a Prelude
b Carillon
Ave Maria...................Bach-Gounod
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings)
Prelude to Act III, "La Traviata"..Verdi
Ride of the Valkyries.............Wagner
Rhapsody, "Espana"...............Chabrier
Loin du Bal..........................Gillet
Furlana from "La Gioconda"....Ponchielli

TRAV. JUNE. 2.

Symphony Hall "Pops"

The "Pop" program this week at Symphony Hall, under the leadership of Agide Jacchia, will include several features of interest. Tomorrow will be the annual night of the New England Conservatory of Music, with a group of songs, by the Conservatory Chorus under Mr Chadwick's direction.

The program Tuesday will include Liszt's First Rhapsody, an English horn solo from "Tristan," Mascagni's "Hymn to the Sun," and other numbers.

Wednesday the program will feature the music of Norway. Thursday, on which Euclid Lodge will celebrate, will include the "William Tell" overture, fantasy, "The Valkyrie"; Jacchia's arrangement of Afro-American folk songs and a solo by Roberts Lunger, baritone. Next Sunday will bring the third Sunday "Pop" concert of the season, with an operatic program.

GLOBE-JUNE. 3.

POPS PROGRAMS

The special nights of Pop concerts for this week at Symphony hall (all of which are open to the public) will include New England Conservatory Night on Monday, a Norwegian program on Wednesday, Euclid Lodge Night on Thursday, and an operatic program on Sunday, June 10, which will be the third Sunday Pop concert of the season.

MONDAY

Marche Militaire.......................Schubert
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"..Wagner
Waltz, "Estudiantina"...........Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Aida"...........................Verdi
From the "Petite Suite"............Debussy
(a) En Bateau. (b) Cortege.
Carillon from "L'Arlesienne"..........Bizet
Scherzo, Concerto in G minor......Saint-Saens
New England Conservatory chorus; George W. Chadwick, director—
(a) Landerkennung ("Fighting Land").Greig
(b) Ecce Jam Noctis..............Chadwick
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"......Tchaikovsky
Spanish Dance, Panaderos..........Glazounov
Indian March from "L'Africaine"...Meyerbeer

TUESDAY

Overture to "La Forza del Destine".....Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"...............Komzak
Meditation from "Thais"............Massenet
(Solo violin, Mr. Theodorowicz.)
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"...........Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody...................Liszt
Prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde".Wagner
(Solo English horn, Mr. Speyer.)
Phantoms...................................Chaloff
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris".......Mascagni
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor"....Donizetti
Minuet.......................................Bolzoni
Invitation to the Dance.........Weber-Berlioz

WEDNESDAY

Entrance of the Boyards............Halvorsen
Overture to "Rienzi"......................Wagner
Waltz, "Tales from the Vienna Woods".Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"..............Leoncavallo
Suite, "Peer Gynt"........................Grieg
(a) Morning Mood. (b) Aase's Death.
(c) In the Hall of the Mountain King.
Saeterjentens Sondag ("Solitude on the Mountain")........................Ole Bull
Valse Triste.............................Sibelius
Carnival in Paris.....................Svendsen
"Ekko fra Norden," Selection of Norwegian Airs.....................Arr. by Wick
Ave Maria.....................Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Procession of Bacchus.....................Delibes

THURSDAY

Coronation March.......................Svendsen
Overture to "William Tell"...........Rossini
Caribbean Legend......................Sequeira
Fantasia, "The Valkyrie"...............Wagner
Afro-American Folk Songs....Arr. by Jacchia
(a) "Bury Me in de Eas'."
(b) Musieu Batnjo.
(c) "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen."
Baritone Solo, Iago's Credo from "Othello".Verdi
Mr. Lunger.
Duet for flute and clarinet, "Tarantelle"..........................Saint-Saens
Messrs. Brooke and Mimart.
Marche Slave.......................Tchaikovsky
Selection, "The Defender"..............Dennee
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"..................Vol'stedt
Hungarian March.........................Berlioz

FRIDAY

Overture to "Fra Diavolo"..............Auber
Waltzes from "Der Rosencavalier"..R. Strauss
March of the "Little Lead Soldiers"....Pierne
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor".Borodin
"Auld Lang Syne."
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"....Tchaikovsky
Song to the Evening Star from "Tannhaeuser"..........................Wagner
Solo violoncello, Mr. Keller.
"A Kiss in the Dark" from "Orange Blossoms"............................Herbert
Rondo Capriccioso..........Mendelssohn-Jacchia
Fantasia, "La Traviata"..................Verdi
Largo (solo violin, harp, organ and strings)...............................Handel
March, "Washington Post"...............Sousa

SATURDAY

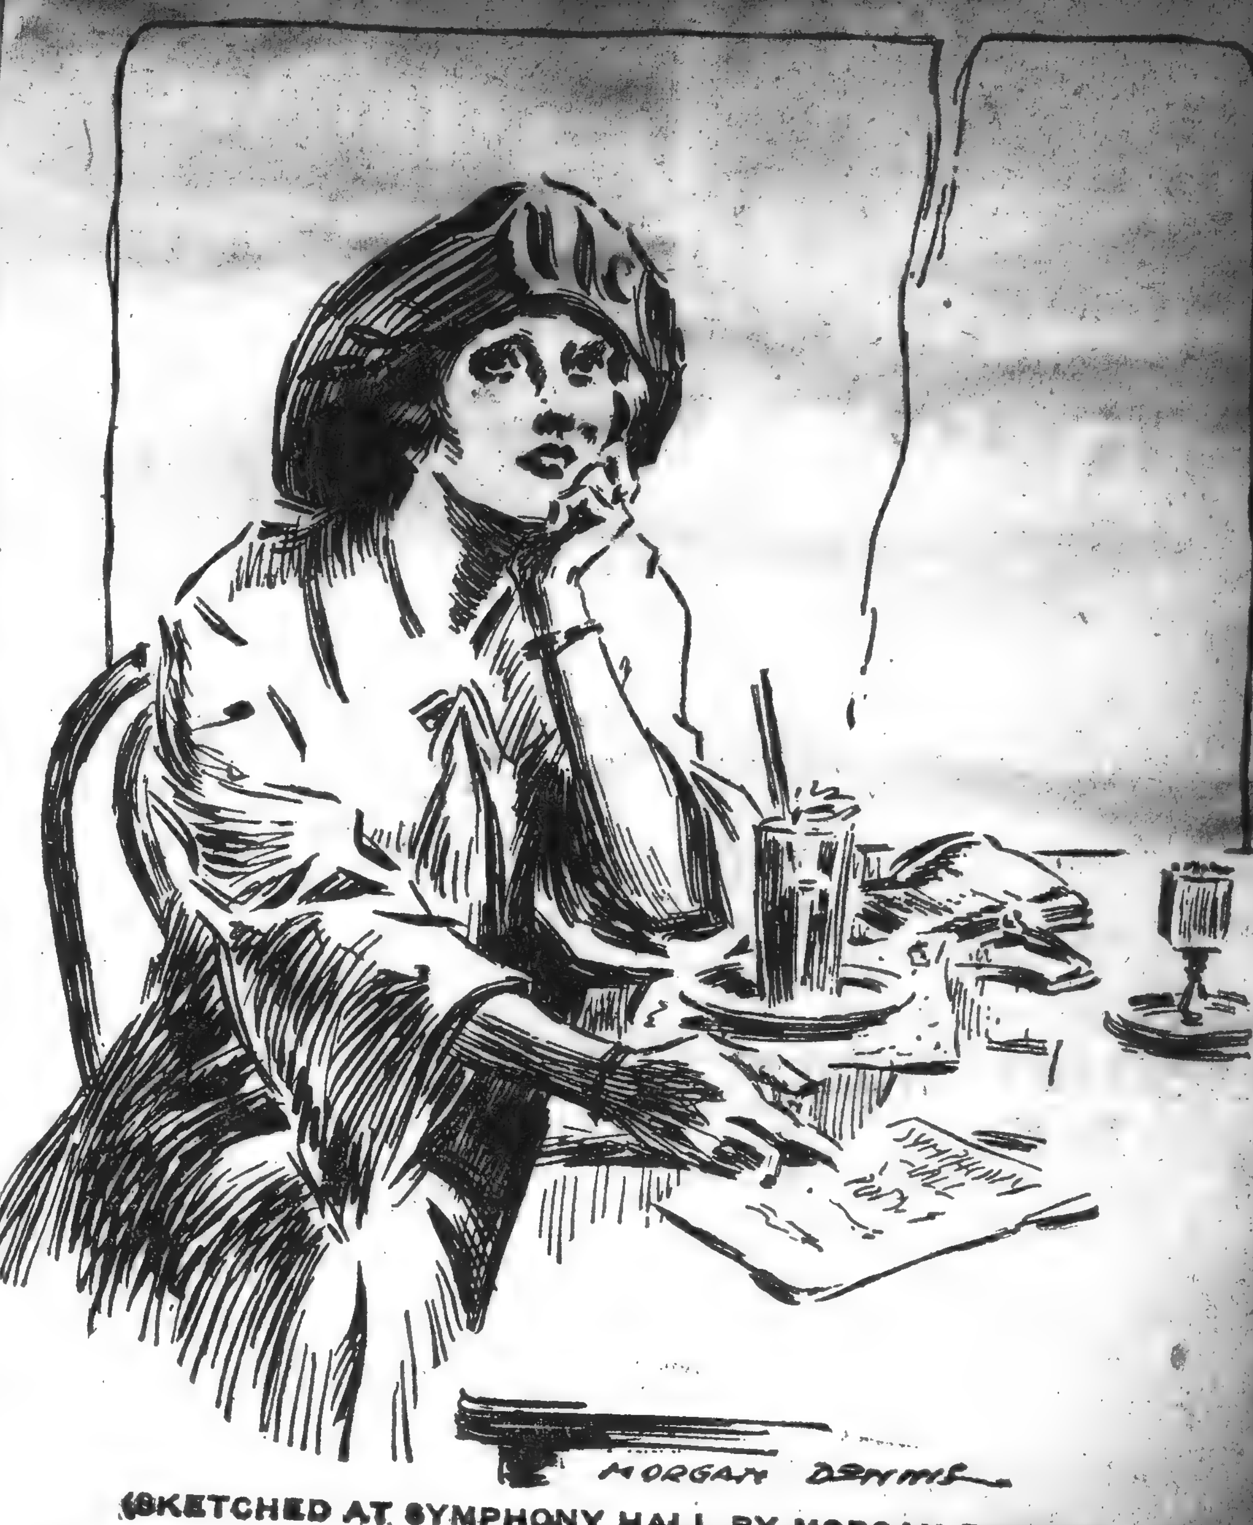
March, "Semper Fidelis"..................Sousa
Overture to "Mignon"....................Thomas
Waltz, "Waves of the Danube"......Ivanovici
Fantasia, "The Jewels of the Madonna"......................Wolf-Ferrari
Prelude to Lohengrin....................Wagner
Gypsy Dance from "Henry VIII"...Saint-Saens
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann"..........................Offenbach
Finnish Rhapsody.....................Glazounov
Selection, "Il Trovatore"................Verdi
En Sourdine...............................Tellam
American Fantasy.........................Herbert

SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM

"Eugen Onegin," polonaise........Tchaikovsky
"William Tell," overture................Rossini
"Thais," meditation..................Massenet
Solo violin, Mr. Theodorowicz.
"Samson and Delilah," bacchanale..Saint-Saens
"Madame Butterfly," fantasia.........Puccini
"Othello," tempest scene..................Verdi
"Tristan and Isolde," prelude and love-death.................................Wagner
"Carmen," fantasia..........................Bizet
"Cavalleria Rusticana," intermezzo...Mascagni
"La Gioconda," dance of the hours..Ponchielli

HERALD-JUNE 3.

THE "POP" GIRL



(SKETCHED AT SYMPHONY HALL BY MORGAN DENNIS)

POP CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL

Agide Jacchia, noted concert and opera conductor, leads the symphony orchestra playing every night at the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall. The concerts begin at 8 p. m. and continue until about 11. Light refreshments are served during weekday nights.

On June 10 will come the third of th especial Sunday night Pops, this time with an operatic program a feature in which Conductor Jacchia specializes.

ADVTSR. JUNE. 3.

At the Pops Tonight

Military March ....Schubert
Overture to the Opera, "The Flying Dutchman" ....Wagner
Waltz, "Estudiantina".....Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Aida"..................Verdi
Two Movements ("En Bateau"; "Cortège") from the "Little Suite." Debussy
Carillon from the Music to "L'Arlesienne" ....Bizet
Scherzo from the Concerto in G minor for Piano and Orchestra..Saint-Saëns
Choral Numbers:
Sighting Land................Greig
Ecce Jam Noctis........ Chadwick
Overture, "1812".........Chaikovsky
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos"..Glazunov
Indian March from "L'Africaine," .... Meyerbeer

Conductors:
A. Jacchia G. W. Chadwick

Assisting:
New England Conservatory Chorus
Jesus Sanroma, Pianist

TRANS-JUNE. 4.

AT THE POPS

The New England Conservatory of Music will have their annual evening at the pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The programme for this occasion, which is open to the public, follows:

Marche Militaire .... Schubert
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"..Wagner
Waltz, "Estudiantina" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Aida" .... Verdi
From the "Petite Suite"............Debussy
a. En Bateau b. Cortege
Carillon from "L'Arlesienne" .... Bizet
Scherzo, Concerto in G. Minor..Saint-Saens
(Piano solo—Jesus Sanroma)
New England Conservatory Chorus
George W. Chadwick, conductor
a. Landerkennung (Sighting Land") Grieg
b. Ecce Jam Noctis .... Chadwick
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"....Tchaikovsky
Spanish Dance, Panaderos ...... Glazounov
Indian March from "L'Africaine"..Meyerbeer

ADVTSR-JUNE 4.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

This is New England Conservatory night at the Pops. The program follows:—

Marche Militaire.......................Schubert
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"..Wagner
Waltz, "Estudiantina"...........Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Aida"...........................Verdi
"Petite Suite"............................Debussy
Carillon, "L'Arlesienne"....................Bizet
Scherzo, Concerto in G minor...Saint-Saens
(Piano Solo—Jesus Sanroma)
New England Conservatory Chorus.
George W. Chadwick, Conductor.
Landerkennung ("Sighting Land")...Grieg
Ecce Jam Noctis....................Chadwick
Overture, "1812"..................Tchaikovsky
Spanish Dance, Panaderos..........Glazonnov
Indian March, "L'Africaine"......Meyerbeer

ADVTSR. JUNE. 4.

POP CONCERT TONIGHT

The program to be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra at Symphony hall tonight follows:

Overture to "La Forza del Destino," Verdi; Waltz, "Joyous Vienna," Konzak; Meditation from "Thais," Massanet, solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz; Fantasia, "L'Africaine," Meyerbeer; First Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; Phantoms, Chaloff; Hymn to the Sun from "Iris," Mascagni; Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor," Donizetti; Minuet, Bolzoni; Invitation to the Dance, Weber-Berlioz.

TELE. JUNE 5.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Overture to "La Forza del Destino" Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"....Komzak
Meditation from "Thaïs"...Massenet
(Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz)
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"...Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde" ....Wagner
(Solo English horn, Louis Speyer)
"Phantoms" ....Chaloff
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris" Mascagni
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor" Donizetti
Minuet ....Bolzoni
"Invitation to the Dance" Weber-Berlioz

MONITOR. JUNE 5.

At The Pops Tonight

Overture to the Opera, "La Forza del Destino" ....Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna".......Komzak
Meditation from "Thais".....Massenet
Fantasia, "L'Africaine".....Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody.......Liszt
Prelude to Act III. of "Tristan and Isolde" ....Wagner
Phantoms ....Chaloff
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris"..Mascagni
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor". Donizetti
Minuet ....Bolzoni
Invitation to the Dance...Weber-Berlioz

Conductor: A. Jacchia

Soloists:
J. Theodorowicz; Louis Speyer

TRANS-JUNE 5.

[108]

FRESH MUSIC AT THE POPS

A Swedish Rhapsody from Alfven for the First Time — Revived Overture from Rossini and New Transcriptions by Mr. Jacchia — "Deep River" as Orchestral Piece

GRIEG, Sinding and Svendsen aside, the composers of Scandinavia are but little known in this corner of the world. On occasion the name of one or another of these lesser Norwegians, Danes and Swedes appears on the programme of a song-recital; while once and again Miss Torpadie has been almost a propagandist for them. But their orchestral pieces are something of a rarity. Dr. Muck, it is true, had a discoverable fondness for the Northern music-makers. In 1907 he introduced to Boston a symphony by Victor Bendix; and the following year he did like service for a pair of short and sonorous pieces by Schjelderup. Then, toward the end of his second term as conductor of the Symphony Orchestra—in February, 1913—he played a Symphony in E major by Hugo Alfvén. No claim of completeness is made for this list, and purposely it does not reach back to the days when the now defunct symphonies and overtures of Gade ("Mrs. Mendelssohn") were still to be heard. Yet though we of New England do not know their pieces, within the last twenty-five years much music has come from the Scandinavian composers. Incidentally a far larger measure of it has been heard in Chicago and Minneapolis than in Symphony Hall.

At the Pop concert last evening, however, Mr. Jacchia brought to light a Swedish Rhapsody, "Midsomarvaka," by this same Alfvén—a composer born in Stockholm fifty-one years ago, the writer of three symphonies and of many other pieces in large form; a man much honored in his own country. Like most orchestral rhapsodies Alfvén's music has thematic basis in the songs and dances of the people, or in tunes written in the racial idiom. These Swedish melodies are agreeable to hear, and one or another of them has touch of Northern wildness. From them Alfvén has made his fantasia capably, with occasional flashes of orchestral imagination. Mr. Jacchia indeed seeking out and playing such a piece gives further proof of his effort to make the Pop programmes as unhackneyed as possible within the narrow limits established. But that the "Midsomarvaka" of itself proves Alfvén a composer who should be better among us may scarcely be said. Later in the evening a Norwegian Dance by Grieg put him quite in the shade.

On this same programme stood yet another piece not to be heard every day—Rossini's Overture to "La Gazza Ladra," almost forgotten opera produced at Milan in 1817. While not to be placed beside the Overtures to "Semiramide," "The Italian in Algiers" or the piece used as Overture to the "Barber of Seville," this Introduction to "The Thieving Magpie" contains many passages in the sparkling vein that is Rossini's own, and it furnishes renewed evidence of his rare mastery of the orchestra. That Berlioz should have so scorned the music of Rossini is something of a mystery since the Italian's ability to draw from the orchestra a brilliant, scintillating quality of tone—and in this he had no true precursor—should by every right have provoked the Frenchman's deepest admiration.

Since Mr. Jacchia may not readily find for his programmes all the new and suitable music that he desires, he is constrained to make some of his own—not in the form of original compositions, but in transcriptions of the pieces of others. His array of such transcriptions is now an imposing one, and he constantly adds to the list. During the past winter he turned his attention to the Preludes of Chopin and to certain Afro-American songs. Last evening his arrangement of H. T. Burleigh's version of "Deep River" was played as an extra number and proved an effective bit of scoring, emphasizing and enhancing the peculiar appeal of the music. This "Deep River" bids fair to rival in popularity Mr. Jacchia's transcription of the "Volga Boatmen's Song." And with due respect to Russian feelings, is not the Negro tune musically of greater worth and interest?

W. S. S.

At The Pops Tonight

Entrance of the Gladiators......Fucik
Overture to the Opera, "Joan of Arc" ......Verdi
Waltz, "Très-Jolie"........Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet"..Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers".Wagner
Flute Solo, "Woodland Stream".Wetzger
Waltz, "Souvenir"..........Krogmann
Finale to the Fourth Symphony ......Chaikovsky
Overture to "Mignon"..........Thomas
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann" ....Offenbach
March, "King Cotton"...........Sousa

Conductor: A. Jacchia
Soloist: Arthur Brooke

TRANS. JUNE. 1.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Entrance of the Gladiators...........Fucik
Overture, "Jeanne d'Arc"............Verdi
Waltz, "Tres Jolie"...........Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet".....Gounod
Prelude, "Mastersingers"..........Wagner
Flute solo, "Woodland Stream".....Metzger
Arthur Brooke.
"Valse Souvenir"...............Krogmann
Finale, "Fourth Symphony"....Tchaikovsky
Overture, "Mignon"...............Thomas
Barcarolle, "Tales of Hoffman"..Offenbach
March, "King Cotton"...............Sousa

ADVTSR. JUNE. 1.

POPS PROGRAM

The following music will be played at the Pop Concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Entrance of the Gladiators..........Fucik
Overture to "Jeanne d'Arc"..........Verdi
Waltz, "Tres Jolie"............Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet".....Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersignes"..Wagner
Flute Solo: "Woodland Stream"..Metzger
Arthur Brooke
"Valse Souvenir"..............Krogmann
Finale, "Fourth Symphony"...Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Mignon"...........Thomas
Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffman" Offenbach
March, "King Cotton" ....Sousa

HERALD-JUNE 1.

PROGRESS OF THE POPS

"Norwegian Night" for Innovation—Mr. Jacchia Strews His Programmes with Fresh Pieces—Incidents of Next Week

A NEW species of "night" has been discovered for The Pops—to wit, a Norwegian Night, with a programme through which the composers of Norway predominate. It will befall on Wednesday next with pieces from Halvorsen, Grieg, Ole Bull, Svendsen, Sibelius (not too exactly a Norwegian) and a medley of folksongs. Six items out of eleven are so allotted, leaving five to Mr. Jacchia's usual miscellany.

Throughout next week, indeed, the conductor's programmes abound in unexpected pieces. On Monday, for example, he lists Wagner's Overture to his opera, "The Flying Dutchman" and two numbers from Debussy's "Little Suite." For Tuesday, prompted no doubt by the recent revival of "L'Africaine" at the Metropolitan, he sets a fantasia from that opera; while Mr. Speyer will also be heard in the solo for English Horn that is Introduction to the third act of "Tristan." Meyerbeer versus Wagner even to The Pops. The programme for Thursday brings a novel piece, "Caribbean Legend," by Mr. Sequeira, young composer, now settled in Boston; more of Mr. Jacchia's skilful and sympathetic arrangements for orchestra of negro folk-pieces; and a Tarantella for Flute and Clarinet in duet between Mr. Brooke and Mr. Mimart. Saint-Saëns, who dabbled in everything, wrote the piece. Mr. Jacchia, it appears, has also scored for orchestra Mendelssohn's "Rondo Capriccioso" and sets it among his pieces for Friday, along with the barbaric Tartar dances from Borodin's opera, "Prince Igor." To Saturday evening is alloted the usual light miscellany, with Glazunov's little known "Finnish Rhapsody" for spice, while for the third of the concerts on Sunday evening—set for June 10—operatic numbers, Russian, Italian, French and German, are in order.

For the solo-numbers of the week besides those already specified, Mr. Theodorowicz, the violinist, will play on Tuesday the "Meditation" from Massenet's opera, "Thais;" Mr. Lunger will sing on Thursday Iago's sinister soliloquy from Verdi's "Othello;" and Mr. Keller, the violoncellist, will play on Friday Wolfram's ballad to the evening star in "Tannhäuser." Twice also on Monday, with Mr. Chadwick leading, the chorus of the New England Conservatory will sing.

At the Pops Tonight

March, "Pomp and Circumstance," ......Elgar
Overture, "Robespierre"........Litolff
Waltz from "Eugen Onégin," ......Chaikovsky
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," ......Saint-Saëns
Prelude and Carillon from the Music to "L'Arlesienne"...........Bizet
Ave Maria ....Bach-Gounod
Prelude to Act III. of "La Traviata," ......Verdi
Ride of the Valkyrs............Wagner
Rhapsody, "España".........Chabrier
Far From the Ball...............Gillet
Furlana from "La Gioconda"..Ponchielli

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 2.

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

The Pops Symphony Orchestra, under Agide Jacchia, will present the following program in Symphony Hall tonight:

Pomp and Circumstance.............Elgar
Overture, "Robespierre" ....Litolff
Waltz from "Eugen Onegin"....Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah".Saint-Saens
Suite, "L'Arlesienne" ....Bizet
Ave Maria (solo, violin, organ, harp and strings) ....Bach-Gounod
Prelude, Act 3, "Traviata"...........Verdi
Ride of the Valkyries..............Wagner
Rhapsody, "Espana" ....Chabrier
Loin du Bal.......................Gillet
Furlana, "La Gioconda"...........Ponchielli

ADVTSR. JUNE. 2.

Pops Program

There will be several features of interest at the Pop concerts in Symphony hall during the coming week.

On Wednesday, June 6, the music of Norway will be emphasized. The third Sunday Pop concert of the season will take place a week from tomorrow, June 10, with an operatic program.

The program for tonight follows: Pomp and Circumstance, Elgar; Overture, "Maximilian Robespierre," Litolff; Waltz from "Eugen Onegin," Tchaiskovsky; Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"; Suite No. 1 ("L'Arlesienne") (a) Prelude, (b) Carillon, Bizet; Ave Maria, solo violin, harp, organ and strings, Bach-Gounod; Prelude to Act 3, "La Traviata," Verdi; Ride of the Valkyries, Wagner; Rhapsody, "Espana," Chabrier; Loin du Bal, Gillet; Furlana from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli.

TELE. JUNE 2

"Pops" Program for Tonight

"Pomp and Circumstance".....Elgar
Overture, "Maximilian Robespierre" Litolff
Waltz, from "Eugen Onegin" Tschaikowsky
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saëns
Suite No. 1 "L'Arlésienne"....Bizet
"Ave Maria" ....Bach-Gounod
Prelude to Act III, "La Traviata" Verdi
Ride of the Valkyries......Wagner
Rhapsody, "España"......Chabrier
"Loin du Bal"................Gillet
Furlana from "La Gioconda" Ponchielli

MONITOR. JUNE 2.

"POPS" PROGRAMS

There will be several features of interest at the Pop concert in Symphony hall the coming week.

In addition to the symphonic music to be offered by the Pops Symphony Orchestra under their noted leader, Agide Jacocchia, there will be solo numbers of interest on almost every night of the week.

On Wednesday, June 6, the music of Norway will be emphasized. The third Sunday Pop concert of the season will take place a week from tomorrow, June 10, with an operatic program.

The program for tonight follows:

Pomp and Circumstance...........Elgar
Overture, "Maximillian Robespierre" Litolff
Waltz from "Eugen Onegin"..Tchaikovsky
Fantasia, Samson and Delilah
Suite No. 1 ("L'Arlesienne").......Bizet
a. Prelude
b Carillon
Ave Maria.................Bach-Gounod
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings)
Prelude to Act III, "La Traviata"..Verdi
Ride of the Valkyries.............Wagner
Rhapsody, "Espana"...........Chabrier
Loin du Bal.......................Gillet
Furlana from "La Gioconda"....Ponchielli

TRAV. JUNE. 2.

Symphony Hall "Pops"

The "Pop" program this week at Symphony Hall, under the leadership of Agide Jacchia, will include several features of interest. Tomorrow will be the annual night of the New England Conservatory of Music, with a group of songs by the Conservatory Chorus under Mr Chadwick's direction.

The program Tuesday will include Liszt's First Rhapsody, an English horn solo from "Tristan," Mascagni's "Hymn to the Sun," and other numbers.

Wednesday the program will feature the music of Norway. Thursday, on which Euclid Lodge will celebrate, will include the "William Tell" overture, fantasy, "The Valkyrie"; Jacchia's arrangement of Afro-American folk songs and a solo by Roberts Lunger, baritone.

Next Sunday will bring the third Sunday "Pop" concert of the season, with an operatic program.

GLOBE-JUNE. 3.

POPS PROGRAMS

The special nights of Pop concerts for this week at Symphony hall (all of which are open to the public) will include New England Conservatory Night on Monday, a Norwegian program on Wednesday, Euclid Lodge Night on Thursday, and an operatic program on Sunday, June 10, which will be the third Sunday Pop concert of the season.

MONDAY

Marche Militaire....................Schubert
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"..Wagner
Waltz, "Estudiantina"..............Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Aida"......................Verdi
From the "Petite Suite"..............Debussy
(a) En Bateau. (b) Cortege.
Carillon from "L'Arlesienne"...........Bizet
Scherzo, Concerto in G minor.....Saint-Saens
New England Conservatory chorus; George W. Chadwick, director—
(a) Landerkennung ("Fighting Land").Greig
(b) Ecce Jam Noctis...............Chadwick
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812".....Tchaikovsky
Spanish Dance, Panaderos..........Glazounov
Indian March from "L'Africaine"...Meyerbeer

TUESDAY

Overture to "La Forza del Destine".....Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"..............Komzak
Meditation from "Thais"..............Massenet
(Solo violin, Mr. Theodorowicz.)
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"..............Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody...............Liszt
Prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde".Wagner
(Solo English horn, Mr. Speyer.)
Phantoms..............................Chaloff
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris".......Mascagni
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor"....Donizetti
Minuet...............................Bolzoni
Invitation to the Dance.........Weber-Berlioz

WEDNESDAY

Entrance of the Boyards............Halvorsen
Overture to "Rienzi"..................Wagner
Waltz, "Tales from the Vienna Woods".Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"............Leoncavallo
Suite, "Peer Gynt"......................Grieg
(a) Morning Mood. (b) Aase's Death.
(c) In the Hall of the Mountain King.
Saeterjentens Sondag ("Solitude on the Mountain")......................Ole Bull
Valse Triste.........................Sibelius
Carnival in Paris....................Svendsen
"Ekko fra Norden," Selection of Norwegian Airs..................Arr. by Wick
Ave Maria..................Schubert-Wilhelmj
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
Procession of Bacchus..................Delibes

THURSDAY

Coronation March....................Svendsen
Overture to "William Tell"............Rossini
Caribbean Legend....................Sequeira
Fantasia, "The Valkyrie"...............Wagner
Afro-American Folk Songs....Arr. by Jacchia
(a) "Bury Me in de Eas'."
(b) Musieu Batnjo.
(c) "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen."
Baritone Solo, Iago's Credo from "Othello".Verdi
Mr. Lunger.
Duet for flute and clarinet, "Tarantelle"........................Saint-Saens
Messrs. Brooke and Mimart.
Marche Slave........................Tchaikovsky
Selection, "The Defender"..............Dennee
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"...............Vol'stedt
Hungarian March......................Berlioz

FRIDAY

Overture to "Fra Diavolo"..............Auber
Waltzes from "Der Rosencavalier"..R. Strauss
March of the "Little Lead Soldiers"....Pierne
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor".Borodin
"Auld Lang Syne."
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"....Tchaikovsky
Song to the Evening Star from "Tannhaeuser"..........................Wagner
Solo violoncello, Mr. Keller.
"A Kiss in the Dark" from "Orange Blossoms"..........................Herbert
Rondo Capriccioso........Mendelssohn-Jacchia
Fantasia, "La Traviata"...............Verdi
Largo (solo violin, harp, organ and strings)..........................Handel
March, "Washington Post"..............Sousa

SATURDAY

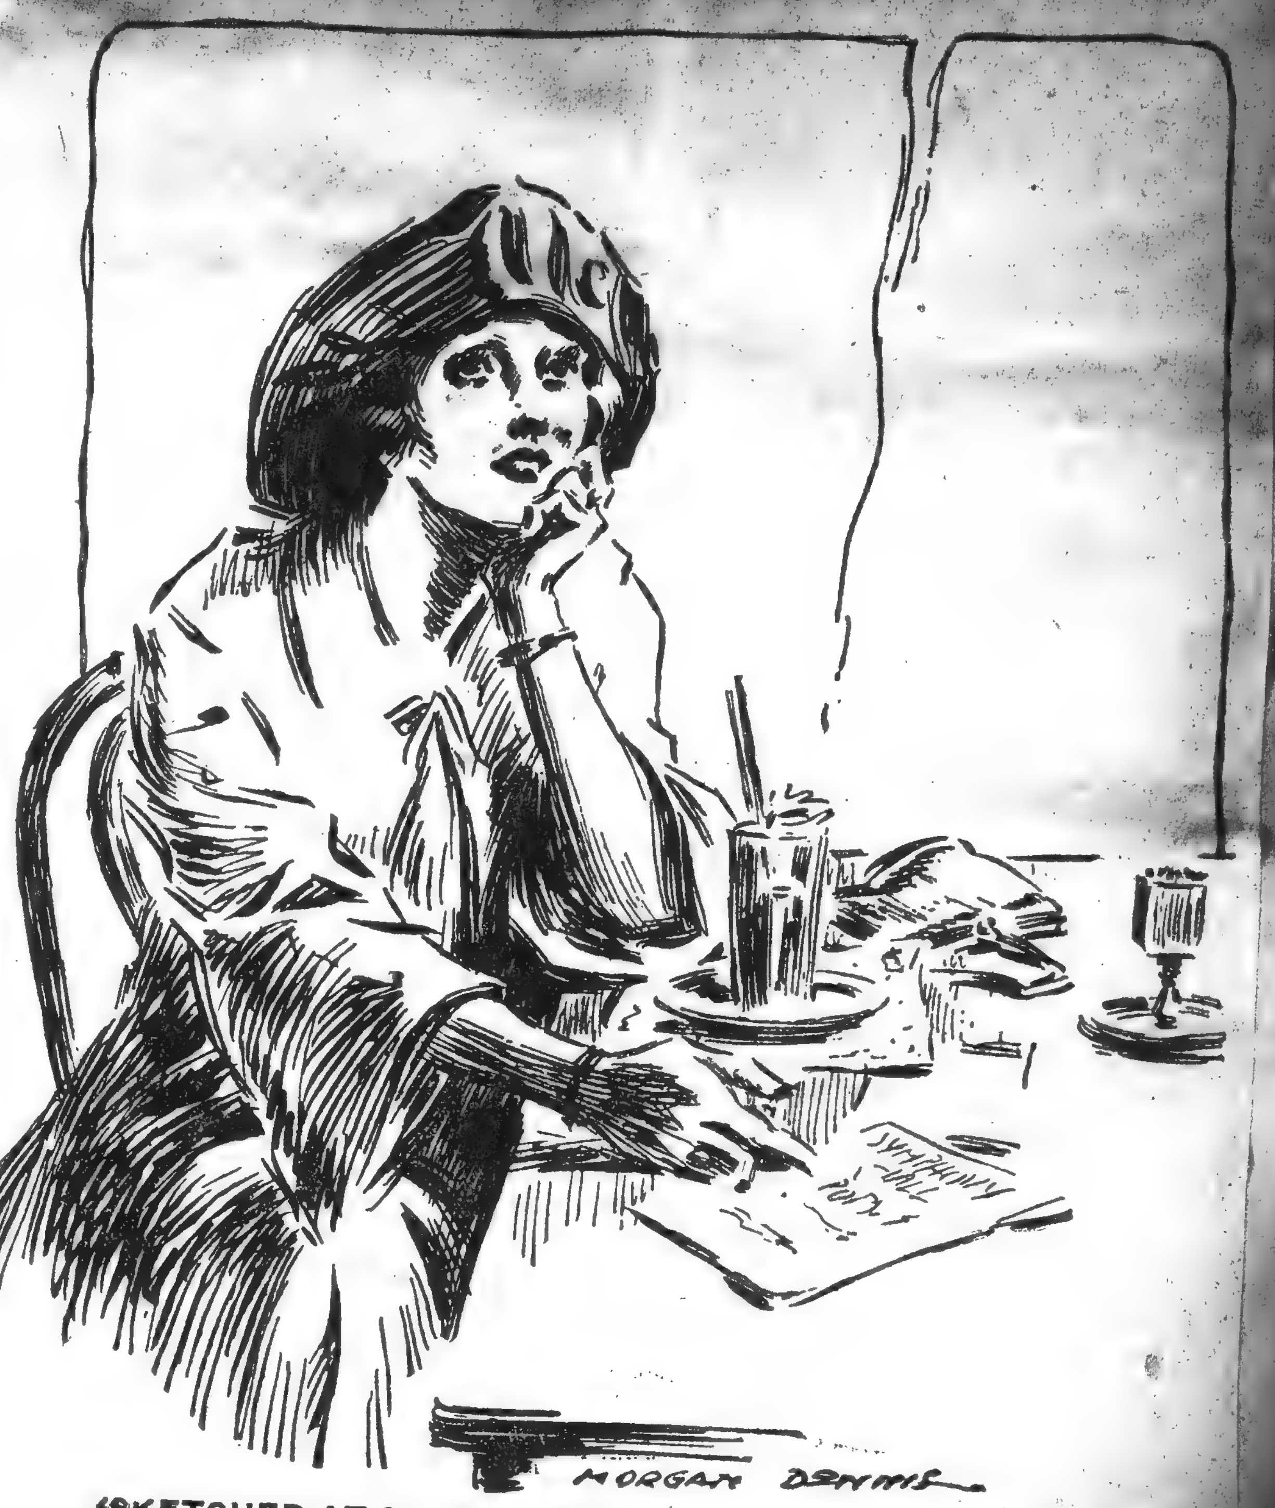
March, "Semper Fidelis"...............Sousa
Overture to "Mignon"..................Thomas
Waltz, "Waves of the Danube"......Ivanovici
Fantasia, "The Jewels of the Madonna"..........................Wolf-Ferrari
Prelude to Lohengrin..................Wagner
Gypsy Dance from "Henry VIII"..Saint-Saens
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann"...........................Offenbach
Finnish Rhapsody.....................Glazounov
Selection, "Il Trovatore"...............Verdi
En Sourdine...........................Tellam
American Fantasy.....................Herbert

SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM

"Eugen Onegin," polonaise........Tchaikovsky
"William Tell," overture..............Rossini
"Thais," meditation.................Massenet
Solo violin, Mr. Theodorowicz.
"Samson and Delilah," bacchanale..Saint-Saens
"Madame Butterfly," fantasia.........Puccini
"Othello," tempest scene...............Verdi
"Tristan and Isolde," prelude and love-death..................................Wagner
"Carmen," fantasia......................Bizet
"Cavalleria Rusticana," intermezzo...Mascagni
"La Gioconda," dance of the hours..Ponchielli

HERALD-JUNE 3.

THE "POP" GIRL



(SKETCHED AT SYMPHONY HALL BY MORGAN DENNIS)

POP CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL

Agide Jacchia, noted concert and opera conductor, leads the symphony orchestra playing every night at the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall. The concerts begin at 8 p. m. and continue until about 11. Light refreshments are served during weekday nights.

On June 10 will come the third of th especial Sunday night Pops, this time with an operatic program a feature in which Conductor Jacchia specializes.

ADVTSR. JUNE. 3.

At the Pops Tonight

Military March ....Schubert
Overture to the Opera, "The Flying Dutchman" ....Wagner
Waltz, "Estudiantina".....Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Aida"..............Verdi
Two Movements ("En Bateau"; "Cortège") from the "Little Suite," ......Debussy
Carillon from the Music to "L'Arlesienne" ....Bizet
Scherzo from the Concerto in G minor for Piano and Orchestra..Saint-Saëns
Choral Numbers:
Sighting Land................Greig
Ecce Jam Noctis......... Chadwick
Overture, "1812"..........Chaikovsky
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos"..Glazunov
Indian March from "L'Africaine," .... Meyerbeer

Conductors:
A. Jacchia — G. W. Chadwick

Assisting:
New England Conservatory Chorus
Jesus Sanroma, Pianist

TRANS-JUNE. 4.

AT THE POPS

The New England Conservatory of Music will have their annual evening at the pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The programme for this occasion, which is open to the public, follows:

Marche Militaire .... Schubert
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"..Wagner
Waltz, "Estudiantina" .... Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Aida" .... Verdi
From the "Petite Suite"...........Debussy
a. En Bateau b. Cortege
Carillon from "L'Arlesienne" .... Bizet
Scherzo, Concerto in G. Minor..Saint-Saens
(Piano solo—Jesus Sanroma)
New England Conservatory Chorus
George W. Chadwick, conductor
a. Landerkennung (Sighting Land") Grieg
b. Ecce Jam Noctis .... Chadwick
Ouverture Solennelle, "1813"....Tchaikovsky
Spanish Dance, Panaderos ...... Glazounov
Indian March from "L'Africaine"..Meyerbeer

ADVTSR-JUNE 4.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

This is New England Conservatory night at the Pops. The program follows:—

Marche Militaire..................Schubert
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"..Wagner
Waltz, "Etudiantina"...........Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Aida".....................Verdi
"Petite Suite".....................Debuzzy
Carillon, "L'Arlesienne"...............Bizet
Scherzo, Concerto in G miner....Saint-Saens
(Piano Solo—Jesus Sanroma)
New England Conservatory Chorus.
George W. Chadwick, Conductor.
Landerkennung ("Sighting Land")....Grieg
Ecce Jam Noctis..................Chadwick
Overture, "1812"................Tchaikovsky
Spanish Dance, Panaderos..........Glazonney
Indian March, "L'Africaine".......Meyerbeer

ADVTSR. JUNE 4.

POP CONCERT TONIGHT

The program to be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra at Symphony hall tonight follows:

Overture to "La Forza del Destino," Verdi; Waltz, "Joyous Vienna," Konzak; Meditation from "Thais," Massanet, solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz; Fantasia, "L'Africaine," Meyerbeer; First Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; Phantoms, Chaloff; Hymn to the Sun from "Iris," Mascagni; Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor," Donizetti; Minuet, Bolzoni; Invitation to the Dance, Weber-Berlioz.

TELE. JUNE 5.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Overture to "La Forza del Destino" Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"....Komzak
Meditation from "Thais"...Massenet
(Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz)
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"...Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde" ....Wagner
(Solo English horn Louis Speyer)
"Phantoms" ....Chaloff
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris" Mascagni
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor" Donizetti
Minuet ....Bolzoni
"Invitation to the Dance" Weber-Berlioz

MONITOR. JUNE 5.

At The Pops Tonight

Overture to the Opera, "La Forza del Destino" ....Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"......Komzak
Meditation from "Thais".....Massenet
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"....Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody.......Liszt
Prelude to Act III. of "Tristan and Isolde" ....Wagner
Phantoms ....Chaloff
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris"..Mascagni
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor". Donizetti
Minuet ....Bolzoni
Invitation to the Dance...Weber-Berlioz

Conductor: A. Jacchia

Soloists:
J. Theodorowicz; Louis Speyer

TRANS-JUNE. 5.

POP CONCERT

The program to be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall tonight follows:

Overture to "La Forza del Destino"....Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"....Komzak
Meditation from "Thais"....Massenet
Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz.
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"....Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Prelude to Act III "Tristan and Isolde"..Wagner
Solo English horn, Louis Speyer.
Phantoms....Chaloff
"Hymn to the Sun" from "Iris"....Mascagni
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor"....Donizetti
Minuet....Bolzoni
"Invitation to the Dance"....Weber-Berlioz

HERALD-JUNE

TONIGHT'S POPS

The programme to be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall tonight follows:

Overture to "La Forza del Destino"....Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"....Komzak
Meditation from "Thais"....Massenet
Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz.
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"....Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde"....Wagner
Solo English Horn, Louis Speyer.
Phantoms....Chaloff
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris"....Mascagni
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor".Donizetti
Minuet....Bolzoni
Invitation to the Dance....Weber-Berlioz

ADVTSR -JUNE 5

Symphony Hall "Pops"

SYMPHONY HALL—At the "Pops," this evening Julius Theodorowicz will play the meditation from "Thais," and Louis Speyer will be horn soloist in a Wagner number.

The program is as follows: Overture to "La Forza del Destina," Verdi; waltz, "Joyous Vienna," Komzak; meditation from "Thais," Massenet; fantasia, "L'Africaine," Meyerbeer; First Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; "Phantoms," Chaloff; Hymn to the Sun, from "Iris," Mascagni; fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor," Donizetti; minuet, Bolzoni; "Invitation to the Dance," Weber-Berlioz.

GLOBE . JUNE 3

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

The programme to be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall tonight follows:

Overture to "La Forza del Destino"..Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"....Komzak
Meditation from "Thais"....Massenet
Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"....Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde,"....Wagner
Solo English horn, Louis Speyer
Phantoms....Chaloff
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris"....Mascagni
Fantasia "Lucia di Lammermoor"..Donizetti
Minuet....Bolzoni
Invitation to the Dance....Weber-Berlioz

POST-JUNE. 5.

TONIGHT'S POPS

Norwegian music will be the feature of the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The program follows:

Entrance of the Boyards....Halvorsen
Overture to "Rienzi"....Wagner
Waltz, "Tales from the Vienna Woods"....Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Suite, "Peer Gynt"....Grieg
a. Morning Mood. b. Aase's Death
c. In the Hall of the Mountain King
Saetergentens Sondag....Ole Bull
("Solitude on the Mountain")
Valse Triste....Sibelius
Carnival in Paris....Svendsen
"Ekko fra Norden," selection of Norwegian Airs....Arranged by Wick
Ave Maria....Schubert-Wilhelmj
Solo violin, harp, organ and strings
Procession of Bacchus....Delibes

HERALD-JUNE 6.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

"Entrance of the Boyards"....Halvorsen
Overture to "Rienzi"....Wagner
Waltz, "Tales from the Vienna Woods"....Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Suite "Peer Gynt"....Grieg
"Saeterjentens Sondag"....Ole Bull
"Valse Triste"....Sibelius
"Carnival in Paris"....Svendsen
"Ekko fra Norden," Selection of Norwegian Airs. Arranged by Wick
"Ave Maria"....Schubert-Wilhelmj
"Procession of Bacchus"....Delibes

MONITOR-JUNE. 6.

NORSE MELODIES ON POP CONCERT PROGRAM

Norwegian music will be the feature of the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight. The program follows: Halvorsen

Entrance of the Boyards....Wagner
Overture to "Rienzi"....Strauss
Waltz, "Vienna Woods"....Leoncavallo
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Grieg
Suite, "Peer Gynt"....Ole Bull
Saetergentens Sondag....Sibelius
Valse Triste....Svendsen
Carnival in Paris....Arranged by Wick
Norwegian Airs....Schubert-Wilhelmj
Ave Maria....Delibes
Procession of Bacchus....

ADVTSR. JUN. 6.

TONIGHT'S POPS

Norwegian music will be the feature of the pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The program follows:

"Entrance of the Boyards," Halvorsen; overture to "Rienzi," Wagner; waltz, "Tales from the Vienna Woods," Strauss; fantasa, "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; (a) "Morning Mood," (b) "Aase's Death," (c) "In the Hall of the Mountain King", "Saetergentens Sondag," ("Solitude on the Mountain") Ole Bull; "Valse Triste," Sibelius; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; "Ekko fra Norden," selection of Norwegian airs, arranged by Wick; "Ave Maria," Schubert-Wilhelm, solo violin, harp, organ and strings; "Procession of Bacchus," Delibes.

TELE. JUNE. 6.

At the Pops Tonight

"Norwegian Night"

Entrance of the Boyards....Halvorsen
Overture to the Opera, "Rienzi"....Wagner
Waltz, "Vienna Woods"....J. Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Morning Mood; Aase's Death; In the Hall of the Mountain King from the Incidental Music to "Peer Gynt"....Grieg
Solitude on the Mountain....Ole Bull
Valse Triste....Sibelius
Carnival in Paris....Svendsen
Norwegian Airs....Wick
Ave Maria....Schubert-Wilhelmj
Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia"....Delibes

Conductor: .A Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE. 6

POPS TONIGHT

The Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight will be a public affair despite the presence of members of Euclid lodge. The program follows:

Coronation March, Svendsen; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Caribbean Legend, Sequira; Fantasia, "The Valkyris," Wagner; Afro-American Folk Songs (Arranged by Agide Jacchia): a, "Bury Me in de Eas'"; b, "Musieu Bainjo"; c, "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen"; Baritone Solo: Iago's Credo from "Othello," Verdi, Roberts Lunger; Duet for Flute and Clarinet: "Tarantello," Saint-Saens, Messrs. Arthur Brooke and Paul Minart; Marche Slave, Tchaikovsky; Selection, "The Defender," Dennee; Waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Vollstedt; Hungarian March, Berlioz.

TELE. JUNE. 7

POPS PROGRAM

At the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight members of the Eliot school, who are holding a reunion, will be present in numbers. The program follows:

Overture to "Fra Diavolo"....Auber
Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier"..R. Strauss
March of the "Little Lead Soldiers"....Pierne
Pelovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"..Borodin
"Auld Lang Syne."
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"....Tchaikovsky
Song to the Evening Star from "Tannhauser"....Wagner
Solo violoncello, Joseph Keller.
"A Kiss in the Dark" from "Orange Blossoms"....Herbert
Rondo Capriccisso....Mendelssohn-Jacchia
Fantasia, "La Traviata"....Verdi
Largo....Handel
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
March, "Washington Post"....Sousa

HERALD-JUNE 7

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Coronation March....Svendsen
Overture to "William Tell"..Rossini
Caribbean Legend....Sequeira
Fantasia, "Die Walküre"....Wagner
Afro-American Folk Songs
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Baritone Solo, Iago's Credo from "Otello"....Verdi
(Roberts Lunger)
Duet for Flute and Clarinet, "Tarantelle"....Saint-Saëns
(Messrs. Arthur Brooks and Paul Mimart)
Marche Slave....Tschaikowsky
Selection, "The Defender"....Dennée
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"....Vollstedt
Hungarian March....Berlioz

MONITOR. JUN. 7.

POPS TONIGHT

The Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight will be a public affair despite the presence of members of Euclid Lodge. The program follows:

Coronation March....Svendsen
Overture to "William Tell"....Rossini
Caribbean Legend....Sequeira
Fantasia, "The Valkyrie"....Wagner
Afro-American Folk Songs
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
a. "Bury Me in de Eas'"
b. "Musieu Bainjo"
c. "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen"
Baritone Solo—Iago's Credo from "Othello"....Verdi
Robert Lunger.
Duet for Flute and Clarinet—"Tarantelle"....Saint-Saens
Messrs. Arthur Brooke and Paul Mimart.
Marche Slave....Tchaikovsky
Selection—"The Defender"....Dennee
Waltz—"Jolly Fellows"....Vollstedt
Hungarian March....Berlioz

HERALD JUNE 7

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

The Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight will be a public affair despite the presence of members of Euclid Lodge. The program follows:

Coronation March....Svendsen
Overture to "William Tell"....Rossini
Caribbean Legend....Sequira
Fantasia, "The Valkyrie"....Wagner
Afro-American Folk Songs...Arr. by Jacchia
Baritone solo, "Othello"....Verdi
Roberts Lunger.
Duet, flute and clarinet, "Tarantelle,"....Saint-Saens
Arthur Brooke and Paul Mimart.
Marche Slave....Tchaikovsky
Selection, "The Defender"....Dennee
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"....Vollstedt
Hungarian March....Berlioz

ADVTSR. JUNE 7

At the Pops Tonight

Coronation March....Svendsen
Overture to the Opera, "William Tell"....Rossini
Caribbean Legend....Sequeira
Fantasia, "Die Walküre"....Wagner
Negro Folk-Songs..Arranged by Jacchia
Iago's Soliloquy from "Othello"...Verdi
Duet for Flute and Clarinet: "Tarantella"....Saint-Saëns
Slavic March....Chaikovsky
Selection, "The Defender"....Dennée
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"....Vollstedt
Hungarian March....Berlioz

Conductor: A. Jacchia.
Soloists:
Roberts Lunger, Baritone,
Arthur Brooke, Flute.
Paul Mimart, Clarinet.

TRANS JUNE 7

At The Pops Tonight

Overture to the Opera "Fra Diavolo"....Auber
Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier"....R. Strauss
March of the Little Lead Soldiers....Pierné
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"....Borodin
Overture, "1812"....Chaikovsky
Solo for Violoncello:
The Evening Star from "Tannhäuser"....Wagner
A Kiss in the Dark from "Orange Blossoms"....Herbert
Rondo Capriccioso..Mendelssohn-Jacchia
Fantasia, "La Traviata"....Verdi
Largo....Handel
March, "Washington Post"....Sousa

Conductor: A. Jacchia
Soloist: J. Keller

TRANS. JUNE 8

ELIOT SCHOOL NIGHT AT SYMPHONY HALL

At the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight members of the Eliot School, who are holding a reunion, will be present. The program follows:

Overture, "Fra Diavolo"....Auber
Waltzes, "Der Rosenkavalier"....R. Strauss
March of Little Lead Soldiers....Pierne
Pelovtsian Dances, "Prince Igor"...Borodin
AULD LANG SYNE
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"...Tchaikovsky
Evening Star Song, "Tannhauser"..Wagner
Solo Violoncello, Joseph Keller.
"A Kiss in the Dark"....Herbert
Rondo Capriccioso....Mendelssohn-Jacchia
Fantasia, "La Traviata"....Verdi
Largo....Handel
March, "Washington Post"....Sousa

ADVTSR. JUNE 8

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Overture to "Fra Diavolo"....Auber
Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier"....R. Strauss
March of the Little Lead Soldiers....Pierné
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"....Borodin
"Auld Lang Syne"
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"....Tschaikowsky
Song to the Evening Star from "Tannhäuser"....Wagner
"A Kiss in the Dark" from "Orange Blossoms"....Herbert
Rondo Capriccioso....Mendelssohn-Jacchia
Fantasia, "La Traviata"....Verdi
Largo....Handel
March, "Washington Post"....Sousa

MONITOR. JUNE. 8.

POPS PROGRAM

At the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight members of the Eliot school, who are holding a reunion, will be present in numbers. The program follows:

Overture to "Fra Diavolo," Auber; Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier," R. Strauss; March of the Little Lead Soldiers, Pierne; Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor," Borodin; Auld Lang Syne; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; Song to the Evening Star from "Tannhauser," Wagner; solo violoncello, Joseph Keller; "A Kiss in the Dark" from "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; Rondo Capriccioso, Mendelssohn-Jacchia; Fantasia, "La Traviata," Verdi; Largo (solo violin, harp, organ and strings), Handel; March, "Washington Post," Sousa.

TELE. JUNE. 8.

Week-End "Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

March, "Semper Fidelis"....Sousa
Overture to "Mignon"....Thomas
Waltz, "Waves of the Danube"....Ivanovici
Fantasia, "The Jewels of the Madonna"....Wolf-Ferrari
Prelude to "Lohengrin"....Wagner
Gypsy Dance from "Henry VIII"....Saint-Saëns
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
Finnish Rhapsody....Glazounoff
Selection, "Il Trovatore"....Verdi
"En Sourdine"....Tellam
American Fantasy....Herbert

SUNDAY EVENING

Operatic Program

"Eugen Onegin"—Polonaise....Tschaikowsky
"William Tell"—Overture....Rossini
"Thaïs," "Meditation"....Massenet
(Solo violin, Julius Theoderowicz)
"Samson and Delilah"—Bacchanale....Saint-Saëns
"Madam Butterfly"—Fantasia....Puccini
"Otello"—Tempest Scene....Verdi
"Tristan and Isolde"—Prelude and Love-Death....Wagner
"Carmen"—Fantasia....Bizet
"Cavalleria Rusticana"—Intermezzo....Mascagni
"La Gioconda"—Dance of the Hours....Ponchielli

MONITOR JUNE. 9.

POPS PROGRAM

The Pops Symphony Orchestra under Agide Jacchia will be heard in the following program in Symphony hall tonight:

March, "Semper Fidelis," Sousa. Overture to "Mignon," Thomas. Waltz, "Waves of the Danube," Ivanovici. Fantasia, "The Jewels of the Madonna," Wolf-Ferrari. Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner. Gypsy Dance from "Henry VIII," Saint-Saens. Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann," Offenbach. Cortege from "Mlada," Rinlay Korsakov. Selection, "Il Trovatore," Verdi. En Sourdine, Tellam. American Fantasy, Herbert.

The third of the newly instituted Sunday Pop Concerts will take place at Symphony hall tomorrow evening. The program will consist entirely of operatic numbers, as follows:

Eugen Onegin, Polonaise; Tchaikovsky. William Tell, Overtoure; Rossini. Thais, Meditation, solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz, Massenet. Samson and Delilah, Bacchanale, Saint-Saens. Madame Butterfly, Fantasia; Puccini. Othello, tempest scene; Verdi. Tristan and Isolde, prelude and Love-Death; Wagner. Carmen, Fantasia; Bizet. Cavalleria Rusticana, intermezzo; Mascagni. La Gioconda, Dance of the Hours; Ponchielli.

TELE. JUNE. 9

[illegible]ROGRESS OF THE POPS

Ano[illegible]r Sunday Concert of Operatic Nu[illegible]bers — Assisting Choruses Next We[illegible]—Items from the Programmes

B[illegible] token of the numbers, the interest [illegible]nd the quality of the audience, Pops [illegible]n Sunday evening flourish exceedingl[illegible] The wonder is that, long before the [illegible]resent spring, they did not become an [illegible]tablished item in the schedule of thes[illegible] concerts. Smoke the listener may not[illegible] No more may he eat or drink. Yet und[illegible]erred by prohibition of these creatur[illegible]comforts, still will he hear music on the[illegible]oliday of the week. The third of the[illegible] "Sunday Pops" befalls tomorrow eve[illegible]ng, with a programme of operatic pie[illegible]s, Italian, French, German, Russian. He[illegible] in detail is Mr. Jacchia's list:

Pol[illegible]aise from "Eugen Onégin"....Chaikovsky
Ov[illegible]ure to "William Tell"....Rossini
Me[illegible]ation from "Thais"....Massenet
Ba[illegible]hanal from "Samson and De-[illegible]h"....Saint-Saëns
F[illegible]asia, "Madama Butterfly"....Puccini
T[illegible]pest Scene from "Othello"....Verdi
P[illegible]ude and Closing Scene from "Tristan [illegible]nd Isolde"....Wagner
[illegible]ntasia, "Carmen"....Bizet
[illegible]termezzo from "Cavalleria Rusti-[illegible]cana"....Mascagni
"Dance of the Hours" from "La Gioconda"....Ponchielli

Through the remainder of the week, The Pops will run usual course, diversified by sundry school and college "nights" appropriate to the current end of the academic year. Monday, for example, is "night" for the Institute of Technology, with the Glee Club to sing its songs and fragments from its recent extravaganza. On Thursday, the songs of Tufts College will be heard from students and alumni; while on Tuesday the chorus of the Boston Masonic Club will lift its voice. On less "special" evenings, Mr. Jacchia and the orchestra will be heard on Wednesday in the fine old overture to Verdi's youthful opera, "The Sici[illegible]lian Vespers" and in the closing sc[illegible] of Wagner's "Die Walküre"; on Fr[illegible]y in airs from Massenet's "Manon" a[illegible]n the overture to Johann Strauss's ma[illegible]erpiece of operetta, "Die Fledermaus"; and on Saturday in two dances from Rameau's eighteenth-century operas. By these signs, Mr. Jacchia's programmes still range widely.

At The Pops Tonight

March, "Semper Fidelis"....Sousa
Overture to the Opera "Mignon".Thomas
Waltz, "Waves of the Danube"....Ivanovici
Fantasia, "The Jewels of the Madonna"....Wolf-Ferrari
Prelude to the Opera "Lohengrin"....Wagner
Gypsy Dance from "Henry VIII"....Saint-Saëns
Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
Procession from "Mlada"....Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore"....Verdi
En Sourdine....Tellam
American Fantasy....Herbert

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE. 9.

POPS PROGRAM TONIGHT

March, "Semper Fidelis"....Sousa
Overture, "Mignon"....Thomas
Waltz, "Waves of the Danube"....Ivanovici
Fantasia, "Jewels of the Madonna."....Wolf-Ferrari
Prelude to "Lohengrin"....Wagner
Gypsy Dance from "Henry VIII."....Saint-Saens
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
Contege, "Miada"....Rimsky-Korsakov
Selections, "Il Trovatore"....Verdi
En Sourdine....Tellam
American Fantasy....Herbert

ADVTSR. JUNE. 9.

POPS PROGRAM

The Pops symphony orchestra, under Agide Jacchia will be heard in the following program in Symphony hall tonight:

March, "Semper Fidelis"....Sousa
Overture to "Mignon"....Thomas
Waltz, "Waves of the Danube"....Ivanovici
Fantasia, "The Jewels of the Madonna"....Wolf-Ferrari
Prelude to "Lohengrin"....Wagner
Gypsey Dance from "Henry VIII"..Saint-Saens
Barcaroll from "The Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
Cortege from "Meada"....Rimsky-Korsakoff
Selection, "Il Trovatore"....Verdi
En Sourdine....Tellam
American Fantasy....Herbert

HERALD-JUN

Sixth Week of Pop Concerts

The celebrated Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will open their sixth week tomorrow night with an operatic program (the third Sunday Pop concert of the season).

Much music of specal interest will be given on the Pops program of the coming week. Conductor Agide Jacchia's program for tomorrow follows:

Eugen Onegin—Polonaise....Tchaikovsky
William Tell,—Overture....Rossini
Thais, Meditation....Massenet
(Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz.)
Samson and Delilah—Bacchanale....Saint-Saens
Madame Butterfly—Fantasia....Puccini
Othello—Tempest Scene....Verdi
Tristan and Isolde—Prelude and Love-Death....Wagner
Carmen—Fantasia....Bizet
Cavalleria Rusticana—Intermezzo....Mascagni
La Gioconda—Dance of the Hours....Ponchielli

TRAV. J

POPS PROGRAM

The sixth week of Pop concerts at Symphony hall will open tonight with the third Sunday Pop concert of the season and an operatic program.

Tomorrow night will be the annual Technology night and Tuesday the night of the Boston Masonic Club. But these, as well as all nights at the Pops, are open to the public and of general public interest.

Conductor Agide Jacchia's programs for the week follow:

SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM

"Eugen Onegin," polonaise....Tchaikovsky
"William Tell," overture....Rossini
"Thais," meditation....Massenet
Solor violin, J. Theodorowicz
"Samson and Delilah," bacchanale..Saint-Saens
"Madame Butterfly," fantasia....Puccini
"Othello," tempest scene....Verdi
"Tristan and Isolde," prelude and love-death....Wagner
"Carmen," fanstasia....Bizet
"Cavalleria Rusticana," intermezzo..Mascagni
"La Gioconda," dance of the hours..Ponchielli

MONDAY

Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night"...Suppe
Waltz, "Miners' Lights"....Zeller
Fantasia, "The Masked Ball"....Verdi
"No Deceit Practised"..By K. C. Kingsley, '23
"Ride of the Valkyries"....Wagner
Songs....By Frank D. Gage, '23
Second Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Tech Songs....(S. S. Townsend, leader)
Selection, "The Sun Temple"..(Tech show, '23)
Waltz, "Pomone"....Waldteufel
Dance of the Camorrists, "The Jewels of the Madonna"....Wolf-Ferrari

TUESDAY

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar"....Grieg
Overture, "The Magic Flute"....Mozart
"Whispers of Love"....Andre
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"...Saint-Saens
Finale, "Scheherazade"....Rimsky-Korsakov
"National League of Masonic Clubs March"....Harlow
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"...Wagner
Boston Masonic Club Male chorus; W. W. Alams, Leader—
(a) "Flag of Our Country"....Griebel
(b) Beautiful City of Dreams"....Bishop
(c) "To Arms"....Maunder
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"....Herbert
Waltz, "Roses from the South"....Strauss
March, "Boston Commandery"....Carter

WEDNESDAY

Overture to "The Sicilian Vespers"....Verdi
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons"....Strauss
"Deep River"....Burleigh-Jacchia
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"....Leoni
Prelude and Siciliana, "Cavalleria Rusticana"....Mascagni
"Turkish Patrol"....Michaelis
Sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor"..Donizetti
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene, "The Valkyrie"....Wagner
Selection of Irish Airs, "The Shamrock"....Myddleton
Panamericana....Herbert
Bacchanale, "Philemon and Baucis"....Gounod

THURSDAY

"Stars and Stripes Forever"....Sousa
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"....Suppe
Fantasia, "Aida"....Verdi
Tufts Songs.
Finale, Fourth Symphony....Tchaikovsky
Aase's Death from "Peer Gynt"....Grieg
Rhapsody, "Espana"....Chabrier
Tufts Songs.
Medley, Fantasy on Tufts Airs....Morton, '11
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"..Strauss
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"..Wagner

FRIDAY

Prologue to "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Dreams of Love"....Fahrbach
"Devotion"....Herbert
Fantasia, "Manon"....Massenet
Marche Slave....Tchaikovsky
Bercense....Johns
Overture to "The Bat"....Strauss
Bentley School Songs.
American Military Fantasy....Rollinson
Waltz, "Spanish Serenade"....Metra
Seventh Slavonic Dance, Op. 72....Dvorak

SATURDAY

Overture to "Raymond"....Thomas
Waltz from "The Bat"....Strauss
Reve Angelique....Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Tosca"....Puccini
Ballet Suite from "Platee" and "Fetes d'Hebe"....Rameau-Motti
(a) Minuet. (b) Tambourin.
Harp Solo, "In Springtime"....Holy
Alfred Holy
Cortege....Dunham
Overture to "Tannhauser"....Wagner
Selection, "Thais"....Massenet
"Kalinka"....Arr. by Jacchia
(Russian Folk Song.)
Procession of the "Sardar"....Ippolitov-Ivanov

HERALD-JUNE 10

POP CONCERT

The program to be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall tonight follows:

Overture to "La Forza del Destino"....Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"....Komzak
Meditation from "Thais"....Massenet
Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz.
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"....Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Prelude to Act III "Tristan and Isolde"..Wagner
Solo English horn, Louis Speyer.
Phantoms....Chaloff
"Hymn to the Sun" from "Iris"....Mascagni
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor"....Donizetti
Minuet....Bolzoni
"Invitation to the Dance"....Weber-Berlioz

HERALD-JUNE

TONIGHT'S POPS

The programme to be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall tonight follows:

Overture to "La Forza del Destino"....Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"....Komzak
Meditation from "Thais"....Massenet
Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz.
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"....Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde"....Wagner
Solo English Horn, Louis Speyer.
Phantoms....Chaloff
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris"....Mascagni
Fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor". Donizetti
Minuet....Bolzoni
Invitation to the Dance....Weber-Berlioz

ADVTSR-JUNE 5

Symphony Hall "Pops"

SYMPHONY HALL—At the "Pops," this evening Julius Theodorowicz will play the meditation from "Thais," and Louis Speyer will be horn soloist in a Wagner number.

The program is as follows: Overture to "La Forza del Destina," Verdi; waltz, "Joyous Vienna," Komzak: meditation from "Thais," Massenet; fantasia, "L'Africaine," Meyerbeer; First Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; "Phantoms," Chaloff; Hymn to the Sun, from "Iris," Mascagni; fantasia, "Lucia di Lammermoor," Donizetti; minuet, Bolzoni; "Invitation to the Dance," Weber-Berlioz.

GLOBE JUNE 5

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

The programme to be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall tonight follows:

Overture to "La Forza del Destino"..Verdi
Waltz, "Joyous Vienna"....Komzak
Meditation from "Thais"....Massenet
Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz
Fantasia, "L'Africaine"....Meyerbeer
First Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Prelude to Act III, "Tristan and Isolde,"....Wagner
Solo English horn, Louis Speyer
Phantoms....Chaloff
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris"....Mascagni
Fantasia "Lucia di Lammermoor"..Donizetti
Minuet....Bolzoni
Invitation to the Dance....Weber-Berlioz

POST-JUNE 5.

TONIGHT'S POPS

Norwegian music will be the feature of the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The program follows:

Entrance of the Boyards....Halvorsen
Overture to "Rienzi"....Wagner
Waltz, "Tales from the Vienna Woods"....Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Suite, "Peer Gynt"....Grieg
a. Morning Mood. b. Aase's Death
c. In the Hall of the Mountain King
Saetergentens Sondag....Ole Bull
("Solitude on the Mountain")
Valse Triste....Sibelius
Carnival in Paris....Svendsen
"Ekko fra Norden," selection of Norwegian Airs....Arranged by Wick
Ave Maria....Schubert-Wilhelmj
Solo violin, harp, organ and strings
Procession of Bacchus....Delibes

HERALD-JUNE 6.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

"Entrance of the Boyards"....Halvorsen
Overture to "Rienzi"....Wagner
Waltz, "Tales from the Vienna Woods"....Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Suite "Peer Gynt"....Grieg
"Saeterjentens Sondag"....Ole Bull
"Valse Triste"....Sibelius
"Carnival in Paris"....Svendsen
"Ekko fra Norden," Selection of Norwegian Airs. Arranged by Wick
"Ave Maria"....Schubert-Wilhelmj
"Procession of Bacchus"....Delibes

MONITOR-JUNE 6

NORSE MELODIES ON POP CONCERT PROGRAM

Norwegian music will be the feature of the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight. The program follows:

Entrance of the Boyards....Halvorsen
Overture to "Rienzi"....Wagner
Waltz, "Vienna Woods"....Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Suite, "Peer Gynt"....Grieg
Saetergentens Sondag....Ole Bull
Valse Triste....Sibelius
Carnival in Paris....Svendsen
Norwegian Airs....Arranged by Wick
Ave Maria....Schubert-Wilhelmj
Procession of Bacchus....Delibes

ADVTSR. JUN. 6.

TONIGHT'S POPS

Norwegian music will be the feature of the pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The program follows:

"Entrance of the Boyards," Halvorsen; overture to "Rienzi," Wagner; waltz, "Tales from the Vienna Woods," Strauss; fantasa, "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg: (a) "Morning Mood," (b) "Aase's Death," (c) "In the Hall of the Mountain King". "Saetergentens Sondag," ("Solitude on the Mountain") Ole Bull; "Valse Triste," Sibelius; "Carnival in Paris," Svendsen; "Ekko fra Norden," selection of Norwegian airs, arranged by Wick; "Ave Maria," Schubert-Wilhelm, solo violin, harp, organ and strings; "Procession of Bacchus," Delibes.

TELE. JUNE. 6.

At the Pops Tonight

"Norwegian Night"

Entrance of the Boyards....Halvorsen
Overture to the Opera, "Rienzi"....Wagner
Waltz, "Vienna Woods"....J. Strauss
Fantasia, "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Morning Mood; Aase's Death; In the Hall of the Mountain King from the Incidental Music to "Peer Gynt"....Grieg
Solitude on the Mountain....Ole Bull
Valse Triste....Sibelius
Carnival in Paris....Svendsen
Norwegian Airs....Wick
Ave Maria....Schubert-Wilhelmj
Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia"....Delibes

Conductor: .A Jacchia

TRAN. JUNE 6

POPS TONIGHT

The Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight will be a public affair despite the presence of members of Euclid lodge. The program follows:

Coronation March, Svendsen; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Caribbean Legend, Sequira; Fantasia, "The Valkyris," Wagner; Afro-American Folk Songs (Arranged by Agide Jacchia): a, "Bury Me in de Eas'"; b, "Musieu Bainjo"; c, "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen"; Baritone Solo: Iago's Credo from "Othello," Verdi, Roberts Lunger; Duet for Flute and Clarinet: "Tarantello," Saint-Saens, Messrs. Arthur Brooke and Paul Minart; Marche Slave, Tchaikovsky; Selection, "The Defender," Dennee; Waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Vollstedt; Hungarian March, Berlioz.

TELE JUNE. 7

POPS PROGRAM

At the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight members of the Eliot school, who are holding a reunion, will be present in numbers. The program follows:

Overture to "Fra Diavolo"....Auber
Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier"..R. Strauss
March of the "Little Lead Soldiers"....Pierne
Pelovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"..Borodin
"Auld Lang Syne."
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"....Tchaikovsky
Song to the Evening Star from "Tannhauser"....Wagner
Solo violoncello, Joseph Keller.
"A Kiss in the Dark" from "Orange Blossoms"....Herbert
Rondo Capriccisso....Mendelssohn-Jacchia
Fantasia, "La Traviata"....Verdi
Largo....Handel
(Solo violin, harp, organ and strings.)
March, "Washington Post"....Sousa

[illegible]

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Coronation March....Svendsen
Overture to "William Tell"..Rossini
Caribbean Legend....Sequeira
Fantasia, "Die Walküre"....Wagner
Afro-American Folk Songs
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Baritone Solo, Iago's Credo from "Otello"....Verdi
(Roberts Lunger)
Duet for Flute and Clarinet, "Tarantelle"....Saint-Saëns
(Messrs. Arthur Brooks and Paul Mimart)
Marche Slave....Tschaikowsky
Selection, "The Defender"....Dennée
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"....Vollstedt
Hungarian March....Berlioz

MONITOR JUNE 7

POPS TONIGHT

The Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight will be a public affair despite the presence of members of Euclid Lodge. The program follows:

Coronation March....Svendsen
Overture to "William Tell"....Rossini
Caribbean Legend....Sequeira
Fantasia, "The Valkyrie"....Wagner
Afro-American Folk Songs
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
a. "Bury Me in de Eas'"
b. "Musieu Bainjo"
c. "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen"
Baritone Solo—Iago's Credo from "Othello"....Verdi
Robert Lunger.
Duet for Flute and Clarinet—"Tarantelle"....Saint-Saens
Messrs. Arthur Brooke and Paul Mimart.
Marche Slave....Tchaikovsky
Selection—"The Defender"....Dennee
Waltz—"Jolly Fellows"....Vollstedt
Hungarian March....Berlioz

HERALD JUNE 7

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

The Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight will be a public affair despite the presence of members of Euclid Lodge. The program follows:

Coronation March....Svendsen
Overture to "William Tell"....Rossini
Caribbean Legend....Sequira
Fantasia, "The Valkyrie"....Wagner
Afro-American Folk Songs...Arr. by Jacchia
Baritone solo, "Othello"....Verdi
Roberts Lunger.
Duet, flute and clarinet, "Tarantelle,"....Saint-Saens
Arthur Brooke and Paul Mimart.
Marche Slave....Tchaikovsky
Selection, "The Defender"....Dennee
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"....Vollstedt
Hungarian March....Berlioz

ADVTSR. JUNE 7

At the Pops Tonight

Coronation March....Svendsen
Overture to the Opera, "William Tell"....Rossini
Caribbean Legend....Sequeira
Fantasia, "Die Walküre"....Wagner
Negro Folk-Songs..Arranged by Jacchia
Iago's Soliloquy from "Othello"...Verdi
Duet for Flute and Clarinet: "Tarantella"....Saint-Saëns
Slavic March....Chaikovsky
Selection, "The Defender"....Dennée
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows"....Vollstedt
Hungarian March....Berlioz

Conductor: A. Jacchia.
Soloists:
Roberts Lunger, Baritone,
Arthur Brooke, Flute.
Paul Mimart, Clarinet.

TRANS JUNE 7

At The Pops Tonight

Overture to the Opera "Fra Diavolo"....Auber
Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier"....R. Strauss
March of the Little Lead Soldiers....Pierné
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"....Borodin
Overture, "1812"....Chaikovsky
Solo for Violoncello:
The Evening Star from "Tannhäuser"....Wagner
A Kiss in the Dark from "Orange Blossoms"....Herbert
Rondo Capriccioso..Mendelssohn-Jacchia
Fantasia, "La Traviata"....Verdi
Largo....Handel
March, "Washington Post"....Sousa

Conductor: A. Jacchia
Soloist: J. Keller

TRANS. JUNE 8

ELIOT SCHOOL NIGHT AT SYMPHONY HALL

At the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight members of the Eliot School, who are holding a reunion, will be present. The program follows:

Overture, "Fra Diavolo"....Auber
Waltzes, "Der Rosenkavalier"....R. Strauss
March of Little Lead Soldiers....Pierne
Pelovtsian Dances, "Prince Igor"...Borodin
AULD LANG SYNE
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"...Tchaikovsky
Evening Star Song, "Tannhauser"..Wagner
Solo Violoncello, Joseph Keller.
"A Kiss in the Dark"....Herbert
Rondo Capriccioso....Mendelssohn-Jacchia
Fantasia, "La Traviata"....Verdi
Largo....Handel
March, "Washington Post"....Sousa

ADVTSR. JUNE 8

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Overture to "Fra Diavolo"....Auber
Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier"....R. Strauss
March of the Little Lead Soldiers....Pierné
Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor"....Borodin
"Auld Lang Syne"
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"....Tschaikowsky
Song to the Evening Star from "Tannhäuser"....Wagner
"A Kiss in the Dark" from "Orange Blossoms"....Herbert
Rondo Capriccioso....Mendelssohn-Jacchia
Fantasia, "La Traviata"....Verdi
Largo....Handel
March, "Washington Post"....Sousa

MONITOR JUNE 8.

POPS PROGRAM

At the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight members of the Eliot school, who are holding a reunion, will be present in numbers. The program follows:

Overture to "Fra Diavolo," Auber; Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier," R. Strauss; March of the Little Lead Soldiers, Pierne; Polovtsian Dances from "Prince Igor," Borodin; Auld Lang Syne; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; Song to the Evening Star from "Tannhauser," Wagner; solo violoncello, Joseph Keller; "A Kiss in the Dark" from "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; Rondo Capriccioso, Mendelssohn-Jacchia; Fantasia, "La Traviata," Verdi; Largo (solo violin, harp, organ and strings), Handel; March, "Washington Post," Sousa.

TELE. JUNE. 8.

Week-End "Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

March, "Semper Fidelis"....Sousa
Overture to "Mignon"....Thomas
Waltz, "Waves of the Danube"....Ivanovici
Fantasia, "The Jewels of the Madonna"....Wolf-Ferrari
Prelude to "Lohengrin"....Wagner
Gypsy Dance from "Henry VIII"....Saint-Saëns
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
Finnish Rhapsody....Glazounoff
Selection, "Il Trovatore"....Verdi
"En Sourdine"....Tellam
American Fantasy....Herbert

SUNDAY EVENING
Operatic Program

"Eugen Onegin"—Polonaise....Tschaikowsky
"William Tell"—Overture....Rossini
"Thaïs," "Meditation"....Massenet
(Solo violin, Julius Theoderowicz)
"Samson and Delilah"—Bacchanale....Saint-Saëns
"Madam Butterfly"—Fantasia....Puccini
"Otello"—Tempest Scene....Verdi
"Tristan and Isolde"—Prelude and Love-Death....Wagner
"Carmen"—Fantasia....Bizet
"Cavalleria Rusticana"—Intermezzo....Mascagni
"La Gioconda"—Dance of the Hours....Ponchielli

MONITOR JUNE 9

POPS PROGRAM

The Pops Symphony Orchestra under Agide Jacchia will be heard in the following program in Symphony hall tonight:

March, "Semper Fidelis," Sousa. Overture to "Mignon," Thomas. Waltz, "Waves of the Danube," Ivanovici. Fantasia, "The Jewels of the Madonna," Wolf-Ferrari. Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner. Gypsy Dance from "Henry VIII." Saint-Saens. Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann," Offenbach. Cortege from "Mlada," Rinlay Korsakov. Selection, "Il Trovatore," Verdi. En Sourdine, Tellam. American Fantasy, Herbert.

The third of the newly instituted Sunday Pop Concerts will take place at Symphony hall tomorrow evening. The program will consist entirely of operatic numbers, as follows:

Eugen Onegin, Polonaise; Tchaikovsky. William Tell, Overtoure; Rossini. Thais, Meditation, solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz; Massenet. Samson and Delilah, Bacchanale, Saint-Saens. Madame Butterfly, Fantasia; Puccini. Othello, tempest scene; Verdi. Tristan and Isolde, prelude and Love-Death; Wagner. Carmen, Fantasia; Bizet. Cavalleria Rusticana, intermezzo; Mascagni. La Gioconda, Dance of the Hours; Ponchielli.

TELE. JUNE 9

[illegible]ROGRESS OF THE POPS

Ano[illegible]r Sunday Concert of Operatic Nu[illegible]bers — Assisting Choruses Next We[illegible]k—Items from the Programmes

B[illegible] token of the numbers, the interest [illegible]nd the quality of the audience, Pops [illegible]n Sunday evening flourish exceeding[illegible] The wonder is that, long before the [illegible]resent spring, they did not become an [illegible]tablished item in the schedule of thes[illegible] concerts. Smoke the listener may not[illegible] No more may he eat or drink. Yet und[illegible]erred by prohibition of these creatur[illegible]comforts, still will he hear music on the[illegible]oliday of the week. The third of the[illegible] "Sunday Pops" befalls tomorrow eve[illegible]g, with a programme of operatic pie[illegible]s, Italian, French, German, Russian. He[illegible] in detail is Mr. Jacchia's list:

Po[illegible]aise from "Eugen Onégin"....Chaikovsky
Ov[illegible]ure to "William Tell"....Rossini
Me[illegible]ation from "Thais"....Massenet
Ba[illegible]hanal from "Samson and De[illegible]ah"....Saint-Saëns
F[illegible]asia, "Madama Butterfly"....Puccini
T[illegible]pest Scene from "Othello"....Verdi
P[illegible]ude and Closing Scene from "Tristan [illegible]nd Isolde"....Wagner
[illegible]ntasia, "Carmen"....Bizet
[illegible]ermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusti[illegible]cana"....Mascagni
"Dance of the Hours" from "La Gioconda"....Ponchielli

Through the remainder of the week, The Pops will run usual course, diversified by sundry school and college "nights" appropriate to the current end of the academic year. Monday, for example, is "night" for the Institute of Technology, with the Glee Club to sing its songs and fragments from its recent extravaganza. On Thursday, the songs of Tufts College will be heard from students and alumni; while on Tuesday the chorus of the Boston Masonic Club will lift its voice. On less "special" evenings, Mr. Jacchia and the orchestra will be heard on Wednesday in the fine old overture to Verdi's youthful opera, "The Sic[illegible]lian Vespers" and in the closing sc[illegible] of Wagner's "Die Walküre"; on Fr[illegible]y in airs from Massenet's "Manon" a[illegible]in the overture to Johann Strauss's ma[illegible]terpiece of operetta, "Die Fledermaus"; and on Saturday in two dances from Rameau's eighteenth-century operas. By these signs, Mr. Jacchia's programmes still range widely.

At The Pops Tonight

March, "Semper Fidelis"....Sousa
Overture to the Opera "Mignon".Thomas
Waltz, "Waves of the Danube"....Ivanovici
Fantasia, "The Jewels of the Madonna"....Wolf-Ferrari
Prelude to the Opera "Lohengrin"....Wagner
Gypsy Dance from "Henry VIII"....Saint-Saëns
Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
Procession from "Mlada"....Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore"....Verdi
En Sourdine....Tellam
American Fantasy....Herbert

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE. 9.

POPS PROGRAM TONIGHT

March, "Semper Fidelis"....Sousa
Overture, "Mignon"....Thomas
Waltz, "Waves of the Danube"....Ivanovici
Fantasia, "Jewels of the Madonna."....Wolf-Ferrari
Prelude to "Lohengrin"....Wagner
Gypsy Dance from "Henry VIII."....Saint-Saens
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
Contege, "Miada"....Rimsky-Korsakoc
Selections, "Il Trovatore"....Verdi
En Sourdine....Tellam
American Fantasy....Herbert

ADVTSR. JUNE

POPS PROGRAM

The Pops symphony orchestra, under Agide Jacchia will be heard in the following program in Symphony hall tonight:

March, "Semper Fidelis"....Sousa
Overture to "Mignon"....Thomas
Waltz, "Waves of the Danube"....Ivanovici
Fantasia, "The Jewels of the Madonna"....Wolf-Ferrari
Prelude to "Lohengrin"....Wagner
Gypsey Dance from "Henry VIII"..Saint-Saens
Barcaroll from "The Tales of Hoffmann"....Offenbach
Cortege from "Meada"....Rimsky-Korsakoff
Selection, "Il Trovatore"....Verdi
En Sourdine....Tellam
American Fantasy....Herbert

HERALD-JU

Sixth Week of Pop Concerts

The celebrated Pop concerts in Symphony Hall will open their sixth week tomorrow night with an operatic program (the third Sunday Pop concert of the season).

Much music of specal interest will be given on the Pops program of the coming week. Conductor Agide Jacchia's program for tomorrow follows:

Eugen Onegin—Polonaise....Tchaikovsky
William Tell.—Overture....Rossini
Thais, Meditation....Massenet
(Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz.)
Samson and Delilah—Bacchanale....Saint-Saens
Madame Butterfly—Fantasia....Puccini
Othello—Tempest Scene....Verdi
Tristan and Isolde—Prelude and Love-Death....Wagner
Carmen—Fantasia....Bizet
Cavalleria Rusticana—Intermezzo....Mascagni
La Gioconda—Dance of the Hours....Ponchielli

TRAV. J

POPS PROGRAM

The sixth week of Pop concerts at Symphony hall will open tonight with the third Sunday Pop concert of the season and an operatic program.

Tomorrow night will be the annual Technology night and Tuesday the night of the Boston Masonic Club. But these, as well as all nights at the Pops, are open to the public and of general public interest.

Conductor Agide Jacchia's programs for the week follow:

SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM

"Eugen Onegin," polonaise....Tchaikovsky
"William Tell," overture....Rossini
"Thais," meditation....Massenet
Solor violin, J. Theodorowicz
"Samson and Delilah," bacchanale..Saint-Saens
"Madame Butterfly," fantasia....Puccini
"Othello," tempest scene....Verdi
"Tristan and Isolde," prelude and love-death....Wagner
"Carmen," fanstasia....Bizet
"Cavalleria Rusticana," intermezzo..Mascagni
"La Gioconda," dance of the hours..Ponchielli

MONDAY

Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night"..Suppe
Waltz, "Miners' Lights"....Zeller
Fantasia, "The Masked Ball"....Verdi
"No Deceit Practised"..By K. C. Kingsley, '23
"Ride of the Valkyries"....Wagner
Songs....By Frank D. Gage, '23
Second Hungarian Rhapsody....Liszt
Tech Songs....(S. S. Townsend, leader)
Selection, "The Sun Temple" (Tech Show, '23)
Waltz, "Pomone"....Waldteufel
Dance of the Camorrists, "The Jewels of the Madonna"....Wolf-Ferrari

TUESDAY

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar"....Grieg
Overture, "The Magic Flute"....Mozart
"Whispers of Love"....Andre
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"...Saint-Saens
Finale, "Scheherazade"....Rimsky-Korsakov
"National League of Masonic Clubs March"....Harlow
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"...Wagner
Boston Masonic Club Male chorus; W. W. Adams, Leader—
(a) "Flag of Our Country"....Griebel
(b) Beautiful City of Dreams"....Bishop
(c) "To Arms"....Maunder
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"....Herbert
Waltz, "Roses from the South"....Strauss
March, "Boston Commandery"....Carter

WEDNESDAY

Overture to "The Sicilian Vespers"....Verdi
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons"....Strauss
"Deep River"....Burleigh-Jacchia
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"....Leoni
Prelude and Siciliana, "Cavalleria Rusticana"....Mascagni
"Turkish Patrol"....Michaelis
Sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor"..Donizetti
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene, "The Valkyrie"....Wagner
Selection of Irish Airs, "The Shamrock"....Myddleton
Panamericana....Herbert
Bacchanale, "Philemon and Baucis"....Gounod

THURSDAY

"Stars and Stripes Forever"....Sousa
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"....Suppe
Fantasia, "Aida"....Verdi
Tufts Songs.
Finale, Fourth Symphony....Tchaikovsky
Aase's Death from "Peer Gynt"....Grieg
Rhapsody, "Espana"....Chabrier
Tufts Songs.
Medley, Fantasy on Tufts Airs....Morton, '11
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"..Strauss
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"..Wagner

FRIDAY

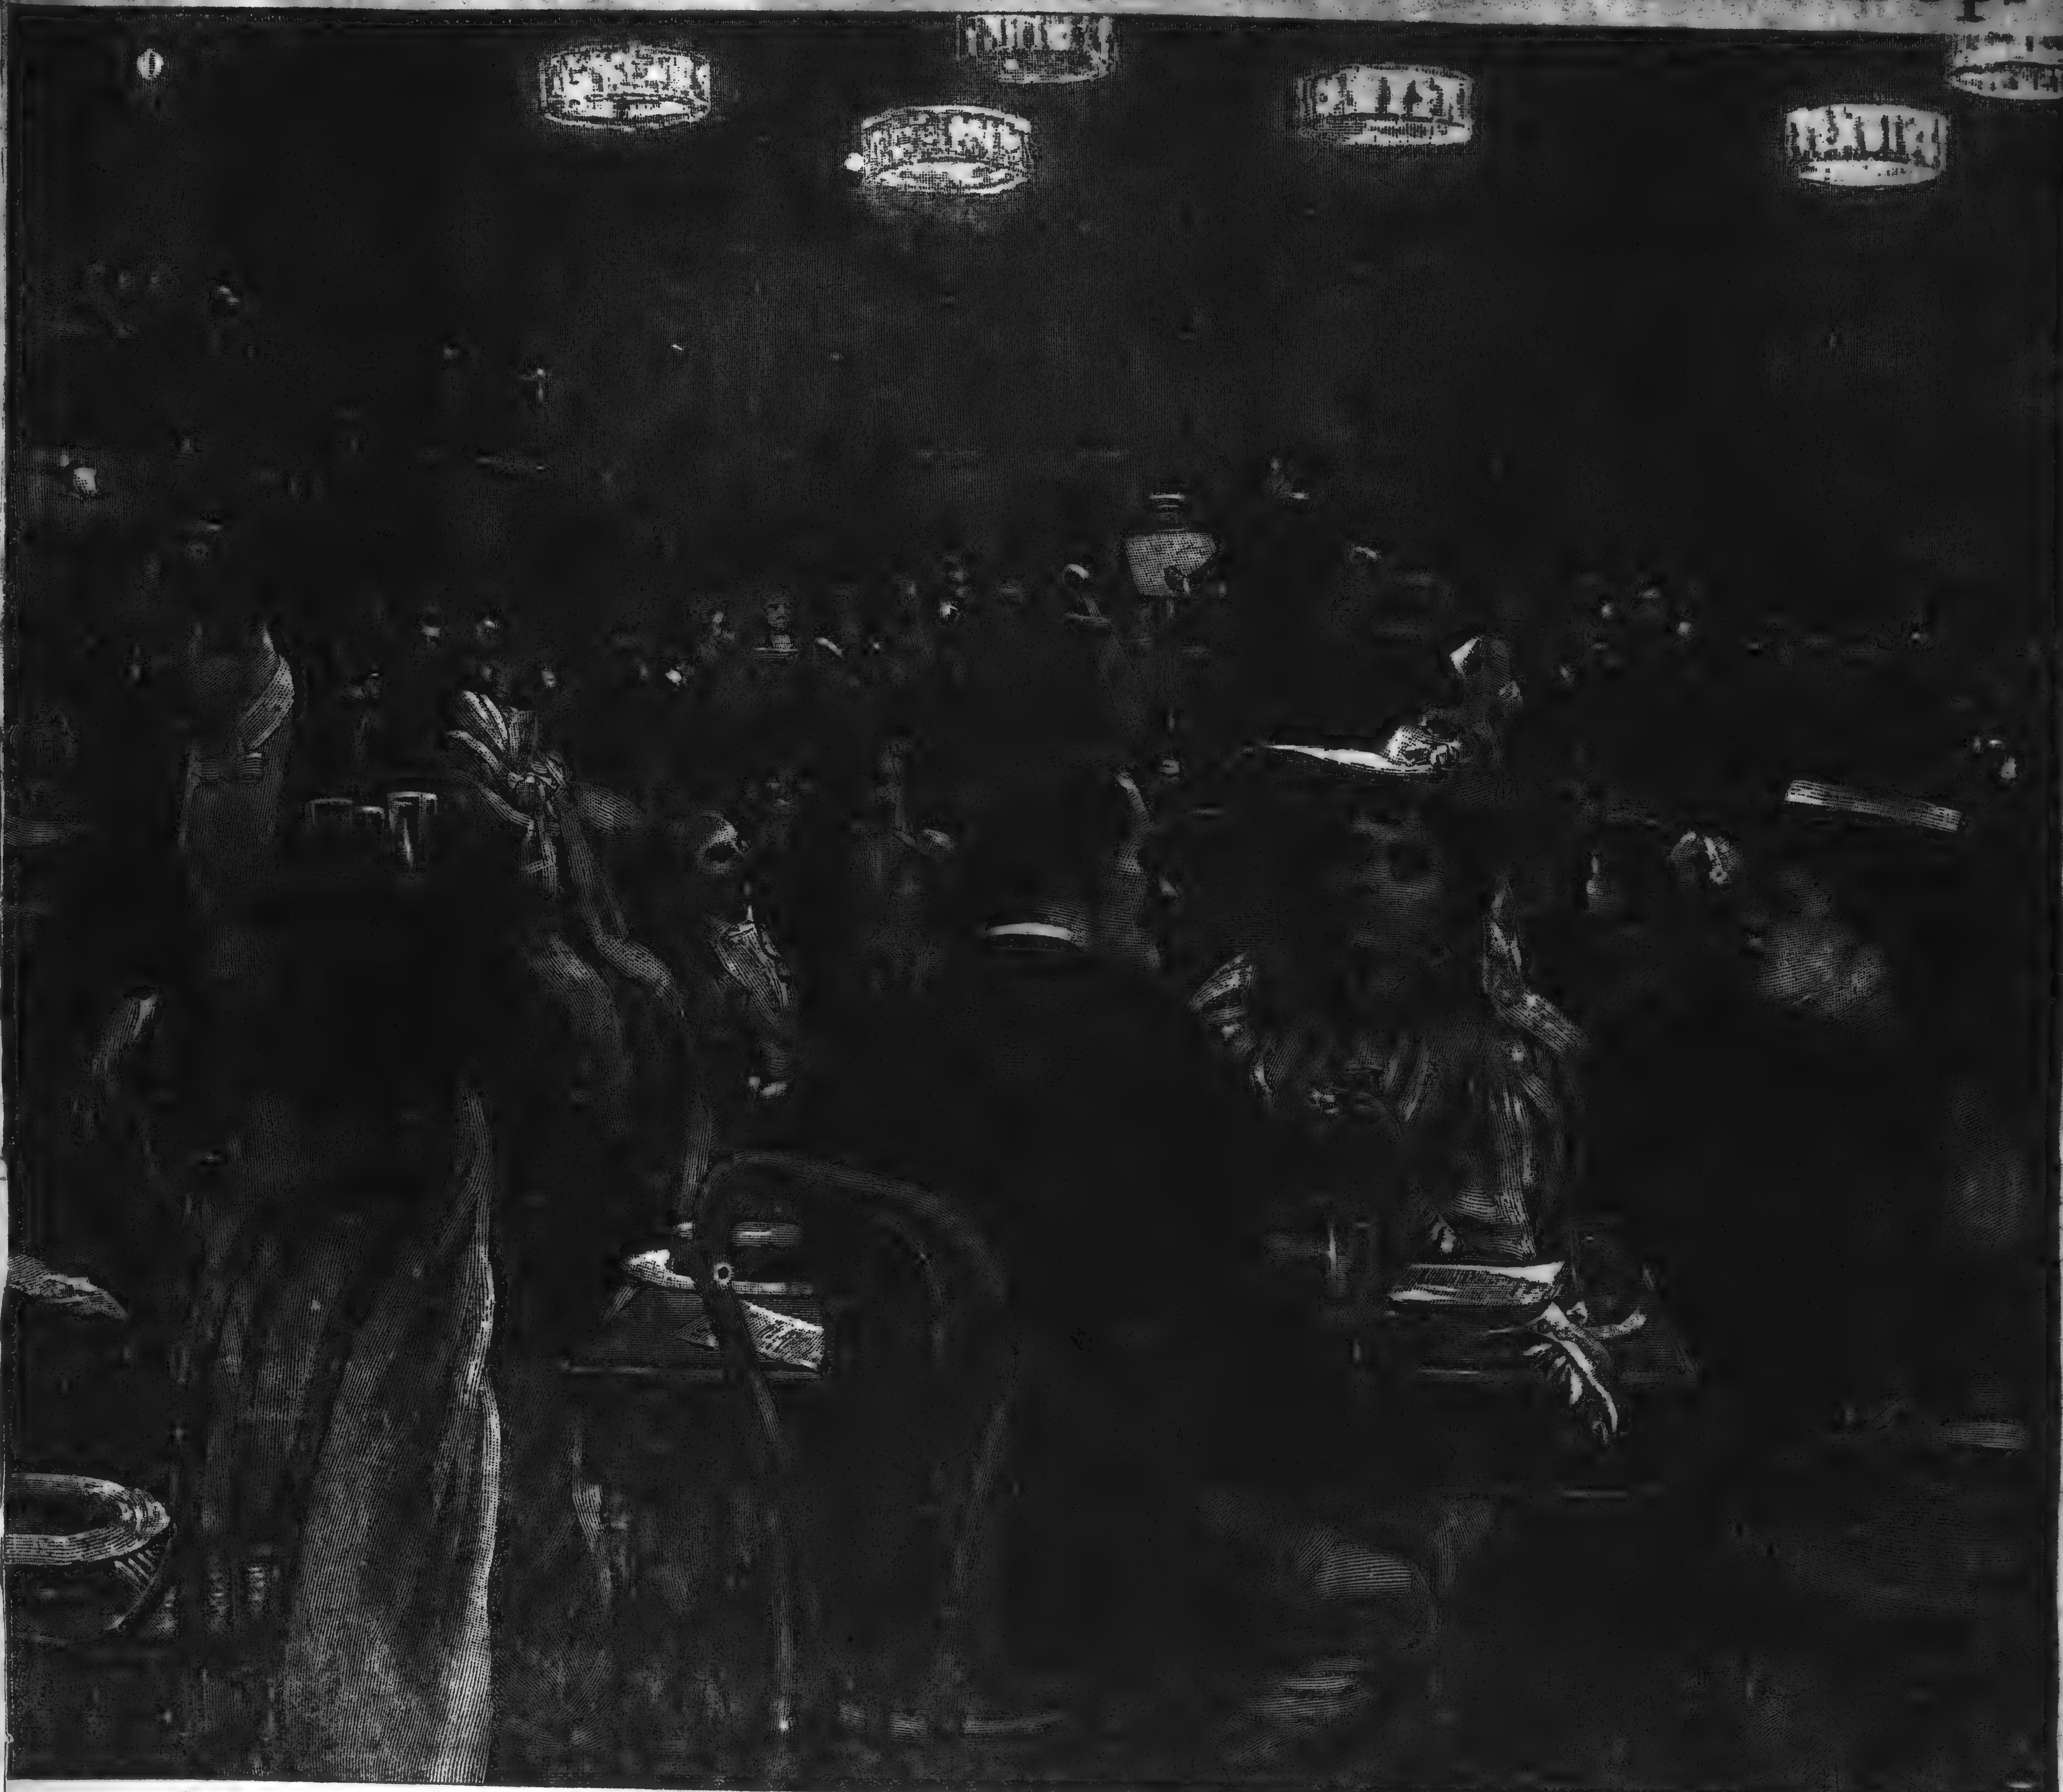
Prologue to "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Dreams of Love"....Fairbach
"Devotion"....Herbert
Fantasia, "Manon"....Massenet
Marche Slave....Tchaikovsky
Berceuse....Johns
Overture to "The Bat"....Strauss
Bentley School Songs.
American Military Fantasy....Rollinson
Waltz, "Spanish Serenade"....Metra
Seventh Slavonic Dance, Op. 72....Dvorak

SATURDAY

Overture to "Raymond"....Thomas
Waltz from "The Bat"....Strauss
Reve Angelique....Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Tosca"....Puccini
Ballet Suite from "Platee" and "Fetes d'Hebe"....Rameau-Mottl
(a) Minuet. (b) Tambourin.
Harp Solo, "In Springtime"....Holy
Alfred Holy.
Cortege....Dunham
Overture to "Tannhauser"....Wagner
Selection, "Thais"....Massenet
"Kalinka"....Arr. by Jacchia
(Russian Folk Song.)
Procession of the "Sardar"....Ippolitov-Ivanov

HERALD-JUNE 10.

Women Smokers Make Problem For the "Pops"



THE POPS OF THIRTY YEARS AGO IN OLD MUSIC HALL

(From a drawing by a well-known Boston artist, Frank O. Small. This is reproduced from a wood engraving in Harper's Bazar for September, 1892.)

By WILLARD DE LUE

SHOULD a woman smoke at Boston's famous Pops? That is a question that is puzzling the management of this internationally famous musical institution. And it doesn't seem one that can be settled in a hurry. We remember seeing a happening of last season. At one of the tables, sipping ginger pop or maybe some of the Pop Punch that is getting almost as famous as the Pops themselves (albeit non-alcoholic as a bubbling brook), was a group of delightful femininity. One of the women fished out a dainty holder, thrust a cigarette into it with a deft twist, and "lighted up."

Before many puffs had passed the eagle-eyed head usher was on the job. With admirable courtesy he bowed, spoke a word or two . . . . and the cigarette disappeared. He was merely living up to tradition. Smoking by women at the Pops has been taboo ever since the Pops came into being, back in 1885.

It may be surprising to many to know that the question of whether or not women should be allowed to smoke at the Pops is by no means a new one.

In the very first season, when the concerts were held in old Music Hall, and long before they were known as Pops, a woman lighted a cigarette and started in to enjoy a smoke. After all, if the men were allowed to smoke, why shouldn't she? That was the way she figured it.

But in less time than it takes to tell, one of the policemen, delegated to keep order in the hall, walked over to the table and requested her to stop.

For a while that put a stop to attempts on the part of women to smoke. Or, if there were any, they weren't noticed by the management.

THEN, in 1893, the matter came up again. The chief actor in this second little drama was a woman of social standing in the community. She didn't try to brazen it; tried to conceal the cigarette behind a beautiful fan. But it didn't go. The business of 1885 was repeated, and the cigarette disappeared.

"I doubt if it is legal to forbid women to smoke, if men are allowed to," said one of the regulars at the concerts to the manager of that day.

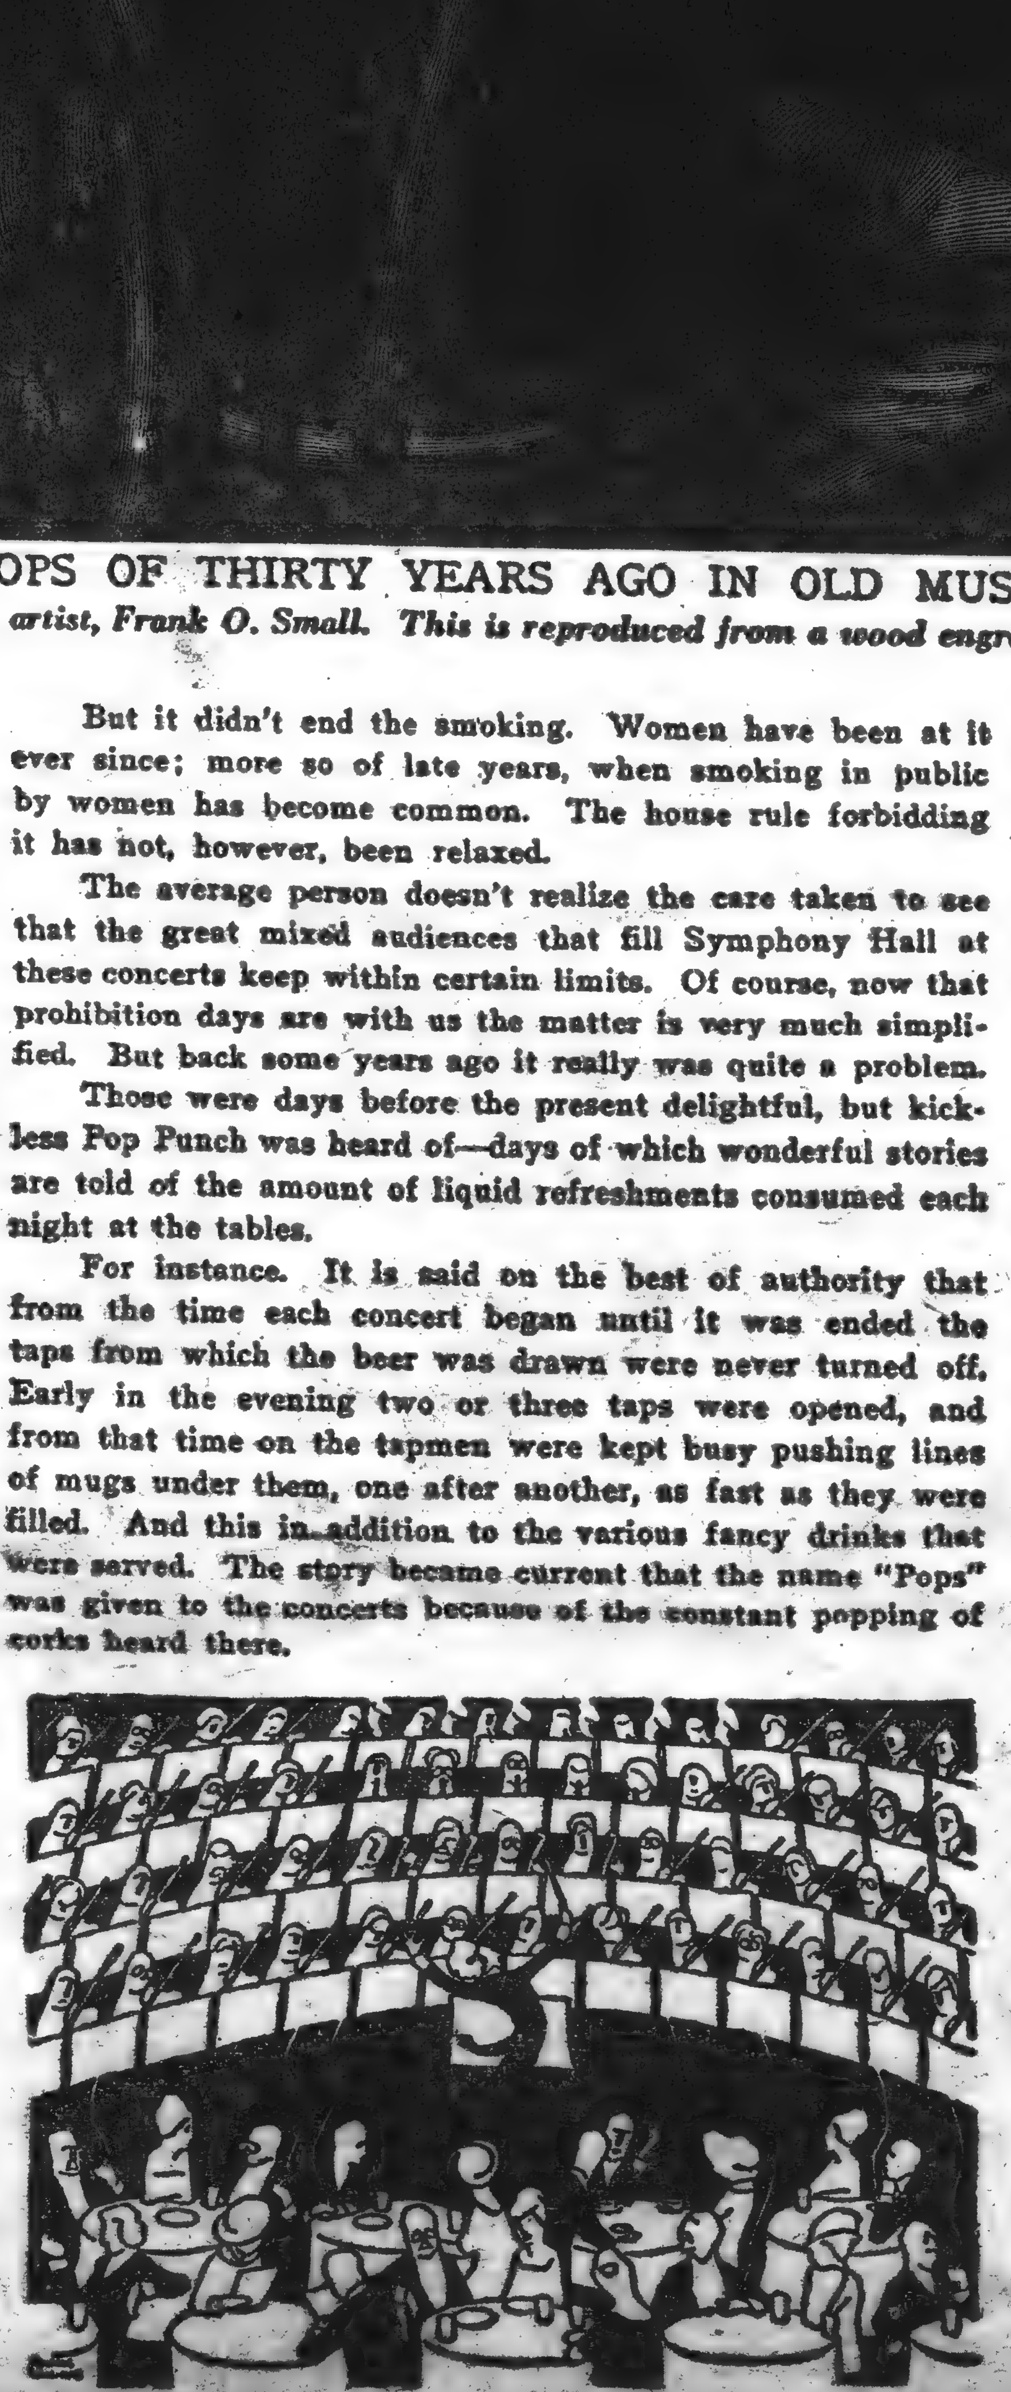
"Well, it's legal with us," was the reply. And that ended the discussion.

But it didn't end the smoking. Women have been at it ever since; more so of late years, when smoking in public by women has become common. The house rule forbidding it has not, however, been relaxed.

The average person doesn't realize the care taken to see that the great mixed audiences that fill Symphony Hall at these concerts keep within certain limits. Of course, now that prohibition days are with us the matter is very much simplified. But back some years ago it really was quite a problem.

Those were days before the present delightful, but kickless Pop Punch was heard of—days of which wonderful stories are told of the amount of liquid refreshments consumed each night at the tables.

For instance. It is said on the best of authority that from the time each concert began until it was ended the taps from which the beer was drawn were never turned off. Early in the evening two or three taps were opened, and from that time on the tapmen were kept busy pushing lines of mugs under them, one after another, as fast as they were filled. And this in addition to the various fancy drinks that were served. The story became current that the name "Pops" was given to the concerts because of the constant popping of corks heard there.



THE POPS TODAY, AS A GLOBE ARTIST SEES THEM

(From a Drawing by Gluyas Williams)

ON this point there is considerable doubt. Indeed, the weight of evidence points in another direction. Originally the concerts were called Promenade Concerts. One went, not to the Pops, but to the Promenades. Then, because of the nature of the orchestral selections, in which, as now, the classical selections of the Symphony Concerts gave way to lighter and more popular pieces, the phrase "popular music" came to be used in the advertising. It was usually set up in type this way:

POP$^{\text{ULAR}}_{\text{MUSIC}}$

Hence the Pops. Yet there are those who say that the idea of printing the first three letters of POPular in large type was due to the popping of the corks.

But, alcoholicly speaking, the Pops are now strictly popless. And yet they are as popular as ever—more popular, in fact, if attendance records mean anything. There is something about this Boston institution that compels interest.

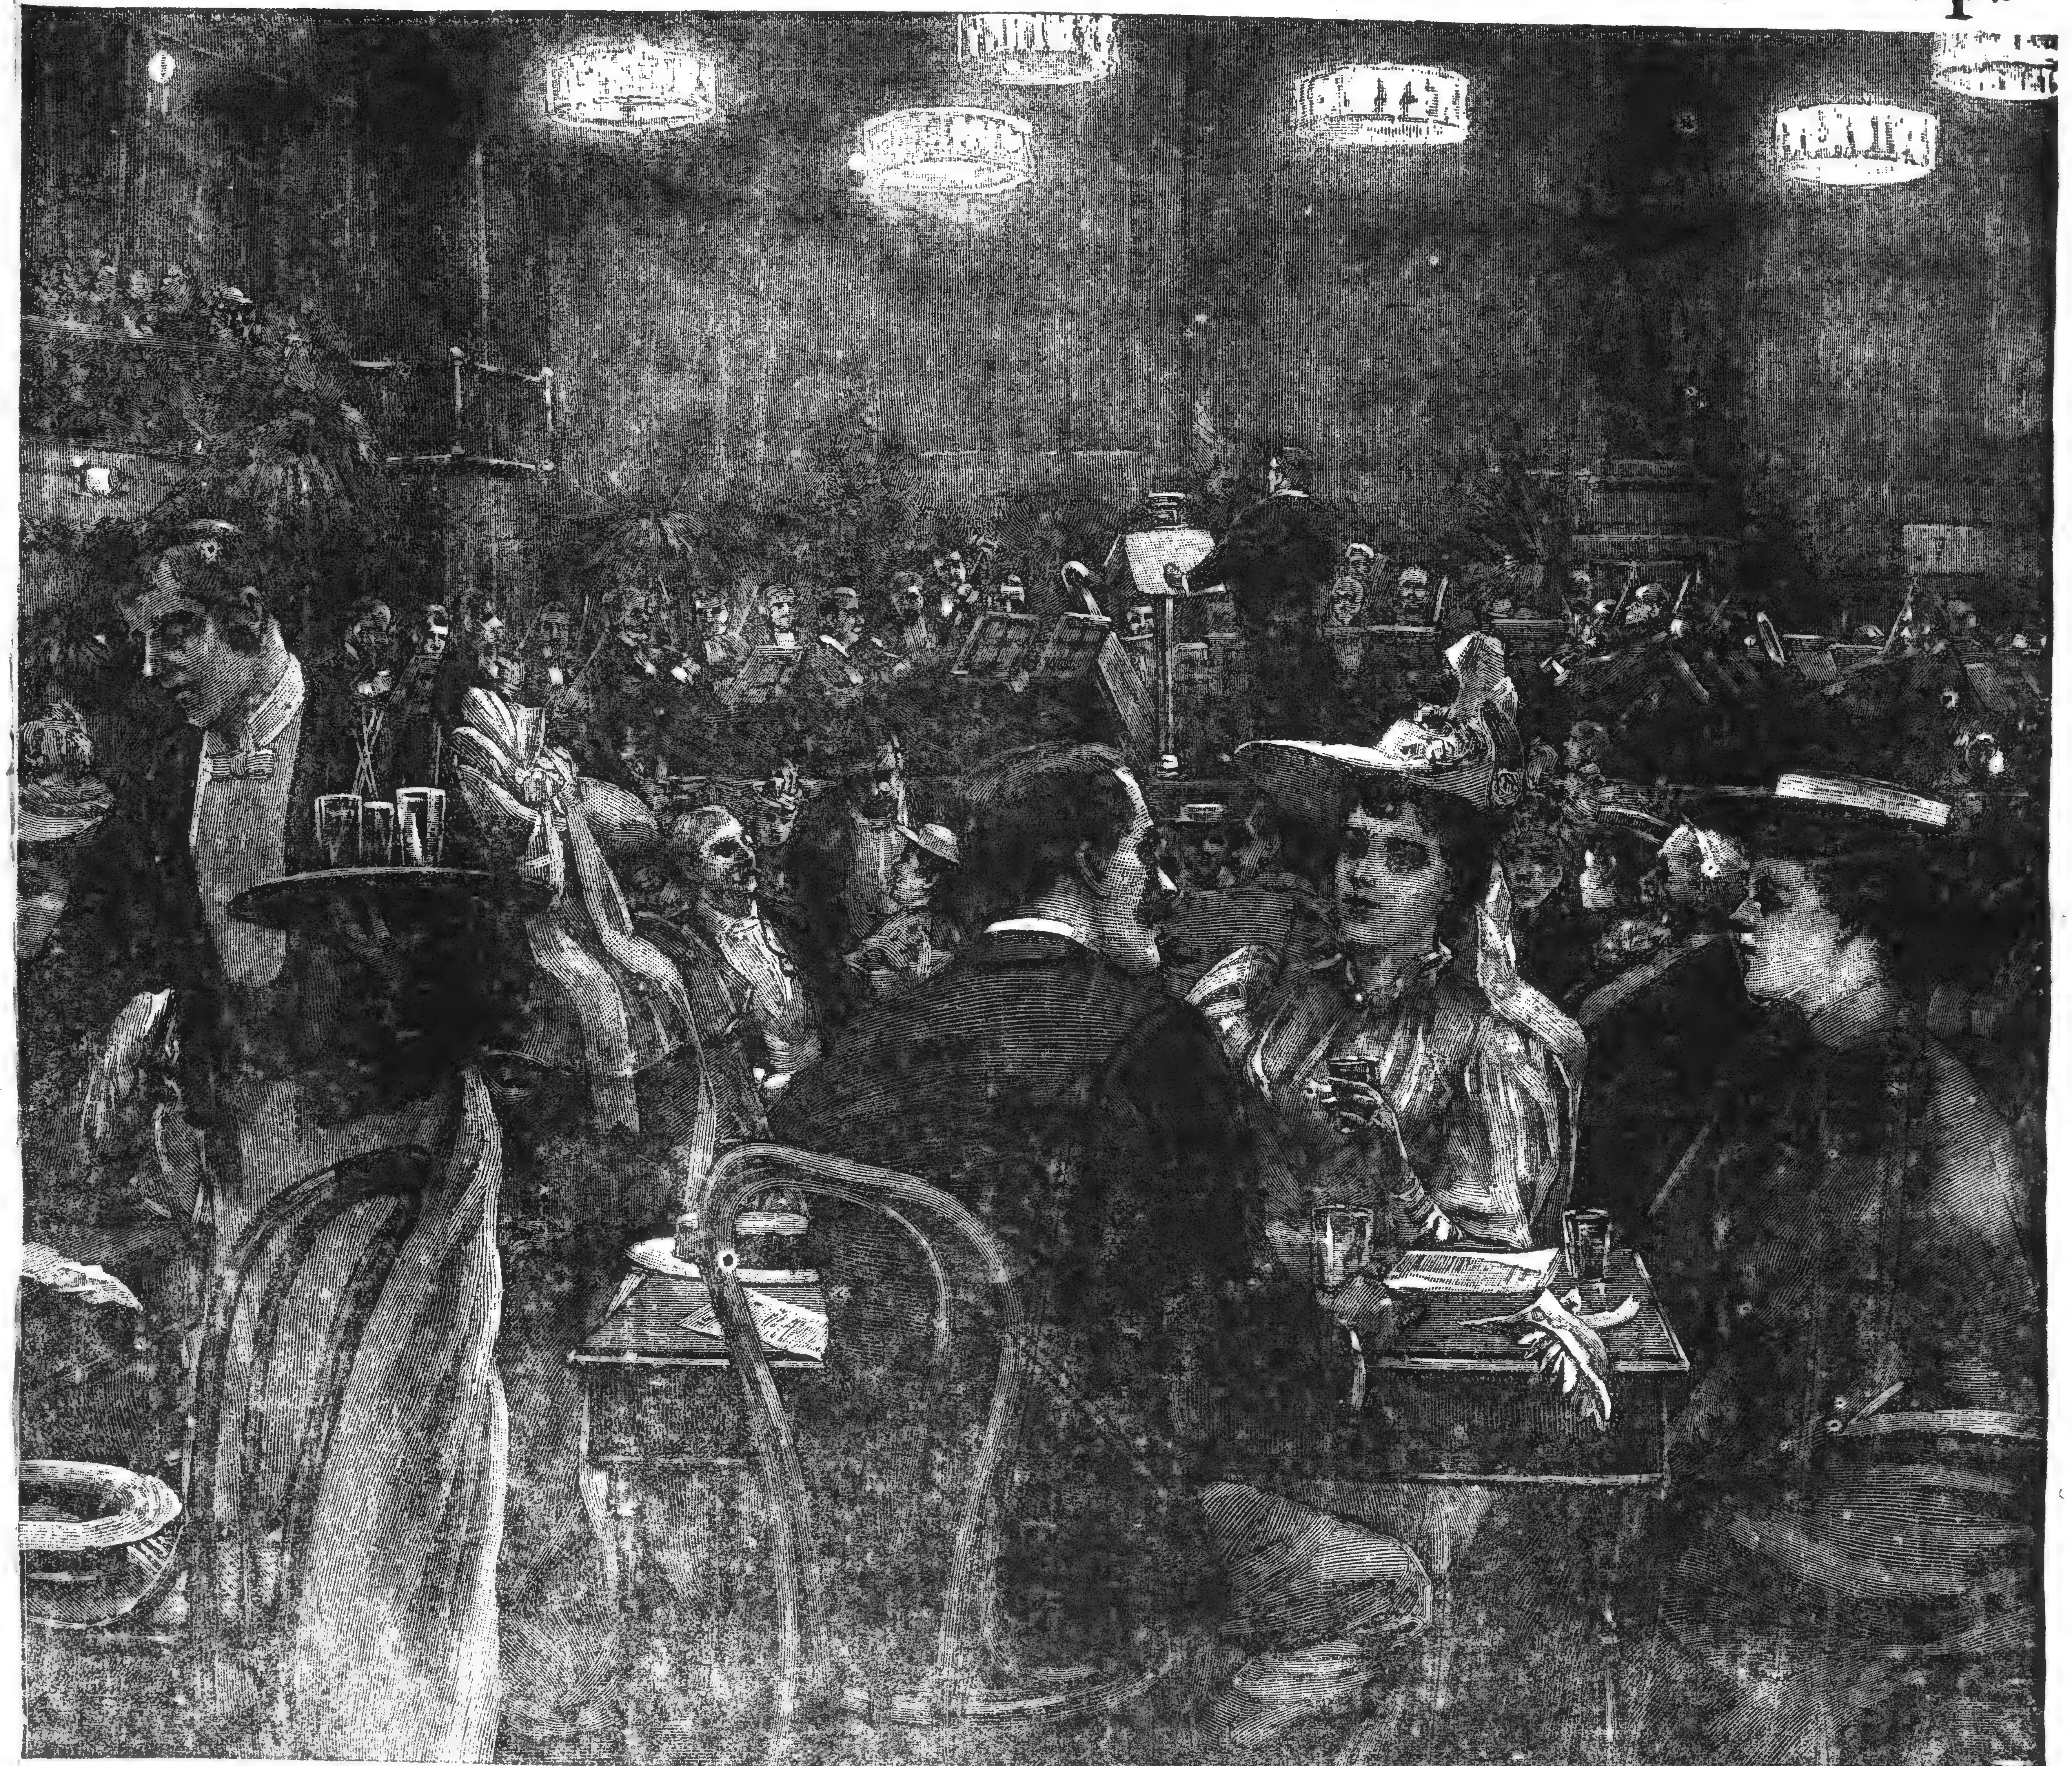
Even when drinking lemonade, one seems to have a mild—O, a very mild—sense of Bohemianism; Bohemianism of the Boston brand. One visitor insists that the chief attractions are good music and room for one's legs. "As to the legs," he writes, "I know many Boston people who have an indelible association of cramps in their calves and classical music, such as the greedy little girl had of ice cream and a pain between the eyebrows." To sit in at a table, with elbow room and leg room and room to get up and stroll about, is to the Symphonies as the chair car is to the day coach.

There have been, at rare intervals, enlivening affairs not on the program. One night, back in Music Hall, one of the huge plaster rosettes that decorated the ceiling got loose from its moorings and fell. It landed with a terrific crash square in the middle of one of the tables.

For a minute things looked like the makings of a small panic. Some thought the whole ceiling was coming in. Two or three of the musicians made a bee-line for the nearest door, and some of those on the floor started out.

But the conductor didn't flinch. He swung his baton the more decisively, beckoned the players back to their places, and saved the day. And in a minute or two the popping of corks and the rhythm of the melody were blended as usual.

Women Smokers Make Problem For the "Pops"



THE POPS OF THIRTY YEARS AGO IN OLD MUSIC HALL

(From a drawing by a well-known Boston artist, Frank O. Small. This is reproduced from a wood engraving in Harper's Bazar for September, 1892.)

By WILLARD DE LUE

SHOULD a woman smoke at Boston's famous Pops? That is a question that is puzzling the management of this internationally famous musical institution. And it doesn't seem one that can be settled in a hurry. We remember seeing a happening of last season. At one of the tables, sipping ginger pop or maybe some of the Pop Punch that is getting almost as famous as the Pops themselves (albeit non-alcoholic as a bubbling brook), was a group of delightful femininity. One of the women fished out a dainty holder, thrust a cigarette into it with a deft twist, and "lighted up."

Before many puffs had passed the eagle-eyed head usher was on the job. With admirable courtesy he bowed, spoke a word or two . . . . and the cigarette disappeared. He was merely living up to tradition. Smoking by women at the Pops has been taboo ever since the Pops came into being, back in 1885.

It may be surprising to many to know that the question of whether or not women should be allowed to smoke at the Pops is by no means a new one.

In the very first season, when the concerts were held in old Music Hall, and long before they were known as Pops, a woman lighted a cigarette and started in to enjoy a smoke. After all, if the men were allowed to smoke, why shouldn't she? That was the way she figured it.

But in less time than it takes to tell, one of the policemen, delegated to keep order in the hall, walked over to the table and requested her to stop.

For a while that put a stop to attempts on the part of women to smoke. Or, if there were any, they weren't noticed by the management.

THEN, in 1893, the matter came up again. The chief actor in this second little drama was a woman of social standing in the community. She didn't try to brazen it; tried to conceal the cigarette behind a beautiful fan. But it didn't go. The business of 1885 was repeated, and the cigarette disappeared.

"I doubt if it is legal to forbid women to smoke, if men are allowed to," said one of the regulars at the concerts to the manager of that day.

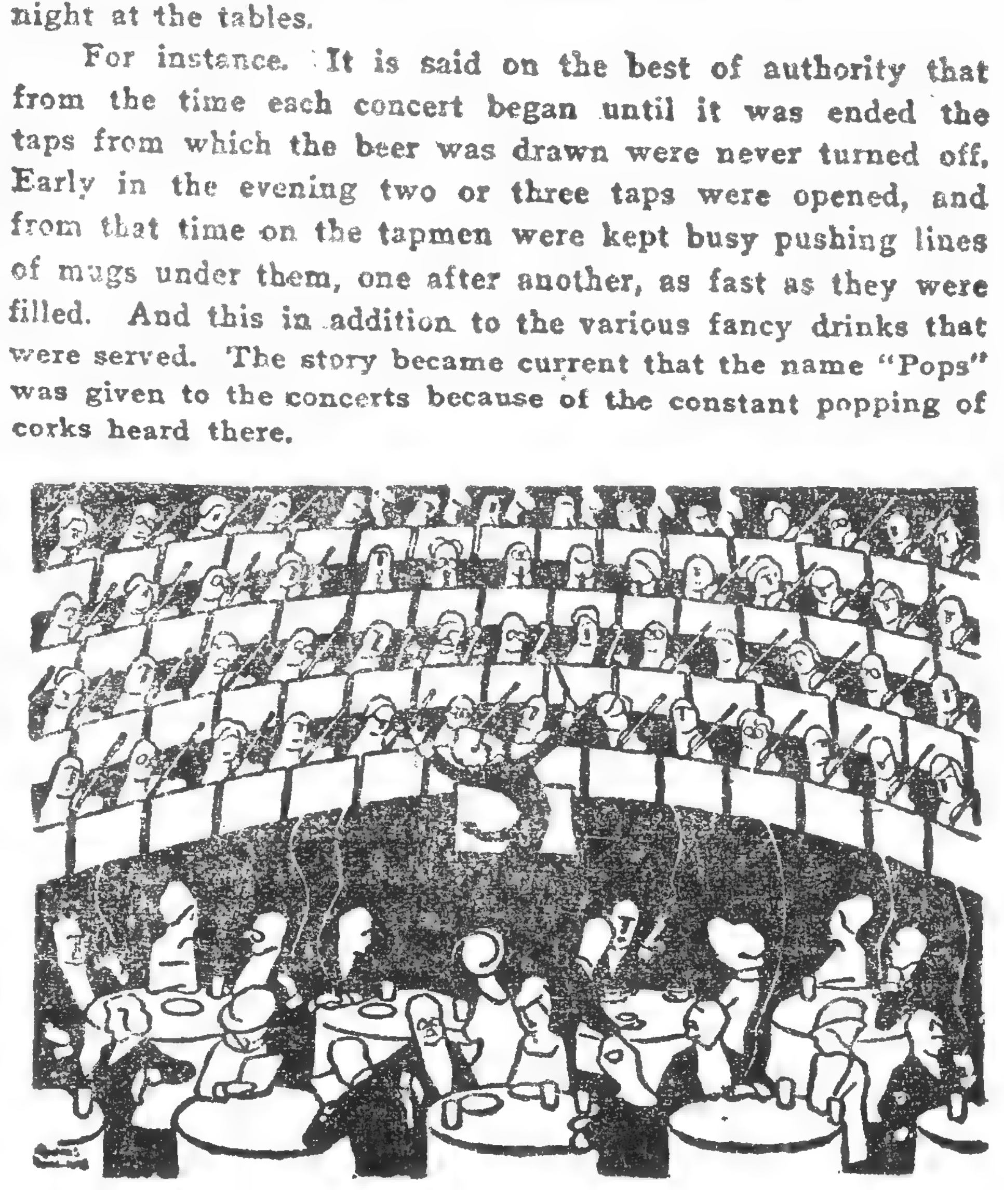
"Well, it's legal with us," was the reply. And that ended the discussion.

But it didn't end the smoking. Women have been at it ever since; more so of late years, when smoking in public by women has become common. The house rule forbidding it has not, however, been relaxed.

The average person doesn't realize the care taken to see that the great mixed audiences that fill Symphony Hall at these concerts keep within certain limits. Of course, now that prohibition days are with us the matter is very much simplified. But back some years ago it really was quite a problem.

Those were days before the present delightful, but kickless Pop Punch was heard of—days of which wonderful stories are told of the amount of liquid refreshments consumed each night at the tables.

For instance. It is said on the best of authority that from the time each concert began until it was ended the taps from which the beer was drawn were never turned off. Early in the evening two or three taps were opened, and from that time on the tapmen were kept busy pushing lines of mugs under them, one after another, as fast as they were filled. And this in addition to the various fancy drinks that were served. The story became current that the name "Pops" was given to the concerts because of the constant popping of corks heard there.



THE POPS TODAY, AS A GLOBE ARTIST SEES THEM

(From a Drawing by Gluyas Williams)

ON this point there is considerable doubt. Indeed, the weight of evidence points in another direction. Originally the concerts were called Promenade Concerts. One went, not to the Pops, but to the Promenades. Then, because of the nature of the orchestral selections, in which, as now, the classical selections of the Symphony Concerts gave way to lighter and more popular pieces, the phrase "popular music" came to be used in the advertising. It was usually set up in type this way:

POP$^{\text{ULAR}}_{\text{MUSIC}}$

Hence the Pops. Yet there are those who say that the idea of printing the first three letters of POPular in large type was due to the popping of the corks.

But, alcoholicly speaking, the Pops are now strictly popless. And yet they are as popular as ever—more popular, in fact, if attendance records mean anything. There is something about this Boston institution that compels interest.

Even when drinking lemonade, one seems to have a mild—O, a very mild—sense of Bohemianism; Bohemianism of the Boston brand. One visitor insists that the chief attractions are good music and room for one's legs. "As to the legs," he writes, "I know many Boston people who have an indelible association of cramps in their calves and classical music, such as the greedy little girl had of ice cream and a pain between the eyebrows." To sit in at a table, with elbow room and leg room and room to get up and stroll about, is to the Symphonies as the chair car is to the day coach.

There have been, at rare intervals, enlivening affairs not on the program. One night, back in Music Hall, one of the huge plaster rosettes that decorated the ceiling got loose from its moorings and fell. It landed with a terrific crash square in the middle of one of the tables.

For a minute things looked like the makings of a small panic. Some thought the whole ceiling was coming in. Two or three of the musicians made a bee-line for the nearest door, and some of those on the floor started out.

But the conductor didn't flinch. He swung his baton the more decisively, beckoned the players back to their places, and saved the day. And in a minute or two the popping of corks and the rythm of the melody were blended as usual.

Symphony Hall "Pops"

The sixth week of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall will open tonight with an operatic program which will comprise excerpts from "Eugen Onegin," "William Tell," "Thais," "Samson and Delilah," "Madame Butterfly," "Othello," "Tristan," "Carmen," "Cavelleria" and "La Gioconda."

Tomorrow night will be the annual Technology Night, at which undergraduates and graduates will be largely represented. The program will include Tech songs and excerpts from the Tech show of 1923, "The Sun Temple." Stephen S. Townsend will lead. The selections include: Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night," Suppe; waltz, "Miners' Lights," Zeller; fantasia, "The Masked Ball," Verdi; "No Deceit Practiced," K. C. Kingsley, '23; "Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; songs by Frank D. Gage '23, second Hungarian rhapsody, Liszt; selections, "The Sun Temple," waltz, "Pomone"; dance of the Camorrists, "The Jewels of the Madonna," Wolf-Ferrari.

At the Boston Masonic Club night, Tuesday, Warren W. Adams will lead the male chorus in a group of songs. The program follows: Triumphal march from "Sigurd Jersalfar," Grieg; overture, "The Magic Flute," Mozart; "Whispers of Love," Andre; fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; finale, "Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakov; "National League of Masonic Clubs' March," Harlow; overture, "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Boston Masonic Club Male Chorus, selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; waltz, "Roses From the South," Strauss; march, "Boston Commandery," Carter.

GLOBE-JUNE.10

Sixth Week of "Pops"

The sixth week of the "Pops" concerts at Symphony Hall opened last night with the third Sunday concert. The program consisted of excerpts from the operatic works of Italian, French, German, and Russian composers. It was again evident that the edict prohibiting smoking and the sale of refreshments at such entertainments on Sunday is no deterrent to audiences, for every seat was taken and many were standing in the balcony. The program was interestingly varied and after every number Mr. Jacchia and the orchestra were dorowicz, concertmaster, played the solo violin part of the "Meditation" from Thaïs to the manifest approval warmly applauded. Julius Theo- of his listeners. The last Sunday night concert of this season will be given on June 24 with an all-Russian program.

Tonight will be the annual Institute of Technology night; tomorrow night that of the National League of Masonic Clubs, now holding their annual convention in this city, and Thursday brings Tufts College night. These special nights are all open to the public.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

TECH NIGHT

Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night"......Suppé
Waltz, "Miners' Lights"......Zeller
Fantasia, "The Masked Ball"
Dunham
"No Deceit Practiced"...Kingsley '23
Ride of the Valkyries......Wagner
Numbers by Frank Gage '23
Second Hungarian Rhapsody...Liszt
Tech Songs
(Leader, Stephen S. Townsend)
Selection, "The Sun Temple"
(Tech Show, 1923)
Waltz, "Pomone"......Waldteufel
Dance of the Camorrists, "The Jewels of the Madonna"..Wolf-Ferrari

MONITOR.JUNE.11

POPS PROGRAM

Tonight will be the annual Tech Night at the Pop Concert in Symphony hall, with additional songs and "stunts" by members of the Institute.

This occassion will also be a public concert. The numbers follow:

Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night," Suppe; Waltz, "Miners' Light," Zeller; Fantasia, "The Masked Ball," Dunham; "No Deceit Practiced," Kinksley '23; Ride of the Valkyries, Wagner; Numbers by Frank Gage '23; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Tech Songs (Leader, Stephen S. Townsend); Selection, "The Sun Temple," (Tech Show, 1923); Waltz, "Pomone," Waldteufel; Dance of the Camorrists, "The Jewels of the Madonna" Wolf Ferrari.

TELE. JUNE. 11

At The Pops Tonight

"Technology Night"

Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night,"
Suppé
Waltz, "Miners' Lights"......Zeller
Fantasia, "The Masked Ball"....Verdi
Technology Songs......
Ride of the Valkyrs......Wagner
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.....Liszt
Numbers from the "Tech" Play......
Waltz, "Pomona"......Waldteufel
Camorrists' Dance......Wolf-Ferrari

Conductors:
A. Jacchia   Stephen Townsend
Assisting: Technology Glee Club

TRANS. JUNE. 11.

POPS PROGRAM

Tonight will be the annual Tech night at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall, with additional songs and "stunts" by members of the institute.

This occasion will also be a public concert. The numbers follow:

Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night"
Suppe
Waltz, "Miners' Lights"......Zeller
Fantasia, "The Masked Ball"....Dunham
"No Deceit Practiced"......Kingsley '23
Ride of the Valkyries......Wagner
Numbers by Frank Gage '23
Second Hungarian Rhapsody......Liszt
Tech songs (leader, Stephen S. Townsend)
Selection, "The Sun Temple"
(Tech show, 1923)
Waltz, "Pomone"......Waldteufel
Dance of the Camorrists, "The Jewels of the Madonna"......Wolf-Ferrari

HERALD-JUNE.11

POP CONCERT

The National League of Masonic clubs will celebrate at the Pop Concert in Symphony hall tonight. This event, which is likewise open to the public, will have the following program:

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar"......Grieg
Overture, "The Magic Flute"......Mozart
"Whispers of Love"......Andre
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"...Saint-Saens
Finale, Scheherazade"......Rimsky-Korsakov
"National League of Masonic Clubs' March"......Harlow
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"...Wagner
Male chorus......Boston Masonic Club
Warren W. Adams, leader.
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"......Herbert
Waltz, "Roses from the South"......Strauss
March, "Boston Commandery"......Carter

HERALD-JUNE.12

Masonic Night at the "Pops"

SYMPHONY HALL—Tonight's program at the Boston Masonic Club's celebration will include among other features singing by the male chorus under the direction of Warren W. Adams.

The program follows: Triumphal march from "Sigurd Jorsalfar," Grieg; overture, "The Magic Flute," Mozart; "Whispers of Love," Andre; fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; finale, "Scheherabade," Rimsky-Korsakov; "National League of Masonic Clubs' March," Harlow; overture, "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Boston Masonic Club Male Chorus, selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; waltz, "Roses From the South," Strauss; march, "Boston Commandery," Carter.

GLOBE. JUNE. 12.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

MASONIC NIGHT

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar"......Grieg
Overture, "The Magic Flute".Mozart
"Whispers of Love"......André
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"
Saint-Saëns
Finale, "Schéhérazade"
Rimsky-Korsakoff
"National League of Masonic Clubs March"......Harlow
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"
Wagner
Boston Masonic Club Male Chorus
(Warren W. Adams, Leader)
Selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert
Waltz, "Roses from the South"
Strauss
March, "Boston Commandery"
Carter

MONITOR-JUNE.12

At The Pops Tonight

"Masonic Clubs' Night"

March from the Music to "Sigurd Jorsalfar"......Grieg
Overture to the Opera "The Magic Flute"......Mozart
Whispers of Love......André
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah"
Saint-Saëns
Finale from the Suite "Scheherazade"
Rimsky-Korsakov
Masonic March......Harlow
Overture to the Opera "The Flying Dutchman"......Wagner
Choral Numbers
Selection, "Orange Blossoms"..Herbert
Waltz, "Roses from the South"
J. Strauss
Masonic March......Carter

Conductors:
A. Jacchia   W. W. Adams
Assisting:
Boston Masonic Clubs' Chorus

TRANS. JUNE. 12.

POP CONCERT

The National League of Masonic clubs will celebrate at the Pop Concert in Symphony hall tonight.

This event, which is likewise open to the public, will have the following program:

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar," Grieg; Overture, "The Magic Flute," Mozart; Whispiers of Love, Andre; Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Finale, Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov; National League of Masonic Clubs March, Harlow; Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Boston Masonic Club Male Chorus, Warren W. Adams, Leader; Selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; Waltz, "Roses from the South." Strauss; March, "Boston Commandery," Carter.

TELE. JUNE. 12.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

The following program will be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture, "The Sicilian Vespers"......Verdi
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons"......Strauss
Deep River......Burleigh-Jacchia
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"......Leoni
Prelude and Siciliana, "Cavalleria Rusticana"......Mascagni
Turkish Patrol......Michaelis
Sextet, "Lucia di Lemmermoor"....Donizetti
Wotan's Farewell and Fire Scene, "The Valkyrie"......Wagner
"The Shamrock" Irish Airs......Myddleton
Panamericana......Herbert
Bacchanale "Philemon et Baucis"....Gounod

ADVTSR-JUNE.13

POPS PROGRAM TONIGHT

For the Pops concert in Symphony hall tonight, at which Dartmouth College will be represented, Mr. Jaochia has prepared the following program:

Overture to "The Sicilian Vespers"......Verdi
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons"......Strauss
"Deep River"......Burleigh-Jacchia
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"......Leoni
Prelude and Siciliana, "Cavalleria Rusticana"......Mascagni
"Turkish Patrol"......Michaelis
Sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor"..Donizetti
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene, "The Valkyrie"......Wagner
"The Shamrock," selection of Irish Airs......Myddleton
Panamericana......Herbert
Fifth Hungarian Dance......Brahms

HERALD-JUNE.13

AT THE POPS

For the Pops Concert in Symphony Hall tonight, at which Dartmouth College will be represented, Mr. Jacchia has made the following program:

Overture to "The Sicilian Vespers," Verdi; Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons," Strauss; Deep River, Burleigh-Jacchia; Fantasia, "L'Oracolo," Leoni; Prelude and Siciliana, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; Turkish Patrol, Michaelis; Sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor," Donizetti; Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene, "The Valkyrie," Wagner; "The Shamrock." Selection of Irish Airs, Myddleton; Panamericana, Herbert; Fifth Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

TELE. JUNE. 13.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

DARTMOUTH NIGHT

Overture to "The Sicilian Vespers"
Verdi
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons"....Strauss
Deep River......Burleigh-Jacchia
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"......Leoni
Prelude and Siciliana, "Cavalleria Rusticana"......Mascagni
"Turkish Patrol"......Michaelis
Sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor"
Donizetti
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene, "Walküre"......Wagner
"The Shamrock," Selection of Irish Airs......Myddleton
Panamericana......Herbert
Bacchanale, "Philémon et Baucis"
Gounod

MONITOR JUNE 13

At The Pops Tonight

Overture to the Opera, "The Sicilian Vespers"......Verdi
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons"....J. Strauss
Deep River......Burleigh-Jacchia
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"......Leoni
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana"......Mascagni
Turkish Patrol......Michaelis
Sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor"
Donizetti
Wotan's Farewell and Fire-Scene, from "Die Walküre"......Wagner
Irish Airs......Myddleton
Panamericana......Herbert
Fifth Hungarian Dance......Brahms

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE. 13.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT.

The following program will be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pop Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall tonight:

Stars and Stripes Forever......Sousa
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"......Suppe
Fantasia, "Aida"......Verdi
Tufts Songs.
Finale, Fourth Symphony.....Tschaikovsky
Aase's Death, from "Peer Gynt"......Grieg
Rhapsody, "Espagna"......Chabrier
Tufts Songs.
Medley-Fantasy on Tufts Airs...Morton, '11
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube."
J. Strauss
Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin"..Wagner

ADVTSR. JUNE. 14.

AT THE POPS

Tufts College boys will be present at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight. The program, however, is general public interest. The numbe follow:

"Stars and Stripes Forever"......Sou
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"......Sup
Fantasia, "Aida"......Ver
Tufts College Songs.
Finale, Fourth Symphony......Tchaikovsky
"Aase's Death" from "Peer Gynt"......Grie
Rhapsody, "Espana"......Chabrie
Tufts College Songs.
Medley, Fantasy on Tufts Airs....Morton, '1
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube".Straus
Introduction to Act III, "Lohrengrin"..Wagne

HERALD-JUNE.14.

AT THE POPS

Tufts college will be present at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The program, however, is of general public interest. The numbers follow:

Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa; Overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; Fantasia, "Aida," Verdi; Tufts College Songs; Finale, Fourth Symphony, Tchaikovsky; Aase's Death from "Peer Gynt," Grieg; Rhapsody, "Espana," Chabrier; Tufts College Songs; Medley-Fantasy on Tufts Airs, Morton '11; Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," Strauss; Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner.

TELE. JUNE 14.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

TUFTS NIGHT

"Stars and Stripes Forever"...Sousa
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"
Suppé
Fantasia, "Aida"......Verdi
Tufts songs
Finale, Fourth Symphony
Tschaikowsky
Ase's Death from "Peer Gynt"
Grieg
Rhapsody, "España"......Chabrier
Tufts songs
Medley-Fantasy on Tufts airs
Morton '11
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"......Strauss
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"......Wagner

MONITOR. JUNE 14

At the Pops Tonight

"Tufts Night"

March, "Stars and Stripes Forever,"
Sousa
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"....Suppé
Fantasia, "Aida"......Verdi
Tufts Songs
Finale from the Fourth Symphony
Chaikovsky
Aase's Death from the Music to "Peer Gynt"......Grieg
Rhapsody, "Espana"......Chabrier
Tufts Songs
Medley-Fantasia on Tufts Airs...Morton
Waltz, "Blue Danube"......J. Strauss
Introduction to Act III. "Lohengrin"
Wagner

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE. 14.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Leoncavallo
Prologue to "Pagliacci"......Fahrbach
Waltz, "Dream of Love"......Herbert
"Devotion"......Massenet
Fantasia, "Manon"......Tschaikovsky
Marche Slave......Arr. by Jacchia
"Eili, Eili"......Strauss
Overture to "The Bat"
Bentley School Songs......Rollinson
American Military Fantasy......Metra
Waltz, "Spanish Serenade"......Dvorak
Slavonic Dance, No. 7

ADVTSR. JUNE. 15.

TONIGHT'S PAPS

Agide Jacchia and the Pops orchestra will be heard in the following program in Symphony hall tonight:

Prologue to "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; waltz, "Dream of Love," Fahrbach; "Devotion," Herbert; fantasia, "Manon," Massenet; "Marche Slave," Tchaikowsky; "Berceuse," Johns; "overture to "The Bat," Strauss; Bentley school songs; American Military Fanatsy, Rollinson; waltz, "Spanish Serenade," Metra; "Seventh Slavonic Dance," Op. 72, Dvorak.

TELE. JUNE. 15.

AT THE POPS

Agide Jacchia and the Pops orchestra will be heard in the following program in Symphony Hall tonight:

Prologue to "Pagliaci"...... Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Dream of Love"...... Fabrach
"Devotion"...... Herbert
Fantasia, "Manon"...... Massenet
Marche Slave...... Tchaikovsky
Berceuse...... Johns
Overture to "The Bat"...... Strauss
Bentley School Songs
American Military Fantasy..... Rollinson
Waltz, Spanish Serenade...... Metra
Seventh Slavonic Dance, Op. 72 .. Dvorak

HERALD. JUNE. 15

At the Pops Tonight

Prologue to the Opera, "Pagliacci"
Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Dream of Love".....Fahrbach
Devotion......Herbert
Fantasia, "Manon"......Massenet
Slavic March......Tschaikowsky
Eili, Eili......Jacchia
Overture to the Operetta, "The Bat"
J. Strauss
Bentley School Songs
American Military Fantasy....Rollinson
Waltz, "Spanish Serenade"......Metra
Slavonic Dance......Dvorák

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE. 15

At The Pops Tonight

Overture to the Opera "Raymond"
Thomas
Waltz from "The Bat".....J. Strauss
Angel-Dream......Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Tosca"......Puccini
Minuet and Tambourin....Rameau-Mottl
Harp Solo, "In Springtime"......Holy
Cortège......Dunham
Overture to "Tannhäuser"....Wagner
Selection, "Thais"......Massenet
Kalinka (Russian Folk-Song)....Jacchia
Procession of the Sardar..Ippolitov-Ivanov

Conductor: A. Jacchia.
Soloist: A. Holy.

TRANS. JUNE. 16.

Seventh Week of the Pops Concerts

Agide Jacchia, conductor of the Pops orchestra in Symphony Hall, has made programs abounding with interest for their coming seventh week. Of these, there may be mentioned a program of dance music on Tuesday, June 19, and the second Russian Tchaikovsky program of the season on Sunday, June 24. This will be the last of the newly instituted Sunday concerts. The dance program for next Tuesday follows:

Invitation to the Dance......Weber-Berlioz
Aragonaise from "The Cid"......Massenet
Tarantelle......Jacchia
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah"
Saint-Saens
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"......Tchaikovsky
- (a) Chinese Dance.
- (b) Dance of the Sugar Fairy.
- (c) Trepak.

Habanera......Chabrier
Minuet from "The Damnation of Faust"
Berlioz
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda"
Ponchielli
Polonaise Militaire......Chopin
Contra Dances (American)—
"Soldier's Joy."
"The Devil's Dream."
"Arkansas Traveler."
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"
Strauss

TRAN. [illegible]

POPS TONIGHT

The following music will be played at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Overture to "Raymond," Thomas; waltz, from "The Bat," Strauss; "eve Angelique," Rubinstein; fantasia, "Tosca," Puccini; ballet suite from "Platee" and "Fetes d'Hebe," (r) "Minuet," (b) "Tambourin," Rameau-Mottl; harp solo, "In Springtime," (Holy) Alfred Holy; "Cortege," Dunham; overture to "Tannhauser," Wagner; selection, "Thais," Massenet; "Kalinka," arranged by Agide Jacchia; "Procession of the Sardar," Ippolitov-Ivanov.

TELE. JUNE 16.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Overture to "Raymond".....Thomas
Waltz, from "The Bat"......Strauss
Rêve Angélique......Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Tosca"......Puccini
Ballet Suite from "Platée" and "Fêtes d'Hébé" ...Rameau-Mottl
Harp Solo, "In Springtime"....Holy
(Alfred Holy)
Cortège......Dunham
Overture to "Tannhäuser"..Wagner
Selection, "Thais"......Massenet
"Kalinka" (Russian Folk Song)
Arranged by Jacchia
Procession of the Sardar
Ippolitoff-Ivanoff

MONITOR. JUNE 16

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Overture, "Raymond"......Thomas
Waltz, from "The Bat"......Strauss
Reve Angelique......Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Tosca"......Puccini
Suite from "Platee" and "Fetes d'Hebe."
Rameau-Mottl
Harp solo, "In Springtime," Alfred Holy.
Cortege......Dunham
Overture, "Tannhauser"......Wagner
Selection, "Thais"......Massenet
"Kalinka," Russian Folk Song.
Arr. by Jacchia
Procession of the Sardar...Ippolitov-Ivanov

ADVT. JUNE 16

POPS TONIGHT

The following music will be played at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Overture to "Raymond"......Thomas
Waltz from "The Bat"......Strauss
Reve Angelique......Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Tosca"......Puccini
Ballet Suite from "Platee" and "Fetes d'Hebe"......Rameau-Mottl
(a) Minuet. (b) Tambourin.
Harp solo, "In Springtime"......Holy
Alfred Holy.
Cortege......Dunham
Overture to "Tanhauser"......Wagner
Selection, "Thais"......Massenet
"Kalinka"......Arr. by Agide Jacchia
Procession of the Sardar......Ippl[illegible]vanov

HERALD JUNE 16

cial Programs at Symphony Hall "Pops"

The sixth week of the "Pop" concerts at Symphony Hall will open tonight with an operatic program which will comprise excerpts from "Eugen Onegin," "William Tell," "Thais," "Samson and Delilah," "Madame Butterfly," "Othello," "Tristan," "Carmen," "Cavelleria" and "La Gioconda."

Tomorrow night will be the annual Technology Night, at which undergraduates and graduates will be largely represented. The program will include Tech songs and excerpts from the Tech show of 1923, "The Sun Temple." Stephen S. Townsend will lead. The selections include: Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night," Suppe; waltz, "Miners' Lights," Zeller; fantasia, "The Masked Ball," Verdi; "No Deceit Practiced," K. C. Kingsley, '23; "Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; songs by Frank D. Gage '23, second Hungarian rhapsody, Liszt; selections, "The Sun Temple," waltz, "Pomone"; dance of the Camorrists, "The Jewels of the Madonna," Wolf-Ferrari.

At the Boston Masonic Club night, Tuesday, Warren W. Adams will lead the male chorus in a group of songs. The program follows: Triumphal march from "Sigurd Jorsalfar," Grieg; overture, "The Magic Flute," Mozart; "Whispers of Love," Andre; fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; finale, "Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakov; "National League of Masonic Clubs' March," Harlow; overture, "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Boston Masonic Club Male Chorus, selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; waltz, "Roses From the South," Strauss; march, "Boston Commandery," Carter.

GLOBE-JUNE 1

Sixth Week of "Pops"

The sixth week of the "Pops" concerts at Symphony Hall opened last night with the third Sunday concert. The program consisted of excerpts from the operatic works of Italian, French, German, and Russian composers. It was again evident that the edict prohibiting smoking and the sale of refreshments at such entertainments on Sunday is no deterrent to audiences, for every seat was taken and many were standing in the balcony. The program was interestingly varied and after every number Mr. Jacchia and the orchestra were dorowicz, concertmaster, played the solo violin part of the "Meditation" from Thaïs to the manifest approval warmly applauded. Julius Theo- of his listeners. The last Sunday night concert of this season will be given on June 24 with an all-Russian program.

Tonight will be the annual Institute of Technology night; tomorrow night that of the National League of Masonic Clubs, now holding their annual convention in this city, and Thursday brings Tufts College night. These special nights are all open to the public.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

TECH NIGHT

Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night" .... Suppé
Waltz, "Miners' Lights" .... Zeller
Fantasia, "The Masked Ball" Dunham
"No Deceit Practiced"... Kingsley '23
Ride of the Valkyries ...... Wagner
Numbers by Frank Gage '23
Second Hungarian Rhapsody... Liszt
Tech Songs
(Leader, Stephen S. Townsend)
Selection, "The Sun Temple"
(Tech Show, 1923)
Waltz, "Pomone" .... Waldteufel
Dance of the Camorrists, "The Jewels of the Madonna".. Wolf-Ferrari

MONITOR. JUNE 11

POPS PROGRAM

Tonight will be the annual Tech Night at the Pop Concert in Symphony hall, with additional songs and "stunts" by members of the Institute.

This occassion will also be a public concert. The numbers follow:

Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night," Suppe; Waltz, "Miners' Light," Zeller; Fantasia, "The Masked Ball," Dunham; "No Deceit Practiced," Kinksley '23; Ride of the Valkyries, Wagner; Numbers by Frank Gage '23; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Tech Songs (Leader, Stephen S. Townsend); Selection, "The Sun Temple," (Tech Show, 1923); Waltz, "Pomone," Waldteufel; Dance of the Camorrists, "The Jewels of the Madonna" Wolf Ferrari.

TELE. JUNE 1

At The Pops Tonight

"Technology Night"

Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night," Suppé
Waltz, "Miners' Lights" .... Zeller
Fantasia, "The Masked Ball" .... Verdi
Technology Songs ....
Ride of the Valkyrs .... Wagner
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ...... Liszt
Numbers from the "Tech" Play ....
Waltz, "Pomona" .... Waldteufel
Camorrists' Dance .... Wolf Ferrari

Conductors:
A. Jacchia   Stephen Townsend
Assisting: Technology Glee Club

TRANS. JUNE 11.

POPS PROGRAM

Tonight will be the annual Tech night at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall, with additional songs and "stunts" by members of the institute.

This occasion will also be a public concert. The numbers follow:

Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night" Suppe
Waltz, "Miners' Lights" .... Zeller
Fantasia, "The Masked Ball" .... Dunham
"No Deceit Practiced" .... Kingsley '23
Ride of the Valkyries .... Wagner
Numbers by Frank Gage '23
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Tech songs (leader, Stephen S. Townsend)
Selection, "The Sun Temple"
(Tech show, 1923)
Waltz, "Pomone" .... Waldteufel
Dance of the Camorrists, "The Jewels of the Madonna" .... Wolf-Ferrari

HERALD-JUNE 11

POP CONCERT

The National League of Masonic clubs will celebrate at the Pop Concert in Symphony hall tonight. This event, which is likewise open to the public, will have the following program:

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar" .... Grieg
Overture, "The Magic Flute" .... Mozart
"Whispers of Love" .... Andre
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah" ... Saint-Saens
Finale, Scheherazade" .... Rimsky-Korsakov
"National League of Masonic Clubs' March" .... Harlow
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" ... Wagner
Male chorus .... Boston Masonic Club
Warren W. Adams, leader.
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .... Herbert
Waltz, "Roses from the South" .... Strauss
March, "Boston Commandery" .... Carter

HERALD-JUNE 12

Masonic Night at the "Pops"

SYMPHONY HALL—Tonight's program at the Boston Masonic Club's celebration will include among other features singing by the male chorus under the direction of Warren W. Adams.

The program follows: Triumphal march from "Sigurd Jorsalfar," Grieg; overture, "The Magic Flute," Mozart; "Whispers of Love," Andre; fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; finale, "Scheherabade," Rimsky-Korsakov; "National League of Masonic Clubs' March," Harlow; overture, "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Boston Masonic Club Male Chorus, selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; waltz, "Roses From the South," Strauss; march, "Boston Commandery," Carter.

GLOBE. JUNE 12

"Pops" Program for Tonight

MASONIC NIGHT

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar" .... Grieg
Overture, "The Magic Flute" . Mozart
"Whispers of Love" .... André
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saëns
Finale, "Schéhérazade" Rimsky-Korsakoff
"National League of Masonic Clubs March" .... Harlow
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Boston Masonic Club Male Chorus
(Warren W. Adams, Leader)
Selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert
Waltz, "Roses from the South" Strauss
March, "Boston Commandery" Carter

MONITOR-JUNE 12

At The Pops Tonight

"Masonic Clubs' Night"

March from the Music to "Sigurd Jorsalfar" .... Grieg
Overture to the Opera "The Magic Flute" .... Mozart
Whispers of Love .... André
Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saëns
Finale from the Suite "Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov
Masonic March .... Harlow
Overture to the Opera "The Flying Dutchman" .... Wagner
Choral Numbers
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .. Herbert
Waltz, "Roses from the South" J. Strauss
Masonic March .... Carter

Conductors:
A. Jacchia   W. W. Adams
Assisting:
Boston Masonic Clubs' Chorus

TRANS. JUNE 12.

POP CONCERT

The National League of Masonic clubs will celebrate at the Pop Concert in Symphony hall tonight.

This event, which is likewise open to the public, will have the following program:

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar," Grieg; Overture "The Magic Flute," Mozart; Whispiers of Love, Andre; Fantasia, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Finale, Scheherazade" Rimsky-Korsakov; National League of Masonic Clubs March, Harlow; Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Boston Masonic Club Male Chorus, Warren W. Adams, Leader; Selection, "Orange Blossoms" Herbert; Waltz, "Roses from the South." Strauss; March, "Boston Commandery," Carter.

TELE. JUNE 12.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

The following program will be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pops Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture, "The Sicilian Vespers" ..... Verdi
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons" .... Strauss
Deep River .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo" .... Leoni
Prelude and Siciliana, "Cavalleria Rusticana .... Mascagni
Turkish Patrol .... Michaelis
Sextet, "Lucia di Lemmermoor" .... Donizetti
Wotan's Farewell and Fire Scene, "The Valkyrie" .... Wagner
"The Shamrock" Irish Airs .... Myddleton
Panamericana .... Herbert
Bacchanale "Philemon et Baucis" .... Gounod

ADVISR-JUNE 13

POPS PROGRAM TONIGHT

For the Pops concert in Symphony hall tonight, at which Dartmouth College will be represented, Mr. Jacchia has prepared the following program:

Overture to "The Sicilian Vespers" ...... Verdi
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons" .... Strauss
"Deep River" .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo" .... Leoni
Prelude and Siciliana, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
"Turkish Patrol" .... Michaelis
Sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor" .. Donizetti
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene, "The Valkyrie" .... Wagner
"The Shamrock," selection of Irish Airs .... Myddleton
Panamericana .... Herbert
Fifth Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

HERALD-JUNE 13

AT THE POPS

For the Pops Concert in Symphony Hall tonight, at which Dartmouth College will be represented, Mr. Jacchia has made the following program:

Overture to "The Sicilian Vespers," Verdi; Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons," Strauss; Deep River, Burleigh-Jacchia; Fantasia, "L'Oracolo," Leoni; Prelude and Siciliana, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; Turkish Patrol, Michaelis; Sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor," Donizetti; Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene, "The Valkyrie," Wagner; "The Shamrock." Selection of Irish Airs, Myddleton; Panamericana, Herbert; Fifth Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

TELE. JUNE 13.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

DARTMOUTH NIGHT

Overture to "The Sicilian Vespers" Verdi
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons" .... Strauss
Deep River .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo" .... Leoni
Prelude and Siciliana, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
"Turkish Patrol" .... Michaelis
Sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor" Donizetti
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene, "Walküre" ...... Wagner
"The Shamrock," Selection of Irish Airs .... Myddleton
Panamericana .... Herbert
Bacchanale, "Philémon et Baucis" Gounod

MONITOR JUNE 13

At The Pops Tonight

Overture to the Opera, "The Sicilian Vespers" .... Verdi
Waltz, "Vienna Bonbons" .... J. Strauss
Deep River .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo" .... Leoni
Prelude and Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
Turkish Patrol .... Michaelis
Sextet from "Lucia di Lammermoor" Donizetti
Wotan's Farewell and Fire-Scene, from "Die Walküre" .... Wagner
Irish Airs .... Myddleton
Panamericana .... Herbert
Fifth Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 13.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT.

The following program will be presented by Agide Jacchia and the Pop Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall tonight:

Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa
Overture, "Poet and Peasant" .... Suppe
Fantasia, "Aida" .... Verdi
Tufts Songs.
Finale, Fourth Symphony ..... Tschaikovsky
Aase's Death, from "Peer Gynt" ...... Grieg
Rhapsody, "Espagna" .... Chabrier
Tufts Songs.
Medley-Fantasy on Tufts Airs... Morton, '11
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube." J. Strauss
Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin". Wagner

ADVISR. JUNE 14.

AT THE POPS

Tufts College boys will be present at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight. The program, however, is of general public interest. The numbers follow:

"Stars and Stripes Forever" .... Sousa
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" .... Suppe
Fantasia, "Aida" .... Verdi
Tufts College Songs.
Finale, Fourth Symphony .... Tchaikovsky
"Aase's Death" from "Peer Gynt" ...... Grieg
Rhapsody, "Espana" .... Chabrier
Tufts College Songs.
Medley, Fantasy on Tufts Airs... Morton, '11
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube". Strauss
Introduction to Act III, "Lohrengrin".. Wagner

HERALD-JUNE 14.

AT THE POPS

Tufts college will be present at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The program, however, is of general public interest. The numbers follow:

Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa; Overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; Fantasia, "Aida," Verdi; Tufts College Songs; Finale, Fourth Symphony, Tchaikovsky; Aase's Death from "Peer Gynt," Grieg; Rhapsody, "Espana," Chabrier; Tufts College Songs; Medley-Fantasy on Tufts Airs, Morton '11; Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," Strauss; Introduction to Act 3, "Lohengrin," Wagner.

TELE. JUNE 14.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

TUFTS NIGHT

"Stars and Stripes Forever" ... Sousa
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" Suppé
Fantasia, "Aïda" .... Verdi
Tufts songs
Finale, Fourth Symphony Tschaikowsky
Ase's Death from "Peer Gynt" Grieg
Rhapsody, "España" .... Chabrier
Tufts songs
Medley-Fantasy on Tufts airs Morton '11
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" .... Strauss
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner

MONITOR. JUNE 14

At the Pops Tonight

"Tufts Night"

March, "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa
Overture, "Poet and Peasant" .... Suppé
Fantasia, "Aida" .... Verdi
Tufts Songs
Finale from the Fourth Symphony Chaikovsky
Aase's Death from the Music to "Peer Gynt" .... Grieg
Rhapsody, "Espana" .... Chabrier
Tufts Songs
Medley-Fantasia on Tufts Airs... Morton
Waltz, "Blue Danube" .... J. Strauss
Introduction to Act III. "Lohengrin" Wagner

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 14

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Prologue to "Pagliacci .... Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Dream of Love" .... Fahrbach
"Devotion" .... Herbert
Fantasia, "Manon" .... Massenet
Marche Slave .... Tschaikovsky
"Eili, Eili" .... Arr. by Jacchia
Overture to "The Bat" .... Strauss
Bentley School Songs.
American Military Fantasy .... Rollinson
Waltz, "Spanish Serenade" .... Metra
Slavonic Dance, No. 7 .... Dvorak

ADVISR JUNE 15.

TONIGHT'S PAPS

Agide Jacchia and the Pops orchestra will be heard in the following program in Symphony hall tonight:

Prologue to "Pagliacci," Leoncavello; waltz, "Dream of Love," Fahrbach; "Devotion," Herbert; fantasia, "Manon," Massenet; "Marche Slave," Tchaikowsky; "Berceuse," Johns; "overture to "The Bat," Strauss; Bentley school songs; American Military Fanatsy, Rollinson; waltz, "Spanish Serenade," Metra; "Seventh Slavonic Dance," Op. 72, Dvorak.

TELE. JUNE 15.

AT THE POPS

Agide Jacchia and the Pops orchestra will be heard in the following program in Symphony Hall tonight:

Prologue to "Pagliaci" .... Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Dream of Love" .... Fabrach
"Devotion" .... Herbert
Fantasia, "Manon" .... Massenet
Marche Slave .... Tchaikovsky
Berceuse .... Johns
Overture to "The Bat" .... Strauss
Bentley School Songs
American Military Fantasy ..... Rollinson
Waltz, Spanish Serenade .... Metra
Seventh Slavonic Dance, Op. 72 .. Dvorak

HERALD JUNE 15

At the Pops Tonight

Prologue to the Opera, "Pagliacci" Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Dream of Love" ..... Fahrbach
Devotion .... Herbert
Fantasia, "Manon" .... Massenet
Slavic March .... Tschaikowsky
Eili, Eili .... Jacchia
Overture to the Operetta, "The Bat" J. Strauss
Bentley School Songs
American Military Fantasy ... Rollinson
Waltz, "Spanish Serenade" ..... Metra
Slavonic Dance .... Dvorák

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 15.

At The Pops Tonight

Overture to the Opera "Raymond" Thomas
Waltz from "The Bat" ..... J. Strauss
Angel-Dream .... Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Tosca" .... Puccini
Minuet and Tambourin.... Rameau-Mottl
Harp Solo, "In Springtime" ...... Holy
Cortège .... Dunham
Overture to "Tannhäuser" .... Wagner
Selection, "Thais" .... Massenet
Kalinka (Russian Folk-Song) .... Jacchia
Procession of the Sardar.. Ippolitov-Ivanov

Conductor: A. Jacchia.
Soloist: A. Holy.

TRANS. JUNE 16

Seventh Week of the Pops Concerts

Agide Jacchia, conductor of the Pops orchestra in Symphony Hall, has made programs abounding with interest for their coming seventh week. Of these, there may be mentioned a program of dance music on Tuesday, June 19, and the second Russian Tchaikovsky program of the season on Sunday, June 24. This will be the last of the newly instituted Sunday concerts. The dance program for next Tuesday follows:

Invitation to the Dance .... Weber-Berlioz
Aragonaise from "The Cid" .... Massenet
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tchaikovsky
(a) Chinese Dance.
(b) Dance of the Sugar Fairy.
(c) Trepak.
Habanera .... Chabrier
Minuet from "The Damnation of Faust" Berlioz
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" Ponchielli
Polonaise Militaire .... Chopin
Contra Dances (American)—
"Soldier's Joy."
"The Devil's Dream."
"Arkansas Traveler."
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" Strauss

POPS TONIGHT

The [illegible] music will be played at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Overture to "Raymond," Thomas; waltz, from "The Bat," Strauss; "eve Angelique," Rubinstein; fantasia, "Tosca," Puccini; ballet suite from "Platee" and "Fetes d'Hebe," (r) "Minuet," (b) "Tambourin," Rameau-Mottl; harp solo, "In Springtime," (Holy) Alfred Holy; "Cortege," Dunham; overture to "Tannhauser," Wagner; selection, "Thais," Massenet; "Kalinka," arranged by Agide Jacchia; "Procession of the Sardar," Ippolitov-Ivanov.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Overture to "Raymond" ..... Thomas
Waltz, from "The Bat" ...... Strauss
Rêve Angélique .... Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Tosca" .... Puccini
Ballet Suite from "Platée" and "Fêtes d'Hébé" ... Rameau-Mottl
Harp Solo, "In Springtime" .... Holy
(Alfred Holy)
Cortège .... Dunham
Overture to "Tannhäuser" .. Wagner
Selection, "Thais" .... Massenet
"Kalinka" (Russian Folk Song)
Arranged by Jacchia
Procession of the Sardar
Ippolitoff-Ivanoff

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

Overture, 'Raymond" .... Thomas
Waltz, from "The Bat" .... Strauss
Reve Angelique .... Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Tosca" .... Puccini
Suite from "Platee" and "Fetes d'Hebe." Rameau-Mottl
Harp solo, "In Springtime," Alfred Holy.
Cortege .... Dunham
Overture, "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Selection, "Thais" .... Massenet
"Kalinka," Russian Folk Song. Arr. by Jacchia
Procession of the Sardar.... Ippolitov-Ivanov

ADVT

POPS TONIGHT

The following music will be played at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Overture to "Raymond" .... Thomas
Waltz from "The Bat" .... Strauss
Reve Angelique .... Rubinstein
Fantasia, "Tosca" .... Puccini
Ballet Suite from "Platee" and "Fetes d'Hebe" (a) Minuet. (b) Tambourin. Rameau-Mottl
Harp solo, "In Springtime" .... Holy
Alfred Holy.
Cortege .... Dunham
Overture to "Tanhauser" .... Wagner
Selection, "Thais" .... Massenet
"Kalinka" .... Arr. by Agide Jacchia
Procession of the Sardar..... Ippolitov-Ivanov

HERALD

Seventh Week of "Pops" At Symphony Hall

This week's programs at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall will start with Boston University Night tomorrow, college songs by the club and solos by John P. Marshall, organist, and Arthur Brook, flutist, being among the numbers.

The dances to be represented on Tuesday will include Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker" suite, Jacchia's "Tarantelle," Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda," "Blue Danube" waltz and a selection of American jigs and reels. The last Sunday concert, June 24, will be a Russian program.

Tomorrow, Boston University Night, the selections will be as follows: Triumphal March from "Aida," Verdi; overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Largo, Handel; Fantasia, "Faust," Gounod; "Finlandia," Sibelius; flute solo, "Hungarian Fantasy," Doppler; overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; college songs, "Alma Mater," Esther Nazarian; "Clarissima," Patterson, '12; Fantasia, "La Boheme," Puccini; "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa.

GLOBE. JUNE. 17.

POP'S PROGRAMS

Two programs of special interest will be given at the Pop concerts in Symphony hall during the seventh week: a program of dance music on Tuesday, and the second Russian Tchaikovsky program of the season on Sunday, June 24. This will be the last Sunday concert of the season. The programs of Mr. Jacchia, nevertheless, for every night include music of popular interest and special distinction. Tomorrow will be the annual Boston University night, open to the public.

MONDAY

Triumphal March from "Aida" .... Verdi
Overture to "Der Freischueitz" .... Weber
Largo (organ, John P. Marshall) .. Handel
Fantasia, "Faust" .... Gounod
Finlandia .... Sibelius
Flute solo: Hungarian Fantasy .... Doppler
Mr Arthur Brooke
Overture Solennelle, "1812" .... Tchaikovsky
Tchaikovsky
College Songs
Fantasia, "La Boheme" .... Puccini
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers .... Jessel
Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa

TUESDAY
DANCE MUSIC

Invitation to the Dance .... Weber-Berlioz
Aragonaise from "The Cid" .... Massenet
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" .... Saint-Saens
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tchaikovsky
(a) Chinese Dance, (b) Dance of the Sugar Fairy, (c) Trepak.
Habanera .... Chabrier
Minuet from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli
Polonaise Militaire .... Chopin
Contra Dances (American), "Soldier's Joy" "The Devil's Dream" "Arkansas Traveller"
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" .... Strauss

WEDNESDAY

Overture to "Pique Dame" .... Suppe
Waltz "Espana" .... Waldteufel
Humoresque .... Dvorak
Fantasia, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Overture, "Jeanne d'Arc" .... Converse
Prelude .... Rachmaninov
Intermezzo .... Atherton
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Ballet Suite from "Henry VIII" .... Saint-Saens
(a) Gypsy Dance, (b) Jig and Finale
Narcissus .... Nevin
March, "Queen of Sheba" .... Gounod

THURSDAY

Overture to "Zampa" .... Herold
Waltz, "Morning Journals" .... Strauss
Ave Maria .... Schubert-Wilhelmj
(solo violin, organ, harp and strings)
Fantasia, "Manon Lescaut" .... Puccini
Scenes Alsaciennes .... Massenet
(a) Sunday morning, (b) Sunday evening
Largo .... Handel
En Badinant .... d'Ambrosio
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremburg" .... Wagner
Fantasia, "The Tales of Hoffman" .... Offenbach
Intermezzo, "Pagliacci" .... Leoncavallo
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar

FRIDAY

Entrance of the Gladiators .... Fucik
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" .... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Aida" .... Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt" .... Grieg
Largo .... Handel
(solo violin, harp, organ and strings)
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers .... Jessel
Overture Solennnelle, "1812" .. Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .... Herbert
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa

SATURDAY

Overture to "Light Cavalry" .... Suppe
Waltz, "Artist's Life" .... Strauss
Aubade Printaniere (Spring Dawn) .... Lacombe
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail, "Parsifal" .... Wagner
English Horn solo "Cowherd's Melody" .... Schumann
(Louis Speyer)
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
First Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Introduction to "Othello" ("The Tempest") .... Verdi
"Deep River" .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Bolero .... Moskowsky

SUNDAY, JUNE 24—RUSSIAN—TCHAIKOVSKY PROGRAM

Procession of the Sardar .. Ippolitov-Ivanov
Waltz from "Eugen Onegin" .. Tchaikovsky
3rd Movement of Schcherazide .... Rimsky-Korsakov
Andante Cantabile .... Tchaikovsky
Fantasia on Serbian Themes .... Rimsky-Korsakov
Marche Slave .... Tchaikovsky
Ballet Suite "Nutcracker" ... Tchaikovsky
(a) Little Overture, (b) Dance of the Sugar Fairy, (c) Trepak
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" .... Glazounov
Russian Folk Songs .... Arr by Jacchia
(a) Kalinka, (b) Cossack Song, (c) Volga

HERALD. JUNE. 17

SPECIAL PROGRAMS AT POP CONCERT

Two programs of special interest will be given at the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall this week, including a program of dance music on Tuesday and a second Russian Tchaikovsky program next Sunday, June 24. This will be the last Sunday concert of the season. The programs Conductor Agide Jacchia makes up offer for every night numbers of popular interest and special distinction. Tomorrow will be the annual Boston University Night, but open to the public.

ADVTSR. JUNE. 17.

BOSTON'S FAMOUS "POPS" CONCERTS SYMPHONY HALL

Through another week, the Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston will continue the tranquill course which is sign of dutiful management, faithful performance and satisfaction among the public.

Tuesday night's program will consist of dance numbers. Amoug them are three from Chaikovsky's "Nutcracker" ballet; an unfamiliar "Habanera" by Chabrier; a Spanish dance from Massenet's opera, "The Cid"; Webers "Invitation to the Dance" for prelude; the Bacchanal in the temple of Dagon from Saint-Saens's opera, "Samson and Delilah"; three old American contra dances; and the inevitable Danubian waltz of Strauss and Ponchielli's "Dance of the Hours."

The list for Monday brings Fantasias from "Faust" and "La Boheme," and Sibelius's tone-poem, "Finlandia"; for Wednesday an Intermezzo by Percy Atherton, resident composer, and two dances from Saint-Saens's opera, "Henry VIII"; for Thursday Fantasias from Puccini's "Manon Lescant" and Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffmann"; and the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger." On Friday returns the much-liked pot-pourri from Herbert's musical play, "Orange Blossoms"; while on Saturday Mr. Horn will be heard in a solo-piece. Eatables, drinkables and smokeables will be as usual as the programmes.

MERIDAN. CONN. RECORD. JUNE. 18.

Symphony Hall "Pops"

SYMPHONY HALL—A program, consisting entirely of dance music, will be played this evening at the "Pops."

The selections are as follows: "Invitation to the Dance," Weber-Berlioz; aragonaise from "The Cid," Massenet; tarantell, Jacchia; bachnale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; ballet suite, "Nutcracker," Tschaikovsky; Habanera, Chabrier; minuet from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz; Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli, polonaise "Militaire," Chopin; contra dances, "Soldier's Joy," "Devil's Dream," "Arkansas Traveler"; waltz, "Blue Danube," Strauss.

GLOBE. JUNE. 19.

DANCE MUSIC AT POPS

A program consisting entirely of dance music will be the feature of the pop concert at Symphony hall tonight. The numbers follow:

Invitation to the Dance .... Weber-Berlioz
Argonaise from "The Cid" .... Massenet
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" .. Saint-Saens
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tschaikovsky
Habanera .... Chabrier
Minuet from "The Damnation of "Faust" .... Berlioz
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .. Ponchielli
Polonaise Militaire .... Chopin
Contra Dances (American)—"Soldier's Joy," "Devil's Dream," "Arkansas Traveler."
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" . Strauss

HERALD. JUNE 19.

At The Pops Tonight

Dance Music

Invitation to the Dance . Weber-Berlioz
Aragonaise from "The Cid .... Massenet
Tarantella .... Jacchia
Bacchanal from "Samson and Delilah" .... Saint-Saëns
Three Dances from the Ballet, "Nut-Cracker" .... Chaikovsky
Habanera .... Chabrier
Minuet from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli
Military Polonaise .... Chopin
American Contra Dances—
Waltz "Blue Danube" .... J. Strauss

Conductor: A. Jacchia.

TRANS. JUNE. 19.

DANCE MUSIC AT POPS

A program consisting entirely of dance music will be the feature of the Pop concert at Symphony Hall tonight. The numbers follow:

Invitation to the Dance, Weber-Berlioz; Aragonaise for "The Cid," Massene; Tarantelle, Jacchia; Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker," Tschaikovsky; Habanera, Chabrier; Minuet from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz; Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; Polonaise Militaire, Chopin; Contra Dances (America) "Soldier's Joy," "Devil's Dream," "Arkansas Traveller,"; Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," Strauss

TELE. JUNE. 19.

POPS PROGRAM TONIGHT

The following program will be performed by the Pops Symphony Orchestra, under Agide Jacchia in Symphony Hall tonight.

Overture to "Pique Dame" .... Suppe
Waltz, "Espagna" .... Waldteufel
Humoreske .... Dvorak
Fantasia, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Overture, "Jean d'Arc" .... Converse
Prelude .... Rachmaninov
Intermezzo .... Atherton
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Ballet Suite from "Henry VIII" . Saint-Saens
Narcissus .... Nevin
March, "The Queen of Sheba" .... Gounod

HERALD. JUNE 20

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Program of Dance Music
"Invitation to the Dance" .... Weber-Berlioz
Aragonaise from "The Cid" Massenet
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" .... Saint-Saëns
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tschaikowsky
Habanera .... Chabrier
Minuet from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli
Polonaise Militaire .... Chopin
Contra Dances (American)
"Soldier's Joy" "The Devil's Dream" "Arkansas Traveller"
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" .... Strauss

MONITOR. JUNE. 19.

At the Pops Tonight

Overture, "Pique Dame" .... Suppé
Waltz, "Espagna" .... Waldteufel
Humoreske .... Dvorak
Fantasia, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Overture, "Jeanne d'Arc" .... Converse
Prelude .... Rachmaninov
Intermezzo .... Atherton
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Ballet Suite, "Henry VIII" .. Saint-Saëns
Narcissus .... Nevin
March, "The Queen of Sheba" ... Gounod

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE. 20

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Overture to "Pique-Dame" .... Suppé
Waltz, España" .... Waldteufel
Humoresque .... Dvořák
Fantasia, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Overture, "Jeanne d'Arc" .. Converse
Prelude .... Rachmaninoff
Intermezzo .... Atherton
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ... Liszt
Ballet Suite from "Henry VIII" .... Saint-Saëns
"Narcissus" .... Nevin
March, "Queen of Sheba" .... Gounod

MONITOR - JUNE 20

AT THE POPS TONIGHT.

Agide Jacchia has made the following program for the Pip concert at Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture, "Zampa" .... Herold
Waltz, "Morning Journals" .... Strauss
Ave Maria .... Schubert-Wilhelmj
Fantasia, "Manon Lescaut" .... Puccini
Scenes Alsaciennes .... Massenet
Largo .... Handel
En Badinant .... d'Ambrosio
Prelude, "Mastersingers of Nuremberg" .... Wagner
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann" .. Offenbach
Intermezzo "Pagliacci" .... Leoncavallo
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar

ADVTSR. JUNE 21

At the Pops Tonight

"Entrance of the Gladiators" ..... Fucik
Overture, "William Tell" .... Rossini
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" .... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Aida" .... Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt" .... Grieg
Largo .... Handel
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers ... Jessel
Overture, "1812" .... Chaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .. Herbert
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 22

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Entrance of the Gladiators ... Fucik
Overture to "William Tell" .. Rossini
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Aïda" .... Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt" .... Grieg
Largo .... Handel
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers .... Jessel
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" .... Tschaikowsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .... Herbert
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever ..... Sousa

MONITOR. JUNE. 22.

TONIGHT'S POPS

Agide Jacchia and the Pop Symphony orchestra will be heard in the following program at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

"Entrance of the Gladiators," Fucik; overture to "William Tell," Rossini; waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Vollstedt; fantasia, "Aida," Verdi; suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; largo (solo violin, harp, organ and strings), Handel; Parade of the Wooden Soldiers, Jessel; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Tschaikovsky; selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; Tarantelle, Jacchia; Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa.

TELE. JUNE. 22

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Overture "Light Cavalry" .... Suppe
Waltz "Artist's Life" .... Strauss
"Spring Dawn" .... Lacombe
Fantasia "Cacalleria Rusticana" .. Mascagni
Eentrance of Knights "Parsifal" .. Wagner
English Horn Solo, "Cowherd's Melody" ((Louis Speyer) .... Schumann
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
First Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Introduction to "Othello" .... Verdi
Deep River .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Bolero .... Moskowsky

ADVTSR. JUNE 23

Week-End "Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

Overture to "Light Cavalry" .. Suppé
Waltz, "Artist's Life" .... Strauss
Aubade Printanière .... Lacombe
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
Entrance of Knights into the Temple of the Grail, "Parsifal" .... Wagner
English Horn Solo, "Cowherd's Melody" .... Schumann
(Louis Speyer)
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
First Hungarian Rhapsody ... Liszt
Introduction to "Otello" .... Verdi
Deep River .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Bolero .... Moskowsky

TOMORROW NIGHT

Last Sunday Concert

Procession of the Sardar .... Ippolitov-Ivanoff
Waltz from "Eugen Onegin" .... Tschaikowsky
Third Movement "Schéhérazade" .... Rimsky-Korsakoff
Andante Cantabile .... Tschaikowsky
Fantasia on Serbian Themes .... Rimsky-Korsakoff
Marche Slave .... Tschaikowsky
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tschaikowsky
"Panaderos" .... Glazounoff
Russian Folk Songs arranged by Agide Jacchia
Polonaise from Suite No. 3 .... Tschaikowsky

MONITOR. JUNE 23.

Only Two More Weeks of Pops

Two weeks remain of what is proving the largest Pops season of them all. Tomorrow will bring the last Sunday Pop concert of the season and a Russian-Tchaikovsky program.

Wednesday, June 27, will be the annual Request Night, which is inherently the most popular of all Pop nights.

An innovation at the Pops will be a Spanish program to be given on Thursday, June 28. This program will include:

March, "La Sorella" .... Sorel-Clero
Overture, "The Barber of Seville" .. Rossini
Valse Espagnole, "La Serenade" ..... Metra
Fantasia from the Opera "Carmen" .... Bizet
From "The Cid" .... Massenet
(a) Castillane. (b) Aragonaise
Violin solo, Spanish Dance No. 8 .... Sarasate
Intermezzo, "Goyescas" .... Granados
Rhaspody, "Eopana" .... Chabrier
Suite, "La Feria" .... Lacome
Cadiz .... Albeniz
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" ...... Glazounow

TRAV. JUNE 23

PROGRESS OF THE POPS

For Novelty, a "Spanish Night"—Again the Request Programme — Otherwise Pleasing Variety of Classical Snatches Intermingled with Lighter Selections Suited to Summer Temperatures

AND still the Pop Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra run their familiar course, drawing for yet another week their accustomed quotas of music-lovers who find pleasure in varied programmes, light refreshments, and opportunity for diverting small-talk.. Outstanding event of next week is the "Spanish Programme" for Thursday—an innovation. For this evening Mr. Jacchia has set Massenet's suite of lively dances from "Le Cid"; the overture to Rossini's "Barber of Seville"; a fantasia from "Carmen"; and Chabrier's Spanish rhapsody. As opening number he has chosen Borel's march, "La Sorella," and to close, Glazounov's lively dance, "Panaderos." Tomorrow sees the last of the Sunday evening concerts, signalized by a programme assembling well-liked Russian pieces, for the most part by Chaikovsky and Rimsky-Korsakov. The latter's "Fantasia on Serbian Themes" is least familiar number. Wednesday evening is set apart for the annual "request" programme.

Monday evening brings military numbers: Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance"; Meacham's "American Patrol"; Sousa's "Bullets and Bayonets"; Chaikovsky's "1812" overture; and the resounding march of the "Sambre et Meuse." For Tuesday are appointed selections from Flotow's "Martha" and from "Madama Butterfly"; and for Friday overtures to "Mignon" and "The Flying Dutchman," and portions of "Carmen" and "Pagliacci." Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody" and overtures to "Tannhäuser" and "The Marriage of Figaro" hold positions of prominence on Saturday's list.

TRANS. JUNE. 23.

POPS PROGRAM

The Pops program for tonight's concert in Symphony hall follows:

Overture to "Light Cavalry" .... Suppe
Waltz, "Artist's Life" .... Strauss
Aubade Printaniere ("Spring Dawn") . Lacombe
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Macsagni
Entrance of Knights into the Temple of the Grail, "Parsifal" .... Wagner
English Horn Solo, "Cowherd's Melody" .... Schumann
(Louis Speyer.)
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
First Hungariam Rhapsody .... Liszt
Introduction to "Othello" ("The Tempest") .... Verdi
Deep River .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Bolero .... Moskowky

HERALD. JUNE. 23

Closing [illegible] of Symphony Hall "Pops"

The last week but one of the present "Pop" season in Symphony Hall will open tonight, with the last Sunday "Pop" concert of the season and a Russian-Tchaikovsky program. A feature of the week will be the annual Request Night which falls next Wednesday. This night is determined strictly by popular vote and thus records the best liked pieces on the "Pop" repertory.

An innovation at the "Pops" will be a Spanish program to be given next Thursday. This will include both the music of Spanish composers and the music which the dance rhythms of Spain have inspired in composers of other Nations.

The following numbers are included in tonight's concert: Tchaikovsky's "Eugen Onegin" waltz, "Andante Cantabile," "Marche Slave," "Polonaise" and "Nutcracker" Suite, also Serbian Fantasia, Third Movement of "Scheherazade" and other Russian compositions.

The program tomorrow will include "The Lost Chord," with trumpet solo; "Pomp and Circumstance," "1812" Overture, Afro-American Folk Songs and "Il Trovatore" Fantasia.

GLOBE. JUNE. 24.

LAST TWO WEEKS OF THE POP CONCERTS

The last week but one of the present Pop season in Symphony Hall will open tonight with the last Sunday Pop concert of the season and a Russian-Tchaikovsky program.

A feature of the week will be the annual Request Night, which falls on next Wednesday, June 27. This night is determined strictly by popular vote, and thus records the best-liked pieces on the Pop repertory.

An innovation at the Pops will be a Spanish program, to be given next Thursday, June 28. This will include both the fascinating music of Spanish composers and the music which the dance rhythms of Spain have inspired in composers of other nations.

ADVTSR. JUNE 24

POPS TONIGHT

The following program will be played at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight, under the leadership of Agide Jacchia:

March, "Sambre et Meuse," Planquette-Turlet; Overture to "Phedre," Massenet; The Lost Chord, solo trumpet, George Mager, Sullivan; Fantasia, "Il Trovatore," Verdi; Military March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; Afro American Folk songs, arranged by Agide Jacchia; American Patrol, Meacham; Overture Solonelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; American Military Fantasy, Rollinson; Waltz, "Eternelle Ivresse," Canns; March "Bullets and Bayonets," Sousa.

TELE. JUNE 25.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

March, "Sambre et Meuse" .... Planquette-Turlet
Overture to "Phèdre" .... Massenet
"The Lost Chord" .... Sullivan
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore" .... Verdi
"Pomp and Circumstance" .... Elgar
Afro-American Folk Songs Arranged by Agide Jacchia
American Patrol .... Meacham
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" .... Tschaikowsky
American Military Fantasy . Rollinson
Waltz, "Eternelle Ivresse" .... Ganne
March, "Bullets and Bayonets" .... Sousa

MONITOR. JUNE 25.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

March, "Sambre et Meuse" .... Planquette-Turlet
Overture, "Phedre" .... Massenet
The Lost Chord .... Sullivan
Solo Trumpet—Georges Mager
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore" .... Verdi
March, "Pomp and Circumstance" .... Elgar
Afro-American Folk Songs .... ar. by Jacchia
American Patrol .... Meacham
Overture, "1812" .... Tchaikovsky
American Military Fantasy .... Rollinson
Waltz, "Eternelle Ivresse" .... Ganne
March, "Bullets and Bayonets" .... Sousa

ADVTSR. JUNE. 25

POPS, TONIGHT

The following program will be played at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight under the leadership of Agide Jacchia:

March, "Sambre et Meuse" .... Planquette-Turlet
Overture to "Phedre" .... Massenet
The Lost Chord .... Sullivan
Solo trumpet, Georges Mager
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore" .... Verdi
Military march, "Pomp and Circumstance" .... Elgar
Afro American Folk Songs Arranged by Agide Jacchia
American Patrol .... Meacham
Ouverture Solonnelle, "1812" . Tchaikovsky
American Military Fantasy .... Rollinson
Waltz, "Eternelle Ivresse" .... Ganne
March, "Bullets and Bayonets" .... Sousa

HERALD. JUNE. 25

At The Pops Tonight

March, "El Capitan" .... Sousa
Overture, "The Beautiful Galatea" .... Suppé
Waltz, "Wine, Woman and Song" .... Strauss
Fantasia, "Martha" .... Flotow
Hymn to the Sun, from "Iris" .... Mascagni
Largo .... Handel
"We're from New England" .... Carleton
Overture, "1812" .... Tschaikowsky
Selection, "Madama Butterfly" .. Puccini
Petite Marche Grotesque ...... M. Mason
First Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 26

Seventh Week of "Pops" At Symphony Hall

This week's programs at the "Pops" in Symphony Hall will start with Boston University Night tomorrow, college songs by the club and solos by John P. Marshall, organist, and Arthur Brook, flutist, being among the numbers.

The dances to be represented on Tuesday will include Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker" suite, Jacchia's "Tarantelle," Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda," "Blue Danube" waltz and a selection of American jigs and reels. The last Sunday concert, June 24, will be a Russian program.

Tomorrow, Boston University Night, the selections will be as follows: Triumphal March from "Aida," Verdi; overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; Largo, Handel; Fantasia, "Faust," Gounod; "Finlandia," Sibelius; flute solo, "Hungarian Fantasy," Doppler; overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; college songs, "Alma Mater," Esther Nazarian; "Clarissima," Patterson, '12; Fantasia, "La Boheme," Puccini; "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," Jessel; "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa.

GLOBE. JUNE. 17.

POP'S PROGRAMS

Two programs of special interest will be given at the Pop concerts in Symphony hall during the seventh week: a program of dance music on Tuesday, and the second Russian Tchaikovsky program of the season on Sunday, June 24. This will be the last Sunday concert of the season. The programs of Mr. Jacchia, nevertheless, for every night include music of popular interest and special distinction. Tomorrow will be the annual Boston University night, open to the public.

MONDAY

Triumphal March from "Aida" ...... Verdi
Overture to "Der Freischueitz" ..... Weber
Largo (organ, John P. Marshall) .. Handel
Fantasia, "Faust" .... Gounod
Finlandia .... Sibelius
Flute solo: Hungarian Fantasy .... Doppler
Mr Arthur Brooke
Overture Solennelle, "1812" .... Tchaikovsky
Tchaikovsky
College Songs
Fantasia, "La Boheme" .... Puccini
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers ...... Jessel
Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa

TUESDAY
DANCE MUSIC

Invitation to the Dance .... Weber-Berlioz
Aragonaise from "The Cid" ...... Massenet
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" .... Saint-Saens
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tchaikovsky
(a) Chinese Dance, (b) Dance of the Sugar Fairy, (c) Trepak.
Habanera .... Chabrier
Minuet from "The Damnation of Faust" Berlioz
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli
Polonaise Militaire .... Chopin
Contra Dances (American), "Soldier's Joy" "The Devil's Dream" "Arkansas Traveller"
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" .... Strauss

WEDNESDAY

Overture to "Pique Dame" .... Suppe
Waltz "Espana" .... Waldteufel
Humoresque .... Dvorak
Fantasia, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Overture, "Jeanne d'Arc" .... Converse
Prelude .... Rachmaninow
Intermezzo .... Atherton
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Ballet Suite from "Henry VIII" Saint-Saens
(a) Gypsy Dance, (b) Jig and Finale
Narcissus .... Nevin
March, "Queen of Sheba" .... Gounod

THURSDAY

Overture to "Zampa" .... Herold
Waltz, "Morning Journals" .... Strauss
Ave Maria .... Schubert-Wilhelmj
(solo violin, organ, harp and strings)
Fantasia, "Manon Lescaut" .... Puccini
Scenes Alsaciennes .... Massenet
(a) Sunday morning, (b) Sunday evening
Largo .... Handel
En Badinant .... d'Ambrosio
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremburg" .... Wagner
Fantasia, "The Tales of Hoffman" Offenbach
Intermezzo, "Pagliacci" .... Leoncavallo
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar

FRIDAY

Entrance of the Gladiators .... Fucik
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" .... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Aida" .... Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt" .... Grieg
Largo .... Handel
(solo violin, harp, organ and strings)
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers .. ... Jessel
Overture Solennnelle, "1812" .. Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .... Herbert
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa

SATURDAY

Overture to "Light Cavalry" .... Suppe
Waltz, "Artist's Life" .... Strauss
Aubade Printaniere (Spring Dawn) Lacombe
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Entrance of the Knights into the Temple of the Grail, "Parsifal" Wagner
English Horn solo "Cowherd's Melody" Schumann
(Louis Speyer)
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
First Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Introduction to "Othello" ("The Tempest") .... Verdi
"Deep River" .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Bolero .... Moskowsky

SUNDAY, JUNE 24—RUSSIAN—TCHAIKOVSKY PROGRAM

Procession of the Sardar .. Ippolitov-Ivanov
Waltz from "Eugen Onegin" .. Tchaikovsky
3rd Movement of Schcherazide Rimsky-Korsakov
Andante Cantabile .... Tchaikovsky
Fantasia on Serbian Themes Rimsky-Korsakov
Marche Slave .... Tchaikovsky
Ballet Suite "Nutcracker" .... Tchaikovsky
(a) Little Overture, (b) Dance of the Sugar Fairy, (c) Trepak
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" .... Glazounov
Russian Folk Songs .... Arr by Jacchia
(a) Kalinka, (b) Cossack Song, (c) Volga

HERALD. JUNE. 17

SPECIAL PROGRAMS AT POP CONCERT

Two programs of special interest will be given at the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall this week, including a program of dance music on Tuesday and a second Russian Tchaikovsky program next Sunday, June 24. This will be the last Sunday concert of the season. The programs Conductor Agide Jacchia makes up offer for every night numbers of popular interest and special distinction. Tomorrow will be the annual Boston University Night, but open to the public.

ADVTSR. JUNE. 17.

BOSTON'S FAMOUS "POPS" CONCERTS SYMPHONY HALL

Through another week, the Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston will continue the tranquil course which is sign of dutiful management, faithful performance and satisfaction among the public.

Tuesday night's program will consist of dance numbers. Among them are three from Chaikovsky's "Nutcracker" ballet; an unfamiliar "Habanera" by Chabrier; a Spanish dance from Massenet's opera, "The Cid"; Webers "Invitation to the Dance" for prelude; the Bacchanal in the temple of Dagon from Saint-Saens's opera, "Samson and Delilah"; three old American contra dances; and the inevitable Danubian waltz of Strauss and Ponchielli's "Dance of the Hours."

The list for Monday brings Fantasias from "Faust" and "La Boheme," and Sibelius's tone-poem, "Finlandia"; for Wednesday an Intermezzo by Percy Atherton, resident composer, and two dances from Saint-Saens's opera, "Henry VIII"; for Thursday Fantasias from Puccini's "Manon Lescant" and Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffmann"; and the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger." On Friday returns the much-liked pot-pourri from Herbert's musical play, "Orange Blossoms"; while on Saturday Mr. Horn will be heard in a solo-piece. Eatables, drinkables and smokeables will be as usual as the programmes.

MERIDAN. CONN. RECORD. JUNE. 18.

Symphony Hall "Pops"

SYMPHONY HALL—A program, consisting entirely of dance music, will be played this evening at the "Pops."

The selections are as follows: "Invitation to the Dance," Weber-Berlioz; aragonaise from "The Cid," Massenet; tarantell, Jacchia; bachnale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; ballet suite, "Nutcracker," Tschaikovsky; Habanera, Chabrier; minuet from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz; Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli, polonaise "Militaire," Chopin; contra dances, "Soldier's Joy," "Devil's Dream," "Arkansas Traveler"; waltz, "Blue Danube," Strauss.

GLOBE. JUNE. 19

DANCE MUSIC AT POPS

A program consisting entirely of dance music will be the feature of the pop concert at Symphony hall tonight. The numbers follow:

Invitation to the Dance .... Weber-Berlioz
Argonaise from "The Cid" .... Massenet
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" .. Saint-Saens
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" ...... Tschaikovsky
Habanera .... Chabrier
Minuet from "The Damnation of "Faust" Berlioz
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .. Ponchielli
Polonaise Militaire .... Chopin
Contra Dances (American)—"Soldier's Joy," "Devil's Dream," "Arkansas Traveler."
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" . Strauss

HERALD. JUNE 17

At The Pops Tonight

Dance Music

Invitation to the Dance . Weber-Berlioz
Aragonaise from "The Cid .... Massenet
Tarantella .... Jacchia
Bacchanal from "Samson and Delilah" .... Saint-Saëns
Three Dances from the Ballet, "Nut-Cracker" .... Chaikovsky
Habanera .... Chabrier
Minuet from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli
Military Polonaise .... Chopin
American Contra Dances—
Waltz "Blue Danube" .... J. Strauss

Conductor: A. Jacchia.

TRANS. JUNE. 19

DANCE MUSIC AT POPS

A program consisting entirely of dance music will be the feature of the Pop concert at Symphony Hall tonight. The numbers follow:

Invitation to the Dance, Weber-Berlioz; Aragonaise for "The Cid," Massene; Tarantelle, Jacchia; Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker," Tschaikovsky; Habanera, Chabrier; Minuet from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz; Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; Polonaise Militaire, Chopin; Contra Dances (America) "Soldier's Joy," "Devil's Dream," "Arkansas Traveller,"; Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," Strauss

TELE. JUNE. 19.

POPS PROGRAM TONIGHT

The following program will be performed by the Pops Symphony Orchestra, under Agide Jacchia in Symphony Hall tonight.

Overture to "Pique Dame" .... Suppe
Waltz, "Espagna" .... Waldteufel
Humoreske .... Dvorak
Fantasia, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Overture, "Jean d'Arc" .... Converse
Prelude .... Rachmaninoy
Intermezzo .... Atherton
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Ballet Suite from "Henry VIII" . Saint-Saens
Narcissus .... Nevin
March, "The Queen of Sheba" .... Gounod

HERALD. JUNE 20

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Program of Dance Music
"Invitation to the Dance" Weber-Berlioz
Aragonaise from "The Cid" Massenet
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" .... Saint-Saëns
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" Tschaikowsky
Habanera .... Chabrier
Minuet from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
Dance of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli
Polonaise Militaire .... Chopin
Contra Dances (American)
"Soldier's Joy" "The Devil's Dream" "Arkansas Traveller"
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" .... Strauss

MONITOR. JUNE. 19.

At the Pops Tonight

Overture, "Pique Dame" .... Suppé
Waltz, "Espagna" .... Waldteufel
Humoreske .... Dvorak
Fantasia, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Overture, "Jeanne d'Arc" ..... Converse
Prelude .... Rachmaninov
Intermezzo .... Atherton
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Ballet Suite, "Henry VIII" .. Saint-Saëns
Narcissus .... Nevin
March, "The Queen of Sheba" ... Gouhod

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 20

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Overture to "Pique-Dame" .... Suppé
Waltz, España" .... Waldteufel
Humoresque .... Dvořák
Fantasia, "Lohengrin" ...... Wagner
Overture, "Jeanne d'Arc" .. Converse
Prelude .... Rachmaninoff
Intermezzo .... Atherton
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .. Liszt
Ballet Suite from "Henry VIII" Saint-Saëns
"Narcissus" .... Nevin
March, "Queen of Sheba" .... Gounod

MONITOR - JUNE 20

AT THE POPS TONIGHT.

Agide Jacchia has made the following program for the Pip concert at Symphony Hall tonight:

Overture, "Zampa" .... Herold
Waltz, "Morning Journals" .... Strauss
Ave Maria .... Schubert-Wilhelmj
Fantasia, "Manon Lescaut" .... Puccini
Scenes Alsaciennes .... Massenet
Largo .... Handel
En Badinant .... d'Ambrosio
Prelude, "Mastersingers of Nuremberg" Wagner
Fantasia, "Tales of Hoffmann" .. Offenbach
Intermezzo "Pagliacci" .... Leoncavallo
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar

ADVTSR. JUNE 21

At the Pops Tonight

"Entrance of the Gladiators" ..... Fucik
Overture, "William Tell" .... Rossini
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" .... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Aida" .... Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt" .... Grieg
Largo .... Handel
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers ... Jessel
Overture, "1812" .... Chaikovsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" .. Herbert
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever .... Sousa

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 22

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Entrance of the Gladiators .... Fucik
Overture to "William Tell" .. Rossini
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Aïda" .... Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt" .... Grieg
Largo .... Handel
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers Jessel
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tschaikowsky
Selection, "Orange Blossoms" Herbert
Tarantelle .... Jacchia
Stars and Stripes Forever ..... Sousa

MONITOR. JUNE. 22.

TONIGHT'S POPS

Agide Jacchia and the Pop Symphony orchestra will be heard in the following program at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

"Entrance of the Gladiators," Fucik; overture to "William Tell," Rossini; waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Vollstedt; fantasia, "Aida," Verdi; suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; largo (solo violin, harp, organ and strings), Handel; Parade of the Wooden Soldiers, Jessel; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Tschaikovsky; selection, "Orange Blossoms," Herbert; Tarantelle, Jacchia; Stars and Stripes Forever, Sousa.

TELE. JUNE. 22

TONIGHT'S POP PROGRAM

Overture "Light Cavalry" .... Suppe
Waltz "Artist's Life" .... Strauss
"Spring Dawn" .... Lacombe
Fantasia "Cacalleria Rusticana" .. Mascagni
Eentrance of Knights "Parsifal" ... Wagner
English Horn Solo, "Cowherd's Melody"
((Louis Speyer) .... Schumann
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
First Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Introduction to "Othello" .... Verdi
Deep River .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Bolero .... Moskowsky

ADVTSR. JUNE 23

Week-End "Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

Overture to "Light Cavalry" .. Suppé
Waltz, "Artist's Life" ...... Strauss
Aubade Printanière .... Lacombe
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Entrance of Knights into the Temple of the Grail, "Parsifal" Wagner
English Horn Solo, "Cowherd's Melody" .... Schumann
(Louis Speyer)
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
First Hungarian Rhapsody ... Liszt
Introduction to "Otello" .... Verdi
Deep River .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Bolero .... Moskowsky

TOMORROW NIGHT

Last Sunday Concert

Procession of the Sardar Ippolitoff-Ivanoff
Waltz from "Eugen Onegin" Tschaikowsky
Third Movement "Schéhérazade" Rimsky-Korsakoff
Andante Cantabile ..... Tschaikowsky
Fantasia on Serbian Themes Rimsky-Korsakoff
Marche Slave .... Tschaikowsky
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" Tschaikowsky
"Panaderos" .... Glazounoff
Russian Folk Songs arranged by Agide Jacchia
Polonaise from Suite No. 3 Tschaikowsky

MONITOR. JUNE 23.

Only Two More Weeks of Pops

Two weeks remain of what is proving the largest Pops season of them all. Tomorrow will bring the last Sunday Pop concert of the season and a Russian-Tchaikovsky program.

Wednesday, June 27, will be the annual Request Night, which is inherently the most popular of all Pop nights.

An innovation at the Pops will be a Spanish program to be given on Thursday, June 28. This program will include:

March, "La Sorella" .... Sorel-Clero
Overture, "The Barber of Seville" .. Rossini
Valse Espagnole, "La Serenade" ...... Metra
Fantasia from the Opera "Carmen" .... Bizet
From "The Cid" .... Massenet
(a) Castillane. (b) Aragonaise
Violin solo, Spanish Dance No. 8 .... Sarasate
Intermezzo, "Goyescas" .... Granados
Rhaspody, "Ecpana" .... Chabrier
Suite, "La Feria" .... Lacome
Cadiz .... Albeniz
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos" ..... Glazounow

TRAV. JUNE 23

PROGRESS OF THE POPS

For Novelty, a "Spanish Night"—Again the Request Programme — Otherwise Pleasing Variety of Classical Snatches Intermingled with Lighter Selections Suited to Summer Temperatures

AND still the Pop Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra run their familiar course, drawing for yet another week their accustomed quotas of music-lovers who find pleasure in varied programmes, light refreshments, and opportunity for diverting small-talk.. Outstanding event of next week is the "Spanish Programme" for Thursday—an innovation. For this evening Mr. Jacchia has set Massenet's suite of lively dances from "Le Cid"; the overture to Rossini's "Barber of Seville"; a fantasia from "Carmen"; and Chabrier's Spanish rhapsody. As opening number he has chosen Borel's march, "La Sorella," and to close, Glazounov's lively dance, "Panaderos." Tomorrow sees the last of the Sunday evening concerts, signalized by a programme assembling well-liked Russian pieces, for the most part by Chaikovsky and Rimsky-Korsakov. The latter's "Fantasia on Serbian Themes" is least familiar number. Wednesday evening is set apart for the annual "request" programme.

Monday evening brings military numbers: Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance"; Meacham's "American Patrol"; Sousa's "Bullets and Bayonets"; Chaikovsky's "1812" overture; and the resounding march of the "Sambre et Meuse." For Tuesday are appointed selections from Flotow's "Martha" and from "Madama Butterfly"; and for Friday overtures to "Mignon" and "The Flying Dutchman," and portions of "Carmen" and "Pagliacci." Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody" and overtures to "Tannhäuser" and "The Marriage of Figaro" hold positions of prominence on Saturday's list.

TRANS. JUNE. 23.

POPS PROGRAM

The Pops program for tonight's concert in Symphony hall follows:

Overture to "Light Cavalry" .... Suppe
Waltz, "Artist's Life" .... Strauss
Aubade Printaniere ("Spring Dawn") . Lacombe
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Macsagni
Entrance of Knights into the Temple of the Grail, "Parsifal" .... Wagner
English Horn Solo, "Cowherd's Melody" Schumann
(Louis Speyer.)
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler
First Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Introduction to "Othello" ("The Tempest") .... Verdi
Deep River .... Burleigh-Jacchia
Bolero .... Moskowky

HERALD. JUNE. 23

Closing Fortnight of Symphony Hall "Pops"

The last week but one of the present "Pop" season in Symphony Hall will open tonight, with the last Sunday "Pop" concert of the season and a Russian-Tchaikovsky program. A feature of the week will be the annual Request Night which falls next Wednesday. This night is determined strictly by popular vote and thus records the best liked pieces on the "Pop" repertory.

An innovation at the "Pops" will be a Spanish program to be given next Thursday. This will include both the music of Spanish composers and the music which the dance rhythms of Spain have inspired in composers of other Nations.

The following numbers are included in tonight's concert: Tchaikovsky's "Eugen Onegin" waltz, "Andante Cantabile," "Marche Slave," "Polonaise" and "Nutcracker" Suite, also Serbian Fantasia, Third Movement of "Scheherazade" and other Russian compositions.

The program tomorrow will include "The Lost Chord," with trumpet solo; "Pomp and Circumstance," "1812" Overture, Afro-American Folk Songs and "Il Trovatore" Fantasia.

GLOBE. JUNE 24.

LAST TWO WEEKS OF THE POP CONCERTS

The last week but one of the present Pop season in Symphony Hall will open tonight with the last Sunday Pop concert of the season and a Russian-Tchaikovsky program.

A feature of the week will be the annual Request Night, which falls on next Wednesday, June 27. This night is determined strictly by popular vote, and thus records the best-liked pieces on the Pop repertory.

An innovation at the Pops will be a Spanish program, to be given next Thursday, June 28. This will include both the fascinating music of Spanish composers and the music which the dance rhythms of Spain have inspired in composers of other nations.

ADVTSR. JUNE 24

POPS TONIGHT

The following program will be played at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight, under the leadership of Agide Jacchia:

March, "Sambre et Meuse," Planquette-Turlet; Overture to "Phedre," Massenet; The Lost Chord, solo trumpet, George Mager, Sullivan; Fantasia, "Il Trovatore," Verdi; Military March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; Afro American Folk songs, arranged by Agide Jacchia; American Patrol, Meacham; Overture Solonelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; American Military Fantasy, Rollinson; Waltz, "Eternelle Ivresse," Canns; March "Bullets and Bayonets," Sousa.

TELE. JUNE 25.

"Pops" Program for Tonight

March, "Sambre et Meuse" Planquette-Turlet
Overture to "Phèdre" ...... Massenet
"The Lost Chord" .... Sullivan
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore" ...... Verdi
"Pomp and Circumstance" .... Elgar
Afro-American Folk Songs
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
American Patrol .... Meacham
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tschaikowsky
American Military Fantasy . Rollinson
Waltz, "Eternelle Ivresse" .... Ganne
March, "Bullets and Bayonets" Sousa

MONITOR. JUNE. 25.

AT THE POPS TONIGHT

March, "Sambre et Meuse"
Overture, "Phedre" .... Planquette-Turlet
The Lost Chord .... Massenet
Solo Trumpet—Georges Mager .... Sullivan
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore" .... Verdi
March, "Pomp and Circumstance" .... Elgar
Afro-American Folk Songs ... ar. by Jacchia
American Patrol .... Meacham
Overture, "1812" .... Tchaikovsky
American Military Fantasy .... Rollinson
Waltz, "Eternelle Ivresse" .... Ganne
March, "Bullets and Bayonets" ...... Sousa

ADVTSR. JUNE. 25

POPS TONIGHT

The following program will be played at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight under the leadership of Agide Jacchia:

March, "Sambre et Meuse" Planquette-Turlet
Overture to "Phedre" .... Massenet
The Lost Chord .... Sullivan
Solo trumpet, Georges Mager
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore" .... Verdi
Military march, "Pomp and Circumstance" .... Elgar
Afro American Folk Songs
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
American Patrol .... Meacham
Ouverture Solonnelle, "1812" . Tchaikovsky
American Military Fantasy ..... Rollinson
Waltz, "Eternelle Ivresse" .... Ganne
March, Bullets and Bayonets" ..... Sousa

HERALD. JUNE. 25

At The Pops Tonight

March, "El Capitan" .... Sousa
Overture, "The Beautiful Galatea" Suppe
Waltz, "Wine, Woman and Song" Strauss
Fantasia, "Martha" .... Flotow
Hymn to the Sun, from "Iris" Mascagni
Largo .... Handel
"We're from New England" ...... Carleton
Overture, "1812" .... Tschaikowsky
Selection, "Madama Butterfly" ... Puccini
Petite Marche Grotesque ...... M. Mason
First Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 26

"Pops" Program for Tonight

REQUEST NIGHT

"Pomp and Circumstance"....Elgar
Overture to "William Tell"..Rossini
"Eili, Eili" arranged by Agide Jacchia
Fantasia, "Aida"..............Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt"...........Grieg
Largo ....Handel
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers Jessel
Second Hungarian Rhapsody...Liszt
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"
Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"..............Strauss
Ride of the Valkyries........Wagner

MONITOR. JUNE 27

REQUEST NIGHT AT POPS

Request night, the most popular of the season at the Pop Concerts at Symphony hall, will take place tonight. The program, as determined by public vote, follows:

March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; "Eili, Eili," arranged by Agide Jacchia; Fantasia, "Aida," Verdi; Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; Largo (solo violin, harp, organ and strings), Handel; Parade of the Wooden Soldiers, Jessel; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Tschaikowsky; Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," Straus; Ride of the Valkyries, Wagner.

TELE. JUNE 27

At the Pops Tonight

March, "Pomp and Circumstance," ..Elgar
Overture, "William Tell".......Rossini
"Eili, Eili".....Arranged by Jacchia
Fantasia, "Aida"...............Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt".............Grieg
Largo ....Handel
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers....Jessel
Second Hungarian Rhapsody......Liszt
Overture, "1812"...........Chaikovsky
Waltz, "Blue Danube"..........Strauss
Ride of the Valkyries..........Wagner

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 27

POPS SPANISH PROGRAM

A program of unusual interest and charm, consisting of the music of Spanish composers and the music in which other composers have been inspired by the infectious dance rhythms of Spain, will be the feature of the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The numbers follow:

March, "La Sorella" .... Borel-Clero
Overture to "The Barber of Seville"
Rossini
Vale Espagnole "La Serenade" .... Metra
Fantasia from "Carmen" .... Bizet
Suite from "The Cid" .... Massenet
Violin solo, (J. Theodorowicz) spanish dance .... Sarasate
Intermezzo "Goyescus" .... Granados
Rhapsody, "Espagna" .... Chabrier
Suite, "La Feria" .... Lacome
Cadiz .... Albeniz
Spanish dance "Panaderos" ... Glazounov

HERALD. JUNE 28

SPANISH MUSIC AT POPS.

A programme of Spanish music will be featured at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight.

March, "La Sorella"..........Borel-Clerc
Overture, "The Barber of Seville"..Rossini
Valse Espagnole, "La Serenade"....Metra
Fantasia, "Carmen"..................Bizet
Suite, "The Cid"...................Massenet
Spanish Dance.......................Sarasate
(Violin solo, J. Theodorowicz)
Intermezzo, "Goyescus"..........Granados
Rhapsody, "Espagna"...............Chabrier
Suite, "La Feria"....................Lacome
Cadiz ....Albeniz
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos".....Glozounov

ADVTSR. JUNE 28

"Pops" Program for Tonight

March, "The Man Behind the Gun"
Sousa
Overture to "Mignon" ......Thomas
Waltz, "Estudiantina"....Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto" ....Verdi
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"
Wagner
Indian Dirge ....Seydel
March of the Little Lead Soldiers
Pierné
Second Hungarian Rhapsody...Liszt
Selection, "Pagliacci" ...Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Perdita" ....Repper
American Fantasy ....Herbert

MONITOR. JUNE 29.

TONIGHT'S POPS

The following program will be given at the Pop Concert in Symphony hall tonight:

March, "The Man Behind the Gun," Sousa; Overture to "Mignon" Thomas; Waltz, "Estudiantina," Waldteufel; Fantasia, "Rigoletto," Verdi; Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Indian Dirge, Seydel; March of the Little Lead Soldiers," Pierne; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Selection, "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; Waltz, "Perdita," Repper; American Fantasy, Herbert.

TELE. JUNE 29.

POPS PROGRAM

Agide Jacchia has made the following program for the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Hungarian March...........................Berlios
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Waltz, "Sunny Days"........................Holy
Fantasia, "Aida"...........................Verdi
Roumanian Rhapsody.......................Enesco
"Eili, Eili".............Arr. by Agide Jacchia
[illegible]........................Van Westerhout
Overture to "Tannhauser"................Wagner
Marche Slave.......................Tchaikovsky
Waltz, "Vienna Blood"...................Strauss
Indian Wedding Festival...................Baron

HERALD-JUNE 30

At the Pops Tonight

March, "The Man Behind the Gun"..
Sousa
Overture, "Mignon" ....Thomas
Waltz, "Estudiantina".....Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto" ....Verdi
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"..
Wagner
Indian Dirge ....Seydel
March of the Little Lead Soldiers...
Pierné
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.......Liszt
Selection, "Pagliacci" ....Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Perdita" ....Repper
American Fantasy ....Herbert

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 29

Tonight's Pop Program

Agide Jacchia has made the following program for the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Hungarian March .... Berlioz
Overture "Marriage of Figaro" ... Mozart
Waltz, "Sunny Days" .... Holy
Fantasia "Aida" .... Verdi
Roumanian Rhapsody .... Enesco
"Eili, Eili" arranged by ....Jacchia
Canzone .... Van Westerhout
Overture, "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Marche Slave .... Tschaikovsky
Waltz, Vienna Blood" .... Strauss
Indian Wedding Festival .... Baron

ADVTSR. JUNE 30

CLOSING WEEK OF THE POPS

Italian, Russian, Operatic, and Wagnerian "Evenings" to Cap the Season—Once More "Request" Night

FOR the last half-dozen times Mr. Jacchia will lead the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the Pop concerts next week. Saturday evening, July 7, will mark the close of the season of 1923, and the familiar strains of "Auld Lang Syne," according to tradition, will terminate his final programme.

Special "evenings" dot the course of the remaining concerts. On Wednesday next the "request" programme of last week will be repeated. Monday will be devoted to Italian selections, Verdi predominating. The overture to that composer's "La Forza del Destino," the prelude to "Aida," a fantasia from "Il Trovatore," and the introduction to "Otello," hold places of prominence. Tuesday brings tribute from the Russians. Less hackneyed pieces then to be performed are Glinka's "Kamarinskaja," and the hopak from Mousorgsky's "Fair of Sorochinsk." Rubinstein's wedding march from "Feramors" serves as overture. On Thursday operatic snatches will predominate, selections from "The Prophet," "Mignon," "Der Rosenkavalier," "La Bohême," "Lohengrin," "Rigoletto," "The Jewels of the Madonna," "La Gioconda," "Pagliacci," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Samson and Delilah" being listed. Friday brings five well-tested pieces from Wagnerian scores, and Saturday a medley of miscellaneous tunes and symphonic numbers, ranging from Chaikovsky's "Marche Slave" to Sousa's throbbing march, "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

At The Pops Tonight

Hungarian March ....Berlioz
Overture, "The Marriage of Figaro,"
Mozart
Waltz, "Sunny Days" ....Holy
Fantasia, "Aida" ....Verdi
Roumanian Rhapsody ....Enesco
Eili, Eili ....Arranged by Jacchia
Canzone ....Van Westerhout
Overture, "Tannhäuser" ....Wagner
Marche Slave ....Chaikovsky
Waltz, "Vienna Blood" ....Strauss
Indian Wedding Festival.........Baron

Conductor: A. Jacchia.

TRANS. JUNE 30

Closing Week of Pop Concerts

The coming week will be the last of the Pop season in Symphony hall. Agide Jacchia and the Pop Symphony orchestra will be heard in a different special program on each of the six remaining nights.

Monday, July 2, will have an Italian-Verdi program; Tuesday, July 3, a Russian program.

On Wednesday, July 4, the request program will be repeated for the convenience of the many who could not gain admittance on Request night.

Thursday will bring an operatic, and Friday a Wagnerian program.

The Italian-Verdi program on Monday follows:

Italian Royal March..................Gabetti
Overture to "Norma"....................Bellini
Camellia Gavotte.......................Jacchia
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"......Puccini
Overture to "La Forza del Destino..
Prelude to "Aida"
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore"
Introduction to "Othello" ("The Tempest") } Verdi
Rhapsody, "Italia"......................Casella
Legende ....Troccoli
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris"........Mascagni

TUESDAY, JULY 3

Russian program

Wedding March from "Feramors"...Rubinstein
Flower Waltz......................Tschaikovsky
Hindu Song from "Sadko"...Rimsky-Korsakoff
Finale, "Fourth Symphony"......Tchaikovsky
Last Movement from "Scheherazade"....
Rimsky-Korsakoff
"Kamarinskaja"............................Glinka
"Eili, Eili"..................Arr. by Agide Jacchia
Overture Solonnelle, "1812"........Tchaikovsky
[illegible] "Eugen Onegin"..........Tchaikovsky
Russian Folk Songs......Arr. by Agide Jacchia
Hopak from "The Fair of Sorotchinsk"..
Moussorgsky

WEDNESDAY, JULY 4

Request program (repeated)..........Elgar
March, "Pomp and Circumstance"......Rossini
Overture to William Tell"......Arr. by Agide Jacchia
"Eili, Eili"....................................Verdi
Fantasia, "Aida"............................Grieg
Suite, "Peer Gynt".........................Handel
Largo ....Jessel
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers.............Liszt
Second Hungarian Rhapsody........Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Solonnelle, "1812"......Strauss
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"..Wagner
"The Ride of the Valkyries"..........

THURSDAY, JULY 5

Operatic program

Coronation March from "The Prophet"..
Meyerbeer
Overture to "Mignon"...............Thomas
Waltzes from "Der Rosengavalier"..R. Strauss
Fantasia, "La Boheme"................Puccini
Quartet from "Rigoletto"..................Verdi
Introduction, Act III, "The Jewels of the Madonna"..................Wolf-Ferrari
Furlana from "La Gioconda"........Ponchielli
Fantasia, "Thais"......................Massenet
Two Intermezzi—
(a) From "Pagliacci"...........Leoncavallo
(b) From "Cavalleria Rusticana"..Mascagni
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah"..
Saint-Saens

FRIDAY, JULY 6

Wagner program

Prelude to "Carmen"........................Bizet
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"......................Nicolai
Waltz, "1001 Nights"...................Strauss
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music from "The Valkyrie"......
Prelude to "Lohengrin"........
Dreams ....
(Solo violin, J. Theodorowicz)
"The Ride of the Valkyries"........ } Wagner
Overture to "Tannhauser"..........
Preludes Op. 28, Nos. 3-4-7-20—Chopin-Jacchia
Reverie ....Going
First Hungarian Dance...................Brahms

SATURDAY, JULY 7

Closing night

First Slavonic Dance.....................Dvorak
Prelude to "The Mastersingers"........Wagner
"Love's Dream After the Ball"......Czabulsa
Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"....................Leoni
First Hungarian Rhapsody...............Liszt
Deep River....................Burleigh-Jacchia
Serenade.....(Arr. by Agide Jacchia) Schubert
Marche Slave.......................Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana".....Mascagni
Waltz, "Espana".......................Waldtengel
"Stars and Stripes Forever"................Sousa
"Auld Lang Syne"

TRAV. JUNE 30

LAST WEEK OF POP CONCERTS

The coming week will be the last of the Pop season in Symphony hall. Agide Jacchia and the Pop Symphony orchestra will be heard in a different special program on each of the six remaining nights.

Monday, July 2, will have an Italian-Verdi program; Tuesday, July 3, a Russian program.

On Wednesday, July 4, the Request program will be repeated for the convenience of the many who could not gain admittance on Request night.

Thursday will bring an Operatic and Friday a Wagnerian program.

Mr. Jacchia has made the following program for the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Hungarian March, Berlioz; Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Mozart; Waltz, "Sunny Days," Holy; Fantasia, "Aida," Verdi; Reumanian Rhapsody, Enesco; "Eili, Eili," arranged by Agide Jacchia; Canzone, Van Westerhout; Overture to "Tannhauser," Wagner; Marche Slave, Tschaikovsky; Waltz, "Vienna Blood," Strauss; Indian Wedding Festival, Baron.

TELE. JUNE 30

"Pops" Program for Tonight

Hungarian March ....Berlioz
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ....Mozart
Waltz "Sunny Days" ....Holy
Fantasia, "Aida" ....Verdi
Rumanian Rhapsody ....Enesco
"Eili, Eili" arranged by Agide Jacchia
Canzone ....Van Westerhout
Overture to "Tannhäuser"...Wagner
Marche Slave ....Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "Vienna Blood".......Strauss
Indian Wedding Festival......Baron

MONITOR-JUNE 30

LAST WEEK OF POPS

A special program will be given at each of the remaining nights of the Pops season in Symphony hall, which begin their last week tomorrow. Monday night will have an Italian-Verdi program, which Agide Jacchia, the Italian Pops conductor, is particularly well fitted to interpret. On Tuesday, July 3, there will be a Russian program. On Wednesday, July 4, the request program will be repeated in order to accommodate the innumerable Pop fans who were unable to gain admission last Wednesday. Thursday's program will be operatic, and Friday's Wagnerian. The programs of the week follow:

Monday, July 2.

ITALIAN-VERDI PROGRAM

1. Italian Royal March..........Gabetti
2. Overture to "Norma"...........Bellini
3. Camellia Gavotte.............Jacchia
4. Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly"
Puccini
5. Overture to "La Forza del Destino"
Giuseppe Verdi
6. Prelude to "Aida".....Giuseppe Verdi
7. Fantasia, "Il Trovatore"
Giuseppe Verdi
8. Introduction to "Othello" ("The Tempest")..............Giuseppe Verdi
9. Rhapsody, "Italia"............Casella
10. Legende ....Troccoli
11. Hymn to the Sun from "Iris"
Mascagni

Tuesday, July 3.

RUSSIAN PROGRAM

1. Wedding March from "Feramors"
Rubinstein
2. Flower Waltz...........Tchaikovsky
3. Hindu song from "Sadko"
Rimsky-Korsakoff
4. Finale, "Fourth Symphony"
Tchaikovsky
5. Last Movement from "Scheherazade"
Rimsky-Korsakoff
6. 'Kamarinskaja" ....Glinka
7. "Eili, Eili" Arranged by Agide Jacchia
8. Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"
Tchaikovsky
9. Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin"
Tchaikovsky
10. Russian Folk Songs
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
11. Hopak from "The Fair of Sorotchinsk"
Moussorgsky

Wednesday, July 4

REQUEST PROGRAM (REPEATED)

1. March, "Pomp and Circumstance"
Elgar
2. Overture to "William Tell"...Rossini
3. "Eili, Eili" Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Fantasia, "Aida"..........Grieg
5. Suite, "Peer Gynt"..........Handel
6. Largo ....
7. Parade of the Wooden Soldiers Jessel
8. Second Hungarian Rhapsody.....Liszt
9. Ouverture Solonnelle, "1812"
Tchaikovsky
10. Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"..............Strauss
11. "The Ride of the Valkyries"...Wagner

Thursday, July 5

OPERATIC PROGRAM

1. Coronation March from "The Prophet"...............Meyerbeer
2. Overture to "Mignon".........Thomas
3. Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier"
R. Strauss
4. Fantasia, "La Boheme".........Puccini
5. Prelude to "Lohengrin".........Wagner
6. Quartet from "Rigoletto"..........Verdi
7. Introduction, Act III, "The Jewels of the Madonna"..........Wolf-Ferrari
8. Furlana from "La Gioconda"
Ponchielli
9. Fantasia, "Thais"..........Massenet
10. Two Intermezzi—
a. From "Pagliacci"....Leoncavallo
b. From "Cavalleria Rusticana"
Mascagni
11. Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" ....Saint-Saens

Friday, July 6.

WAGNER PROGRAM

1. Prelude to "Carmen"...........Bizet
2. Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"...........Nicolai
3. Waltz, "1001 Nights"..........Strauss
4. Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music from "The Valkyrie"..Wagner
5. Prelude to "Lohengrin".....Wagner
6. Dreams, solo violin, J. Theodorowicz
Wagner
7. The Ride of the Valkyries....Wagner
8. Overture to "Tannhauser"....Wagner
9. Preludes, Op. 28, Nos. 3-4-7-20
Chopin-Jacchia
10. Reverie ....Going
11. First Hungarian Dance........Brahms

Saturday, July 7.

CLOSING NIGHT

1. First Slavonic Dance..........Dvorak
2. Prelude to "The Mastersingers". Wagner
3. "Love's Dream After the Ball"
Czibulka
4. Fantasia, "L'Oracolo"..........Leoni
5. First Hungarian Rhapsody.......Liszt
6. Deep River ....Burleigh-Jacchia
7. Serenade (arranged by Agide Jacchia)...........Schubert
8. Marche Slave.............Tchaikovsky
9. Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"
Mascagni
10. Waltz, "Espana"..........Waldteufel
11. Stars and Stripes Forever.......Sousa

AULD LANG SYNE.

HERALD. JULY 1.

Italian Program Opens Final Pop Week

THIS is the final week of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall.

For tomorrow night Agide Jacchia has made up an Italian program, with four excerpts from Verdi operas, besides Casella's "Italian Rhapsody," the "Norma" overture, the "Hymn to the Sun" from Mascagni's "Iris, a "Madama Butterfly" fantasia and other selections.

On Tuesday night there will be a Rusisan program, featuring Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" finale, Tschaikowsky's "1812" overture, "Eili, Eili" and folk songs. The request program played last week will be repeated next Wednesday night. There will be an operatic program on Thursday night and a Wagner program Friday night.

For the final Saturday night concert Mr. Jacchia will offer Liszt's first Hungarian Rhapsody, "Marche Slave," a Slavonic dance by Dvorak, several Wagner numbers, "Deep River" and other pieces.

ADVTSR. JULY 1.

Closing Week of the Symphony Hall "Pops"

Six special programs will make a feature of each night of this closing week of the "Pop" season at Symphony Hall. Tomorrow the Italian-Verdi program will include four excerpts from the operas of Verdi; the "Italia" Rhapsody of Casella, the "Hymn to the Sun" from Mascagni's opera, "Iris"; "Madame Butterfly" fantasia and "Norma" overture.

A Russian program Tuesday will include among other numbers the finales of "Scheherazade" and of Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony, Glinka's "Kamarinskaja," "Eili, Eili," "1812" overture, Moussorgsky's "Hopak," Russian folk songs.

Wednesday's request program will include "William Tell" and "1812" overtures, the "Peer Gynt" Suite, Handel's Largo, Second Hungarian Rhapsody and "Pomp and Circumstance." Of the operatic program Thursday there may be mentioned the overture to "Mignon" and "Lohengrin," Fantasias "La Boheme" and "Thais," "Rosenkavalier" waltzes, "Rigoletto," quartet. Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah."

The Wagnerian program Friday will include the following numbers of Wagner: Magic Fire music from "The Valkyrie," "Tannhauser" overture, "Ride of the Valkyries," "Dreams," for violin solo.

Closing night, Saturday, will bring an especially popular program, with Liszt's First Hungarian Rhapsody, "Marche Slave," Fantasias, "L'Oracolo" and "Cavalleria Rusticana," Dvorak's First Slavonic Dance, prelude to "The Meistersingers" and "Deep River."

GLOBE JULY 1.

ITALIAN NIGHT AT POPS

The Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall will open their last week tonight with an Italian program.

Italian Royal March ....Gabetti
Overture, "Norma" ....Bellini
Camellia Gavotte ....Jacchia
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly".......Puccini
Overture, "La Forza del Destino"
Prelude, "Aida"
Fantasia, "Il Trovatore"
Introduction, "Othello"......Giuseppe Verdi
Rhapsody, "Italia"...................Casella
Legende ....Troccoli
Hymn to the Sun from "Iris"........Mascagni

ADVTSR-JULY 2.

Closing Week of the "Pops"

SYMPHONY HALL—Six special programs will be given during the closing week of the "Pops."

This evening's Russian program will be as follows: Wedding March from "Feramors," Rubinstein; "Flower Waltz," Tchaikovsky; Hindu song from "Sadko," Rimsky-Korsakoff; Finale, "Fourth Symphony," Tchaikovsky; last movement from "Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakoff; "Kamarinskaja," Glinka; "Eili, Eili," arranged by Agide Jacchia; Overture Solonnelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin," Tchaikovsky; Russian folk songs, arranged by Agide Jacchia; Hopak from "The Fair of Sorotchinsk," Moussorgsky.

GLOBE. JULY 3.

RUSSIAN NIGHT AT POPS

The last Russian program of the season will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight.

Wedding March, "Feramors"....Rubinstein
Flower Waltz ....Tchaikovsky
Hindu Song, "Sadko"....Rimsky-Korsakoff
Finale, "Fourth Symphony"....Tchaikovsky
Finale, "Scheherazade"...Rimsky-Korsakoff
"Kamarinskaja" ....Glinka
"Eili, Eili"................Arr. by Jacchia
Overture, "1812" ....Tscaikovsky
Polonaise, "Eugen Onegin".....Tchaikovsky
Russian Folk Song....Arr. by Agide Jacchia
Hopak, "Fair of Seretchinsk".Moussorgsky

ADVTSR. JULY 3.

PROGRAM AT POPS

The third and last Russian program of the season will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The numbers follow:

Wedding March from "Feramors"
Rubinstein
Flower Wats.....................Tchaikovsky
Hindu Song from "Sadko"
Rimsky-Korsakoff
Finale, "Fourth Symphony"..Tchaikovsky
Last Movement from "Scheherazade"
Rimsky-Korsakoff
"Kamarinskaja" ....Glinka
"Eili, Eili"....Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"..Tchaikovsky
Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin"
Tchaikovsky
Russian Folk Songs
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Hopak from "The Fair of Serotchinsk"
Moussorgsky

HERALD. JULY 3.

RUSSIAN PROGRAM AT POPS

The third and last Russian program of the season will be given at the Pop Concerts in Symphony hall tonight. The numbers follow:

Wedding March from "Freamors," Rubinstein; Flower Waltz, Tchaikovsky; Hindu Song from "Sadko," Rimsky-Korsakoff; Finale, "Fourth Symphony," Tchaikovsky; Last Movement from "Schherazado," Rimsky-Korsakoff; "Kamarinskaja," Glinka; "Eili, Eili," Arrangedf by Agide Jacchia; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tchaikovsky; Polonaies from "Eugen Onegin," Tchaikovsky; Russion Folk Songs, Arranged by Agide Jacchia; Ropak from "The Fair of Scrotchinsk," Moussorgsky.

TELE. [illegible]

Holiday "Pops" Programs

TONIGHT

Russian Program

Wedding March from "Feramors"
Rubinstein
Flower Waltz ....Tschaikovsky
Hindu Song from "Sadko"
Rimsky-Korsakoff
Finale, Fourth Symphony
Tschaikovsky
Last Movement from "Schéhérazade"
Rimsky-Korsakoff
"Kamarinskaja" ....Glinka
"Eili, Eili"
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"
Tschaikowsky
Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin"
Tschaikowsky
Russian Folk Songs
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Hopak from "The Fair of Serotchinsk" ....Moussorgsky

TOMORROW NIGHT

Request Program

March, "Pomp and Circumstance"
Elgar
Overture to "William Tell"..Rossini
"Eili, Eili"
Arranged by Agide Jacchia
Fantasia, "Aïda" ....Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt" ....Grieg
Largo ....Handel
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers
Jessel
Second Hungarian Rhapsody...Liszt
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"
Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" ....Strauss
Ride of the Valkyries........Wagner

MONITOR [illegible]

At The Pops Tonight

Russian Programme

Wedding March, "Feramors" Rubinstein
Flower Waltz..................Chaikovsky
Hindu Song, "Sadko"..Rimsky-Korsakov
Finale, "Fourth Symphony"..Chaikovsky
Final Movement of "Scheherazade"
Rimsky-Korsakov
Kamarinskaja ....Glinka
Eili, Eili ....Arranged by Jacchia
Overture, "1812"..............Chaikovsky
Polonaise, "Eugène Onegin".Chaikovsky
Russian Folk Songs Arranged by Jacchia
Hopak, "The Fair of Sorotchinsk"
Moussorgsky

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JULY 3

[113]

"Pops" Program for Tonight

REQUEST NIGHT
"Pomp and Circumstance"...Elgar
Overture to "William Tell"..Rossini
"Eili, Eili" arranged by Agide Jacchia
Fantasia, "Aida"...Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt"...Grieg
Largo...Handel
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers Jessel
Second Hungarian Rhapsody...Liszt
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"...Strauss
Ride of the Valkyries.......Wagner

MONITOR. JUNE 27

REQUEST NIGHT AT POPS

Request night, the most popular of the season at the Pop Concerts at Symphony hall, will take place tonight. The program, as determined by public vote, follows:

March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; "Eili, Eili," arranged by Agide Jacchia; Fantasia, "Aida," Verdi; Suite, "Peer Gynt," Grieg; Largo (solo violin, harp, organ and strings), Handel; Parade of the Wooden Soldiers, Jessel; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Tschaikowsky; Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," Straus; Ride of the Valkyries, Wagner.

TELE. JUNE 27

At the Pops Tonight

March, "Pomp and Circumstance," ..Elgar
Overture, "William Tell".......Rossini
"Eili, Eili".....Arranged by Jacchia
Fantasia, "Aida"...............Verdi
Suite, "Peer Gynt"............Grieg
Largo....................Handel
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers....Jessel
Second Hungarian Rhapsody......Liszt
Overture, "1812"...........Chaikovsky
Waltz, "Blue Danube"..........Strauss
Ride of the Valkyries..........Wagner

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 28

POPS SPANISH PROGRAM

A program of unusual interest and charm, consisting of the music of Spanish composers and the music in which other composers have been inspired by the infectious dance rhythms of Spain, will be the feature of the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight. The numbers follow:

March, "La Sorella" .... Borel-Clero
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" Rossini
Vale Espagnole "La Serenade" .... Metra
Fantasia from "Carmen" .... Bizet
Suite from "The Cid" .... Massenet
Violin solo, (J. Theodorowicz) spanish dance .... Sarasate
Intermezzo "Goyescus" .... Granados
Rhapsody, "Espagna" .... Chabrier
Suite, "La Feria" .... Lacome
Cadiz .... Albeniz
Spanish dance "Panaderos" ... Glazounov

HERALD. JUNE 28

SPANISH MUSIC AT POPS.

A programme of Spanish music will be featured at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight.

March, "La Sorella"..........Borel-Clerc
Overture, "The Barber of Seville"..Rossini
Valse Espagnole, "La Serenade"....Metra
Fantasia, "Carmen"..............Bizet
Suite, "The Cid"..............Massenet
Spanish Dance..............Sarasate
(Violin solo, J. Theodorowlz)
Intermezzo, "Goyescus"..........Granados
Rhapsody, "Espagna"..........Chabrier
Suite, "La Feria"..........Lacome
Cadiz..........Albeniz
Spanish Dance, "Panaderos".....Glazounov

ADVTSR. JUNE 28

"Pops" Program for Tonight

March, "The Man Behind the Gun" Sousa
Overture to "Mignon" ......Thomas
Waltz, "Estudiantina"....Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto" ....Verdi
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Indian Dirge ....Seydel
March of the Little Lead Soldiers Pierné
Second Hungarian Rhapsody...Liszt
Selection, "Pagliacci" ...Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Perdita" ....Repper
American Fantasy ....Herbert

MONITOR. JUNE 29.

TONIGHT'S POPS

The following program will be given at the Pop Concert in Symphony hall tonight:

March, "The Man Behind the Gun," Sousa; Overture to "Mignon" Thomas; Waltz, "Estudiantina," Waldteufel; Fantasia, "Rigoletto," Verdi; Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Indian Dirge, Seydel; March of the Little Lead Soldiers," Pierne; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Selection, "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; Waltz, "Perdita," Repper; American Fantasy, Herbert.

TELE. JUNE. 29.

POPS PROGRAM

Agide Jacchia has made the following program for the Pop concert in Symphony hall tonight:

Hungarian March....................Berlioz
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Waltz, "Sunny Days"................Holy
Fantasia, "Aida"...................Verdi
Roumanian Rhapsody...............Enesco
"Eili, Eili"..........Arr. by Agide Jacchia
Canzone....................Van Westerhout
Overture to "Tannhauser"............Wagner
Marche Slave...................Tschaikovsky
Waltz, "Vienna Blood"..............Strauss
Indian Wedding Festival..............Baron

HERALD-JUNE. 30

At the Pops Tonight

March, "The Man Behind the Gun".. Sousa
Overture, "Mignon" ....Thomas
Waltz, "Estudiantina".....Waldteufel
Fantasia, "Rigoletto" ....Verdi
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman".. Wagner
Indian Dirge ....Seydel
March of the Little Lead Soldiers... Pierné
Second Hungarian Rhapsody......Liszt
Selection, "Pagliacci" ....Leoncavallo
Waltz, "Perdita" ....Repper
American Fantasy ....Herbert

Conductor: A. Jacchia

TRANS. JUNE 29

Tonight's Pop Program

Agide Jacchia has made the following program for the Pop Concert in Symphony Hall tonight:

Hungarian March .... Berlioz
Overture "Marriage of Figaro" ... Mozart
Waltz, "Sunny Days" .... Holy
Fantasia "Aida" .... Verdi
Roumanian Rhapsody .... Enesco
"Eili, Eili" arranged by ....Jacchia
Canzone .... Van Westerhout
Overture, "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Marche Slave .... Tschaikovsky
Waltz, Vienna Blood" .... Strauss
Indian Wedding Festival .... Baron

ADVTSR. JUNE. 30

CLOSING WEEK OF THE POPS

Italian, Russian, Operatic, and Wagnerian "Evenings" to Cap the Season—Once More "Request" Night

FOR the last half-dozen times Mr. Jacchia will lead the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the Pop concerts next week. Saturday evening, July 7, will mark the close of the season of 1923, and the familiar strains of "Auld Lang Syne," according to tradition, will terminate his final programme.

